Q. How many times did you see Mr. Curry after he was retained by your firm?

A. I can't fix the number of times. It was not very often.

Q. Did you give him any instructions as to what he should or should not do?

A. Only the initial request that he put himself at Mr. Polk's disposal in connection with the consolidated return.

Q. Prior to the commencement of the VanKirk litigation in [1392] New York had you ever heard of a claim with respect to taxes in the nature of the claim set forth by the plaintiffs in that lawsuit?

Mr. Phleger: I object to that question on the ground it calls for the conclusion of the witness, irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial.

The Court: I suppose Mr. Adams means prior to that time had anyone asserted that claim to his knowledge.

Mr. Phleger: That is not the question.

Mr. Adams: I did ask, your Honor, if the witness had ever heard of any such claim.

The Court: You mean any such claim being made against whom?

Mr. Adams: Any claim like this one.

Mr. Clark: Against anybody.

Mr. Adams: That is right. I did ask that question.

Mr. Clark: We join in the objection.

Mr. Adams: I have stated in argument from time to time that one of our contentions is that this is an afterthought claim, and this is the same sort of question that I have asked prior witnesses.

The Court: I think what counsel is bothered about, is this the same kind of question that you asked Mr. Polk?

Mr. Adams: I do not think it is, your Honor.

The Court: You are referring to the claim against the [1393] defendant in this case, are you not?

Mr. Adams: No, not at all. I am asking this witness, just as I asked Mr. Ehrman, Mr. Elsey and Mr. Osborn, if they had ever heard of a claim to be paid for the tax benefit of your loss when you are a loss company in a consolidated return. I did ask all those gentlemen that question, in view of my argument that this is an afterthought.

(Testimony of Robert E. Coulson.)

Mr. Clark: It is the same question that has been ruled on, your Honor.

The Court: I think it is objectionable. I do not see that it has anything to do with the question of its being an afterthought.

Mr. Adams: Do I understand that the objection is sustained?

The Court: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Prior to the commencement of the Van Kirk action, Mr. Coulson, had you ever heard of the claim there asserted in behalf of the plaintiff corporation?

Mr. Phleger: I submit that has been asked and answered.

Mr. Adams: I would like to ask it again.

The Court: Read the question.

(Question read.)

The Court: You said that was the first time you had heard about it.

The Witness: No one had suggested it before, I think my [1394] prior testimony was, Judge. I can't bring it back word for word.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Prior to the Van Kirk action had it ever occurred to you that the plaintiff had any such claim as was asserted in its behalf in the Van Kirk lawsuit?

A. Definitely——

Mr. Phleger: I submit the same objection that was made to substantially the same question some time ago. It is incompetent, irrelevant and im-material and calls for the conclusion of the witness.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Clark: May the answer go out?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Adams: I have no further questions, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: I have no questions.

Mr. Clark: Nothing from us.

called on behalf of the defendants; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your name to the Court, please.

The Witness: My name is James L. Cockburn, C-o-c-k-b-u-r-n, Jr. [1395]

Direct Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. And, Mr. Cockburn, will you please state your business and your business address.

A. I am with Price, Waterhouse & Company, certified public accountants, at 351 California Street, San Francisco.

Q. And you are forty-five years of age?

A. That is correct.

Q. You came to the United States in 1922 from Scotland and became a citizen in 1930?

A. That is correct.

Q. And your profession is?

would ask to have marked for identification as Defendants' Exhibit 40 a printed report entitled "The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Subsidiaries' Report on Federal Income Taxes Paid for the Years 1918 to 1944 and Settlements Amongst Companies in Respect Thereto," over the name of Price & Waterhouse Company, 351 California Street, San Francisco 4.

(The report referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 40 for Identification.)

Mr. Adams: And if I may take the liberty, I will hand up [1398] a copy to his Honor and state that copies of this report were furnished to counsel sometime prior to the pre-trial.

(Document handed to Court.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Cockburn, did our firm request you to make an examination of the files and records of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its affiliated companies for the period beginning in 1916 and ending April 30, 1944? A. It did.

Q. And would you state, please, the objectives of the examination which was requested?

A. We were asked to undertake three things: One, to determine the Federal and excess profits taxes paid by the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its subsidiaries for the period 1916 to 1944; secondly, we were asked to determine the settlements that were made between companies within the group, within the affiliated group, with respect to the Federal taxes on income; and, thirdly, we were asked to determine whether any company included in the consolidated return having a net income made a payment to a company with a net loss by reason of the fact that that net loss was included in the consolidated return.

Q. And did you make such an examination?

A. I did.

Q. Who made it?

A. It was made by me, assisted by several individuals in our [1399] San Francisco and New York office.

Q. And the assistants of whom you speak proceed with their work under your supervision and direction? A. That is correct.

Q. Would you please identify the persons who assisted you in your examination?

A. Mr. Richard Brown, Mr. Harold Erb, Mr. Frank Turk; and my principal assistant was Mr. Edwin H. Morse of San Francisco. Mr. Turk and Mr. Erb are in our New York offices.

Q. And would you also state what relation, if any, Mr. Morse has had to Price, Waterhouse & Company?

A. Mr. Morse has been with Price, Waterhouse & Company since 1939, except that he was originally with our New York office, and has been with us since that time except for a period of time in the armed services, with the Department of Audits, Washington.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. And with which office of Price, Waterhouse & Company is Mr. Brown connected?

A. San Francisco.

Q. Was all the work in this examination done by you or under your personal direction?

A. It was.

Q. About how long a period of time was occupied in your work of examination and the completion of your report?

A. We commenced the work in May, 1948, and completed it early in January, 1949. [1400]

Q. Has your report been delivered to the Western Pacific Railroad Company? A. It has.

Q. Now, I hand you, Mr. Cockburn, the report now marked Defendants' Exhibit 40 for Identification (handing to witness). Is that a copy of the report? A. It is.

Q. Will you please describe briefly the records which you examined?

A. We first visited the office of the Western Pacific Railroad Company in San Francisco and there examined copies of Federal income tax and excess profits tax returns, Revenue Agents' reports and other material in the Federal income tax files. We examined the general books of account, including the general ledger, cash book, general journal, voucher register. We also inspected canceled checks and correspondence.

Q. And in addition to that, did you do some work with respect to the Western Realty Company records or accounts?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

A. We inspected similar records of the Western Realty Company at its office in San Francisco.

Q. Did you do any of your examination in New York? A. Yes.

Q. What did you do there?

A. We proceeded to New York and examined there similar records of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, and also their [1401] corporate minutes.

Q. Now, did you obtain any additional information from other sources beyond what you have already described? A. Yes.

Q. What was that?

A. We obtained additional information from the Treasury Department at Washington, D. C., consisting of certificates of over-assessment relating to certain years, and we also obtained certain additional information from the Utah Fuel Company.

Q. And where did you get that information?

A. At Salt Lake City.

Q. Now, Mr. Cockburn, what procedure did you follow in determining your findings?

A. Well, we made an analysis of the accounts relating to the tax expenses and receivable and payable accounts. With respect also to all of the companies in the Western Pacific group.

Q. And are your findings summarized in your report? A. They are.

Q. Now, in what manner, if at all, did you check your findings?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

A. We were able to check the taxes paid according to the expense accounts with the tax returns, Revenue Agents' reports and similar data. We were also able to check the tax paid by the various companies against the surplus reconciliation appearing in the tax return. Thirdly, we were able to cross-check the payments made between companies as between the books [1402] of the intercompany transactions and in particular letters concerning the transactions between the San Francisco and New York offices.

Q. So that you did in fact check entries both in San Francisco and corresponding entries and records in New York?

A. That is correct.

Q. In making such cross-checks did you find any discrepancies? A. We did not.

Q. Are your findings with regard to the subject matter of your examination correctly summarized in your printed report?

A. They are.

Q. Does your printed report correctly summarize the information contained in the tax records of the respective corporations for the period and on the subjects covered by your report?

A. It does.

Q. Do you believe it to be correct?

A. I do.

Q. Now, Mr. Cockburn, I will ask you to explain to the Court the schedules and tabulations it contains. Will you please first take Schedule 1.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: May it please the Court, I think this is probably an appropriate time to interpose an objection to the admissibility of this identified exhibit and the material which it contains. The objection is that it is incompetent, irrelevant [1403] and immaterial. I think we have argued and discussed this matter at length heretofore. It is our position that what was done in the years previous to the critical years under different circumstances and under different law is no evidence in the case.

Mr. Clark: In addition to that, your Honor, so far as this document is concerned, it also contains conclusions as to matters of fact which are not subject to expert testimony, such as a statement in the first page to the effect that it was the consistent practice of the Western Pacific group to do this and that. It is also based upon certain assertions of fact which should properly be elicited by oral testimony. We will add to our objection that this is not a proper method of developing any expert opinion this gentleman may have.

Mr. Phleger: Our objection hasn't anything to do with that. Our objection is it is just incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial because the circumstances which existed during this entire period were entirely different from those which existed in these critical years, and the law was different.

Mr. Adams: May I respond to plaintiff's objection, because I think the interveners' objections are premature, the report not yet having been offered.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Clark: We are simply adding them at this time to plaintiff's objection, in which we concur.

Mr. Adams: The objections are wholly premature as stated [1404] by the intervener since I have not offered the report. The objections may run to the report when it is offered, but plaintiff's objection runs to the whole subject matter of this report and should, I think, fairly be answered at this time.

Your Honor, this is our defense. You will recall we had some discussion of this when Mr. Elsey was on the stand. One of our defenses is this, that during the whole period of affiliation between the plaintiff corporation and the defendant railroad company and other companies in that group, which began in 1916, and which ended for tax purposes on April 30, 1944, a consistent procedure was followed in the allocation of taxes, and that consistent procedure was that taxes should be allocated to the income-producing members of the group, and that no payment should be made to the loss company for the tax advantage which its loss brought to the affiliated group. That is our defense, your Honor, offered on our theory of the defense, on the particular facts in this case. We contend that that procedure, which this report is offered to establish, is binding upon the plaintiff corporation, being the party responsible and which established it. We contend further that it establishes a practice or contract relationship which will govern the determination of this case.

We say further—and this is an additional reason for bringing forward this evidence—that when the plaintiff corporation comes into equity, and having enjoyed the advantages [1405] of an arrangement under which it secured the tax advantages of the losses of other companies and did not pay for them, it does not come into equity on the basis that equity can respond to, because of the ordinary rule that one who has had the fat off an arrangement between interlocking companies cannot then, when the thing turned out to be advantageous to someone else at the end of the period, insist upon taking a different position than that which he himself established and enforced during the time the arrangement was advantageous to him. These are theories. We have argued them before. And, as I say, this is our defense that we are putting in, and I take it your Honor can, of course, receive the evidence and consider its materiality in relation to any judgment your Honor may pronounce, but it would be inappropriate to exclude at this time evidence going to show the facts that are stated in the report. [1406]

The Court: I suppose there is really no dispute as to the fact because it all appears from the income tax returns and books that this was what was done, that is, what is shown in the report was done?

Mr. Adams: I think that is correct. This has been a very thorough and very arduous job to get the facts. We have had Mr. Cockburn and his associates, those who assisted him in his determination, spending months in getting the facts and getting them on a basis so that we think we have given a full, complete and correct account with respect to this matter for over all these years.

The Court: Of course, the only ultimate fact that is of any consequence is that each year the taxes were allocated as described in the report, and no credit or allowance was made to a company which suffered a loss in the group, or having contributed that loss, as it were, for the benefit of the final tax liability of the parent company or the group as a whole. I suppose there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Clark: Yes, there is, your Honor.

Mr. Adams: There are details provided in the report. If it is in; then counsel can use it. I rather assume that there is not going to be much question about the complete accuracy of the report. Then all counsel will have it to use as a basis of arguments, but we feel it is incumbent upon us—and we pleaded this in our pleadings—and we think it is a matter of defense [1407] that this was the continuous, standard practice that was followed throughout these years during all the time that the plaintiff corporation was the controlling party.

The Court: I would be inclined to think that as between the same parties to a transaction, that might be a persuasive argument. But, of course, you have the legal question here of whether this reorganized company can have the benefit of that. That, I think, would be one of the important questions that you have to present.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: I understand that is the plaintiff's theory of the case. We have a view that where the plaintiff starts during the period when it is in command and control and takes advantages out of the arrangement which it establishes, and then when, at the end of a tax period an advantage comes to another member of the affiliated group, the plaintiff should not be heard to complaint of the advantage of the other member if under its own practice established by itself it took the advantage in prior years and neither recognized any claim nor heard any complaint from any other member of the group that the plaintiff was doing what the plaintiff now complains of here.

The Court: I think those are matters that you will have to argue on the submission of the case. I still think the main question in this case is the question of the right, if any, in the plaintiff and the admeasurement of that right. There is no conflict that the reorganized company got the benefit of this. [1408] It may be that you can show that the plaintiff had no right or had no right that is capable of monetary measurement. I do not know. That is the real question in the case. I do not think any of these other matters make any difference.

Mr. Adams: We offer it as a part of our defense, your Honor, and you will appreciate it if I were to take a very simple situation—let us say you and I have been engaged in some kind of a common enterprise, and at the beginning of the term the arrangement between us has been very satisfactory to me. I do not think then at the end of the term, because it turns out to be very satisfactory to you, that I am in a position to complain about that.

The Court: As I say, if it is the same parties, of course, there might be a good argument, but your opponents contend that some new owners here got the benefit of this and they still think they have a right to get some salvage out of it because these other fellows got a benefit. I do not know if they have such a right. My mind is open on that, or whether it is capable of admission. That is a problem you gentlemen will have to labor under.

Mr. Adams: I am just seeking to put in my defense so I will have my facts, so that when the time comes for argument we will have them to argue from.

The Court: I merely suggested, counsel, that there is not much point in spending a lot of time arguing about the [1409] admissibility of this at this time. Why not let the witness testify that everything in this report is correct, and if you are not satisfied with his statement in that regard, you can cross-examine him on that. If you do not wish to cross-examine him, let the record be admitted in evidence and the question whether it has a legal bearing upon the issues of this case you can argue at the time of the submission of the case.

Mr. Phleger: We think we should interpose our objection so as to preserve our position. Counsel, I am sure, inadvertently, misstates the situation.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

We were the parent company during this period, and as the tax laws contemplated and intended, of course, we got the benefit. That did not require allocation of losses back and forth at all, but when we became a complete stranger, with no further financial stock in the situation, why, what took place in prior years is utterly immaterial.

The Court: I understand the position of the parties in the matter, but the defendant wants to assert a defense which he says he cannot present unless he has some record to present it on, because if he just says he is presenting it on the basis of the past conduct of the parties, he hasn't anything in the record to show what that was. He has no factual basis upon which to predicate that defense, and I think it probably would be a waste of time now to argue this thing out, because when you get all through I think I would take refuge in the rule of civil procedure which would allow me to reserve ruling on it, because I would want to [1410] consider it. I would want to have the benefit of the arguments of both sides on it, and I think the most sensible thing to do, and which would save time for everyone concerned, so that the whole question could be presented with its various facets at one time, would be simply to make your pro forma showing and have the witness testify that everything in that report is true and correct as a result of his investigations, and I will admit it in evidence subject to the future determination upon the submission of the case as to whether or not it has a material bearing and does sustain the legal defense which is urged, and then you can argue that out at the time of the submission of the case. It certainly is unnecessary for me to sit here and listen to this witness go into each schedule and tell how he did it, if you are not going to raise any question about that.

Is that procedure generally agreeable to all counsel?

Mr. Phleger: That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. Adams: I will ask the question asked by your Honor:

Q. Based upon the examination you have described, does your credit report correctly summarize the information contained in the books and records of the respective corporations for the period and on the subject covered by the report?

A. It does.

Q. And you believe it to be in all respects true and correct to the best of your capacity?

A. I do. [1411]

Mr. Adams: I will offer Defendant's Exhibit 40 for identification now as Defendant's Exhibit 40 in evidence.

Mr. Clark: To which we object, your Honor, on the ground stated by Mr. Phleger for the record, and also we specifically object to the inclusion of the first two pages, that is, the narrative on the first two pages of the offer as being conclusions on factual matters which should not be considered as evidence in the case. Other than that we have no objection to the suggestion of the court as to how they should be treated.

The Court: I won't give any weight to the opinion of the witness in that regard, inasmuch as it is a factual report. And I will admit it subject to the conditions which the court has already stated. However, if after examining the report either the plaintiff or the intervener wishes to conduct any cross-examination of the witness in respect to the accuracy of any statement, that right should be reserved to both the plaintiff and the intervener.

Mr. Clark: Very well, your Honor.

Mr. Adams: The record will show, your Honor, that counsel for all the parties have had copies of this report since some time prior to the pre-trial in this case.

Mr. Phleger: That is right.

(The Defendant's Exhibit No. 40 for identification was thereupon received in evidence.)

Mr. Adams: If the Court please, I ask that there be marked for identification as Defendant's Exhibit 41 for identification a single sheet dated February 16, 1949, entitled "The Western Pacific Railroad Company, Federal Income and Excess Profits Taxes for Years 1942 and 1943 and for the First Four Months of 1944," on the basis of assuming that the Western Pacific Railroad Company had filed separate returns and had the benefit of its own net operating loss carry-overs and excess profits credit carry-overs computed as though it had filed separate returns in prior years, and the additional deductions from income as shown in the note below, and ask that the document be marked for identification Defendant's 41. And if I may take the liberty, I will hand up a copy to the Court, copy having been furnished this day to opposing counsel.

The Court: This would be similiar, then, to Plaintiff's Exhibit 73?

Mr. Adams: Basis 2. [1413]

The Court: Is that Basis 2?

Mr. Adams: Yes, Basis 2. It is more or less similar to Basis 2, but there is quite a wide difference, your Honor.

The Court: I mean you are attempting to show the same general thing?

Mr. Adams: I will ask the witness about that.

The Court: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, I hand you Defendant's Exhibit 41 for identification. Is that paper a summary of computations which you made?

A. It is.

Q. Where did you obtain the basic information from which your computations were made?

A. From the tax returns filed.

Q. And the tax returns for what years?

A. For the years 1939 to 1944, inclusive.

Mr. Adams: Now may the record show that the returns for 1940 to '45 have already been offered by the plaintiff?

Q. And do you have a copy of the 1939 tax return here? A. Yes.

Q. May I refer to that?

Mr. Adams: I will ask that Mr. Morse hand it up.

Mr. Phleger: The return for 1945 is not in evidence and we would like to have it in evidence, and also that for '46 and '47. [1414]

Mr. Adams: Well, my recollection was that Mr. Buchanan testified with regard to the basis of his computations, that he had used the returns from 1940 to 1946. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Phleger: Mr. Buchanan?

Mr. Clark: No, it is not.

Mr. Phleger: 1944.

Mr. Clark: In the last eight months, I think he said, of '44.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Oh, that is in, yes. Well, your Honor, I don't have the returns for '46 and '47 with me, but with counsel's permission, I may proceed with the examination on the calculations, and we can produce the basic returns when we resume at the next session, if that is agreeable.

I do, at this time, offer as Defendant's Exhibit 42, the corporation income and excess profits tax return of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation for the year 1939.

The Court: Well, why do you need that in connection with this?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: The witness testified he had to go back to the figures in that return in order to get his computations.

The Court: For Exhibit 41?

Mr. Adams: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: I see.

The Clerk: Are you offering that in evidence?

Mr. Adams: Yes. And may I state I am producing this from [1415] the files of the defendant railroad company, being a copy sent by the plaintiff corporation to the defendant railroad company of the consolidated returns for 1939.

(Whereupon income tax return for 1939 was received in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit 42.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Cockburn, referring to Defendant's 41 for identification, the schedule in your hands, did you make any correction in the information appearing on the income tax returns you have described in making the computations on this schedule?

A. Yes, I have made two principal corrections: one, the information from which these corrections were made appears in revenue agent's report dated June 12, 1947, relating to an examination of 1940 and 1941 consolidated federal income tax returns. The first adjustment related to a loss claimed on abandonment of Deep Creek properties, and the second related to an amount of reorganization expense of $169,000, that was disallowed.

Q. Now his Honor inquired how it came about that the income tax return for 1939 was related in any way to these computations. Did that arise in connection with the Deep Creek loss?

A. Part of it, yes.

Q. Well, please tell his Honor that part, and the other part as well.

Q. The Deep Creek loss was originally reported in 1940 federal [1416] income tax return. The revenue agent in his report explained that it was a 1939 item, and we therefore repositioned the loss to 1939; and as a result of a difference in the law, the item, the greater portion of the item, or $600,000 for which the loss was claimed in 1940, was considered to be a capital loss, and since the company had already availed itself of a $2,000 capital loss reduction, no benefit was obtained by repositioning the loss into that year. The balance of the adjustment of reorganization expense was just not claimed as a deduction in 1940.

Q. Go right ahead. I didn't want to interrupt you.

A. To explain further, the reason it was necessary to take into consideration the 1939 figures, the 1939 loss is a carry-over into the year 1941, for a net operating loss deduction, and in turn, that affects the excess profits credit carry-over into subsequent years.

Q. Was the consequence of this correction which you made to increase or to decrease the tax liability computations on 41 for identification?

A. It increased the computation, the tax.

Q. Now in your computations, Defendant's 41 for identification, what treatment did you give inter-company interest accruals?

A. We treated that interest as a deduction.

Q. Had those inter-company interest accruals been eliminated in computing the consolidated return tax liability? [1417]

A. They had.

Q. Is it your understanding that they may be properly restored as deductions in computing income on a separate return basis?

A. It is.

Q. And do you have an understanding with respect to the recognition of such interest accruals where they have occured during reorganization proceedings?

A. Yes, and the Commissioner has ruled on that.

Q. To what ruling do you refer?

A. I believe it is X.T. 3635.

Q. Now in the consolidated returns which were actually filed, were deductions taken for accruals of interest on all Western Pacific Railroad obligations that were held outside the affiliated group?

A. They were.

Q. Is it your understanding that such interest is deductible, even though not taken up as income in the accounts or tax returns of the creditors?

A. It is.

Q. Did you make any deductions not appearing on the consolidated returns as filed in the computations in your exhibit, 41 for identification?

A. I did.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. Will you please state what they were?

A. We made deductions for accelerated amortization in the years [1418] 1942, in the amount of $127,531.24; in 1943, in the amount of $259,654.81; in the first four months of 1944, in the amount of $522,741.10. I also made deductions for the United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds in 1941 of $50,000; in 1942, $780,000; in 1943, $1,060,000; the first four months of 1944, $40,000. I also made a deduction for a partial bad debt loss on the Sacramento Northern Railway notes and advances in 1943, in the amount of $8,526,690.72.

Q. Now, Mr. Cockburn, referring to the amounts you have stated, of deductions on account of accelerated amortization, will you please state the basis of deductions taken for accelerated amoritization?

The Court: Well, the witness has answered that question. May I make this inquiry, so I can get myself a little bit oriented to this? I may be in error in this, but is the difference a substantial difference between Mr. Buchanan's basis and this estimate, the items that are listed at the bottom of the page of this Exhibit 41? I mean, a big, substantial difference?

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, your Honor's inquiry is based on, of course, at first, the proposition that the deductions that are taken in the lower half of this exhibit were not taken in Mr. Buchanan's Basis 2.

The Court: Well, of course. I say that is the reason why this basis in Exhibit 41 is so much lower than that which this witness has included, or in which this witness has included, the [1419] substantial items that Mr. Buchanan did not use in his basis. I am not asking you to commit yourself, I just wanted to find out if, substantially, that is the basis of the difference between the two estimates.

Mr. Adams: Well, I would like to ask Mr. Cockburn one question to help me in giving your Honor my answer.

Q. Leaving out of account the effect of deductions, Mr. Cockburn, the three deductions that are taken account of in this schedule, have you made any figure to determine the variance or approximate variance between the computations you have made and the computations which Mr. Buchanan made on his Basis 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 80?

A. No.

Mr. Adams: Well, perhaps we can bring that to your Honor in the morning. We can give you a figure that would more accurately answer your Honor's question.

The Court: Well, it just kind of looks like it to me, and that is why I asked the question, because I see there is about $10,000,000 and if you add that to $7,000,000—well, you get pretty close to it. There must be some other figures involved in it, but it looks to me as if that might be the substantial difference.

Mr. Adams: The witness has stated he has taken

account of some inter-company interest deductions that Mr. Buchanan did not take account of, and some other factors. [1420]

The Court: There might be some other factors.

Mr. Adams: I think your Honor is right.

The Court: It seems to me the bigger amount by way of difference are these figures.

Mr. Adams: I believe that is true; and furthermore, I believe that Mr. Buchanan gave some figures on accelerated amortization that somewhat resemble the figures that are produced on this exhibit. So that the larger deductions are the latter two in effect. Mr. Buchanan said himself that he hadn't taken off accelerated amortization in producing his Basis 2 figures, but he gave us some figures when we talked with him about it.

Mr. Phleger: I don't like to interrupt, but would it not be helpful if this witness, in the morning, could give us the figures without these adjustments?

Mr. Adams: Well, it is a little quick work; these things don't get done in five minutes.

Mr. Phleger: In other words, if he gave us the figures without the adjustments, then you would have the comparable figures for Basis 2.

The Court: Well, maybe you can calculate that.

Mr. Adams: Let me suggest this: Mr. Cockburn and Mr. Buchanan have been discussing this matter one with the other.

Q. Have you not? A. That is correct.

Mr. Adams: I think Mr. Buchanan can produce the figures [1421] for Mr. Phleger that the plaintiff desires.

The Court: I only asked the question because it would seem to me that the thing could centralize on these figures here that you are examining him about. That will create the real issue as between the two estimates.

Mr. Phleger: That is correct.

Mr. Adams: Well, I think in addition to that we can produce a figure of our own—or at least I hope so. If we have any substantial variance with Mr. Buchanan's figures, on his own hypothesis, that is.

The Court: I think that would be helpful, Mr. Adams.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Cockburn, referring—wait a moment, didn't I have an open question, your Honor, and then your Honor asked a question?

The Court: Yes, you asked him the basis of these figures on accelerated amortization, and then is when I interrupted you. There is where there was some question like that asked by you, I seem to recollect.

Mr. Adams: That is what it was about, yes, your Honor.

Q. Would you state the basis of the deductions taken here for accelerated amortization? When I say "taken here," I mean on 41 for identification.

A. Under the provisions of the Internal Revenue laws, a taxpayer which had constructed an emergency facility for war purposes was permitted to amortize the cost of the facility over [1422] a 60-month period, with provision in the law that if the war ended earlier, and by proclamation of president, they would then have the election of amortizing the cost of the facility over the period from the date the facility was completed to within a certain period of time after the date of proclamation, or to take the balance of the amortization over the normal life of the asset involved.

The Court: Was 1942 the first year, then, that that could be availed of?

The Witness: That was the first year in which, your Honor, the Western Pacific Railroad Company had any assets constructed under these provisions of the law. I am not sure whether it began, or actually could have started in 1941 or '42, if they had facilities in an earlier year.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Cockburn, referring to the deductions as indicated on 41 for identification, during the four years, 1941, 1942, 1943, and the first four months of 1944, for United States Government freight cut-backs, refunds, will you please state the deductions you have taken in your computations for those freight cut-backs and refunds? [1423]

Mr. Phleger: Now excuse me for interrupting; I am trying to be helpful. Are you dropping the amortization claim now? Because in our view, the witness has not supported at all his deductions. He has stated what the law is, but he hasn't stated what the facts are.

Mr. Adams: Well, my recollection is that Mr. Buchanan, the witness, came out about the same with these figures. I am not dropping it at all; I don't have any query in my mind about it. What is your question as to amortization?

Mr. Phleger: Well, I would say before any foundation was laid, for any such deduction, you would have to show how much the emergency facilities were that were constructed, and when they were constructed, the years in which they were taken, how he readjusted them, and what the tax credits by this readjustment were that the company received that should have been offset by these additional amounts.

Mr. Adams: Can you answer Mr. Phleger's question?

A. The first portion of his question I might answer by stating that the information from which these figures were computed appears in the tax returns which were filed. The portion of the amortization, the facilities, are listed in the schedule attached to the return, and the computation of the accelerated portion of that amortization, which is listed here, was determined from the information appearing there. [1424]

Mr. Phleger: Yes, but not in returns that are in evidence.

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, I didn't surrender the witness altogether.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: No, but I wanted to be helpful. I will not ask any further questions. I will have to object to this exhibit on the acceleration matter, because there is no proper foundation. The information that he refers to in our later returns——

The Court: Well, he will have to develop that inquiry first.

Mr. Adams: The witness has been interrupted, I thought, in his answer, and I would like to have him continue with his answer.

Mr. Phleger: Excuse me.

A. (Continuing): These computations were made by us from the information appearing in the returns for the years '42, '43 and '44, and we assumed in making these computations that the taxpayer, the Western Pacific Railroad Company, would have elected to claim the benefit of accelerated amortization if it had been to its benefit to do so.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, making that assumption, did you find in the returns as filed the figures from which you were able to compute the deduction for account of accelerated amortization, if that election were exercised? [1425]

A. I did.

Q. Those figures you found in the returns as filed? A. That is correct.

Q. Were they all that you required as an accountant, a tax accountant, to satisfactorily compute that deduction? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, then, may I turn to the item of deduction for the United States Government freight cutbacks and refunds; and I will ask you to explain that deduction appearing for the four years I mentioned.

A. The figures from which these deductions were computed were obtained from the general auditor's office of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and a sum was obtained, an approximate total freight cut-back of $2,000,000 for the period '42 to '46.

Q. Now, then, what method did you use in determining the particular amounts of the deductions applied to '41, '42, '43 and the first four months of '44, out of that total of $2,000,000?

A. These are based on the actual figures obtained from the general auditor's office and rounded out to the nearest $10,000.

Q. So that you obtained actual figures for each of the particular periods which are indicated here, each of the particular years, and part of the year, which are indicated here on 41 for Identification?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Phleger: Do I understand that these figures were given to the witness or that he got them out of the files?

The Witness: They were given to us.

Mr. Phleger: Then I move that that matter be stricken out as hearsay.

Mr. Adams: Well, your Honor, it is just a question of connecting up. I am putting in a computation at this time, and I assume that with an objection of this sort, it will be necessary for me to produce the witness who has taken two months to make the particular computation on this calculation, on which this calculation is predicated.

The Court: Yes. Well, subject to its not being connected up you can, of course, move to strike it out.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Cockburn, will you please explain the deduction of some $8,500,000 in 1943 on account of the partial bad debt loss on Sacramento Northern Railway notes and advances?

A. On December 31, 1943, Sacramento Northern Railway Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of Western Pacific Railroad Company, owed to the Western Pacific Railroad Company on unsecured notes and open account advances the amount of $9,474,100.80. Mr. Elsey has informed us that in his opinion these notes and advances were worth only 10 per cent of face at that time.

Q. That is in what year? [1427]

A. In the year 1943.

Q. Now, could a deduction have been taken on account of a part of that indebtedness in 1943?

A. It could.

Mr. Phleger: Just a moment. I move that that be stricken out on the ground that it is a conclusion of the witness. And no proper foundation laid, a legal matter.

Mr. Adams: Well, we don't expect to bind his Honor as to any legal matter, but certainly the man who made the computations should be in a position to explain it, and that is the purpose of these questions.

Mr. Phleger: Well, that is an entirely different matter. He is acting upon a certain assumption.

The Court: Well, of course this is just a computation. I don't think that the witness is offering to testify in order to prove that that is a proper deduction.

Mr. Adams: Certainly not, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: That was the question that was asked him, namely, could this deduction be taken in that year.

The Court: Well, that depends upon the facts as to whether that would be a proper deduction.

Mr. Adams: Of course, your Honor. But the witness knows something about this, and I think he should state from his point of view as an expert accountant the basis on which a deduction, speaking as an expert accountant, could have been [1428] taken in a return for that year. It wouldn't be binding on your Honor, nor on any party, but it will explain how the witness makes the deduction, and it is for that purpose that I ask the question.

Mr. Phleger: Now, there is pending a motion to strike out the previous question and answer. The witness was asked whether or not this could be deducted in that year. He said "Yes," and I moved that it go out.

The Court: Yes, I think that motion is good. You can ask the witness to give the reasons why he included it in his computation.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: Thank you, your Honor. He may do that.

The Court: That, of course, wouldn't be a statement that it was deductible in that year.

Mr. Phleger: No, because this is a legal question, not an accounting question.

The Court: That is right. I think there is no doubt about that.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Would you state the reasons, Mr. Cockburn, why you included this item in your calculations, including the same deduction in your calculations on 41 for Identification?

Under the provisions of Section 23(k) of the Internal Revenue Code, a taxpayer is permitted to claim a deduction for a debt which is partially worthless, and may claim that portion of the debt down to the point to which it is worthless, [1429] and which is written off in the year in which it is deducted.

Mr. Phleger: Now may it please the Court, that is a legal answer. He is quoting the law.

Mr. Adams: He is stating his understanding.

Mr. Phleger: We don't agree that the law justifies this deduction.

Mr. Adams: Well, your Honor, we shall never contend——

The Court: That is the reason he put in this tabulation. That is the effect of the testimony. I will allow it for that purpose. That doesn't prove that it is a proper deduction.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: Surely.

The Court: It merely indicates the reason on the part of the man who made the tabulation for including it.

Mr. Adams: We shall always contend the witness is an excellent tax accountant, but any question of law is for the Court.

Q. Now, Mr. Cockburn, upon what hypotheses or assumptions did you include this particular deduction in the computations in Defendants' Exhibit 41?

A. Upon the assumption, first, that it was worth only 10 per cent of face on December 31, 1943; secondly, that it had been written down by a 90 per cent amount in the accounts for that year; and, thirdly, that no deduction had been claimed for this amount in prior years, and allowed.

Q. And did you also assume, as I think you stated in your [1430] schedule, that the railroad company filed a separate return for that year?

A. The railroad company was included in a consolidated return for the year 1943.

Q. Yes. I am asking you upon what assumptions you included this deduction in your computations. That is No. 41 for Identification.

The Court: He has already said that this is a schedule that refers to the filing of a separate return for these years by the committee. What this amounts to is if it is a good deduction, why, then, it could be taken. That is all.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: And that if it were taken, this would be the result of the calculation.

Mr. Adams: I perhaps could just get one question on this, and finish with this particular exhibit.

The Court: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): In your opinion, Mr. Cockburn, do the computations you have made on Defendants' Exhibit 41 for Identification state correctly the tax liability of the Western Pacific Railroad Company for Federal income and excess profits taxes for the years 1942 and 1943, and the first four months of 1944, on the basis of the assumptions that are described in the computation, and to which you referred in your testimony?

A. They do. [1431]

Mr. Phleger: Well, just a moment. I will object to that. He stated what he did. Now, some of the assumptions are on this document. There are some other assumptions that are in his testimony, and I am sure we are going to find there are a lot of other assumptions. I think this should rest, that this is a computation made on the basis that he has testified to, and that the accuracy of the figures on that basis, that he believes the figures are accurate on that basis, not that the tax liability is as shown.

Mr. Clark: The question calls for his testimony that this is a correct tax liability upon this.

Mr. Adams: Oh, on the basis of the assumptions that were included in my question, your Honor, it is a computation of tax liability on the basis of the various assumptions that are indicated.

The Court: I don't see any objection to that. I will overrule the objection.

Mr. Adams: And I will offer the document, then, now, as Defendants' Exhibit 41.

Mr. Phleger: Well, now, I——

Mr. Adams: Subject to being connected up.

Mr. Phleger: I don't think the foundation has been laid at all for these assumptions.

The Court: Well, I think all this amounts to is that having these, without any question as to the validity of the [1432] various deductions that are taken, that if they were taken, the calculations would be as stated in this.

Mr. Phleger: Well, that is all right.

The Court: Well, that is the way I understand the testimony.

Mr. Clark: Or if they could be taken.

Mr. Phleger: In other words, if they could have been taken upon the basis stated, that this is the tax that he figures out would have been paid.

The Court: Well, I think that is what Mr. Adams had in mind.

Mr. Adams: That is right, your Honor, and I understand further that it will be obligatory on my part to connect up, by another witness, the cut back and refund figures that are shown here on this exhibit.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, Mr. Cockburn, that the figure for the Sacramento Northern Railway notes and advances is 90 per cent of the amount of these notes and advances as of the end of the year 1943?

A. That is correct.

(Defendants' Exhibit 41 for Identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Adams: I have no further questions this afternoon, your Honor. If it is an appropriate time to recess?

Mr. Phleger: Before adjournment, do I understand, Mr. [1433] Adams, that this witness will have the figure as to what the computation would be without the deductions down below?

Mr. Adams: I don't think so. I think you can get it easily from Mr. Buchanan. I think this witness will be very busy, but we will do the best we can. But why don't you try Mr. Buchanan?

Mr. Phleger: Well, after all, these are his figures (indicating).

Mr. Adams: No, you were asking for a comparison with Mr. Buchanan's figures.

Mr. Phleger: I am not asking for a comparison, I am asking what figures this witness would show without the deductions.

The Court: Can you figure that?

The Witness: No, we have not figured that.

The Court: You didn't make any calculation leaving out these items of amortization and cutbacks for the Sacramento Northern? That is, you didn't make any calculation leaving out those figures as to what the tax would be if a separate return was filed? Or did you?

The Witness: We have made quite a number of computations, your Honor, and I couldn't be too certain. I don't think we have. That takes a little while; it would be a different set of computations, and a different net operating loss carry-over, excess profit credits and other elements entering into the computations. They are very involved computations. [1434]

The Court: That may be so.

Mr. Phleger: Then there will be no estimate on this basis if these assumptions are not correct or any of them. [1435]

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Mr. Cockburn, since yesterday's session have you made a rough computation of the amount of tax liability which the Western Pacific Railroad Company would have incurred on the various assumptions contained in Defendants' Exhibit No. 41, exclusive of the deductions that are described in note 1 to that schedule? A. I have.

Q. What is the amount?

A. Approximately $14,800,000.

Q. I would like to call your attention to the computation described as Basis 2 in Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 80. Do you have a copy of it?

A. I have.

Q. That computation shows a total tax liability of approximately $15,572,000 for the Western Pacific Railroad Company for the same period on the assumptions stated in that document?

A. That is correct. [1437]

Q. I direct your attention to the fact that the difference between that figure and the one you have just given is about $771,000, and I will ask you if you will tell the Court briefly the principal factors accounting for that difference.

A. The principal factors are the deductions claimed by us in our computations for interest on inter-company holdings of indebtedness, the repositioning of the Deep Creek loss from 1940 to 1939, the elimination as a deduction in 1940 of reorganization expenses, the changes required in the computation of the net operating loss, and reversing excess profits credit carry-overs, result in a difference in our bases; and also other minor inaccuracies which are not material to the computations and which can probably be corrected.

Mr. Adams: At this time, your Honor, I offer for identification a schedule dated February 16, 1949, marked C, consisting of one page entitled "Western Pacific Railroad Company Federal Income and Excess Profits Taxes for Years 1942 and 1943 and the First Four Months of 1944," on the basis of assuming that the Western Pacific Railroad Company had filed separate returns and had the benefit of its own net operating loss carry-overs and excess profit carry-overs, computed as though it had filed separate returns in prior years, and the additional deductions from income as shown in the note below.

I believe that will be 43 for Identification.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 43 [1438] for Identification.)

Mr. Adams: May I ask that a copy be handed up to his Honor.

Q. Mr. Cockburn, do you have a copy of that schedule C in your hands? A. I do.

Q. You also have a copy in your hands of Schedule D, which is now Defendants' Exhibit 41?

A. I do.

Q. Will you please explain to the Court the difference between Schedule D introduced yesterday as Defendants' Exhibit 41 and this Schedule C, which you have in your hands.

A. The computations in Schedule C are based on exactly the same figures as used in Schedule D, with the exception of the amount deducted for United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds. Those in Schedule D were on the basis of a total of approximately $3,000,000 for the period 1942 to 1946, and on Schedule C on the basis of $3,000,000.

Mr. Adams: Will you read the answer?

(Answer read.)

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

The Witness: I wish to correct that answer. The computations in Schedule D were on the basis of $2,000,000 for the period for United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds, and the computations in Schedule C are on the basis of $3,000,000 for the same deductions. [1439]

Q. (By Mr. Adams): That is the only difference between Schedule D, which is Exhibit 41, and this Schedule C in your hands?

A. That is correct.

The Court: That is about $370,000?

The Witness: That is correct, your Honor.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): And so that your testimony yesterday, stating the bases, and assumptions on which you prepared Schedule D would apply likewise to this schedule with that one difference?

A. Yes, it would.

Mr. Adams: I will offer the schedule previously marked 43 for Identification as Defendants' Exhibit 43.

Mr. Phleger: I object to the receipt upon the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and also upon the basis that the assumptions shown to have been made with respect to this item are contrary to the evidence in the record.

The Court: Well, I admitted the other exhibit merely as a computation, not as proof of the validity of any of the deductions claimed therein—but only as a computation assuming the validity of the deductions, that the tax would be so much.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: Yes. I think that the assumptions, or some of the assumptions, are contrary to the evidence in the record. If I can simply have my objection noted, I have no——

The Court: Well, I take it, Mr. Phleger, that Mr. Adams is perhaps putting this on, shall we say, a little bit out of [1440] order, as he may be intending to put in some other kind of evidence to sustain the validity of these deductions which are asserted in this return, or to make some legal showing on that.

Mr. Adams: I would like to respond to your Honor on that. With regard to the deductions for accelerated amortization, we consider they have been proved. With regard to the deduction for partial bad debt loss on the Sacramento Northern Railway notes and advances, we consider we have offered all of the proof, and our own proof is that that deduction is based upon the hypothesis that the partial loss was written into the books in 1943, which it was not, in fact. So that this is a hypothetical approach on a separate tax return basis. With regard to the United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds, the third item of deduction in this computation, I stated yesterday to your Honor that I would have to connect up the $2,000,000 figure, Mr. Elsey having spoken about that as the actual figure, but having gotten his information from his auditing department. So I will have the witness here to testify to that actual $2,000,000 figure.

Now, this Exhibit C carries that deduction on the $3,000,000 basis. Mr. Elsey testified to an estimate of an additional million dollars, and that is just why this is $3,000,000 in this schedule whereas it was $2,000,000 in the other schedule.

Mr. Phleger: But Mr. Elsey also testified that he was [1441] unable to allocate those statements to any year.

The Court: Well, of course, now we are getting into an argument as to the effect of the testimony with respect to these items. I see no harm in, subject to the limitations stated, allowing the computations in; so that if it appears that there is validity to the deductions, the Court will have before it a calculation showing the amounts involved. If it appears that there isn't validity to these deductions, then the schedules will be of no importance in the matter.

Mr. Clark: Well, may it be understood, your Honor, that they are admitted subject to motions to strike in the event they are not connected up?

The Court: I think perhaps that might be the best way of handling it, so with the statement that the Court has made, that these two exhibits—has 41 been admitted here?

Mr. Adams: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: So that 43 may be admitted on the same basis as 41 was admitted, plus the conditions that the Court has just included in admitting the statement in evidence.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

(Defendants' Exhibit 43 for Identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Adams: I take it the same understanding should apply to Plaintiff's 80, the computation the plaintiff has introduced?

Mr. Phleger: Oh, not at all. They were mathematical computations from the income taxes. [1442]

Mr. Adams: I am not arguing how good or bad they were, merely if there is to be an open proposition about a motion to strike as to our computations, we should, by parallel reasoning, have the same right.

The Court: Well, of course, on the face of the case it would involve the amount of taxes, both sides can argue as to the effectiveness of their computations with respect to taxes. I don't think we need to make any particular rulings on that at this time.

Mr. Adams: No. I just asked for parity of treatment.

The Court: It is very obvious what these schedules are for. One side says, "Now, if we win the case we have to show what the saving of income tax was. This is our calculation of what it was. It is based on certain factors." The other side says, "Well, even if you do win the case, it isn't as much as you say, because these other factors have to be taken into account."

Now, that is one of the issues the Court will have to determine, and the schedules merely assist the

Court in fixing the amounts, depending upon which respective contention is established. That is all. Now, I think with what we have said, we understand one another, and each side's rights are protected in the record.

Mr. Adams: Now, if your Honor please, I offer for identification the single schedule sheet dated February 16, 1949, [1443] marked B, entitled "The Western Pacific Railroad Company Federal Income Taxes for 1942 and 1943 and the First Four Months of 1944, on the Basis of Assuming That the Western Pacific Railroad Company Had Filed Separate Returns and Had the Benefit of Its Own Net Operating Loss Carry-overs and Excess Profits Credit Carry-overs Computed as Though It Had Filed Separate Returns in Prior Years, and the Additional Deductions from Income as Shown in the Note Below," and I will ask that a copy be handed up to his Honor.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 44 for Identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, do you have a copy of the schedule B, now marked Defendant's 44 for Identification, in your hands?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in this Defendants' 44 for Identification, at what figure is the deduction for United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds taken? A. $2,000,000.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. And then what difference is there between Defendants' 44 for Identification and Defendants' 41, the schedule introduced yesterday, in which the cut-backs were t ken at the same figure?

A. You refer to Schedule D? [1444]

Q. Yes.

A. The difference between those two schedules is that in Schedule B, identified as B, we have deducted United States Government reparations as claims in the amounts indicated, and in the years indicated, based on total reparations claims of $12,000,000.

Q. Now, the figures you have there on that matter are stated under the years 1942, 1943 and 1944. Can you explain what relation those figures bear to the $12,000,000 figure which you assumed on account of the reparations claims?

A. We went to the company's office, and from certain records there obtained totals of the Western Pacific Railroad Company's United States Government freight for the years 1942 to 1946, inclusive. And we assumed that the $12,000,000 should be prorated over the years in proportion to the amounts of United States Government freight in the years 1942 to 1946.

Q. And I take it you yourself do not take any responsibility for the $12,000,000 figure which was supplied to you as an assumed figure over the whole period for the amount of reparations?

A. That is correct.

Q. And this, then, is a computation, this Schedule B, Defendants' 44 for Identification, which involves in addition to the hypotheses and assumptions on which 41 is based, the further assumption that deductions may be taken for reparations claims, and that such deductions would apply to the tax years in [1445] question; you have both of those assumptions, do you not, in respect of the deduction for the reparations claims in this schedule? A. That is correct.

Mr. Adams: I offer the document, your Honor, as Defendants' Exhibit 44, and not as in any wise proof of the validity of that last deduction, but as the computation which will be made, assuming that any figure can be made for the amount of reparations claims. We know, of course, that at present that litigation between the Government and the carriers has not proceeded to a point upon which any definite figure can be ascertained.

Mr. Phleger: May it please the Court, I object to the admission of this proposed exhibit upon the ground it is irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial and no foundation has been laid for it. We had an extensive discussion, as you will recall, upon this matter and on our objection to the admission of this evidence, which was sustained.

Mr. Clark: Same objection.

Mr. Phleger: That is, claims predicated upon railroad reparations.

The Court: I think counsel is entitled to have in the record a calculation that would show what the situation would be if the evidence were proper. I see no objection to allowing it merely as a calculation. It is not offered in proof of [1446] any of the facts stated.

Mr. Phleger: Your Honor, in the course of the argument it was demonstrated that this is a reparation matter pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which all the railroads resist as being absolutely unfounded. It not only involves validity of claims, but it involves the amount of claims and it involves the assumptions that are made as to the spreading of the claims.

The Court: Mr. Phleger, I understand all of that, but counsel on the other side seems to think he should have a calculation in the record. It does not prove anything, and if there is no validity to the deduction, then the calculation does not mean anything. I see no harm in allowing it as a calculation subject to those conditions.

Mr. Clark: And subject to a motion to strike.

The Court: Subject to a motion to strike.

(Defendants' Exhibit 44 for Identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, I ask you to turn for a moment to Defendants' Exhibit 43, the schedule marked C, and referring to the amounts shown there on Defendants' 43 for the freight cutbacks and refunds, please state what procedure you followed in calculating and computing those amounts for each of those years.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

A. The United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds [1447] on Schedule C are based on figures obtained from the general auditor's office and rounded out to the nearest $10,000.

Q. Referring to the fact that on Schedule D, Defendants' 41, the figures for the same deduction are in each case lower, and in that Schedule 41 aggregate approximately $2,000,000—do you bear that in mind? A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct?

A. I probably should explain that on Schedule C the figures are based on the figures obtained from the general auditor's office increased by 50 per cent.

Q. In other words, the method by which you got your cut-backs and refund figures in Defendants' 43, marked C, was to increase roughly by 50 per cent the figures that are shown for the same deduction in 41 marked D?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, I offer for identification as Defendants' 45 a schedule marked A, dated February 16, 1949, consisting of one page and containing a title similar to the title of the papers previously offered, that is, the Exhibits 41, 43 and 44. I hand up a copy to the Court.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 45 for Identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, referring to this schedule marked A, February 16, 1949, Defendants' 45 for Identification, [1448] will you please state to the Court what difference there is between that schedule and the schedule marked B, Defendant's 44?

A. The only difference between those two schedules is that in Schedule A the United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds are based on a $3,000,000 figure, whereas in Schedule B they are on a $2,000,000 figure.

Q. And otherwise the Schedule A is based on the same assumptions and hypotheses on which the Schedule B, Defendants' 44, was based?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Adams: I will offer the exhibit now marked Defendants' Exhibit 45 for Identification as Defendants' Exhibit 45. It does contain figures in addition for the reparations claim, as your Honor will note, and the statement, of course, that I just made applies with respect to that matter.

Mr. Phleger: May I note the same objection and reserve a motion to strike?

The Court: The exhibit will be admitted subject to the same objection, under the same conditions, and subject to the same motion to strike.

(Defendants' Exhibit 45 for Identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, I offer as Defendants' Exhibit 46, and hand up a copy to the Court, for identification, [1449] a single sheet entitled "Western Pacific Railroad Corporation Federal Income Taxes for the Years 1922 to 1944,

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Inclusive, on the Basis of Assuming That the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation Had Filed Separate Returns and Comparison Thereof With Taxes Allocated to That Company on the Basis of Consolidated Returns Filed Dated January 14, 1949."

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 46 for Identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, do you have a copy of that schedule, Defendants' 46 for Identification, in your hands? A. I do.

Q. Now, have you computed the taxes which the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation would have paid during the period 1918 to 1944 if it had filed separate returns whenever permissible?

A. I have.

Q. And I have handed you this document, Defendants Exhibit 46 for Identification. Did you find that the corporation would have paid $593,976.33 more on a separate return basis than it actually did pay during the period on a consolidated return basis? A. I did.

Q. And that is the figure appearing at the bottom of the last column of this tabulation, Defendants' 46 for Identification? A. Yes.

Q. You believe that the tabulation is correct?

A. I do.

Mr. Adams: I will offer the document, your Honor, as Defendants' Exhibit 46.

Mr. Phleger: I wish to object to its receipt upon the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and imma-should be made in order to arrive at a correct computation on that basis?

A. I would make adjustments for accelerated amortization, United States Government freight cut-backs, and refunds, and United States Government reparations claims. [1461]

Mr. Phleger: Well, now I object to that response and move that it go out.

The Court: I can't see the point of that answer at all.

Mr. Adams: Well, your Honor, the Basis 3, according to its own title, purports to be "Federal Income Taxes and Excess Profits Taxes on Basis of Consolidated Returns as Filed, but Excluding Corporation's Stock Loss."

The Court: Yes, but all Mr. Buchanan did was to take the stock loss out of it, and on the same information that was in the return, make this calculation. Now I don't think the witness is intending to say that on that basis, this basis is incorrect.

Mr. Adams: Well, I take it that the witness being an accountant, he is permitted to say what approach he would make to the same question that is indicated at the top.

The Court: Well, what you are asking him now to testify is that if he had filed the consolidated return for this corporation at the time it was filed, and he wasn't including the stock loss in it, that he would have included something else in it.

Mr. Adams: That is right.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

The Court: That is what you are asking him to say.

Mr. Phleger: Well, he is not even saying that, your Honor, because the reparations didn't occur until years later. Cut-backs, too. [1462]

Mr. Adams: It didn't occur to me that this answer could be objectionable, since it is an expert's statement of his differences, and that is all it is.

The Court: Yes, but this Basis 3 was offered in connection with testimony of Mr. Buchanan, only to show that the calculation of the taxes on the basis of the return as it was filed, if the stock loss would have been excluded, would have shown this result. Now that is all the witness testified to. That is all Mr. Buchanan testified to, according to my recollection.

Mr. Adams: Yes.

The Court: Now with that in mind, Mr. Cockburn, is there any inaccuracy in these figures as far as you know?

The Witness: Schedule 3, Basis 3——

Mr. Adams: Just a moment. Pardon me the interruption.

The Court: Well, all right, I will withdraw the question.

Mr. Adams: Well, I think I can put the question this way.

Q. Mr. Cockburn, you notice that Basis 3 carries a notation, "Corporation's excess profits credits for 1944 prorated." A. That is correct.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. And is it your understanding—you discussed this with Mr. Buchanan—that that proration was on one-third of the corporation's excess profits credit for the year? A. That is correct.

Q. He used that in making his computation?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now if you assume that you are going to make the computations on Basis 3 and only give one-third of the corporation's excess profits credit for 1944, would you then find any error in the computations themselves?

A. Yes, I would.

Q. And what error would you find there?

A. I do not agree with the portion of the computation whereby two-thirds of the excess profits credit——

Q. No, Mr. Cockburn, you didn't understand my question. My question was, If you assume that you are making the computation on the basis of a one-third proration, then would you find that the computations themselves were inaccurate?

A. No, I would not.

Mr. Adams: That gets at what your Honor had in mind, I take it?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Adams: And now at this time, your Honor, I would like to offer a chart. It is a reduced picture of the big picture that is over there on the side wall (indicating). It is a replica in smaller form and easier of reference. This chart is a chart that we, the counsel, prepared, like the charts over on the righthand side of the court room as I face your Honor (indicating). It is a pictorial representation, all of the figures in which and all of the data in which is taken from that [1464] exhibit you have in your hand, Defendant's Exhibit 40.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Adams: I offer this as Defendant's Exhibit——

The Court: As a pictorial representation?

Mr. Adams: Simply as a lawyer's representation of what is contained in the report.

But I should say one further word about it. In the report which your Honor has before you, Defendant's Exhibit 40, there is stated, particularly in note 2 to Schedule 1 to that report, a full statement with regard to a special transaction between the plaintiff corporation and the Utah Fuel Company. Your Honor will see there is quite an elaborate statement in note 2 about that. Now this chart does not take that special transaction into account in any way. It leaves it out.

I might explain, by way of further elucidation, why that is left out. Neither the Western Pacific Railroad Company nor any of its subsidiaries were participants in the special transaction between the plaintiff corporation and the Utah Fuel Company.

Mr. Clark: You will concede, though, Mr. Adams, won't you, that the Utah Fuel Company was a member, a subsidiary and member of the affiliterial, just like all of the other previous records.

The Court: It goes to the weight of that phase of the testimony that counsel is offering. I will overrule the objection.

Mr. Adams: I offer as Defendants' 47 for Identification a single sheet schedule dated February 15, 1949, entitled "Western Pacific Railroad Company Federal Income Taxes for the Years 1922 to 1941, Inclusive, on the Basis of Assuming That the Western Pacific Railroad Company Had Filed Separate Tax Returns and Comparison Thereof With Taxes Allocated to that Company on the Basis of Consolidated Returns Filed," and ask that this be marked Defendant's 47 for Identification, and I would ask that a copy be handed up to his Honor.

(The document referred to was marked Defendants' Exhibit 47 for Identification.)

Mr. Phleger: Have you copies of that?

Mr. Adams: Yes. I gave them to you yesterday.

Mr. Clark: We do not have a copy of that.

Mr. Adams: Yes; I handed three copies to counsel yesterday.

Mr. Levy: We have everything else, but not that.

Mr. Adams: I do not know what happened to them, because, of course, we were handing all these papers to you.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: That is all right. We can get it later.

Mr. Adams: Would you like to come and look at it as I talk about it?

Mr. Phleger: We are going to object to it anyhow.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, have you computed the taxes which the Western Pacific Company would have paid during the period 1922 to 1941, inclusive, if it had filed separate returns whenever permissible during that period?

A. I have.

Q. Did you find that the Western Pacific Railroad Company would have paid during that period $408,869.51 more on a separate return basis than it actually did pay during this period on a consolidated return basis? A. I did.

Q. That is the figure appearing in this tabulation at the bottom of the column?

A. That is correct.

Q. You believe it is correct? A. I do.

Mr. Adams: I will offer this document as Defendants' 47, and as your Honor will see, we are really proving a converse [1452] here for the benefit of our adversaries.

The Court: You are showing the advantage of a consolidated return.

Mr. Adams: Both ways, and the net advantage to the plaintiff corporation.

Mr. Phleger: We say there is only one advantage to the consolidated return and that is to the parent corporation. May I note the same objection?

The Court: Yes. The exhibit will be admitted under the same conditions.

Mr. Adams: I take it the plaintiff cannot have 47 without having 46. The two things are correlative, one with the other.

(Defendants' Exhibit 47 for Identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, have you examined Plaintiff's Exhibit 80 in this case, consisting of computations of income taxes for the plaintiff corporation and its affiliates on three separate bases for the years 1942, 1943, and the first four months of 1944?

A. Do you refer there to Basis 1?

Q. I referred to all three bases, and asked you if you had examined Plaintiff's Exhibit 80, which consists of all three bases? A. I have. [1453]

Q. Do you have a copy of it in your hands?

A. I have.

Q. Would you look, please, at the first page of Plaintiff's Exhibit 80, in which is set forth the so-called Basis 1. Have you made an effort to check Basis 1? A. Yes.

Q. Do you agree that Basis 1 is a correct statement of what the tax liability of these companies would have been if they had filed separate returns for the period indicated, using data actually shown on the consolidated return, without any change or adjustment? A. No, I do not.

Q. In what respect do you think that these computations on that assumption or hypothesis are incorrect?

A. These computations fail to claim a deduction for intercompany interest. The net operating loss carryovers are not included; excess profits——

The Court: This schedule is without the carryovers. There is a separate schedule in it that covers that.

Mr. Adams: That is right, your Honor. I take it the witness is commenting on certain matters that he thinks would necessarily be taken into consideration merely from taking the figures off the returns.

The Court: That is going to be confusing now, because there is a separate schedule on it. [1454]

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, leaving out any reference to net operating loss carryovers and any reference to unused excess profits credit carryovers, you have stated, as I understand it, that the computations are incorrect in that the intercompany interest deductions were not restored.

A. That is correct.

Q. Is there any other correction, if you leave out those carryovers that I have mentioned, that you think should be made in the figures shown on the returns to correct the figures shown on Basis 1?

A. Net operating loss carrybacks within the period were not deducted.

Q. If the figures were corrected so as to take proper account of the two factors that you have mentioned, your restoration of the deductions and the allowance for carryback of net operating losses, do you believe that the figures would then show the amount of tax which those companies would have been required to pay for this period if they had filed separate instead of consolidated returns?

A. No.

Q. And why not?

Mr. Phleger: I object to that. This is merely an argument of some of the basic legal propositions involved in the case. He is not attacking the computation. He is saying this is not the way to determine what the tax saving is. On the same [1455] basis all of these last exhibits would have been rejected, it seems to me.

Mr. Adams: This is a computation. It states on its face what it is.

The Court: This computation, Mr. Cockburn, of Basis 1 would be correct in your opinion, would it, as a computation were it not for the fact that these interest payments that you refer to were not included? I am talking about it now as a computation. Forget about the argument that you make as to the validity of the deductions; just as a computation. The thing that is wrong with it as a computation is—what amount did you come to on that? Was it about $300,000 of interest?

A. No.

Q. You mentioned some amount.

Mr. Adams: We gave a difference of——

The Witness: $770,000 approximately.

Mr. Adams: ——of approximately $770,000, but that was as to Basis 2, was it not, Mr. Cockburn?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Adams: The Judge is asking about Basis 1.

The Court: Now, what I am trying to find out, and I think it will shorten this matter, is that you have before you a computation of one of your competitors here.

The Witness: That is correct.

The Court: And all we want to know, or all I want to know at this stage of the proceeding is, is that a correct calculation. I take it it would be correct as a calculation, were it not for the failure to include this interest item that you speak of. But as a calculation, and irrespective of the validity of the various deductions and the right to take them.

The Witness: There is one element I would like to explain there, your Honor, before I answer that categorically yes or no.

The Court: All right.

The Witness: The net operating loss deductions —strike that. No adjustment has been claimed for accelerated amortization, which the company might have elected to take.

Mr. Phleger: Well, that is not shown on the returns.

The Court: This is a calculation, as I recall the testimony, that was taken from information on the consolidated return. Now all we want to know is, as a calculation of the information on the consolidated return, is this a correct calculation? Forget about whether the deductions are right.

Mr. Adams: Now if your Honor please, may I suggest that your Honor's question carries within its content some different—— [1457]

The Court: Well, I will get somebody myself to calculate it. It seems to me that what I am suggesting is a very simple matter.

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, I think it is, if the witness——

The Court: And if Basis No. 1 wasn't calculated correctly from the return, somebody can tell me that without going into the legal questions as to the validity of the various deductions involved. That is all it wa offered for.

Mr. Adams: That is right. What I think is implicit in the witness' mind, and of course I don't know, but I am assuming this, is that when he is asked about the correctness of calculations he has in his mind that this Basis 1 assumes to be some kind of an approach to what the tax liability would have been on a hypothesis, and so really is different; that there are various computations which, in his view, should have been included in this which aren't made here.

Q. That is right, is it not, Mr. Cockburn?

A. That is correct.

Q. So that, to answer his Honor's question, you think, as far as the arithmetic goes, as far as this computation is concerned, you don't quarrel with the arithmetic but you point out certain deductions you mention which should be included, and that certain allowance for carry-backs were not included that you would include if you were to make a computation like that?

The Court: Well, of course that is obvious, and it was [1458] obvious from the testimony of Mr. Buchanan that those items were not included in his calculation.

Mr. Adams: And does that answer your Honor's question?

The Court: Am I right about that, Mr. Cockburn?

The Witness: The answer is "yes" to your question on that basis.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Phleger: Well, can't we get a figure? I don't want to interrupt, but can't we get Mr. Cockburn's check of the figure that appears on Basis 1 of——

The Court: He just said it is correct.

Mr. Phleger: Oh, it is correct. Oh.

The Court: Without it being admitted that these factors that he has in mind were not included.

Mr. Adams: But your Honor, we shall contend, of course, that is manifestly incorrect, because such consideration should be taken into account.

The Court: Well, I don't deprive you of that right. I understand that.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now I would like to turn to Basis 2, Mr. Cockburn, in Plaintiff's Exhibit 80, and then turn to your schedule, Defendant's—no, not the schedule.

Bearing in mind that I asked you this morning if you had made a computation of the tax liability which would have been incurred on the various assumptions in our Exhibit 41, but [1459] excluding the deductions—you recall giving that testimony?

A. I do.

Q. And you recall that your brief computation of that amount came out at about $14,800,000?

A. That is correct.

Q. And then——

The Court: That is about $900,000 less than the Basis 2?

Mr. Adams: No, you see the Basis 2 that we are comparing our figure with is the one given for the Western Pacific Railroad Company, the first one on the righthand column.

Mr. Phleger: $772,000.

Mr. Adams: No, $15,726,000 if I read that rightly.

Mr. Phleger: No.

Mr. Adams: I beg your pardon, $15,572,000.

Mr. Phleger: That is correct.

Mr. Adams: Yes.

Mr. Phleger: It is the top figure, your Honor, opposite the "Western Pacific Railroad Company," $15,572,630, of Mr. Cockburn, or I mean, of Mr. Buchanan.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

The Court: I see.

Mr. Phleger: Against $14,800,000 of the witness.

The Court: Besides a difference of about $700,000.

The Witness: About $770,000.

The Court: The difference between the result of Basis 2 and your Exhibit 41? [1460]

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now do you believe that Basis 2 makes proper allowance for the carry-overs?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Will you explain that, please?

The Court: You mean they haven't calculated the carry-overs correctly in this schedule?

The Witness: That is correct.

The Court: We will take a brief recess at this time.

(Recess.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Cockburn, I wish you would turn to the third page of Plaintiff's Exhibit 80, Basis 3. Have you examined that basis and checked it? A. I have.

Q. Do you think that the tax liability shown on Basis 3 are the amounts of the taxes which would have been payable on a consolidated return basis for the years '42 and '43 and the first four months of '44 if the stock loss of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation had been disallowed in toto?

A. I do not.

Q. And would you please state what corrections upon the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Adams: The sole point of this, your Honor, is to prove notice to the intervener Offerman, who was associated with Goodbody, of a copy of one of those annual reports which contained all the data about this tax matter. [1478]

Mr. Levy: He is an employee of Goodbody.

Mr. Adams: He is just what was described, a customers' broker in Goodbody & Company.

Mr. Levy: He was an employee.

Mr. Clark: We will object to it, your Honor, on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): The question was, What did you ascertain in that regard?

A. Well, I ascertained that Goodbody & Company were stockholders and appeared on the stock list, and they were mailed a notice of the annual meeting by the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, which also contained proxy material and a copy of the annual report.

Q. For what year?

A. The year 1944.

Q. And approximately when was that proxy material mailed? A. June 1, 1945.

Mr. Adams: No further questions, your Honor.

Mr. Clark: Nothing from us, your Honor.

The Court: That is all.

LUCIO M. MINTZER

called on behalf of the defendants; sworn.

The Clerk: State your name to the Court, please. [1479]

The Witness: Lucio M. Mintzer.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Mr. Mintzer, do you have with you the schedule which I expect to produce and identify?

A. No, I do not have it with me.

Q. I have it.

I offer as Defendants' Exhibit 49 for Identification a statistical statement on two sheets entitled in this case, "Record of Weekly Sales of Preferred and Common Shares of the Western Pacific Railroad Company on New York Stock Exchange January 1, 1945, to October 31, 1946, as published in 'The Commercial and Financial Chronicle' of New York," and these two sheets show, your Honor, the volume of trading by weeks in the railroad company's preferred and common stock and the weekly range of prices in that stock, the period being from the time the reorganized company took over on the 1st of January, 1945, to the approximate time of the commencement of this litigation here in San Francisco; but since it is set out by weekly dates, it will also show the figures up to the time the stockholders' suit was begun in New York. The purpose of this showing, like the showing with respect to the conversion of the income bonds, is to show the change of position that took place in respect of these stock holdings between the time the reorganized company started operating and the time this claim was first asserted. And I am reminded that I have not gone through the [1480] proper formalities in asking Mr. Mintzer to please state his business and business address.

The Witness: I am employed by the firm of McCutcheon, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Mintzer, it was at our request that you made this study?

A. It was.

Q. And this is your work? A. It is.

Q. Would you state generally the nature of your business as at present and for some years past?

A. I have handled investments and made recommendations for investments to the partners in the firm with respect to clients' accounts, trusts, and so on.

Q. Is this to the best of your knowledge a correct statement of the record of weekly sales of preferred and common shares of Western Pacific Railroad Company, as identified in the title for the period therein stated? A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Adams: I offer it, your Honor, as Defendants' Exhibit 49.

Mr. Phleger: Your Honor, I object to the receipt of the exhibit upon the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and particularly because it shows the prices at which these shares were bought and sold, and seems to me [1481] entirely immaterial, if not misleading. I am willing to stipulate, although I do not even think it is material, that those stocks were traded on in the New York stock exchange during this period.

The Court: The reorganized company?

Mr. Phleger: That is right.

Mr. Adams: Yes. Your Honor, we consider the prices are significant for the reason that in the reorganization plan those stocks were created, and we consider it a part of the equity position before this Court to show, as this exhibit shows, what relation to that value the market value of the stock had from year to year and from time to time prior to the time this claim was first made.

The Court: I do not see what the materiality of that is. What would you say is the materiality? It sometimes happens something you buy is not as good as you thought it was.

Mr. Adams: This much, your Honor: We offered a schedule the other day that we prepared showing that one of the secured creditors in the reorganization was not paid to the extent of some three and a half million dollars. Now, the schedule shows that that stock, which was received by that claimant under the plan, was received at a price of $62 a share. If this schedule does nothing else in respect of prices, it discloses as a definite fact that at no time thereafter could it possibly be said that that claimant had been paid one ated group at that time, namely, up to the year 1924?

Mr. Adams: I make all the concessions which are stated in note 2 which includes the statement Mr. Clark just made. All the facts are fully stated in that report, and I expect both counsel can talk about them to the extent they want to. [1465]

With that explanation, your Honor, I offer this as a lawyer's chart for your Honor's convenience, and not as proving anything additional to what is proved in Defendant's Exhibit 40.

Mr. Phleger: As we objected to 40, I would like to record the same objection to this.

The Court: On the incompetency of the material itself?

Mr. Phleger: Right.

The Court: Well, I think we have sufficiently covered that ground, so that the record is clear. It may be marked.

(Chart referred to was then received in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit 48.)

Mr. Adams: No further questions, your Honor.

Cross-Examination

By Mr. Phleger:

Q. Mr. Cockburn, referring to your computations on Defendant's 41, as to what the tax would be eliminating the deductions as noted at the bottom, I understand your figures was $14,800,000?

A. Is that Exhibit D? I do not have it.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. D, yes. And I understand also that you have compared with Basis 2 of Plaintiff's 80, the figure, being $15,572,630, on Basis 2?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now will you state exactly what the difference between your figure and Mr. Buchanan's figure is?

A. Well, we only made approximate computations, and computed [1466] that the approximate difference was $14,800,000, and the figures I testified to were the computations of the liability of our Schedule D, but not claiming any of the deductions as stated in footnote 1.

Q. Then let me ask this question: Is Mr. Buchanan's computation, Basis 2, opposite the Western Pacific Railroad Company, $15,572,630, incorrect as a matter of computation upon the basis on which he computed Basis 2?

Mr. Adams: Well, your Honor, is it clear what is meant when reference is made to the basis on which Mr. Buchanan computed?

Mr. Phleger: Yes, it is stated in the caption.

Mr. Adams: Well, that is just the point; I don't think the caption does state it. For example, Mr. Buchanan did not restore the inter-company interest deductions. He did so testify. I don't think the witness who is now on the stand was here at the time Mr. Buchanan so testified.

Mr. Phleger: I want to have a comparison, a real comparison, between Basis 2, according to Mr.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Buchanan and his computation, and according to this witness' computation.

A. The basic differences between the two computations, without being able to give exact tax amounts caused by the different deduction amounts, the deductions for inter-company interest, is the repositioning of the Deep Creek loss from 1940 to 1939, the disallowance of deduction or not claiming a deduction of [1467] approximately $169,000 for reorganization expense, which was claimed in the return for 1940—differences in the net operating loss carry-overs and excess profits credit carry-over as a result of the different assumptions, and certain minor differences, errors, in computations, which I think could be corrected.

Q. Well, other than for those changes which you have just recited, your figure would be approximately the same as Mr. Buchanan's figures?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now the computation on Defendant's 41 and on Plaintiff's Exhibit 80, Basis 2, is as a matter of fact, not in accordance with the regulations, is it?

Mr. Adams: Now just one moment; your Honor, if your Honor please, I object to the question. The question assumes something that is not stated in the question. Both those computations have been made upon the assumption of separate returns being filed.

Mr. Phleger: No, that isn't my point, Mr. Adams.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: It is my point in objecting to the question.

Mr. MacKinnon: I object to it upon the ground that it calls for the witness' expression on a question of law. That is for your Honor to decide.

Mr. Phleger: The purpose of my question, your Honor, was to point out that the exhibit prepared by this witness and introduced by the defendant assumes a fact that is contrary to existing [1468] law, namely, that you cannot, having filed consolidated returns in one period, file separate returns in a later period and use the carry-forwards and carry-backs, contrary to regulation 110, Section 33.31 (e) and (f). Isn't that correct?

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, I object to the question and I direct your Honor's attention to the caption of the schedule itself. And further I object on the ground the question asked is a question of law, the same objections having been addressed to my interrogation of this witness and sustained.

The Court: I think it is needless to pursue this particular line of inquiry as a matter of evidence. It is very obvious that your accountant is of the view, probably supported by some legal advice, that these carry-overs cannot properly be included, but nevertheless he has put them in anyhow and to make another basis of calculation, and the witness on the witness stand may or may not have the contrary view, but it is really of no importance because that question is a question of law, isn't it?

Mr. Phleger: I think I have not made myself clear at all. What I am trying to point out to this witness—and the fact that I have not made it plain justifies the question—is that both this witness, in Defendant's Exhibit 41, and Mr. Buchanan in Basis 2, have both made the computation, although it is not permitted by the regulation which is cited as regulation 110, so that they are on the same basis. [1469]

The Court: Except that this witness may have a different view. He may say that it is permitted under that regulation. I do not know.

Mr. MacKinnon: If your Honor please, I do not think it makes any difference what he says because you are going to determine that question.

Mr. Phleger: I want to point out that the basis of the two exhibits is the same.

The Court: I think that is obvious without the witness' testimony.

Mr. Adams: With the variances between the figures which the witness has testified to.

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): Did you examine the books of the defendant corporation as to the manner in which its amortization claims were in fact handled?

A. Do you refer there to subsequent treatment of those claims?

Q. No, the actual way in which they were treated.

A. The treatment of the amortization is disclosed in the returns which we inspected and from which we made our computation.

Q. So you did then examine the actual treatment made of the amortization claims as shown by the tax returns? A. That is correct.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that this company in 1945 received credits of $4,998,648.28 on account of amortization claims?

A. Our inspection related to the period ending April 30, 1944. [1470]

Q. You did not know then that those claims had been allowed? A. No, sir.

Q. You just learned about them from me now, is that right?

Mr. Adams: You mean as to the amount or the fact?

Mr. Phleger: The fact and the amount, both.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): With respect to the United States Government freight cut-backs and refunds, did you make any investigation at all, either you or anyone acting for you, of the actual facts with respect to the payments of refunds or the application of cut-backs? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether or not the actual figures which you have used in your estimate here have or have not been used as the basis for reduction of income tax? A. I do not.

Q. Your assumption is based upon the proposition that in years subsequent to 1942 and 1943 and the first four months of 1944 that the company was in fact charged, either paid out or did not collect on account of these amounts, isn't that right? A. That is incorrect.

Q. What was your assumption?

A. The assumption was the Western Pacific Railroad Company could have claimed these adjustments by the government arising out of cutbacks or refunds in subsequent years, could have been [1471] claimed as a deduction in the years 1942, 1943, and the first four months of 1944.

Q. But that assumption is in turn predicated upon the proposition that those amounts were in fact paid out in later years, is that not true?

A. Paid out or withheld?

Q. Yes. A. That is correct.

Q. And did you take into consideration when paid out or withheld in later years, that the company received the income tax benefit of that treatment? A. I did not. [1472]

Q. Did you give any consideration to that at all in this matter of this computation?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you know whether or not the company paid excess profits taxes in the last eight months of 1944? A. I believe they did.

Q. Did they pay excess profits taxes in 1945?

A. I believe they did.

Q. Did they pay excess profits taxes in 1946?

A. They did not.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Q. There weren't any excess profits taxes?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you make any investigation of the partial debt loss on the Sacramento Northern Railway notes and advances?

A. Yes, we made an analysis of the advances, times and amounts of advances to the company, from the records of the company, which shows the dates and the amounts that were advanced, and the dates of refunds or repayments by the Sacramento Northern to the Western Pacific Railroad Company.

Q. Do you have that computation?

A. Yes, I believe we have those papers here.

Q. I would like to have them.

Mr. Adams: Just one minute. Let us get clear what you are speaking of. Will you ask the witness, please, so we can get an identification of what you would like to have? I did [1473] the same thing with Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Phleger: It is perfectly clear here. He said he made an investigation of time and amounts of advances made by the Western Pacific Railroad Company to the Sacramento Northern and also the dates and amounts of repayments.

Mr. Adams: Right.

Mr. Phleger: And I asked him for them.

Mr. Adams: Yes. Are you now asking this witness to prepare a new paper, or are you asking him for some paper that he has got?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: I am asking him for the paper he just testified——

Mr. Adams: He did not say he had a paper. That is my point. I would like to get an identification of what you are talking about.

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): Do you have a paper which shows the advances and repayments?

A. We have certain working papers showing the listing of the advances and the repayments.

Q. And you will be glad to furnish them to me, will you?

Mr. Adams: Just a minute. I object to that. The witness has his working papers, and I take it we are willing, and have always been willing, that they may be inspected, but that they should be furnished to opposing counsel I do not think is proper, and I did not make that request of your expert witness. [1474]

Mr. Phleger: I do not see the difference.

Q. Do you have them here? Suppose you let me look at them.

A. I believe we have them with us.

(A document was handed to Mr. Phleger.)

Mr. Adams: I would like to have the record in some way indicate the nature of the work sheet that has just been exhibited to opposing counsel. If opposing counsel will be good enough to designate the approximate number of sheets or something in the way of showing the substance of the papers he is now looking at, I would appreciate it.

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Phleger: May it please your Honor, I do not want to take up the time of the Court while I examine this. May it be understood that at the noon recess I will have access to these working papers and have an opportunity to look over them?

Mr. Adams: Certainly. May I ask that some description, counsel, be now placed on the record?

The Court: Let the witness testify what he has produced. Mr. Phleger probably cannot tell at a glance what it is.

Mr. Adams: A question can be addressed to him for response after he has a chance to inspect them.

Mr. Phleger: Let us do what you did, Mr. Adams. Let us request the clerk now mark with an identifying mark every working paper that this witness used in preparation for the testimony that he has just given.

Mr. Adams: I will be very glad to do that. The arrangement, [1475] however, that we made relieved the clerk of that task and we accomplished it privately.

Mr. Phleger: All right. Will you mark them for me?

Mr. Adams: I think that since we marked yours, we might ask you perhaps to indulge the same practice.

Mr. Phleger: I will trust you to mark them.

Mr. Adams: I would certainly trust you to mark them, Mr. Phleger.

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): Do you know whether any advances were made to the Sacramento Northern in 1942?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

Mr. Adams: May the witness have his working papers in his hands?

The Witness: If I may refresh my memory from the working papers—Yes, there were reimbursements——

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): I am asking about advances.

Mr. Adams: Will you read the question, please?

(Question read.)

A. Yes, there were.

Q. (By Mr. Phleger): In what amount?

A. $242,000.

Q. What were they represented by?

A. Cash advances.

Q. Notes? A. Cash advances.

Q. Were there any advances made during the year 1943? [1476] A. No, there were not.

Q. Were there any in the first four months of 1944? A. No, there were not.

Q. Were there any in the last eight months of 1944? A. Yes, there were.

Q. How much? A. $220,000.

Q. How much were made in the year 1945?

A. No advances made in 1945.

Q. 1946? A. $370,000.

Q. 1947? A. $700,000.

Mr. Phleger: That is all I have for the moment of this witness. I would like the noon hour to examine these and other documents and maybe I won't have any further questions.

The Court: Have you got some short witness, or would you prefer to recess?

Mr. Adams: I think I have one short witness I can call. I would like to call Mr. Droit. I have about one question to put to him. I have two short witnesses, your Honor. I will call Mr. Droit and maybe I can call Mr. Mintzer and excuse them both. [1477] called on behalf of the defendants; sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your name, please?

The Witness: Clarence L. Droit.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Please state your business and business address.

A. 526 Mission Street, San Francisco.

Q. And you are the secretary of the Western Pacific Railroad Company? A. I am.

Q. And you have held that office since when, Mr. Droit? A. August, 1937.

Q. Mr. Droit, did I ask you to check the records and see whether or not during 1943, 1944 and 1945 there was sent out from your office to the firm of Goodbody & Company in New York any copies of the annual reports for 1943 and 1944?

A. You did.

Q. What did you ascertain with regard to that?

Mr. Clark: Just a minute. I will object to that

(Testimony of William A. Sutherland.)

Mr. Adams: May I say, your Honor——

The Court: That may mean something with regard to losing out on this point, I don't know.

Mr. Adams: May I say, with all due respect, that we would offer to prove that the questions, if the answers should be allowed, would be answered in the negative.

The Court: I beg pardon?

Mr. Adams: I would offer to prove that if your Honor would allow these questions, the answers to each of them would be in the negative.

The Court: Let the record so show.

Mr. Adams: And may I also state for the record that we have had very happy associations with Mr. Sutherland and also with Mr. George Maurice Morris, who have considered some of these problems with us. They have spent considerable time on the case. We would address the same questions to Mr. Morris. May I state briefly what his qualifications would be?

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Adams: Mr. Morris is a member of the firm of Morris, Kix Miller & Baar of Washington, D. C., having offices in Washington and Chicago. He is a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1911, and a graduate of the law school of the University of Chicago in 1916, with a degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence, [1496] and was admitted to practice in Illinois and the District of Columbia, and has practiced before the Supreme Court, several of the United States circuit courts of appeal, the Tax Court, Court of Claims, State and Federal courts of Illinois and the courts of the District of Columbia, and is admitted before the Treasury Department and was formally admitted in 1922.

Mr. Morris is a member of the American Bar Association, the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, the Illinois State Bar Association and honorary member of a number of other bar associations, and currently an official of the Interamerican Bar Association and the International Bar Association. He was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Interamerican Bar Association and speaker of the House of Deputies of the International Bar Association. Now, Mr. Morris has specialized largely in the field of taxation and administrative law, advising taxpayers and representing them before administrative agencies and the courts. May I take the pleasure of introducing Mr. Morris to the Court?

(Mr. Morris then arose.)

Mr. Adams: I take pleasure in presenting Mr. George Maurice Morris, whose qualifications I have just read, and in stating that offer to prove that Mr. Morris, as well as Mr. Sutherland, would answer these two questions in the negative if your Honor permitted them to be answered.

The Court: Very well. Let the record so show. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

The Court: I don't want it to appear in the record, because sometimes when we read these things over afterwards, in the cold record they read pretty badly, and they are not intended that way. I have no criticism of the qualifications of any of the lawyers who come from afar to testify in these cases. I want to say, however, that I do not think we have to take a back seat out here in the West so far as qualifications of lawyers to testify goes. I know I held court in New York for a couple of months, and I found that our bar out here in the West did not have to take a back seat to the bar in the East. I think they are on a par, one with the other. That is why I said that the argument could be made on the same subject matter concerning which expert testimony was proffered to be made, as well as by the attorneys in this case, for whom the Court has considerable respect.

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, I neglected to say, and would like to cure the neglect, that Mr. Morris is, as well, past president of the American Bar Association.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, with the consent of counsel, in response to an open question upon the examination of Mr. Elsey, I will state that the amount, principal amount, of general mortgage 4½ per cent income bonds which had been converted at June 29, 1946, was $4,489,300, being converted into stock in the ratio of 20 shares of stock per $1,000 bond. I would like the record to show that Judge Sloss, whose appearance in the reorganization proceeding as attorney for the plaintiff corporation upon its intervention, continued to represent the plaintiff corporation in the reorganization proceeding while that proceeding remained pending, and until it was completed.

Mr. Clark: Well, your Honor, in the first place, we think it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, but we don't think we can give the concession without Judge Sloss' own testimony, which was taken on deposition, in which he testified to the limitation of his representation of the plaintiff corporation, as being solely having to do with presenting its position under the plan. Now, we have that testimony. If counsel thinks it is material it can easily be read into the record. We examined Judge Sloss on it.

Mr. Adams: I told Mr. Clark I would be happy to do it that way, and I am perfectly willing to do that, to read it into the record.

Mr. Phleger: Well, let's stipulate it may be copied into the record. It is so many pages.

Mr. Adams: Well, any part you want omitted,——

Mr. Phleger: Let's put it all in.

Mr. Adams: That is all right. We will just introduce [1499] Judge Sloss' record, or deposition, in the record by consent of all counsel.

Mr. Clark: That is satisfactory. The original is on file, your Honor.

way or another, even in [1482] a loose sense, by an increase in the market price over or above that $62 figure.

The Court: Well, now, Mr. Adams, suppose I go out and buy some stock in a corporation on the stock exchange, and after I buy it I find out that somebody has some claim which he is asserting against the railroad company or a corporation, for instance, that affects the value of the stock; now, what bearing has my purchase or sale of that stock got on the rights of the parties who were involved in the claim that is presented here? I don't see the connection there, unless you wanted to show that everybody that bought stock in this corporation on the New York stock exchange made a very thorough investigation of the stock to find out whether or not there was a claim of this nature pending before they bought it—which would, of course, be contrary to everything that the American people do. With that assumption, why, then there might be some possibility of showing reliance, and hence a change of position. But of course you couldn't have a change of position without reliance.

Mr. Adams: Well, your Honor would bear in mind that during the period here covered by this report; for example, the annual report of the Railroad Company for '44 was published, contained a full statement about the tax matter, stating that there was this reserve fund, stating that it was there to respond to possible tax liability to the Government—and [1483] nothing was said in that report about this claim, because it hadn't been heard of.

The Court: Well, Mr. Phleger, you don't object to the accuracy of this computation, but merely to the relevancy?

Mr. Phleger: That is right.

Mr. Clark: And we object to the relevancy.

The Court: It may be marked for identification, and I will sustain the objection on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Phleger: I have no questions at this time.

Mr. Clark: We have none, your Honor.

The Court: Any further questions, Mr. Adams?

Mr. Adams: One question, if your Honor please. Maybe there will be two, but it will be the part of one, if I make it two.

The Court: Very well.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Mr. Cockburn, you recall this morning you gave the Court a figure, $14,800,000 as representing the amount of total tax liability of the railroad company on the assumption of a separate return basis, on the assumptions in your Schedule D marked Defendant's Exhibit 41, if the deductions were disallowed. Do you recall that?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you recall also that you stated the difference between that figure and the amount shown on Basis 2 of Plaintiff's 80 was approximately $770,000? A. That is correct.

Q. Now you mentioned some factors that you said were responsible [1485] for this difference, and one of them was, was it not, the difference in the computation of the carry-overs?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now I would like you, in order to clarify the record, to explain the difference between the method you used in that computation and the method Mr. Buchanan used in his computation on Basis 2; and I might ask you preliminarily, have you checked Mr. Buchanan's computations with him?

A. I have.

Q. You have seen his working papers?

A. I have.

Q. Do you believe you are able to state the basis on which his computation was made as well as that upon which yours was made?

A. I do.

Q. Will you please then state what those two bases were, so that the Court may see the difference?

(Testimony of James L. Cockburn, Jr.)

A. The basis of Mr. Buchanan's computations, as stated in his heading to Basis 2, assumes that the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and affiliated companies had filed consolidated returns up to and including December 31, 1941. And the net operating loss carry-over and excess profits carry-overs included in his computations for 1942, '43 and the first four months of '44 are taken from the consolidated returns filed, particularly, I think, from the 1942 return, where the carry-over [1486] from 1941 is shown. Our net operating loss carry-overs and excess profits credit carry-overs used in preparation of Exhibit D——

Q. That is Defendant's 41, is it not?

A. That is Defendant's 41. ——assumed that separate returns were filed from '39 onward, and that therefore the excess profit carry-over and the net operating loss carry-over years in our computation are those carry-overs which a company would have had going into 1942 had it filed separate returns prior to that time.

Mr. Adams: I have no further questions, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: No questions.

Mr. Clark: No questions.

The Court: That is all.

Mr. Adams: Now at this time, your Honor, in connection with the evidence just produced, I would like to offer as Defendant's Exhibit 50 a photostatic copy of what I heretofore referred to as the ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the Santa Fe case. This is a photostatic copy of a letter I have given to counsel. My reason for putting it into the record is simply that I am not certain whether or not it is a public-had ruling. The materiality of the ruling would be evident upon examining it. It is a ruling under which provision is made for the cut-backs to be taken into the accounts in the years in [1487] which the transportation took place, for income tax purposes.

Mr. Phleger: We do not object to its competency, but we consider it irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: I will admit it.

(Photostatic copy of ruling referred to above was thereupon received in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit 50.)

WILLIAM A. SUTHERLAND

called as a witness on behalf of the defendant; sworn.

The Clerk: State your name to the Court.

A. William A. Sutherland.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. What is your address, Mr. Sutherland?

A. Marine Building, Washington, D. C.

Q. What is your occupation?

(Testimony of William A. Sutherland.)

A. Lawyer.

Mr. Adams: If your Honor please, for the sake of brevity may I ask leading questions in regard to the qualifications of the witness?

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Adams: Mr. Sutherland, you are a member of the firm of Sutherland, Tuttle and Brennan having offices in Washington and in Atlanta, Georgia?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did your first year of college work at Florida and [1488] received your A.B. from the University of Virginia, your M.A. from the University of Wisconsin, and you graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1917 with an LL.B. degree?

A. Yes.

Q. Of what bars are you a member?

A. I am a member of the Bar of Georgia, the District of Columbia, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Court of Claims, the District Courts in Georgia, the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Circuit Courts of Appeal, and I think the Second.

Q. And you are a member of the American Bar Association, the Georgia Bar Association, the Atlanta Bar Association, and the Atlanta Lawyers' Club? A. Yes.

Q. You were admitted to practice before the Treasury Department in 1923? A. Yes.

Q. What was your first position after you left law school?

A. I was secretary to Mr. Justice Brandeis

of United States Supreme Court for his second and third years on the court.

Q. Were you at any time associated with the Federal Trade Commission, and if so, in what capacity?

A. Yes, when I left Justice Brandeis in 1919 I was with the Federal Trade Commission until the end of 1920 as an attorney examiner.

Q. And you were general solicitor and head of the Law Department [1489] of the Tennessee Valley Authority for a few months in 1933 and 1934?

A. Yes, sir. I did not give up my practice at that time.

Q. You have been engaged in private practice since 1921? A. Yes.

Q. Your firm has had offices in Washington since 1937? A. Yes.

Q. Have you specialized in any particular field of law practice?

A. I have specialized in federal taxes largely since 1923.

Q. Mr. Sutherland, in your opinion would a lawyer engaged to advise on the tax problems of an affiliated group of corporations be expected to advise one of the members of the group, which member had substantial losses, that it had the right, by refusing to join in a consolidated return, to deny to the income corporations in the group the use of the loss deduction to offset the taxable income of the group as a whole, where such member would suffer no tax disadvantage from joinder in the consolidated returns, and where the consolidated return was to be filed after the member sustaining the loss had severed all affiliation with the other members of the affiliated group?

Mr. Phleger: May it please the Court, I object to the question on the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial and hearsay. I assume that this is supposed to be some testimony by an expert upon an issue which, I take it, would be either of law or of fact. If of law, I do not think it is an [1490] appropriate matter for expert testimony, and if a fact, it simply calls for the conclusion of this witness. It attempts to usurp the function of the court.

Mr. Adams: The question is directed, your Honor, to what we understand to be an issue in the case as evidenced by questions asked yesterday of one of the lawyers who handled tax matters, whether or not he expressly advised a member of the affiliated group that it had a right to file a separate return. Now, this question is addressed concededly to a well-qualified lawyer engaged in tax practice, and asks him whether in his opinion under the stated assumed set of facts the question that I addressed, which we regard as responsive to that particular issue, and as a question of fact upon which a qualified expert can answer, a question posed upon an assumed set of facts.

The Court: If it is a question that is posed on an assumed state of facts, it is not a question of fact.

Mr. Adams: The assumptions contained in the question, your Honor, we believe are all of the assumptions required to be made upon the record in this case.

The Court: Then it is just expert testimony.

Mr. Adams: It is undoubtedly the testimony of an expert witness that we are offering upon a hypothetical question.

The Court: I never heard of a case in which the lawyer could testify as an expert witness as to any issues in the case, except it be on some special subject, such as foreign law, or [1491] matters with which he might be acquainted and of which the Court might not be acquainted. If we admitted this kind of testimony it would result in each side getting the best lawyers they could think of to come in and tell the Court how to decide the case. It does not seem to me to have a proper place in the trial of a lawsuit.

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, I do not wish to argue this at length, but merely state what I perceive to be the point of the question.

The Court: I understand exactly what you are trying to bring out but the question is, can you bring in a lawyer to testify as an expert that what was done was properly done? If you can do that in this case, you can do it in any case.

Mr. Adams: Your Honor will bear in mind this question is directed to the conduct of a lawyer; it is not the ultimate issue in the case.

The Court: If it is not an issue in the case, then of course it is not competent.

Mr. Adams: I said to the ultimate issue. I think, as I understand it, there is some contention here, because of the questions asked yesterday, whether the lawyer did or did not give certain advice.

The Court: Suppose the witness testifies and answers your question, and I would be satisfied from all the facts and circumstances of the case that a different result should follow. [1492] Would there arise by virtue of that a conflict that would make a record so that a higher court reviewing it could say the court was making a finding with respect to conflicting presentations of an issue?

Mr. Adams: I would think that as in any case of expert testimony, the testimony is before the court to be weighed and considered as any other testimony. Certainly I do not understand in any case, except where there is no conflict in the testimony, a court is ever bound, certainly with regard to an issue of this sort.

The Court: Even if it was offered as expert testimony, wouldn't the witness have to qualify that he was familiar with all the material facts presented in connection with the matter?

Mr. Adams: We consider that this question embraces all the material facts requisite to an answer to the question.

(Testimony of William A. Sutherland.)

Mr. Clark: I might point out to your Honor that it does not embrace one important fact, namely, that there was an economic divorcement some years prior to the termination of the affiliation.

The Court: Mr. Adams, do you have with you any authority which sustains the right to present as competent the testimony of a lawyer with respect to any legal issues in the case, except where it involves some special subject such as foreign law or, in some cases, it is allowed in tax controversies?

Mr. Adams: If your Honor will allow me a moment, I will be [1493] sure of an answer.

The Court: I want to be sure there isn't something lurking in this that I do not know about.

Mr. Adams: We have no authorities to cite on the specific question.

The Court: I think the testimony is incompetent. I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Adams: I will ask one further question.

Q. Mr. Sutherland, in all your experience have you ever heard, prior to hearing the claim asserted in the proceeding now in this court, of a claim by a member of the group of corporations which filed consolidated tax returns to be paid anything by any other corporation in the group, any consideration for the tax advantage resulting from the loss sustained by the claiming member of the group? [1494]

Mr. Phleger: May it please the Court, I object to that question on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, calls for the conclusion of this witness, and is another attempt to usurp the function of the Court.

Mr. Adams: Stating very briefly my answer, because this question is much like that your Honor ruled on with respect to the actors, it is our object to prove as a fact from an experienced counsel in the tax field that this claim had never been heard of by him. We think this is material to the issues in this case and is part of the character of this claim, as a later afterthought. We regard it as a material fact in the case, and this is a part of that proof. It is also responsive to any suggestions that any of the lawyers whose work was involved in handling the tax matter was in any respect other than the work of competent and conscientious lawyers, because obviously if the claim now asserted is one which was beyond the general purview of tax lawyers, then no criticism can be addressed to a lawyer who had not heard of it. Those are the purposes.

The Court: I will sustain the objection. Let me say to you, Mr. Adams, that you can make the same argument on the same subject matter in your briefs, and I, without meaning any disrespect to the witness, would listen to it perhaps even more attentively as coming from learned counsel who have practiced here, and for whom I have respect; I might [1495] consider the argument coming from the attorneys in the case as having more weight with me, since you are familiar with this case, than the testimony of an expert.

of Appeals, together with $725.02 reimbursement for expenses incurred. The latter amount includes $705.82, which has been paid to Sloss & Turner by your firm in July of 1943. Under date of July 20th, 1943, you sent us a check for $780.91. On July 26th, 1943, I wrote you, pointing out that this was an overpayment of $75.09, the check for which was sent you under cover of the last-mentioned letter. The balance remaining is $705.82. A check for $705.82 payable to Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, is enclosed herewith."

And then follows the paragraph—the only one that has any bearing here. [1512]

"I take it that this closes my connection with the Western Pacific reorganization proceeding. Let me at this time express my pleasure in the association with you, and my appreciation of your many courtesies. With best regards,

"Yours very sincerely," and signed by me.

Re-Examination

By Mr. Adams:

"Mr. Adams: I have one or two more questions, possibly.

"Q. Judge Sloss, during the entire course of your representation of the Holding Corporation in the bankruptcy proceeding, were you entirely devoted, so far as your activities and work were concerned, to the interests of the corporation to the exclusion of any other interested party?

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

"A. Yes, entirely.

"Q. And you were entirely free from any direction, domination or control by any other interested party, or any representative or agent of such party?

"A. Yes, my employment—my representation was directed towards getting, if we were able to do so, more recognition of the position of the corporation as a stockholder and as an unsecured creditor.

"Mr. Adams: No further questions.

"Mr. Clark: Nothing further, Judge. Thank you very much.

/s/ "MARCUS C. SLOSS." [1513]

(The letter referred to reads in words and figures as follows:)

"November 14, 1939

Via air mail.
Hon. M. C. Sloss,
111 Sutter Street,
San Francisco, California.

My dear Judge Sloss:

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation held on October 10, 1939, I was authorized as President of the Corporation to employ local counsel in San Francisco to represent the investment of this Corporation in the Federal District Court of California, Northern District, Southern Division, in the proceedings for reorganization of the Western Pacific Railroad Company. This Corporation, as you know, not only owns all of the outstanding stock of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, but is a general creditor for [1513A] advances made to that company aggregating a substantial amount. Under the Commissio plan which is now before the Federal Court in San Francisco for consideration the interest of this Corporation both as stockholder and general creditor is treated as of no value. This treatment of the claims of this Corporation is based entirely upon Commission estimates of future earnings, as both the investment, fully depreciated, in the Western Pacific Railroad Company and the valuation of the property of that company made by the Interstate Commerce Commission for rate purposes considerably exceeds the total of debts of the Western Pacific Railroad Company with accrued interest to date.

Mr. F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., of Pierce & Greer, of 40 Wall Street, New York, N. Y., is counsel for this Corporation. In the pending proceeding for the reorganization of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, however, he has appeared as counsel for that company, the debtor in the proceeding, both in the Court and before the Commission. He will continue to appear in the proceeding in that capacity. It is the view of the Board of Directors of this Corporation that it should have completely independent representation in the Court in order that its claims against the debtor, both as stockholder and as a general [1514] creditor, may be effectively pressed upon the Court. While you will not be in any sense under the control or direction of Mr. Nicodemus, he, as counsel for the debtor, will be glad to help you or cooperate with you in any way you may wish, not inconsistent with his desire to maintain a position of neutrality as between the various classes of security holders.

This Corporation has about 5,000 stockholders. Mr. A. C. James and companies in which he is the dominating stockholder own approximately 40% of the stock of this Corporation. Mr. James' interests are represented by Mr. Coulson who is formally appearing in the reorganization proceeding for the A. C. James Co., which is a secured creditor of the Western Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. Coulson has told me that he is prepared to cooperate with you to the fullest extent you may desire in the preparation of your objections on behalf of this Corporation to the Commission's plan of reorganization, and in your presentation in support of such objections.

Mr. Coulson has further advised me that he has arranged to secure for you an assurance from the Curtiss Southwestern Company, that to the extent your reasonable and proper fees for services in this reorganization proceeding are not allowed by the Court in the [1515] proceeding or paid by this Corporation, the Curtiss Southwestern Company will make such payment to you. The Curtiss Southwestern Company is desirous in its own interest as a substantial stockholder in this Corporation that

Mr. Clark: Oh, yes. And also, may it please your Honor, there is an exhibit that was introduced on that deposition which should go in evidence in connection with it; being a letter, or a copy of a letter, dated November 14, 1939, identified on deposition as Railroad Defendants' Exhibit 555.

Mr. Phleger: Well, I suggest, instead of its being introduced, that it be copied in as part of the deposition.

The Court: Is it not attached to the deposition?

Mr. Clark: Well, it is not, because it was one of the depositions, or one of the exhibits marked on deposition, your Honor, and it is among the original exhibits that came along with all the depositions. It should be copied in along with the deposition at an appropriate place in this record.

Mr. MacKinnon: I think it is irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in the action, but I have no objection if your Honor wants it taken in.

The Court: It may be considered as part of the deposition?

Mr. Adams: Yes.

The Court: Very well.

The Clerk: You wish this copied by the reporter in the [1500] record, is that it?

Mr. Phleger: Yes, in connection with the deposition.

Mr. Clark: Well, if it is just copied in, it won't have to take a number.

(The deposition referred to appears in words and figures as follows:)

MARCUS C. SLOSS

a witness called on behalf of the plantiffs in intervention, being first duly cautioned and sworn by the notary public to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Clark:

Q. Will you please state your name and present address for the record?

A. Yes. My name is Marcus C. Sloss. Do you want my business address? 351 California Street. My residence is at 2790 Green Street, both in San Francisco.

Q. Are you admitted and licensed to practice law in the [1501] State of California?

A. Yes.

Q. For how long have you been admitted in this state?

A. Well, this month, November, it will be 55 years if we include the time during which I was on the bench.

Q. Were you a Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of California? A. I was.

Q. During what period, please?

A. From February, 1906, to February, 1919.

Q. Are you presently the senior member of the firm of Sloss & Eliot? A. I am.

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Q. During the years 1939 to 1945, were you the senior member of the then firm of Sloss & Turner of this city?

A. I was. I answered yes. I am not quite clear as to when Mr. Turner retired. It may have been earlier than 1945. It may have been '44.

Q. During your practice, Judge, have you specialized in any particular branches of the law?

A. Well, since I left the Supreme Court, I have conducted a general practice, and also have done a good deal of consulting work and work as special counsel in cases after they had reached the stage of being on appeal.

Q. Have you at any time specialized in federal tax matters?

A. No, except so far as they affected general clients of our office. [1502]

Q. Particularly, have you specialized in matters pertaining to corporate income and excess profits taxes payable to the government?

A. I say, except in so far as they affected my clients that were corporations.

Q. And is that true with respect to any work that you may have done concerning the filing of consolidated income and excess profits tax returns by corporations with the Federal Government?

A. No, I have not specialized in those matters particularly.

Q. At one time, were you retained to represent The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation in any matter? A. I was.

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Q. Can you tell us about when that was?

A. The employment began in November, 1939. That was some four years after a reorganization proceeding had been instituted in the Federal Court, and after the Interstate Commerce Commission had promulgated a plan of reorganization, and reported it to the District Court here, for the Northern District of California; and it was at the time when the parties in interest had a right to file objections to the plan.

Q. At the time you were employed by the Corporation, what status did it have in the reorganization proceeding, if any?

A. The Corporation, as I understood then and have understood since, had not been directly represented in the proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission leading to the formulation of a plan. It was, however, a party in interest in two capacities: It was the owner of all of the stock, common and preferred, of the operating company; and it also held an unsecured claim of about $5,000,000.00 against the Company for money advanced; and its holding of stock and its position as an unsecured creditor were both held or found to be without value in the proposed plan of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and it was given no participation in the reorganized company, or in any of the securities that were to be issued under the plan.

Q. What was the status of that plan at the time you were retained by the corporation in 1939?

A. The plan had been reported to the District Court, and the District Court had made an order calling upon all parties in interest to file their objections to the plan before a certain date, which, I think, was to be sometime in December of the same year. Following that, there was to be a hearing of the objections, and a decision by the court.

Q. I will show you a document which has been marked Railroad Company Defendant's Exhibit 555 in this case, being a letter dated November 14th, 1939, addressed to the Honorable M. C. Sloss, 111 Sutter Street, San Francisco, California, and signed T. M. Schumacher; and I will ask you whether you received the original of that letter on or about the date it bears, namely, November 14th, 1939?

A. Yes, I received the original of which this is a photostatic [1504] copy about that time.

Q. Judge, does that letter correctly describe your retainer by the Corporation at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. At some time did you cease representing the Corporation?

A. Well, yes. When the reorganization proceeding was completed, and it ultimately went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and after the incidental matters in the District Court here—United States District Court—had been completed, I considered that my employment was ended.

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Q. Approximately when was that?

A. Well, I made a little memorandum of dates from my records in regard to that.

Q. Will you please refer to it?

A. With the exception of the proceedings in the District Court with reference to allowances of fees and expenses to different counsel and to the parties in the proceeding, which, I think, were not terminated until 1945, I think the last matter that I had anything to do with was on the 2nd of June, 1944, when I participated briefly in an argument before Judge St. Sure in the District Court on the question of whether that court had jurisdiction to determine the ownership of accommodation collateral that had been furnished by the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation to the debtor. I think it was to the debtor. It may have been to someone else. [1505]

Q. Judge, during that period, namely, from November 14th, 1939, to June 2nd, 1944, did you represent the Corporation generally in all of its legal problems?

A. No. No, I considered that my employment was limited to representing the interests of the corporation as a stockholder and unsecured creditor of the debtor in the bankruptcy proceeding—or the reorganization proceeding.

Q. During that time, were you ever called upon by the Corporation to give any advice whatsoever in any federal tax matters?

A. No, I was not.

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Q. During that time, were you ever consulted by the Corporation with respect to any federal tax matters? A. I was not.

Q. Specifically, during that time, were you ever called upon to give any advice to the Corporation concerning the filing in its name of a consolidated income and excess profits tax return for the year 1943? A. No.

Q. Were you ever consulted in any manner with respect to that matter? A. No, I was not.

Q. During that period, were you ever called upon to give any advice to the corporation with respect to the filing in its name of a consolidated income and excess profits tax return for the taxable year 1944? [1506]

* * *

The Witness: I was not.

Q. (By Mr. Clark): Were you ever consulted in any respect concerning such return?

A. You are referring to the year 1944?

Q. Yes. A. I was not.

Q. During the period we are discussing, namely, from November 14th, 1939, until June 2nd, 1944, were you ever called upon by the Corporation to give any advice with respect to the filing in its name of a consolidated income and excess profits tax return for the taxable year 1942?

A. I was not.

Q. And were you ever consulted in any manner with respect to such return? A. No.

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Q. During that period, Judge, were you ever called upon to give any advice to the Corporation whatsoever concerning the filing in its name of a claim for refund with reference to income and excess profits tax for the taxable year 1942?

A. No.

Q. Or with respect to the taxable year 1942? (sic).

A. The same answer. I was not.

Q. Were you ever consulted in any manner at any time on that matter? A. No. [1507]

Mr. Clark: That is all from us.

Mr. Dickerson: No questions.

Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Judge Sloss, in answer to several questions put by Mr. Clark, he inquired if you were called upon to give advice or to consider any other tax matters as stated in his questions; and you answered in the negative. Did you mean by "called upon," that no one called upon you requesting any such consideration or advice?

A. I don't think I quite got the question.

Mr. Adams: Read it, Mr. Reporter.

(Question read by reporter.)

A. Yes, that was my meaning.

Q. In reference to your representation of the

(Deposition of Marcus C. Sloss.)

Holding Corporation in the reorganization proceeding, you referred to your file and noticed that the last activity on your part other than that involving consideration of compensation, was an occasion sometime in the middle of 1944?

A. I don't remember what the date of that was. I think it was a little later. I think that matter was finally decided in Judge St. Sure's court in '45; but I can refer to other papers and get that date for you later.

Q. It is not necessary. I am just trying to be sure that I understood the testimony that you have given to Mr. Clark, and [1508] I haven't any intention to raise a question as to the particular date.

Is it not the fact that your representation of the Holding Company in the reorganization proceedings remained in force throughout the pendency of those proceedings from the time that you first appeared in behalf of the Corporation?

A. It remained in force—you mean until the reorganization was completed in the court proceedings?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I do think it did.

Q. You did not withdraw from that representation at any time, as far as you recall?

A. No, I never withdrew from it. I have in my file—I happened to see it yesterday—a letter which I wrote, which I can find shortly, which settled a little matter of advancement of expenses between my office and Colonel Coulson's office; and in sending him a check for the small amount that was due him, I said that I think that this concludes my services in this matter; and that, I think, was in 1945; but I can find it if you would like to get the date.

Q. It may be that we should want to look at that.

You had in mind in appearing for the Corporation as you did in the reorganization proceedings, that you were appearing as an attorney for the Corporation generally for the purposes indicated by the statute? [1509] A. Indicated by what?

Q. By the statute.

A. Oh, yes. Yes, for whatever came within the scope of that reorganization proceeding.

Q. You received as such attorney regularly the notices of hearings issued out of the reorganization court?

A. Yes. Yes, when I began, I might add, because of the fact that the Corporation had not been directly represented in the prior hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, I wrote a letter to the judge and to the parties in interest, calling attention to that fact, and asking whether I would be permitted on behalf of the Corporation to appear at the hearing on the plan, and to file objections, to which he answered in the affirmative; and then about the same time, on behalf of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, we asked leave to intervene in the proceeding, which leave was granted. If my memory is correct, Mr. Goodrich took the same course on behalf of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, which was also an unsecured creditor.

Mr. Goodrich: That is correct.

Mr. Adams: I have no further questions.

Re-Examination

By Mr. Clark:

Q. Judge, did you ever at any time give any advice whatsoever to the Corporation respecting any federal tax matter? [1510]

A. No, I did not.

Q. And at any time were any facts brought to your attention which made you feel that it was incumbent upon you to take any action or steps on behalf of the Corporation in any tax matter?

A. No. I don't know that this is a qualification of that answer; but, of course, one of the matters which were gone into very thoroughly in connection with the hearings both in the District Court and in the Circuit Court of Appeals and in the Supreme Court, was the matter of the earnings record of the Company, not only before the institution of the proceeding, but during it—even after the decision in the District Court, with the purpose of showing that the property had a greater value than was attributed to it by the Interstate Commerce Commission. And it may be—I have no definite recollection of it—that in looking over those statements of receipts and disbursements, there were items of taxes paid or taxes accrued; but I viewed it just as I viewed any other item of expense, without going into the detail or the supporting data; and I viewed it as an item of expenditure.

Mr. Clark: That is all from us.

Mr. Adams: We have no further questions.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Dickerson?

Mr. Dickerson: No questions.

The Witness: If you will permit me, I have that letter [1511] here with me, in case you would like to look at it.

Mr. Adams: Oh, yes. I hadn't appreciated that you had your files with you.

A. Yes. May I volunteer this testimony? I don't think it will do anybody any good or any harm.

Mr. Clark: Yes.

A. But for completeness, I find in my files a carbon copy of a letter dated June 15th, 1945, addressed to Robert E. Coulson, Esq., 40 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

"Dear Colonel Coulson:

"In accordance with the order of Judge St. Sure dated May 21st, 1945, the Western Pacific Railroad Company has paid Sloss & Turner $7,000.00, being the amount allowed for services during the period following the decision of the Circuit Court an adequate and effective presentation of the case for the equity be made in the San Francisco court.

Yours very truly,

Original signed by

/s/ T. M. SCHUMACHER,

President."

Mr. Adams: Now I should like to call Mr. Levy.

Mr. Levy: Are you referring to me, Mr. Adams?

Mr. Adams: No, the witness is ready to testify, I believe.

Mr. Levy: I was prepared.

Mr. Adams: I think you were forewarned, as well.

Mr. Levy: Nevertheless it was quite a shock.

WILLIAM G. LEVY

called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, sworn.

The Clerk: Will you state your name to the Court, please?

A. William G. Levy, L-e-v-y.

Direct Examination

By Mr. Adams:

Q. Where is your place of business, Mr. Levy?

A. 526 Mission Street.

Q. That is the office of the Western Pacific Railroad Company? A. That is correct.

(Testimony of William G. Levy.)

Q. And what is your office in the railroad company?

A. I am the auditor of the freight and passenger accounts.

Q. You have been engaged in business for the railroad company—that is, been an employee of the company—for a little over 25 years?

A. That is right.

Q. How long have you been the auditor of freight and passenger business?

A. Since July, 1948. [1517]

Q. And before that you had been assistant auditor of freight and passenger revenues?

A. Assistant auditor of freight and passenger accounts.

Q. And how long have you held that position?

A. Since September, 1937.

Q. And prior to that time you held various positions in the auditing department of the railroad your duties and responsibilities as auditor of freight and passenger revenue accounts?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now will you please describe the nature of your duties and responsibilities as auditor of freight and passenger revenues?

A. I am in charge of the department where we audit all of the freight and passenger revenues derived from the agents' accounts and inter-line accounts and also government accounts.

Q. Is your department a section of the auditing department? A. Yes, it is.

(Testimony of William G. Levy.)

Q. And who are your immediate superiors?

A. Mr. Gosney, the general auditor, and Mr. Strachan, the assistant general auditor.

Q. Now are you familiar with the handling of government accounts?

A. I am. That is one of the——

Q. That work is under your jurisdiction?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Are you famiilar with the terms "cut-backs" and "refunds"? A. Yes, I am. [1518]

Q. Please state what your understanding of these terms is as regards government freight accounts.

A. Well, the government pays our bills prior to audit. They have been doing that for a good many years. Then when they get around to auditing it—it is quite a ways behind—they detect what they believe are overcharges, and they file claims with us for them. In some instances we make the refunds promptly, but in other cases when we do not, the government makes deductions from a current bill that they happen to be paying, and that deduction is termed a "cut-back."

Q. Now were you asked by Mr. Gosney to prepare an analysis of the cut-backs and refunds made since May, 1944, on government freight traffic that terminated on the Western Pacific system for the purpose of determining the total amount of such cut-backs relating to traffic moving in each of the years '42, '43 and the first four months of '44?

(Testimony of William G. Levy.)

A. Yes, I was.

Q. And when were you asked to make that analysis?

A. In the latter part of August, 1948.

Q. And did you make it? A. Yes, I did.

Q. When was it completed?

A. Early in October, '48.

Q. Was this analysis made by employees of the railroad company in your department under your personal supervision? [1519]

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Please describe how the work was done.

A. Well, I designated certain persons from the office to gather the information from the regular records and other persons to sort it according to the years, and finally operators to tabulate the figures to get the final results.

Q. Now I hand you a carbon copy of a tabulation entitled, "Re-Distribution of the Debits to Freight Revenue made during the Period 1944 to July 1948, inclusive, resulting from Government Cut-backs and Refunds on Government Shipments Terminated on the Western Pacific, Segregated to Year in which Traffic Moved," and I also hand you, Mr. Levy—strike that. I am handing you this carbon copy (handing to witness).

I have furnished counsel with copies of this sheet.

Is that a copy of the report which you rendered upon this subject? A. Yes, it is.

(Testimony of William G. Levy.)

Mr. Adams: Now, if your Honor please, I will ask, in lieu of marking the carbon copy, that, with the consent of counsel, a ribbon copy, which has been made from the carbon copy, be marked as Defendant's 51 for identification.

(Analysis prepared by the witness referred to above was then marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 51 for identification.)

Mr. Clark: Have you an extra copy there, Mr. Adams?

Mr. Adams: Yes, and I will ask that a copy of this be handed [1520] up to the Court.

(Copy of report handed to the Court through the Clerk.)

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Mr. Levy, do you believe the figures shown on the report are correct?

A. I do.

Q. Do they include any cut-backs or refunds that were made after July 31, 1948?

A. No, they do not.

Q. Can you tell me approximately the total amount of refunds and cut-backs that have been made since July 31, 1948, with regard to traffic terminating on the Western Pacific system?

A. They amounted to $322,251.64.

Q. And what, approximately, was the Western Pacific's share of that amount?

A. I estimate that would be $109,000.

Q. Are you continuing to receive claims for refunds and cut-backs from day to day with respect to government traffic handled during the war years?

A. We are.

Q. Can you make any estimate of the total amount of refunds and cut-backs which may eventually be made with regard to wartime traffic?

Mr. Phleger: I object to that on the ground it calls for the conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Adams: I submit it, your Honor. [1521]

The Court: Sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Now, Mr. Levy, referring to Defendant's 51 for identification, the schedule, are any of the amounts shown in that schedule still in dispute? A. Yes, there are.

Q. In other words, some of the amounts which you had in this schedule are in dispute?

A. Yes, there are a good many items on which we rebilled the government to protect our claims, but most of those have either been withdrawn or settled. However, there is the amount of $355,300.41, which we have not yet withdrawn as to these claims and of that amount I estimate that——

Mr. Phleger: Well, now, I ask that——

Mr. Adams: Go right ahead. I ask that the witness' answer not be interrupted.

Mr. Clark: He wasn't asked to estimate anything.

Mr. Phleger: I submit the answer is not responsive.

Mr. Adams: The objection was interpolated in the middle of the witness' answer. I wonder if the answer may not be completed, and then would be a proper time for the objection, after the question has been answered.

The Court: Well, can't the witness answer it a little more briefly, and then if it is necessary to make an explanation you may ask the witness. That gives your opponent an opportunity to object; otherwise he has to interrupt. [1522]

Mr. Adams: Surely.

Q. Now a moment ago, Mr. Levy, you mentioned the amount $355,300.41, as being the aggregate of the amount still in dispute, which related to Defendant's 51 for identification?

A. That is right.

Q. Now approximately what part of that $355,300.41 is the Western Pacific's share?

A. I estimate it to be $120,000.

Q. Now taking the figures on Defendant's 51 for identification, which aggregate $2,036,186.84, are those amounts the Western Pacific's share of cut-backs and refunds? A. They are.

Q. And they do not include the share of such cut-backs and refunds chargeable to connecting carriers? A. They do not.

Mr. Adams: I will offer Defendant's 51 for identification as Defendant's Exhibit 51, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: Your Honor, I would like at this moment to make an objection, if this witness is not prepared to testify as to the years in which these payments were paid out. Otherwise, it is totally misleading, and I think is only a part of the story. It purports to say the year in which the transportation occurred, and we think we are entitled to know the year in which the payments or cut-backs were made. Now is this witness going to be prepared to testify to that? [1523]

Mr. Adams: Are you, Mr. Levy?

A. You are talking now about which figure?

Q. This same statement.

A. The statement of $2,000,000?

Q. Yes, this $2,000,000 statement shows the amounts of cut-backs and refunds on the debits between '44 and '48, which are related back to the years by determining the times when the traffic moved, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now then, what Mr. Phleger wants to know is, can you then translate these figures back again to the years in which the debits took place?

A. I can.

The Court: You mean the payments took place?

Mr. Adams: Or, as is stated here, the debits to freight revenue made. The same thing.

A. I can say they were all made subsequent to April, 1944.

Q. And they were made during the period May, '44, to July, '48? A. That's right.

Mr. Adams: So much shows here.

Mr. Phleger: I still object, because it is our position, and I think it is quite evident, that when a cut-back or refund credit, tax advantage was taken of it, and if the cut-back occurred in the last eight months of 1944, then this defendant received just as much advantage taxwise as if it had been allowed [1524] in this year, and so on, so that unless we know the years in which the tax advantage was taken, we have but part of the story. Now, as I understand it, the exhibits put in evidence by Mr. Cockburn simply gave the gross tax effect in those years and gave no credit whatever for the tax advantage which in fact had been received, and we think we are entitled to have evidence of that, if this is going in. [1525]

* * *

The Court: Wouldn't you then, in order to make that picture complete, have to show what the tax was in the years in which these refunds and cutbacks were advantaged by the corporation and then credited back in the hypothetical case? Otherwise it would not be a due reflection.

Mr. Levy: That is exactly what the government required in the Atchison ruling, and they so stated expressly.

Mr. Adams: The Atchison ruling is before your Honor. Of course, as far as the government is concerned, you are not going to get your deduction twice. That has been ruled more than once, and what opposing counsel are suggesting here is one way in which to determine the net tax savings. They say we can't have our deductions twice, but they put us against the proposition that we are not allowed to calculate anything on a hypothesis because, in order to hypothesize at all, you have to hypothesize something that is different from what took place. Now, I think it is true if you want to carry your tax calculations in and out and through in subsequent years, you are going to have different [1526] consequences, and then you are going to have consequences that pile on consequences, because that is the way the tax laws work. But, I take it, that this evidence as it stands is evidence of the amount of the cut-backs during those years. Now, as is suggested by opposing counsel, we need another specification of these figures—I think I am right; I will ask Mr. Levy—that we did not get the tabulations of the particular years from which they were taken when they were taken to these years.

Q. Is that right, Mr. Levy?

A. Will you repeat that question?

Q. (By Mr. Adams): Did you in making these calculations which carry all these figures back to the years when the traffic happened, did you also note the years in which the payments were finally received? In other words, in which the cut-backs finally operated? A. No, we did not. [1527]

* * *

Mr. Adams: Before Mr. Levy addresses the court, may I ask the witness one question because of the suggestion in the last remarks of counsel that it would be easy to get the figures he would like to get? I would like to ask the witness how much work would be involved in picking the items making up these figures and positioning them with respect to the years in which the debit to freight revenue were made.

The Witness: It would be quite a job. It would take about—— [1532]

* * *

The Court: How else could you find out what the effect was of the payments which were made unless you recalculated all the income tax returns in the years in which these payments were actually made?

Mr. Adams: Let me see if I can get this clear with Mr. Levy.

Q. Mr. Levy, what you did to get this figure showing the amounts with respect to the time when the traffic was handled was to look at all the bills and get identification one by one of the traffic handled any time with relation to the cut-back or refund, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. Now, then, what you will have to do to get a figure after the time when the cut-back was taken into your accounts—how will you do that?

A. I just have to rearrange the very same records from which these figures were secured according to the date on which the deductions were made from our earnings. [1534]

* * *

(Testimony of William G. Levy.)

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, as to the offer of Defendant's 51 [1537] for identification in evidence, I have concluded to submit the offer without a request for leave to supplement, and take a ruling upon it as the record stands.

The Court: Well, I will reserve ruling on the admission of this exhibit until I have an opportunity to look at all the evidence in the case.

Mr. Adams: I have no further questions of Mr. Levy.

The Clerk: The exhibit will remain marked as 51 for identification, your Honor?

The Court: That is right. I will reserve ruling on the admission of the exhibit.

Any questions?

Mr. Phleger: No questions.

Mr. Clark: Nothing from us.

The Court: You may be excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, at this time I have some documents to offer for the record, and I will state briefly the purpose as I produce the documents. In support of the showing that the plaintiff corporation had no use in itself for its stock loss, we offer photostatic copies of the corporation income and declared value excess profits tax returns of the corporation for the year 1945, and the corporation income tax return of the corporation for the year 1946. I had made request that the plaintiff produce the originals, but I take it it would be satisfactory [1538] to produce photostatic copies. They might be Defendant's Exhibit 52.

Mr. Phleger: I object to them upon the ground they are incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Clark: Same objection, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: Just because we are poor, it is not a matter of evidence. It hasn't anything to do with it.

The Court: Well, there is no objection as to the return itself?

Mr. Phleger: No, not on the ground of competency.

The Court: All right, let it be marked.

Mr. Clark: What is the number on it?

The Clerk: 52.

Mr. Adams: 52A and B?

The Court: For 1945 and 1946, did you say, or '44 and '45?

Mr. Adams: No, '45 and '46. And I direct attention in the '45 return to the amount shown under the net operating loss deduction of $42,403,256.08, being the remainder of that big loss after portions of it had been taken up in the prior returns.

The Clerk: The return for '45 will be marked 52A and the return for '46, 52B.

(Return for 1945 and return for year 1946 were marked 52A and 52B in evidence, respectively.)

Mr. Adams: Now, your Honor, I desire to read a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation [1539] at a meeting held September 5, 1935, my purpose being to show the fact that the plaintiff corporation recommended the appointment of Mr. Schumacher as one of the two trustees. I will read the resolution.

Mr. Phleger: Just a moment. We——

Mr. Adams: Just a moment; from page 927 of the record.

The Court: You say you admit that?

Mr. Phleger: We don't think it is material, but we will admit the fact.

Mr. Adams: May I read it?

Mr. Phleger: We won't agree to the admissibility, but we will admit the fact.

Mr. Adams: The fact being that the Board of Directors of the corporation on that date adopted a resolution as owner and holder of all the capital stock of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, recommending the appointment of Mr. Schumacher as one of the two trustees of the property of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, to be appointed at a hearing.

Mr. Phleger: Yes.

Mr. Adams: Very well, your Honor.

Now, I desire to offer as Defendant's 53 a photostatic copy of a letter of November 28, 1943, addressed by A. R. Baldwin, then an officer of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation in New York, to C. M. Levey, president of the Western Pacific Railroad Company. [1540]

Mr. Clark: That is not '43, is it?

Mr. Adams: '23.

Mr. Clark: 1923?

Mr. Adams: Yes, right. And I will read briefly from it:

"I am enclosing herewith two statements showing the taxable income as reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on consolidated returns for the years 1921 and 1922, and proposed allocation of the taxes to the various companies, the income of which is included in the returns. The total tax for 1921, $31,813.09, was originally paid by the Western Pacific Railroad Company; and of the tax for 1922, $114,929.64, three-quarters has been paid by the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, which company will pay the remaining one-quarter, which will be due December 15, 1923. The method of allocation, vis., prorating the entire amount among the companies showing taxable income, is, so far as we are able to determine, the practice followed by other companies making consolidated returns."

Mr. Phleger: Object to that on the ground it is irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial. It is over 20 years before the events here in litigation.

Mr. Adams: Well, the showing previously made being that the practice there described was since continuously followed. [1541]

The Court: Well, you have already in evidence an exhibit which factually shows the manner in which the returns were filed. What good does it do to put that letter in?

Mr. Adams: Particularly because the author, who describes the arrangement, refers to it as being in accordance with the general practice among railroads.

Mr. Clark: Which has already been proved, your Honor.

The Court: I don't see the competency of that, either.

Mr. Adams: I don't want to argue it, your Honor.

The Court: I think you have everything in the record that you need so far as the factual situation is concerned, in this very voluminous exhibit which gives all the facts as to what was done. I think this unnecessarily encumbers the record. I am inclined to be as liberal as is possible, but I think there is no need to put in a letter of 1923 in this litigation, because whatever is in evidence is admitted in evidence, and I am supposed to look at it, and so an alert lawyer is going to call attention to some conspicuous phrase in some document in 1923 when this case gets up into the Circuit Court, the record will show now that in my opinion, it just doesn't serve any useful purpose so far as the issues in this case, and I will sustain the objection.

The Clerk: Marked for identification, your Honor?

The Court: Oh, yes, of course.

(Letter dated November 28, 1923, referred to above was then [1542] marked Defendant's Exhibit 53 for identification only.)

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, I offer as Defendant's Exhibit 54 a series of letters, and I will state the nature of the letters and my purpose in offering them. The nature of the letters is this: It is correspondence between counsel to the corporation and Mr. Curry, first as secretary and treasurer and later as president of the corporation, concerning stockholders' meetings. It is offered in response to Plaintiff's Exhibit 19, which is a schedule of the corporation's stockholders' meetings, 1935 through 1948. It would not be offered at all were it not for the fact that that schedule is in the record now.

The Court: That schedule merely lists the dates of stockholders' meetings.

Mr. Adams: The point of the schedule, as I understand it, is to show that there were numerous meetings at which no quorum was present. The point of these letters is to show that in the letters consideration is given from time to time to the desirability of sending out proxies; the fact being that with proxies entirely outside of the James holdings, a meeting could have been held. Those gentlemen, the corporation officers, and the counsel, considered the matter and decided against it. We think that if the plaintiff's exhibit 19 is to stand in the record as indicative of anything, that we are entitled to put in the responsive showing.

The Court: You mean as to why the stockholders' meetings [1543] were not held?

Mr. Adams: Precisely.

The Court: If that is the point of the correspondence, I think it would have bearing.

Mr. Adams: It is offered for that purpose.

The Court: Well, are you going to offer a lot of letters? What do they say? What do they talk about in those letters?

Mr. Adams: Well, take the first one, in order, which is addressed to counsel by the secretary and the treasurer of the corporation, and it asks:

"I should like to have your opinion as to how this year's meeting should be handled. That is, will we pursue the same course as we did last year, sending out notices only, or should we proceed in the regular way? If we do the latter, it will entail considerable labor and expense, and it will be necessary on next Wednesday's meeting of the Board to name a proxy committee, approve form of proxy, and a proxy statement."

The Court: And what is the answer to that letter, or is that what you are [redacted]?

Mr. Adams: Yes, that letter is April 23, 1940, counsel's letter in reply—or August 23, rather, counsel's letter in reply of August 28, of the same subject matter on the same question says: [1544]

"It is our judgment that you should this year pursue the same course you pursued last year; that is, issue the notice in the usual form, but do not name a proxy committee or request proxies.

The Court: Now what counsel was that?

Mr. Adams: Mr. Nicodemus.

The Court: Well, I don't suppose that your opponents are going to object to this.

Mr. Adams: It is offered only in response to their showing about the stockholders' meetings in the absence of quorums.

The Court: And all the letters are along the same line?

Mr. Adams: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Is there no objection?

Mr. Clark: We haven't seen them.

Mr. Phleger: I have no objection.

Mr. Adams: They are 700 to 714.

Mr. Clark: If that is the only purpose, there is no objection. I don't know what is in them.

The Court: Well, Mr. Adams has stated the gist of them. I assume that is what they are offered for.

Mr. Clark: Well, if that is the only purpose, there is certainly no objection.

The Court: Well, do you want them marked as one exhibit?

Mr. Adams: Yes, if your Honor please, Defendant's 54, [1545] consisting of a document now marked Railroad Company Defendants' 700, and those following, to 714 inclusive.

(Railroad Company's Exhibits 700 to 714 referred to above were thereupon received in evidence and marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 54.)

Mr. Adams: Now I have a set of letters which I can identify for counsel as Railroad Defendant's 410, 411, 413, 414, 417—417 includes a lawyer's memorandum—Interveners' 224 and 228; and I will state the nature of these letters.

Plaintiffs put in the exhibit Plaintiff's 45, which is an opinion rendered by Mr. Polk to the corporation with respect of Delaware franchise tax. The interveners put in on the same subject Interveners' Exhibits 5, 6, 7 and 8. We offer these documents, your Honor, which are dated in the years 1944 and 1945, and are correspondence between Mr. Curry, or rather, by Mr. Curry and by Mr. Nicodemus, dealing with that subject matter in response to the apparent effort of our adversaries to show treatment of this subject by Mr. Polk. We offer these to show that the subject was dealt with between the corporation and its own counsel, Mr. Nicodemus, at the same time.

The Court: Are counsel familiar with the correspondence?

Mr. Phleger: Yes. We have no objection to it at all.

Mr. Clark: Limited to that purpose, we have no objection, your Honor.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Adams: Defendants' 55?

The Clerk: Defendants' 55.

(Railroad Defendants' Exhibits on deposition 410, 411, 413, 414, 417, and Interveners' Exhibit 224 and 228 were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit 55.) [1547]

Mr. Adams: Now, your Honor, we make an offering in response to the issue suggested upon yesterday's examination, concerning whether or not the plaintiff corporation knew that it had a right to file a separate return. The document which I now offer consists of the following: Interveners' 275, a letter from the General Auditor in San Francisco to Mr. Curry asking if it were the intention of the corporation to file a consolidated return——

Mr. Clark: For what year, please?

Mr. Adams: I read you the date of the letter, didn't I? The date of the letter is February 8, 1941, and it is for the year 1940. Mr. Curry's letter of February 10, '41, stating:

"I have given this matter careful thought and deliberation, and feel that in accordance with the provisions of Section 730(a), the most equitable arrangement would be for us to dispense with the filing of a consolidated return in this particular instance."

Interveners' 279, a telegram of March 6, 1941, addressed by Mr. DeGraff to Mr. Curry:

"Do you wish me to prepare tentative declared value excess profits tax returns for each of the companies?"

Mr. Curry's telegram to Mr. DeGraff, Interveners' 280—these are all deposition numbers—of March 7, 1941, reading [1548] in part as follows:

"Find in looking into matter our accountant, who resigned in February, misunderstood just what is required. Holding company will file consolidated return as in previous years."

Interveners' Exhibit 80, telegram from Mr. Curry to Mr. DeGraff of March 1, 1945, reading in part as follows:

"By March 15 we will file here tentative consolidated returns for corporation for entire year including its subsidiaries, to May 1, and you will file in San Francisco tentative consolidated return of company and its subsidiaries from May 1 to end of year, and consolidated return of Western Realty and its subsidiary from May 1 to end of year. As you know, one-fourth estimated tax liability must be paid at that time. These tentative returns are not binding, so if, after further calculation, it is found more advantageous to file separate returns, we will do so before June 15."

The Court: What year is that?

Mr. Adams: That is a telegram dated March 1, 1945, and refers to the returns for the year 1944.

I offer these documents as Defendants' 56.

Mr. Rhleger: Your Honor, I don't think these are material, but I do point out the fact that here is counsel dumping in a [1549] lot of exhibits like that. Mr. Curry was here on the stand, and he testified that all these type of wires were prepared for his signature, and he just signed them. I think it is highly improper at this stage of the trial to start in dumping in letters and telegrams sent by witnesses who have appeared and testified on the very subject. This should have been brought in on cross-examination of Mr. Curry.

Mr. Clark: Your Honor, I think Mr. Adams will concede that that last telegram he read from, with respect to the '44 returns, was established on deposition to have been prepared by Miss Valouch under Mr. Polk's advice.

Mr. Adams: As to the latter, I don't know, but I am quite confident it was prepared by Miss Valoueh.

Mr. Clark: Yes, although signed by Mr. Curry.

Mr. Adams: Well, Mr. Curry testified about all this practice. I have no purpose to contradict Mr. Curry's testimony in any respect, but what I do say is this, your Honor: The issue to which this response was directed was raised yesterday, presented to us yesterday, when a point was made that there was some kind of a difference between advising that it was preferable to file consolidated returns from a tax standpoint and advising that you had a right to file separate returns. That is the reason these things come in.

The Court: I think the testimony is limited to just whether or not the witness Polk had given advice, and there [1550] was some difficulty in getting that question squarely put and answered; but that was the extent of the examination on that subject, just as to whether or not he had made that statement to them. I do recall that the Court stated that that didn't close the door to you to show that there was an understanding on that subject on the part of the parties.

Mr. Adams: This is the current record that we offer in writing, and in response to that question.

Mr. Clark: We have no objection to it, your Honor.

Mr. Phleger: Well, it will be stipulated, will it, that with respect to the last telegram, that it was written by Miss Valouch under the direction of Mr. Polk and signed by Mr. Curry?

Mr. Adams: Whatever the record shows; and

Mr. Curry's deposition I will agree to. I have no recollection of any statement one way or the other relating to this particular telegram to Mr. Polk. If you have a recollection of that, please bring the record up, Mr. Phleger. We will agree on the deposition statement.

Mr. Clark: Well, it will take some time for us to find that pinpoint in the Curry deposition. I may be able to find it within a very few minutes.

The Court: Well, the correspondence may be admitted. I think the objection is not as to the admissibility, but really to the weight of these documents. [1551]

The Clerk: Exhibit 56.

(Interveners' Exhibits 275, 276, 279, 280, 80, on deposition, were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit 56.)

Mr. Adams: Now further with respect to the tax matters, and having reference among other things to the testimony of Mr. Cockburn on the repositioning of the loss of the Deep Creek Railroad Company, and having reference also to the current record of the disposition of tax questions by Mr. Curry, I offer two letters, Railroad Exhibits 249 and 255, each of these being from Mr. Curry to Mr. DeGraff, and to indicate what I have in mind, I will read briefly from one of them.

Mr. Clark: Just a moment, please.

Mr. Adams: The dates are July 14, 1942, and August 25, 1942.

Are you ready?

Mr. Clark: Just a moment. Yes.

Mr. Adams: Exhibit 249 says, the second paragraph:

"With reference to the losses sustained account abandonment of Deep Creek Railroad, it has occurred to us that this loss might be considered by the Internal Revenue Bureau as a 1939 loss; in view of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission issued certificate permitting this abandonment July 1, 1939." [1552]

And in 255, from the second paragraph:

"From the information contained in our records, it appears this loss should be charged off in 1939, as it is our understanding the Revenue Bureau has ruled such losses should be written off the year the securities have been ascertained as worthless. However, due to the large amount involved, we would not want to take it out of 1940 unless we are certain that there is no possible reason for keeping it in that year."

Mr. Phleger: I submit these are totally and wholly immaterial and irrelevant. They are written in 1942 about tax transactions in '39.

Mr. Clark: They are also the type of letter, your Honor, that Mr. Curry testified was prepared by Miss Valouch in each instance, regarding tax matters, and he is not here to give us the benefit of that testimony, if there is any effect to be argued from that.

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, we have said before, and I think it is a fair statement, that the current written record at the time is the best evidence. I do not offer this in any wise as contradicting any testimony that Mr. Curry gave. I offer it as current evidence of the things that he dealt with at the time.

Mr. Phleger: Well, then, it was certainly proper cross-examination [1553] of Mr. Curry; it is directed to showing that Mr. Curry, I suppose, was a very able tax man.

Mr. Adams: No, no, that is not a proper statement.

Mr. Phleger: Now, the appropriate time to have submitted this was when Mr. Curry was here.

Mr. Adams: I won't argue it further.

The Court: Well, is there very much materiality to this?

Mr. Adams: Your Honor has heard all the material that I consider significant.

The Court: This is the last document?

Mr. Adams: No, your Honor, I have two or three more.

The Court: Well, I can't see any particular materiality to it, but what bothers me more is that counsel may feel that it is a subject that they might want to cover, and Mr. Curry is gone—or is he still here?

Mr. Phleger: I think he is leaving tonight or tomorrow morning. We wouldn't counter it. It is wholly immaterial and irrelevant. That is the only point; it is just making a bigger record here, and we think it is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. Adams: We haven't caught up to the other party's numbers yet.

The Court: Well, I understand from Mr. Adams that we are getting to the end of the rope, so I think I will let it in.

The Clerk: 57. [1554]

(RR. Defendants' Exhibits 249 and 255 were received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit 57.)

Mr. Adams: Now, your Honor, I offer as Defendants' Exhibit 58 a document now marked Railroad Defendant's Exhibit 950, being a copy of a letter dated December 17, 1945, addressed by Mr. Elsey to Mr. Wood, or to Wood, Walker & Company, 63 Wall Street, New York, and containing the following. The letter is written in answer to an inquiry from that company.

"With respect to the stock of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, I think that perhaps the best explanation is that contained in our 1944 annual report under the heading of 'Taxes,' which is quoted below."

And then follows the complete quotation of the statement under the heading of "Taxes," contained in the 1944 report.

We offer this as evidence of notice to the director Willis Wood, who was one of the directors of the plantiff corporation at the time of this letter, and in view of the fact, your Honor, that his deposition here read in evidence indicates that his recollection was not clear or definite with regard to this matter, and he had some recollection that he did not know about it long after the date of this letter.

Mr. Phleger: Your Honor, that is a letter to the statistical department of a firm of which Mr. Wood was a limited partner, and he has testified in his deposition, which has been introduced in evidence, that he had no notice and received no [1555] notice from it.

The Court: This is a letter that went to what firm?

Mr. Adams: Mr. Willis Wood's firm, he being a limited partner in that firm. You recall the testimony that he had been a partner in a variety of investment houses, and this is the latest one, Wood, Walker & Company, in which he is now a limited partner. The gentleman is some 77 or 78 years of age at this time. This is the gentleman who had been for a good many years a member of the official body of the New York stock exchange.

I am just offering it to prove notice, your Honor, because these gentlemen's recollection of what they knew about this, in this case, was quite obscure.

The Court: Well, this elderly gentleman who was a limited partner in this firm in this period—I am now supposed to draw from this letter some evidence that he had notice?

Mr. Adams: Certainly. What this letter proves is that the very document that would give him notice went to his company. It was available, and we think that it is material in showing that, regardless of the inference your Honor draws further from it——

The Court: Well, I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Adams: May it be marked, if your Honor please, for identification as Defendants' Exhibit 58?

The Court: Yes. [1556]

(Letter dated September 17, 1945, Elsey to Wood, Walker & Company, was marked Defendants' Exhibit 58 for identification.)

Mr. Adams: Now next, your Honor, I desire to offer Railroad Defendant's Exhibits 795, 796 and 797. These are, respectively, schedules as respects Russell M. Van Kirk, deceased, of all purchases and sales of Western Pacific Railroad Corporation preferred stock; J. S. Farlee & Company, confirmation of all purchases and sales of preferred stock to April 10, 1948; and J. S. Farlee & Company, confirmation of purchases—wait. No, that is part of the same one. And Western Pacific Railroad Corporation preferred stock given by Russell M. Van Kirk to Mrs. Russell M. Van Kirk, and owned and held by her. These documents are offered, as were the similar schedules, with respect to the intervener Offerman, to which your Honor sustained an objection.

Mr. Clark: And to which we now object, your Honor, upon the same ground, that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Adams: Now may I say, your Honor will recall at that time we had some argument, and I don't want to repeat it at all, in which reference was made to the Comstock case, among other things. I have since looked at some cases with respect of a right of stockholders to intervene. That is what these cases specifically are; they come up on motion to intervene, and there is authority, specifically on the proposition that the [1557] courts may hear and consider the investment position, the date year of acquisition and all the factors that are covered in these schedules, because these schedules, as your Honor well knows, are designed to show how late these gentlemen in this company came into this corporation and at what prices. I offer the schedules without imposing duplicate argument upon the Court; but I do think we are entitled to them, as I did think at the time.

Mr. Clark: We will object to them, your Honor, upon the ground it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: I will make the same ruling as I did in connection with the other exhibit; 59 for identification.

Mr. Adams: 59 for identification will consist of these three documents, your Honor.

The Court: Very well.

(Railroad Company's Exhibits 795, 796 and 797 on deposition were marked Defendants' Exhibit 59 for identification.)

Mr. Adams: Now, your Honor, I offer the Form 174 Revised, which is one of these monthly operating results, and general statistics, printed papers of the Western Pacific Railroad Company for the month of November, 1943. This is offered for a very limited purpose; the plaintiffs put in Exhibit 74 and 75 with regard to the 1943 income tax accruals, and I don't remember which of these exhibits it is, or both of them, but they contain estimates of the amount of accrued tax liability [1558] in the amount of about $8,250,000. Then the record shows that the accruals, as at the end of the year and before they were reversed, amounted to $7,000,000. So there is an unexplained gap of a million and a half dollars. To meet that unexplained gap between those two papers, I offer this document, which shows that in November estimated back pay accrued on account of wage increase was entered in an amount of nearly a million dollars and had a corresponding effect on the tax accruals. That is the sole purpose, and if counsel will accept my statement, I needn't offer the document.

Mr. Phleger: I will accept the statement.

Mr. Clark: Accepted.

Mr. Adams: Now, then, your Honor, I should like to read from the minutes of a special meeting of the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation held at the residence of Mr. T. M. Schumacher in New York on Wednesday, August 13, 1947, and state the directors that were present at that meeting, who were: Mr. Curry, W. W. Hatton, E. C. Nicodemus, Jr., A. Perry Osborn, T. M. Schumacher, M. C. Valouch, and Willis D. Wood.

Now, at the page marked 103 of the minute book, of the minutes of that meeting, there appears the following:

"The Board considered at length the question of withdrawing the offer of settlement in view of the fact that the Railroad Company refused to stipulate a withdrawal of its technical defenses. [1559] After full consideration, it was the judgment of the Board that any withdrawal of the offer of settlement would be prejudicial to this corporation and its stockholders."

I think counsel will agree with my further statement that the minutes of the meeting also contain a copy of the stipulation which was thereafter executed, and of counsel's opinion with regard to that stipulation.

Mr. Phleger: I object to it as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. It took place long after this suit was filed.

Mr. MacKinnon: The competency is conceded of all these documents.

Mr. Phleger: Yes, you are quite right. There is no objection on the ground of competency, but it is irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Adams: The relevance of the portion I read, your Honor, is this—it is relevant on two grounds and in two respects: In one respect, it shows certainly that this independent board of directors seriously considered a refusal to go along with the then pending offer of settlement. It is a curious coincidence that it happened that that was the date that the Commissioner acceped it, but this board didn't know that when it took this action.

Mr. Clark: Didn't know that?

Mr. Adams: It couldn't possibly be known until the [1560] second day.

Mr. Clark: Because the second Krigbaum letter, of course, was known.

Mr. Adams: Counsel of course can make his argument when his time comes, and I should not, perhaps, be arguing, but I was asked to reply to a statement with regard to the relevance of the offer I have just made, and I have stated one ground of relevance.

Now, another ground of relevance is this, your Honor: This is significant of the nature of the claim that is presented here to your Honor. It is significant that here, even at that date, with a settlement available that everyone knew was a very fine settlement to this transaction, these gentlemen, who hadn't a dime in the interest, only a claim in litigation, seriously gave consideration to throwing that settlement overboard unless the defendant corporation would waive the defense of the bar of reorganization.

Now, we think that is significant in this case, and we offer the material I have just read in support of that.

The Court: Well, what is the significance of it? You say you think it is significant?

Mr. Adams: It is significant of the nature of the equity that is brougth before your Honor, that is in fact predicated upon a force position.

The Court: You mean that the Court should consider against [1561] the plaintiffs the fact that they were rather forceful about asserting their point?

Mr. Adams: Oh, no, your Honor; the thing they considered doing is the thing that, in my judgment, is indefensible.

The Court: Well, sometimes litigants, with resourceful attorneys, are very successful in holding a heavy cudgel over the heads of their opponents, if they want to get some result out of it. What has that got to do with the essential merits of this? It is just a little atmosphere to the thing that you don't like, because you think they were too tough about it. But that hasn't anything to do with the merits of the controversy itself. I don't see that it has any relevance in the matter.

Mr. Adams: Well, it certainly is material, is it not, your Honor, to establish the fact of the independence of this board of directors, it being still suggested that they were dominated and controlled?

The Court: Well, at that time counsel were here on both sides of the case in my court, presenting these very stipulations for approval, and for an order of court; so they were dealing then at arm's length. There wasn't any question about that. They were in here in court.

Mr. Adams: That is right.

Mr. Clark: In fact, the interveners came in and asked for an injunction on this very thing. [1562]

The Court: I will sustain the objection to the relevancy.

Mr. Adams: Very well, your Honor. I need not offer the document, since the offer I read was all the offer I intended to make.

Now, I have one further document. So I hope that is successful. The document is Railroad Company Defendant's Exhibit 120, and is a copy of the by-laws of the plaintiff corporation as amended to July 28, 1942; and being at the time it was produced, upon the taking of the depositions, the latest amendment. These by-laws describe the functions of the various officers, to which Mr. Curry has had reference from time to time in the course of his testimony.

The Court: Any objection to the by-laws of the corporation?

Mr. Phleger: No.

Mr. Clark: None from us, your Honor.

The Clerk: No. 60.

(Railroad Company Defendant's Exhibit 120, corporation by-laws, was received in evidence and marked Defendants' Exhibit 60.)

* * *

Mr. Matthew: If the Court please, it will take but a moment. I just want to suggest a stipulation that the final [1563] order of March 28, 1946, in the reorganization proceeding was served upon all parties to the reorganization proceeding as well as counsel, and the publication was also made in accordance with the terms of the order. That appears in the record.

Mr. Phleger: Subject to check, that is all right. Isn't that recited in the final order itself, that notice was given?

Mr. Matthew: Oh, yes, as far as that is concerned. I am talking about service of the final order itself. There is ample evidence—it also appears that the notice of the hearing upon the petition was likewise given in regular course, but I simply want to establish the fact that the final order was served in the regular course.

Mr. Phleger: If you say that it was, we will agree that it was.

Mr. Matthew: I think we need no stipulation to further orders because counsel will agree that they were received in regular course.

Mr. Adams: We rest.

Mr. MacKinnon: The defendant Western Realty Company rests, your Honor.

(Defendants rest.)

Mr. Phleger: The plaintiff will now offer in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit 81 the Federal corporation income and declared value excess profits tax return of the defendant [1564] railroad and affiliated companies for the calendar year 1945, and as 81-B the excess profits tax return for the same year, 1945, and as Plaintiff's next exhibit, 82, the corporation income tax return of the Western Pacific Railroad Company and affiliated companies for the calendar year 1946; and as the next exhibit, the corporation income tax return for the Western Pacific Railroad Company and affiliated companies for the calendar year 1947.

(The documents referred to were marked respectively Plaintiff's Exhibits 81-A, 81-B, and 82 and 83.)

* * *

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Phleger: The plaintiff rests.

Mr. Clark: Your Honor, we have only one formal matter [1565] on the part of the interveners, and that is according to the record at page 716 I did not get the concession which was agreed on substantially on pre-trial relative to the stock holdings and dates of acquisition of the intervening stockholders. The stipulation I asked for appears at page 716. The record does not indicate that anyone responded except Mr. Adams, who had some qualification of it, so I will now ask for the agreement and the concession I asked for, namely, that the intervener Henry Offerman now owns 4,080 shares of the preferred stock of the plaintiff corporation; that he held 3,903 shares at the time the deposition in this case was taken, and has been a stockholder of the plaintiff since July 7, 1942; that the intervener J. S. Farlee & Company, Inc., is now the owner of 10,000 shares of preferred stock of the plantiff corporation, and at the time of the depositions—this is in answer to Mr. Adams' suggestion at the time I first asked for this concession—Farlee owned 9,320 shares and had been a stockholder since January 7, 1944; and that Meredith H. Metzger, formerly Meredith H. Van Kirk, who was substituted for her deceased husband by order of this Court on January 28, 1949, is the owner of 11,385 shares of the preferred stock of the plaintiff, 8,200 shares of which were distributed to her from the estate of her deceased husband, and that he had been a stockholder, that is, Russell M. Van Kirk, of the plaintiff corporation since February 23, 1944. Now, may I have that concession from you, Mr. Phleger? [1566]

Mr. Phleger: Yes.

Mr. Clark: And Mr. MacKinnon?

Mr. MacKinnon: I am looking for the pre-trial minutes because I do not remember what was said. May I see the transcript? I will abide by whatever I agreed to abide by.

Mr. Clark: We offered a stipulation, if your Honor please, at the pre-trial, a written stipulation in which these figures and dates appear. The stipulation contained some other matters, it having been incorporated between Mr. Phleger's office and mine in the one stipulation, and with respect to this stockholders' matters, Mr. MacKinnon and Mr. Adams said that they would take at the trial our statement as to the amount of stock that was held and the dates of acquisition. They have had access to the certificates and opportunity to examine them on deposition. There is no question about the fact at all.

Mr. Adams: Your Honor, as I believe I stated at the pre-trial—and I am speaking from memory—I accept Mr. Clark's statement with regard to the present ownership of the number of shares held, but as I believe I further stated at the pre-trial, no concession on my part or agreement which I have made for the substitution of Mrs. Metzger, formerly Mrs. VanKirk, as a party is to relieve her from the defenses good as against her husband. That was the understanding. On that understanding I will accept Mr. Clark's statement with regard to the number of shares of stock held by each of the interveners whose names he [1567] has called off.

Mr. Clark: And the dates of acquisition, Mr. Adams? And the dates I gave for the original acquisition?

Mr. Adams: I think they are correct, and I assume they check with the schedule.

Mr. Clark: They do, and I checked them.

Mr. MacKinnon: I will accept whatever I agreed to on pre-trial, your Honor. I have tried but I cannot find what I agreed to. Nobody has the minutes. I am not questioning their stockholdings.

The Court: Let us end it. Will you stipulate that you will accept Mr. Clark's statement subject to check?

Mr. MacKinnon: Certainly, subject to check.

The Court: If we do not hear from you to the contrary, you have agreed to it.

Mr. MacKinnon: Absolutely.

Mr. Clark: The interveners rest, your Honor.

Mr. MacKinnon: At this time I make a motion, as I made a motion at the end of the interveners' case, to dismiss the complaint and I am prepared to argue it at length or to save your Honor's burden of hearing it, whichever you desire, because I think the interveners have failed completely in making any case here, and I say that particularly in view of the reckless charges—the reckless charges—and I am using the word advisedly, of these interveners with respect to Mr. Coulson, the James [1568] Foundation of New York, because there isn't an iota of evidence of conspiracy which they charge in their complaint. There is not an iota of evidence that the James Foundation of New York dominated or controlled this picture. There is not an iota of evidence that Col. Coulson dominated or controlled the stock situation for his benefit or for the benefit of the James Foundation. Those charges are reckless charges.

The Court: Mr. MacKinnon, you have made the motion. I wonder whether you cannot reserve your argument until we have some discussion and determine generally how this case is going to be submitted.

Mr. MacKinnon: Whatever you please, your Honor.

The Court: Do you gentlemen want to brief this case? I suppose you do. Or do you want to argue it, too? [1569]

Statement Accompanying Claim for Refund

The taxpayer is entitled, under the provisions of Section 23(s) of the Internal Revenue Code, to a net operating loss deduction in the amount of $55,093,108.70, computed in accordance with the provisions of Section 122 of the Code. Said net operating loss deduction is the amount of the reported net operating loss for the year 1943, which, in accordance with the provisions of Section 122, is a net operating loss carry-back for years beginning after December 31, 1940.

The details of the facts producing the net operating loss, the net operating loss carry-back and the net operating loss deduction are shown in full on the Federal tax return filed by the taxpayer for the calendar year 1943, which said return and its supporting schedules by this reference are made a part of this claim for refund.

The taxpayer requests the right, at the time this claim is reached for consideration, to file any further additional evidence deemed appropriate in the consideration of this claim, and it is further respectfully requested that before action is taken with respect thereto, an opportunity for hearing be granted the taxpayer.

Wherefore, the taxpayer alleges that it is entitled under the provisions of Section 23(s) of the Code to a net operating loss deduction in the above-stated amount computed under the provisions of Section 122(c) of the Code; that by reason thereof, there is no taxable net income for the year 1942; and that the tax paid for said year in the amount of $4,201,821.54 constitutes an overpayment, claim for the refund of which, together with interest as provided by law, is hereby made.

The within proposal is made without prejudice to any rights or claims of the parties, if the proposal is not accepted by you.

As part of this proposal The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries agrees that, if this proposal is accepted, it will consent to a rejection of the said claim for refund of the 1942 taxes and further agrees not to sue upon said claim or file other or further claims in respect of 1942 taxes on any ground whatsoever. It is further agreed by the said The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries that if this proposal is accepted it will execute or procure the execution of any other or further agreements or assurances requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the purpose of effectuating the settlement.

Said amounts are reasonable and within maximum limits heretofore fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and said order constitutes full disclosure of the approximate amounts to be paid by the Debtor, or such other corporation, for such fees and expenses so far as they could be ascertained at the date of said hearing before this Court on January 22 to 25, 1940. Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 10—(Continued) in accordance with said order of this Court entered herein on September 22, 1943.

2. This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of these proceedings and of all of the parties in interest.

3. On July 15, 1943, in conformity with subsection (e) of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, said plan of reorganization was duly submitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission for acceptance or rejection to the creditors of Classes 1, 3, 4 and 5. In view of the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission contained in its order dated June 21, 1939, in Finance Docket No. 10913, and the findings of this Court contained in said order entered herein on August 15, 1940, submission of said plan of reorganization to any other class of creditors or to any class of stockholders is not necessary under subsection (e) of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

4. On September 15, 1943, the Interstate Commerce Commission duly filed herein its certificate dated September 4, 1943, in which it duly certified to the Judge of this Court the results of said submission.

5. Said plan of reorganization has been duly accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under subsection (e) of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, holding more than two thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have been reported in said submission as voting on said plan of reorganization, submission of said plan of reorganization to any class of stockholders not being required under said subsection (e), and such acceptances have not been made or procured by any means forbidden by law.

6. The United States is not a creditor of the Debtor on claims for taxes or customs duties, unless it be on claims for the payment of which said plan of reorganization duly provides.

7. All requirements for the confirmation of said plan of reorganization pursuant to Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, have been duly complied with, and said plan of reorganization should be confirmed.

8. This Court has this day filed herein an opinion containing a statement of the Court's conclusions and reasons for confirming said plan of reorganization.

9. Article R of said plan of reorganization, among other things, provides:

"The plan shall be carried out under the supervision of a reorganization committee consisting of three persons, all to be approved by the court, who shall be designated, one by the bondholders committee, one by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and one by the Railroad Credit Corporation and the A. C. James Company jointly."

In conformity with said Article R, Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright, and Robert E. Coulson have been duly designated for membership on said reorganization committee, said Frederick H. Ecker having been designated by Frederick H. Ecker, John W. Stedman and Reeve Schley, constituting the Committee representing a Group of Institutional Holders of the First Mortgage Bonds of the Debtor, said Frank C. Wright having been designated by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and said Robert E. Coulson having been designated by The Railroad Credit Corporation and A. C. James Co. jointly. This Court is satisfied that said Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright, and Robert E. Coulson should be approved as members of said reorganization committee.

Wherefore, It Is Ordered:

First: Said plan of reorganization heretofore approved by the order of this Court entered herein on August 15, 1940, is hereby confirmed.

Second: The designation of Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright, and Robert E. Coulson as members of the reorganization committee provided for in Article R of said plan of reorganization is hereby approved. Said reorganization committee shall have the powers of and authority provided for in said plan of reorganization and shall have full power and authority, under and subject to the supervision and control of this Court, to put into effect and carry out said plan of reorganization and the orders of this Court relative thereto, the laws of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding. This Court hereby reserves the power, subject to the provisions of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and said plan of reorganization, further to define, extend, amend, or otherwise change the powers and duties of said reorganization committee and to enter orders approving or disapproving any action on their part. As provided in Article B of said plan of reorganization, the members of said reorganization committee shall not be liable for any action taken by them in good faith or by any person employed by them in good faith, except for their respective individual malfeasance or willful neglect. To the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this paragraph, the members of said reorganization committee shall be indemnified and held harmless against any loss or expense, by the Trustees of the properties of the Debtor until the properties of the Debtor shall have been surrendered by said Trustees and thereafter by the Debtor or such other corporation as may acquire said properties pursuant to said plan of reorganization.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT NO. 11

Agreement by and Between

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation,

The Chase National Bank of The City of New York,

Central Hanover Bank & Trust Company,

James Foundation of New York, Inc., and

Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, As the Reorganization Committee of The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

Dated November 22, 1943.

Agreement by and between The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, a Delaware Corporation, hereinafter called the "Holding Company," The Chase National Bank of the City of New York,

Central Hanover Bank & Trust Company and James Foundation of New York, Inc., hereinafter called collectively the "Secured Creditors," and Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, hereinafter called collectively the "Reorganization Committee,"

Witnesseth:

The Subject Matter of the Agreement

The Holding Company is indebted to each of the Secured Creditors for money loaned upon a promissory note or promissory notes now in default, against each of which notes certain securities were delivered as collateral by the Holding Company. The aggregate of the indebtedness of the Holding Company to all the Secured Creditors for principal and interest, as of September 30, 1948, is $10,547,423.85 which is approximately $5,650,863.00 in excess of the then market value (approximately $4,896,560.00), of all the collateral then held by the Secured Creditors. Annexed hereto and designated as Schedules A, B and C, respectively, are statements as to the aforesaid indebtedness of the Holding Company to each of the Secured Creditors and the collateral now or heretofore held by the Secured Creditors as security therefor.

The Holding Company desires to secure the release and discharge of its aforesaid indebtedness to each Secured Creditor, principal and interest, in so far as such indebtedness cannot be satisfied by the collateral held by such Secured Creditor (not including as part of such collateral the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company hereinafter mentioned); and the Secured Creditors severally desire to apply such collateral in satisfaction of the indebtedness, and to secure the release by the Holding Company of any claims it may have arising out of the previous disposition by them of collateral.

The Holding Company owns all of the outstanding preferred and common stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, a California corporation (hereinafter called the "Railroad Company"). The Railroad Company is now in reorganization under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, and the plan of reorganization thereof, approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission by its order of June 21, 1939 (hereinafter called the "Plan"), was duly confirmed by order of the United States District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division, on October 11, 1943. Said preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company was declared to be without equity or value by an express finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission in its said order of June 21, 1939, which finding was duly adopted by the aforesaid Court, and under the Plan said stock is required to be cancelled. The certificates representing said preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company are in the possession of The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, which claims a lien thereon.

Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright, and Robert E. Coulson are the members of the Reorganization Committee of the Railroad Company, constituted pursuant to subdivision R of the Plan, and approved as such Reorganization Committee by order of the United States District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division, on October 11, 1943.

Subject to the jurisdiction of the aforesaid Court, the Reorganization Committee is under the duty of determining the method of carrying out the Plan under the supervision of the Committee. Action by the holders of the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company may become necessary with respect to the various corporate steps incident to carrying out the Plan and making the same effective. The Reorganization Committee is desirous and the Holding Company is willing that the aforesaid stock of the Railroad Company be held at the disposal of the Reorganization Committee for the purpose of carrying out the Plan and making the same effective and that in connection therewith the Holding Company, as the sole stockholder of the Railroad Company, take such action as the Reorganization Committee may from time to time request.

Agreements

I.

The Holding Company agrees to assign, set over and transfer to each of the Secured Creditors, severally and respectively, the securities pledged to such Secured Creditor and still held by it as shown by the statement as to the indebtedness to such Secured Creditor annexed hereto (Schedule A, B or C, as the case may be), and the Holding Company also agrees to release to each Secured Creditor, all rights and interests which the Holding Company has, or might claim to have in and to said collateral, including any rights or interests which the Holding Company has or might claim with respect to collateral heretofore sold by such Secured Creditor as shown by the aforesaid statement. Each Secured Creditor agrees to assume such Federal and State stamp taxes, if any, as may be payable with respect to said transfer to it of pledged securities.

Each Secured Creditor agrees to cancel and surrender to the Holding Company the collateral notes held by such Secured Creditor and more specifically described in the statement as to the indebtedness to such Secured Creditor annexed hereto (Schedule A, B or C, as the case may be), and to release and discharge the indebtedness represented by said notes, principal and interest, in full.

Each Secured Creditor consents to the assignment or transfer to the other Secured Creditors and each of them, of the securities to be transferred by the Holding Company to such Secured Creditors, pursuant hereto, and waives any inequalites in connection with the satisfaction of the indebtedness of the Holding Company to the Secured Creditors, respectively, that may result from the carrying out of this agreement.

.The agreements herein contained on the part of the Secured Creditors to be performd are several and none of the Secured Creditors shall be liable for the performance by the other Secured Creditors of their respective agreements; nor shall any partnership or joint relationship between said Secured Creditors be construed to flow from the execution of this instrument.

II.

The Holding Company, as the owner of all the outstanding preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company, agrees to cooperate with the Reorganization Committee in carrying out the Plan and making the same effective by whatever method, in conformity with the Plan, the Reorganization Committee may determine upon, and (in furtherance of this general commitment and not in limitation thereof) the Holding Company particularly agrees that (a) upon written request of the Reorganiztaion Committee, the Holding Company will assign, transfer and deliver or cause to be assigned, transferred or delivered to the Reorganization Committee or the nominee or nominees of the Reorganization Committee, all of the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company, if the aforesaid United States District Court shall determine such assignment and transfer to be necessary or desirable for the purpose of carrying out the Plan or making the same effective; provided, however, that if any Federal or State stock transfer taxes shall lawfully be applicable to such transfer, provision for the payment of such taxes shall be made by the Reorganization Committee and the Holding Company shall not be obligated for the payment thereof; and (b) from time to time until the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company has been transferred, as aforesaid, or, if no such transfer be made, until such stock is surrendered for cancellation in accordence with the Plan, the Holding Company, upon written request of the Reorganization Committee, will take such action as the owner of the aforesaid stock of the Railroad Company (whether by voting said stock at meetings of stockholders of the Railroad Company or by the execution and delivery of appropriate authorizations, consents or other written instruments) as may be necessary to authorize such corporate action by the Railroad Company (including, without limitation thereto, the amendment of its Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws and the execution and delivery of the mortgages provided for in the Plan), as the Reorganization Committee may deem necessary or convenient for the purpose of carrying out the Plan and making the same effective.

Any action taken by the Holding Company, as the owner of the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company, pursuant to the agreement in this paragraph contained, and the making of any provision by the Reorganization Committee as to the payment of Federal and State stock transfer taxes, if any such taxes shall lawfully be applicable to the above mentioned transfer, are subject to the approval of the United States District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division, in the proceeding pending in that Court for the reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company (No. 26591-S).

If the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company is without equity or value shall be annulled, set aside or reversed, whether by Act of Congress or otherwise, or if, for any reason, the Plan shall not be carried out, then the Holding Company and each of the Secured Creditors shall be entitled to be restored to the same rights, claims and privileges with respect to such preferred and common stock as existed immediately preceding the execution of this agreement, and this agreement shall not be deemed to affect or prejudice any such rights, claims or privileges and the physical possession of the certificates for said preferred and common stock (provided said certificates shall not theretofore have been surrendered to the reorganized company or its agent for actual cancellation) shall be returned to The Chase National Bank of the City of New York.

Each of the Secured Creditors hereby consents to the making by the Holding Company of the agreements set forth in this Article II and to any action taken by the Holding Company in conformity therewith; and The Chase National Bank of the City of New York agrees to release and deliver over the certificates representing the preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company now in its possession to the Holding Company when delivery of the same becomes necessary or appropriate to carry out said agreements.

III.

The agreements hereinabove contained shall not be effective until the agreements by the Holding Company, as owner of the outstanding preferred and common stock of the Railroad Company, in Article II hereof shall be approved by the requisite vote of the stockholders of the Holding Company, pursuant to the provisions of its Certificate of Incorporation and By-Laws; provided, however, that the Holding Company agrees to take such action immediately as may be necessary or appropriate to secure the requisite approval by vote of its stockholders. Performance of the agreements contained in Article I hereof shall be rendered by the Holding Company and each Secured Creditor, respectively, immediately upon such approval by vote of the stockholders of the Holding Company.

In Witness Whereof, each of the parties hereto

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 12

Filed August 23, 1944.

In the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, Southern Division.

No. 26591-S

In the Matter of

The Western Pacific Railroad Company,

Debtor.

PETITION OF REORGANIZATION COMMITTEE FOR AN ORDER APPROVING USE OF THE DEBTOR COMPANY IN CARRYING OUT AND MAKING EFFECTIVE THE PLAN, APPROVING PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION AND PROPOSED NEW BY-LAWS OF DEBTOR COMPANY AND APPROVING FORMS OF PREFERRED AND COMMON STOCK CERTIFICATES AND DIRECTING ACTION WITH RESPECT THERETO

Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, being all the members of the Reorganization Committee designated to put into effect and carry out the plan of reorganization of the debtor above named, hereby represent to the Court and petition as follows:

1. The plan of reorganization of the debtor (hereinafter called "the plan"), confirmed by order of this Court on October 11, 1943, provides in subdivision R that "The plan may be carried out either by revesting the properties formerly of the debtor in the debtor company or by transferring said properties to a new corporation organized for the purpose," and "The method of carrying out the plan shall be determined by the reorganization committee in its discretion," subject to the approval of the Court. Under subdivision R of the plan your petitioners are empowered also to determine, subject to the approval of the Court, the form and, except as otherwise provided in the plan, the provisions of the charter, by-laws and stock certificates of the reorganized company.

2. The debtor company, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, is a corporation already organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, and has certain rights, privileges and franchises in the states of California, Nevada and Utah, and has the record title to the railroad facilities and properties involved in the bankruptcy proceeding; and the use of the debtor company in carrying out the plan will result in substantial economies and will otherwise facilitate the reorganization. After considering all factors, your petitioners have determined, acting on advice of counsel, that the debtor company should be used in carrying out the plan and that a new corporation should not be organized.

3. Pursuant to the petition of the Reorganization Committee filed herein December 1, 1943, the

Court on December 17, 1943, entered an order authorizing and directing transfer of the preferred and common stock of the debtor company to the Reorganization Committee, at a time and place to be fixed in the discretion of the Committee by its request in writing to The Western Pacfic Railroad Corporation, a Delaware corporation which previously owned such stock, and approving action of the Committee in connection with a certain agreement for securing control of such stock. The transfer by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of the preferred and common stock of the debtor company was duly approved by the requisite vote of the stockholders of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, pursuant to the provisions of its Certificate of Incorporation and By-laws on April 20, 1944. Thereafter, on the first day of May, 1944, your petitioners, pursuant to said order of December 17, 1943, made request of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation for the transfer of said stock in accordance with the authorizaton of its stockholders and on the same date said stock was duly transferred to your petitioners. Said transfer has been made of record on the books of the debtor company, except as to directors' qualifying shares, certificates for which, duly endorsed in blank, are held by the Reorganization Committee, by the issuance of new preferred and common stock certificates to your petitioners.

4. In order that the debtor company may be used in carrying out and making effective the plan, it will be necessary to amend its Articles of Incorporation and to adopt new By-laws to provide for the new preferred and common stock authorized under the plan and for other changes required by said plan. Your petitioners, subject to the approval of the Court, have approved a proposed Certificate of Amendment of the Articles of Incorporation of the debtor company and proposed new By-laws of the debtor company. Copies of said proposed Certificate of Amendment and By-laws in typewritten form are annexed hereto as Exhibits "A" and "B", and are hereby submitted to the Court for approval as to substance and, also, as to form, subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable.

5. Your petitioners, subject to the approval of the Court, have also approved in draft form the face of a proposed certificate for shares of the Preferred Stock, Series A, provided under the plan, and the face of a proposed certificate for shares of the Common Stock, likewise so provided, copies of which are annexed hereto as Exhibts "C" and "D," respectively, and are hereby submitted to the Court for approval as to substance and general form. Your petitioners have also approved the reproduction, on the reverse side of each of said stock certificates, of the full text of Article VII of the Articles of Incorporation of the debtor company, after amendment, as shown in the proposed Certificate of Amendment; Exhibit "A", annexed hereto. Inasmuch as the reverse side of each of said stock certificates will include only the usual form of assignment and the text of said Article VII, which is subject to the approval of the Court as a part of said Exhibit "A"; it is deemed unnecessary to submit the forms of the reverse sides of said certificates in draft form.

6. Your petitioners propose, in the event the Court approves the exhibits hereto annexed, to take appropriate action, as the record holders of the present preferred and common stock of the debtor company for the adoption of the proposed By-laws for the debtor company and the proposed amendment to its Articles of Incorporation and to arrange for the preparation of new preferred and common stock certificates, in temporary form, if your petitioners shall determine this to be necessary or advisable, and in permanent engraved form. Your petitioners also propose to request the then directors of the debtor company to take such appropriate action as is required of directors in connection with the adoption of said amendments. It is proposed that the adoption of said amendments to the Articles of Incorporation shall be subject to the further order of the Court as to the time of the filing of the Certificate of Amendment with the Secretary of State of California which will be required in order to make the amendments completely effective.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray for the order of this Court:

(a) Approving the determination of your petitioners that the existing debtor company, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, be used in carrying out and making effective the plan of reorganization;

(b) Approving the proposed Certificate of Amendment of the Articles of Incorporation of the debtor company, a copy of which in typewritten form is attached hereto as Exhibit "A", as to substance and, also, as to form, subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advise of counsel, may deem advisable;

(c) Approving the proposed By-laws for the debtor company, a copy of which in typewritten form is attached hereto as "Exhibit B", as to substance and, also, as to form, subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

(d) Approving the substance and the general form of the proposed face of the certificate for shares of Preferred Stock, Series A, which is attached hereto as "Exhibit C";

(e) Approving the substance and the general form of the proposed face of the certificate for shares of common stock, which is attached hereto as "Exhibit D";

(f) Authorizing and directing petitioners, as the Reorganization Committee of the debtor company and as stockholders of record of the debtor company, to take or cause to be taken such action as may be necessary or appropriate for the adoption of said proposed amendments to the Articles of Incorporation and said proposed By-laws of the debtor company, and for the preparation of complete certificates as described herein for the preferred and common stock contemplated under the plan of reorganization, in temporary form if the petitioners shall determine this to be necessary or advisable, and in permanent form;

(g) Authorizing the directors of the debtor company then in office to take such action, as and when requested by the Reorganization Committee, as may be necessary and appropriate in connection with the adoption of said amendements to the Articles of Incorporation.

(h) Granting such other and further relief as may be proper in the premises.

Whereas, the Interstate Commerce Commission, under date of October 24, 1944, in Docket #10913, made a report and order which, among other things, approved and authorized the assumption by said The Western Pacific Railroad Company of obligations and liabilities as provided in said plan;

Whereas, pursuant to said Plan of Reorganization and to the order entered in said proceeding on November 27, 1944, T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, as Trustees of the property of said The Western Pacific Railroad Company, duly appointed in said proceeding (hereinafter called the "Trustees"), have, by deed dated December 9th, 1944, remised, released, transferred, conveyed and quitclaimed to the undersigned, said The Western Pacific Railroad Company, all of the property, real, personal and mixed, of every kind and nature, vested in, held, possessed, used or controlled by said Trustees;

Now, Therefore, pursuant to the provisions of said order entered November 27, 1944, and in consideration of the said release, transfer and conveyance by the Trustees, the undersigned The Western Pacific Railroad Company, for itself, its successors and assigns, makes this Agreement with said Trustees, for the benefit of said Trustees and of all other parties in interest in the above-entitled proceedings, under which agreement the undersigned does hereby:

Mr. Curry:

My secretary, Mary C. Valouch, who has been doing my work since Walter Mittelberg left, has, as you know, assumed additional duties, particularly of a research and statistical character and handles our tax matters.

She is doing this work in a satisfactory manner so I am increasing her salary, effective January 1, 1943, on The Western Pacific Railroad Company payroll to $2,300 per year, which is an increase of $300 a year over her present salary—my former secretary received $3,400 a year from the Company.

Please arrange your payroll accordingly.

Memorandum of Conference
June 2, 1943.

At a conference held today between Messrs. Schumacher, Ehrman, Matthew and Elsey, it was agreed that the following changes should be made with respect to employes and expenses of the New York office:

1. Effective as of June 1, 1943, all employes of the New York office heretofore acting as joint employes of the Reorganization Trustees and The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation will be taken over as full time employes of the Trustees, viz:

M. J. Curry
H. Brua Campbell
Mary C. Valouch
John F. Wienken
Lillian O'Neill
Catherine C. Sheehan

2. The Trustes will assume the full rental of the New York office, together with all expenses for miscellaneous supplies and services incident to maintenance of the quarters.

3. It was understood that the above changes will increase the Trustees' expenses by approximately $1,000 per month. Mr. Curry will continue to report to the General Auditor, as heretofore, details as to salaries and expenses but on the single employer basis now agreed upon.

4. It was agreed that the Trustees would not pay any part of the Corporation's franchise tax ($1691.75 to April 1944).

5. Although the employes above mentioned will be receiving more compensation from the Trustees than formerly, it is the opinion of Mr. Dooling that no authority will be required from the Salary Stabilization Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue with respect to Mr. Curry, or from the War Labor Board, with respect to other employes, since none of them will be receiving more compensation from a single employer than they formerly received as joint employes.

6. It was understood that Mr. Schumacher would make necessary application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to cover Mr. Curry's increased salary on the Trustees' payroll, such consent from the R.F.C. being necessary in accord with terms of the Trustees' loan agreement with R.F.C.

June 18, 1943.

Mr. Charles B. Henderson, Chairman, Reconstruction Finance Corporation,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Henderson:

Pursuant to Subdivision (a), Item 3, of Agreement dated November 23, 1938, between the undersigned Trustees in Reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, Debtor, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and supplements thereto, filed on December 2, 1940 and December 1, 1941, this is to respectfully request the written consent of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the folllowing changes in salaries, effective June 1, 1943:

Mr. M. J. Curry, Vice President, Assistant Secretary and Assistant Treasurer, in our 37 Wall Street, New York Office, to be increased from $600 to $975 per month.

Mr. H. Brua Campbell, of Pierce & Greer, Counsel at New York, 40 Wall Street, to be increased from $416.66 to $625. per month.

These changes are brought about by reason of the fact that, effective as of June 1, 1943, all employees of the New York Office heretofore acting as joint employees of the Reorganization Trustees and The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation (holding company) will be taken over as full time employees by the Trustees of the Debtor Company.

The total compensation paid Mr. Curry and Mr. Campbell are shown in Exhibit "C" attached to the aforementioned agreement. Mr. Curry's total salary (amended in accordance with your letter of March 25, 1943) remains unchanged. Mr. Campbell's total salary, however, is $208.33 per month less than shown on Exhibit "C."

Your Corporation's consent to the aforementioned changes will be appreciated.

Re: Western Pacific Reorganization

Dear Col. Coulson:

This will acknowledge receipt of your firm's letter of November 8, 1943, enclosing the report of the Reorganization Committee of the selection of officers and counsel and the designation of mailing address and adoption of by-laws.

This also seems very formal and excessively regular but nevertheless I wish to write informally to congratulate the Reorganization Committee on the selection of your firm as its counsel. As counsel for the Debtor as well as for the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation I stand ready to cooperate to the fullest extent in expediting the reorganization.

At the risk of possible repetition of what I have said to you personally I think your firm will render a distinct service if it insists on the preparation of trust indentures of a somewhat different character than those that have been used in recent reorganizations.

Yours very truly,

F. C. NICODEMUS, JR.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT No. 32A

April 21, 1945

Mr. Charles Elsey, President
The Western Pacific Railroad Company
526 Mission Street
San Francisco, California

Dear Mr. Elsey:

Since Mr. Droit left I have spent some time discussing with Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Curry some of the problems incident to the closing of the office of The Western Pacific Railroad Company at 37 Wall Street. In this connection I have made certain suggestions, some of which are not a matter of concern to your company but one of which at least is understood to be subject to your approval.

As to Miss Vauloch and Miss O'Neill who have been in the office at 37 Wall Street, I have agreed to employ them in this office quite independently of any tax work being done for your company. They will, of course, lose their Railroad Retirement protection since they leave the employ of a carrier but for that they are compensated by the six months' severance allowance, which I understand your company to have provided. In our opinion the fact that they promptly take employment in this office will have no bearing on the six months' retirement allowance you are giving them.

Mrs. Sheehan, who has been in the office at 37 Wall Street, is not desirous of taking other employment at the moment and seems quite satisfied with her six months' severance provision.

As to Mr. Wienken, there seems to be no other course than for him, with the protection of his six months' severance pay, to secure other employment. We are not able to make any place for him in this organization or to justify any arrangement to secure his availability in connection with pending tax problems of your company.

As to Mr. Curry, my suggestion has been that this office retain his services for the present on an annual basis to make investigations and furnish us with reports and to be available as a witness in connection with the pending tax questions which your company has up with the Federal Government. As president of the old holding company, which is a party in interest (without financial stake) in the consolidated return period, it seems to us essential that we have Mr. Curry available to secure us necessary data from the files of the holding company. On the other hand, it is not feasible for the holding company to maintain a New York office on its own account because of certain tax problems which arise under New York State laws. Under the arrangement which I have proposed, we would make available to Mr. Curry an office in which he could go over tax data in connection with studies and reports we desire and furnish him with stenographic assistance in compiling his reports. He would not, in any sense, be an "employee" of this office. It is our opinion that such work as an independent contractor would not constitute "entering the service" of the operating company so as to prevent payments to him under the Provisional Retirement Plan of your company even though we expected, as we would, to be reimbursed by your company for the annual retainer paid him as an expense of the tax proceeding. The same applies, we think, to the Railroad Retirement benefits which Mr. Curry will receive, although we have made no extended study on this point. Mr. Curry, however, will have to resign his position as a nominal vice president of the Denver and Rio Grande for the purpose of stock transfers, in which connection he has been receiving compensation. Otherwise his Railroad Retirement benefits would not accrue.

The amount I suggest by way of annual retainer to Mr. Curry from this firm is $3,000. There is no doubt in my mind that his usefulness in connection with the tax matters will justify such a payment to him for the next year or two. Taken together with his Railroad Retirement payments and his Provisional Retirement Plan payment, this proposed retainer will also serve to tide him over a period which would otherwise be somewhat difficult for him.

Everyone seems to be in the mood to be quite content and happy if a program, such as is outlined above, can be worked out. This does not mean that Mr. Schumacher views with pleasure not having an office available and he still expresses some concern as to whether the Western Pacific is wise to be without a New York office other than traffic offices. Also, I received a rather vehement protest from Mr. Nicodemus, whose solution was to have the holding company, in conjunction with the Denver and Rio Grande, continue to maintain the office at 37 Wall Street on a substantially reduced scale. There are, however, obstacles to any such program which seem to me to be insuperable.

Please let me have, as promptly as you can, your reaction to that part of the program outlined above in which the operating company has a definite interest, viz., the proposed retainer to Mr. Curry to be paid by us and reimbursed to us as one of our disbursements in connection with the pending tax matters.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ ROBERT E. COULSON.

Dear Col. Coulson:

Referring to my recommendation to Messrs. Schumacher and Ehrman that your firm be engaged as advisory counsel to aid Mr. Matthew and me in the solution of the serious problems that will arise in connection with the preparation of final Federal tax returns for the calendar year 1942, I am just in receipt of advice from Mr. Schumacher that this recommendation in which Mr. Matthew has concurred is agreeable to the two Trustees and that they desire me to arrange forthwith for your firm's services.

Since you already have advised me informally of your firm's willingness to undertake this work I write merely to confirm the arrangement and to say that I will hold myself in readiness to confer with your Mr. Polk and to make available to him such data as has been supplied to me and such further data as he may desire.

The firm of Lybrand, Ross and Montgomery has been employed in connection with certain accounting problem and I understand their services will be available to us to the extent that we deem necessary.

I had assumed from its text and from the fact that Mr. Polk and you were already at work when I received your letter that you needed no formal acknowledgment. Dear Mr. Elsey:

In connection with the tax work which I and my associates have been carrying on for The Western Pacific Railroad Company during the 1947 calendar year I have had prepared a statement which is enclosed. This statement covers such services on a time basis and does not purport to include any fee for the substantial tax savings effected for the period from 1942 through the first four months of 1944. You will, I think, concur in my view that any statement covering the fee for this special tax matter should not be determined or submitted until any possibility that the settlement agreement might be reopened by the Treasury Department is foreclosed by the expiration of the statutory period of limitations as to all the taxable years involved, and possibly even until there is at least a preliminary determination in the pending litigation in which The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation is seeking to assert an interest in such tax savings.

When you have reviewed the enclosed statement for current services, and the disbursements in connection therewith, please call me up if there is any question in your mind about them. From the standpoint of The Western Pacific Railroad Company it might be better to have any payment made on account of these services made during the current calendar year.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ JAMES K. POLK.

Dear Mr. Elsey:

On December 19, 1947, I wrote you as to the time when a bill should be rendered covering the services of myself and my associates in connection with the special Federal tax matter which resulted in substantial tax savings for the period from January 1, 1942 to May 1, 1944. It was suggested in my letter that no statement should be submitted for this special tax matter until the settlement agreement was protected from any suggestion on the part of the Treasury Department that the matter be reopened prior to the expiration of the statutory period of limitations as to all the taxable years involved. The statutory period of limitations as to the years involved ended on June 30th of this year and so far as that element is concerned there is no reason why a final statement should not be rendered.

My letter of December 19, 1947 also raised for consideration the possibility that a final bill might be deferred until there had been at least a preliminary determination in connection with the litigation in which the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation is seeking to assert an interest in the benefits derived by The Western Pacific Railroad Company from the final disposition with the Treasury Department of the issues for the taxable period mentioned. We have given consideration to this aspect of the matter and have reached the conclusion that the balance of advantage to your company would be to have a final bill rendered during the calendar year 1948. You will no doubt wish to discuss this aspect of the matter with Mr. Matthew, as counsel for your company in the pending litigation between The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and your company.

In order to put this matter in concrete form, I am enclosing a statement covering such services. The amount shown by this statement seems to us to represent a fair and reasonable basis of charge. In addition the statement shows the retainer payments which have been made and are being made through this office until the end of the current year to Mr. Curry in order that he might be available for research and as a witness in the event the matter had gone to trial instead of being settled.

If there is any aspect of this matter as to which you wish further information, do not hesitate to call me up here in the office.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ JAMES K. POLK.

M. J. Curry, Esq., President,
The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation,
37 Wall Street,
New York 5, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Curry:

We have given the matter of adoption of declared value on the 1944 Capital Stock Tax Return for The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation consideration after discussing with Miss Valouch and Mr. Reilly the present estimates of declared value excess profits tax net income for the calendar year 1944.

You realize that the tax statute does not attempt to require a measurement of real or actual value of the capital stock and that the problem involved in the adoption of a declared value is one of selecting an amount which will incur a minimum combined capital stock tax and declared value excess profits tax liability. The adoption of a declared value of at least ten times the estimated taxable income for the year 1944 is necessary to escape the declared value excess profits tax provisions of the Act and a reasonable margin of protection must be added to provide for possible increases in taxable income over any present estimate.

The best judgment of the Company officials and employees would seem to be that there will be no declared value excess profits tax net income derived by the Corporation for the calendar year 1944. Accordingly, it is believed that the capital stock tax return may properly reflect a declared valuation of zero for the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation.

We have also reviewed the draft of the capital stock tax return and accompanying statement of Trustees which has been prepared for The Western Pacific Railroad Company. Since it is believed that the Corporation will not have title to the property during the calendar year 1944 and the ownership will continue in the Trustees in Reorganization, the return and accompanying statement of Trustees reflects no capital stock tax liability for The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

Review has also been had of the copies of capital stock tax returns proposed to be filed for the Sacramento Northern Railway, the Tidewater Standard Railway Company, The Western Realty Company, the Standard Realty and Development Company and the Delta Finance Company, Ltd. As previously stated, the basis of the declaration of value should be at least ten times the estimated declared value excess profits tax net income of each corporation. Under the method of computing the declared value excess profits tax liabiltiy this income is substantial statutory revenue less statutory deductions, the net result of which is reduced by 85% of the dividends received from domestic corporations and by 10% of the valuation declared on the capital stock tax return. It is assumed that the respective corporate officials have based their declarations of value on estimates of income for these Companies for the year 1944 so as to eliminate through the 10% credit on the declared value any declared value excess profits tax net income. We have no means of reviewing with the Company officials the estimates of income which formed the bases for the adopted values set forth in the capital stock tax returns.

The copies of the returns which were submitted with your letter of July 19th are herewith returned to you. It is requested that at your convenience copies of these papers be furnished us for our files. It is assumed that you will wire Mr. DeGraff so that the returns may be timely filed by him.

May 20, 1943

Mr. M. J. Curry,
Vice President,
Western Pacific Railroad Company,
37 Wall Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Curry:

On May 15, there were filed at the Office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, Custom House, New York, the Federal income, excess profits tax and declared value excess profits tax returns for the Western Pacific Railroad Company and its affiliated corporations. The items entering into the preparation of these returns were reviewed by us and on the basis of the informaiton available, it is believed that the returns as filed met all of the conditions of the Internal Revenue Code and Bureau regulations in respect of the substantive matter contained therein and of supporting schedules.

It is believed, however, that a considerable amount of supporting detail and underlying data must be prepared in order that the figures set forth in the return can be supported upon subsequent Bureau audit. While it is true that much of this underlying detail will relate to the earnings and profits determination which, in turn, will probably have little effect upon invested capital, it is believed, however, desirable that the research be carried through in order that the position we assert in the returns may be hedged against the adverse implications of possible distributions out of capital which may have occurred up to the date of the last dividend payment in 1927. Further, we have used in the returns, book costs as bases for the affiliated corporations' stock investments which again may require adjustments, possible of determination only after such analyses.

It is also believed desirable to have a more complete review made of the computation of the unused excess profits credit adjustment. In the return as filed, it was assumed that the invested capital base for the years 1940 and 1941 was substantially the same as for the taxable year 1942. Undoubtedly, changes will be indicated when the schedules for borrowed invested capital and inadmissible adjustments for 1940 and 1941 have been prepared in detail. This adjustment will, in all probability, have no effect upon the 1942 tax return but will afford a more proper basis for administrative consideration of tax matters for 1943 and subsequent years.

It is further noted that a historical development of the profit and loss accounts of the several companies, not only as disclosed in their books, but as set forth in the reconciliations reported in prior Federal income tax returns, will bring to light any instances of write-ups, write-downs, etc. The survey of this character will also serve to establish more definite amounts of net operating loss deductions and carryovers.

Both in connection with the review of the deductions claimed for depreciation and the amounts shown for fixed capital investment returns, it will be helpful to review the significant tax positions adopted by the company and accepted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the audits by the Bureau of Internal Revenue of prior year income tax returns. While not estopped by prior considerations and decisions, the Bureau may be disinclined to depart from previous determinations of basis of fixed capital investments as shown by treatment in computing depreciation deductions and in computing gains and losses upon the disposition of assets.

It may also be noted that it is clearly demonstrable that the consolidated return basis of reporting for the year 1942 as contrasted with a separate basis of reporting, was advantageous to the group. Since consolidated returns were filed for 1940 and 1941, any unused excess profits credit inhered in the common parent corporation, had separate returns been filed for 1942. A preliminary survey of the smaller affiliates indicates that they would have incurred no excess profits tax liability. The operating company, however, if placed on a separate basis without the benefit of the credit carryovers, would have been liable for a net excess profits tax liability of $3,650,000 even if all other figures as shown in the return were left unchanged. This amount is offset by several factors. In the first place, on an individual basis, the operating companies' interest on expense deductions would have increased $703,000. It would have lost, however, its allocable share of the net operating loss reduction of approximately $438,000. Further, a portion of its earnings subject to excess profits tax rates would have been eliminated from normal tax rates. There would have been, in addition, a reduction in the surtax rate on a separate basis of the 2% penalty for filing a consolidated return, which would have amounted to approximately $200,000 in tax. All of these factors combine to establish a net tax advantage of in excess of $1,550,000 in the adoption of the consolidated return under the separate return.

There is a further possibility of adjustment under the Internal Revenue Code provisions contained in Sections 23(g)(4) and (k)(5) by which the worthlessness of the operating company's stock may produce a net loss for the year 1943 with possible carryback application. This is commented upon rather than suggested as of certain value, since it is paradoxical to compute a loss upon the operating company's stock which, through the mechanics of consolidated return reporting, could be used to nullify the very income of the affiliate whose stock had become worthless. This matter will receive more careful consideration when the completion of the reorganization makes possible the assertion of the claim for worthlessness of the operating company's stock.

Apart from the 1942 tax liability, we are informed that a request has been addressed to the company for the submission of basic data to be considered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the application made under date of March 29, 1943, for permission to change the method of accounting from retirement to a depreciation basis for Federal income tax purposes. Under general procedures adopted in the Bureau the premission to change the basis of accounting is premised upon the agreement of the applicant to adoption of accumulated depreciation reserve balances which, at the election of the company, may be determined by any one of the following methods:

1. The accounts may be reconstructed from their beginning, or may start with the I.C.C. valuation, setting up as a reserve the difference between cost of reproduction new and cost of reproduction less accrued depreciation as determined at the valuation date. From either starting point, the capital accounts shall be carried forward, increased by additions and decreased by retirements, except that any increase in replacement costs, or additions or betterments expensed, which have been deducted for income tax purposes, may not be restored. Depreciation at rates to be agreed upon shall be computed for all years and accrued into a depreciation reserve. From this reserve shall be deducted the cost of normal retirements, but for retirements due to casualty or special obsolescence, which would have been allowable under depreciation accounting, only the accrued depreciation thereon shall be deducted.

2. A reserve may be set up by multiplying the expired life of individual structures, or the weighted average ages of the accounts representing groups of assets, now in service, by the depreciation rates agreed upon for these assets.

3. A reserve of 30% of the total depreciable accounts at the date of change may be set up. It is to be understood that this is on overall reserve and the total amount so computed is to be allocated to the different depreciable accounts on a reasonable basis, such allocation to be a matter of agreement between each railroad and the Bureau.

We are familiar with the requirements of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with depreciation computations generally embodied in the Valuation Division questionnaire, the provisions of T.D. 4422 and related Bureau rulings, and have discussed the railroad situation with the Bureau of Internal Revenue officials to whom these matters are assigned. It will, undoubtedly, be necessary to complete preliminary computations under the elective methods prescribed, and to compare the possible annual benefits of depreciated accounting with the retirement basis heretofore followed, before administrative action can be taken to complete the application for permission to change accounting basis filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

We will be glad to confer with your company officials in planning these preliminary surveys so, if possible, to minimize the work required and will be glad to make available to you the benefit of our experience in the assembly and presentation of data to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, if you elect to take advantage of the depreciation basis of tax accounting for 1943.

Very truly yours,

/s/ JAMES K. POLK.

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation

37 Wall Street
New York, N. Y.

To Holders of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation Preferred Stock and Common Stock:

As information, we give you below a brief statement as to the status of this Corporation.

This Corporation is a holding company and not an operating railroad company. Its investments comprise the common and preferred stocks of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, one-half of the common stock of The Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Company and, in addition, certain other securities of both companies. These operating companies have been in process of reorganization since late in 1935, and, as a result, the Corporation has received no income on these investments during that period.

Aside from the preferred and common stocks of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, the balance of the securities owned by this Corporation are pledged as collateral under loans which have been in default since 1934 and on which interest has accumulated.

After lengthy court procedure, throughout which this Corporation was represented by Counsel to protect the interests of its stockholders, the Western Pacific case was appealed to the United States Supreme Court for review. On March 15, 1943, that court rendered its decision, affirming the plan of reorganization which was promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by the Federal District Court in San Francisco. That plan declares the unsecured indebtedness and the preferred and common stocks of The Western Pacific Railroad Company to be without value.

The bank serving as Registrar of the Corporation's preferred and common stocks, having given notice of its resignation, effective May 1, 1943, and in view of the poor financial condition of the Corporation, it was determined by the officers that as Corporation no certificates for preferred stock or preliminary to liquidation and dissolution of the common stock would be accepted for transfer after April 29, 1943. The New York Stock Exchange suspended trading in the preferred stock on April 29, 1943 (the common stock had been delisted in 1939, since which time it has been traded in the Over-the-counter market).

In view of the Supreme Court's decision, which indicates clearly that the unsecured indebtedness and the preferred and common stocks of The Western Pacific Company (all owned by this Corporation) are of no value and, further, that all other securities owned by the Corporation are pledged as collateral under loans in default, and as the Corporation is without funds to continue its corporate existence, we regret to state we do not believe that during the course of liquidation and dissolution any assets will remain for distribution to holders of the Corporation's preferred and common stocks.

Memorandum

In Re: Western Pacific Reorganization Trustees
1943 Federal Income Tax Return

Conferences were held today with Mr. Elsey, Mr. Englebright, Mr. DeGraff, and Mr. Gloster at the Company offices, and with Mr. Elsey and Mr. Matthew at luncheon in connection with the deduction to be claimed by the parent company on loss on the operating company's stock, their effect thereof upon the tax liability of the subsidiary operating company.

It was explained that under Internal Revenue Code provisions losses on the stock of operating subsidiary companies were specifically removed from the capital gains and loss classification and accordingly allowed as operating losses and, on consolidated return treatment the parent company loss could offset subsidiary company incomes.

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation's investment in the (operating) Western Pacific Railroad Company's stock has been shown at $75,000,000.

The basis is under any calculation well in excess of the operating income of the operating company for 1943.

There has been accrued on the operating company's books through November a reserve for Federal tax liability of approximately $7,500,000. Since there will be no tax liability if this operating loss deduction on the consolidated return basis is allowed the suggestion was made that the books of account be adjusted so as to reflect at December 31 no accrual for Federal tax liability on the part of the operating company for 1943.

After considerable discussion it was decided tentatively to set up a "Reserve for Road Improvement" in an amount approximating the $7,500,000 figure. This action is to be taken upon order of the court after appropriate application for same. As a preliminary step the procedure is to be further studied and submitted to the Reorganization Committee for their approval, which if obtained is to be then submitted to the Trustees for their approval. In support of the dollar reserve, accrual engineering studies are to be compiled showing cost of change of existing rails from 80 to 112 pounds, installation of continuous block system, substitution of concrete for timber tunnel linings, and possibly extension of centralized traffic control. Studies are also to be included of cost of acquiring modernized passenger and freight equipment. Further conferences are to be held Monday on these matters.

Mr. Gloster furnished the undersigned with a preliminary draft of engineering studies on machinery and equipment investments for consideration in connection with the Bureau requirements for submission of data under Treasury Mimeograph 58.

Discussions were also had with Mr. Matthew and Mr. Elsey concerning the program for corporate readjustment and substitute lease arrangements with the Salt Lake City Union Depot and Railroad Company. Mr. Matthew has completed a draft of lease and a copy is to be furnished me for review. In the draft Mr. Matthew has made provision for limited preferred stock dividend requirements, but in the light of the discussion of Mr. McAllister's suggestions has noted that these provisions are subject to revision to accord with the proposals prepared by Mr. Hart and the undersigned. Mr. Matthew is to join in the conferences to be held Monday in regard to both the tax return and the Salt Lake Depot matters. A request was made that opinion letter of counsel be drafted covering the tax return deduction item and this will be done after review of the applicable statutory provisions Monday.

PETITION FOR AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH A RESERVE FUND FOR CONTINGENT TAX LIABILITIES

T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, the duly appointed, qualified and acting Trustees of the properties of the Debtor above named, hereinafter referred to as the Trustees, hereby represent to the Court and petition as follows:

I.

The Trustees are advised and believe that the Debtor and the Trustees have no Federal income or excess profits tax liability for the year 1943. However, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not yet passed upon the question, and the Trustees believe that it is in the best interests of the estate of the Debtor to provide a reserve fund out of which 1943 Federal income and excess profits taxes may be paid in the event that liability therefor should be established. The Trustees are advised and believe that the sum of $7,100,000 will be adequate to cover any possible liability for such taxes for the year 1943. The estate of the Debtor contains sufficient cash derived from the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943 to establish a reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000 without using funds required for other purposes.

II.

It is the judgment of the Trustees that such reserve fund should be invested in United States Treasury securities. The Trustees propose to designate the fund as the "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liabilities."

Wherefore, your petitioners pray that they be authorized to establish, out of the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943, a reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000, to be designated as the "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liabilities," to be invested in United States Treasury securities, and to be used for the payment of any Federal income and excess profits taxes which may be found due for the year 1943.

Memorandum for Colonel Coulson:

The Western Pacific Railroad Company Journal Entries Reflecting Completion of Reorganization

A conference was held today by Colonel Coulson, L. J. Gosney and the undersigned in which were discussed the principles involved in the suggested journal entries attached to and made a part of the memorandum of conference of January 17, 1945, with the Bureau of Accounts of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It was noted that the fundamental premise of such journal entries was that there must be reflected upon the books of the continuing corporate entity the factual changes occasioned by the reorganization, and that this premise necessarily rejects any such concept as the Bureau of Accounts apparently had when they suggested in their letter of December 6, 1944, opening up a new set of books for a new corporation.

It was clearly understood and agreed that under no circumstances would the corporation jeopardize its primary tax advantage deliberately secured through the maintenance of the continuity of the 1916 corporation by voluntarily filing any proposed journal entries of the type suggested in the letter of December 6, 1944. Subject to such amendments, additions and corrections of dollar figures as will develop from the use of the December 31, 1944, closing figures, it is the position of counsel and of Colonel Coulson as a member of the Board, that the entries as reflected in principle in the memorandum of the January 17th conference should form the basis of the proposed journal entries to be prepared and submitted for Interstate Commerce Commission consideration.

There is attached a photostatic copy of a work sheet reflecting the type of balance sheet before and after journal entries of the kind indicated in the January 17th memorandum. It was noted, of course, that the position estimated as of December 31st will probably vary materially in the cash and current asset classifications from the actual figures which will form the starting point for the proposed journal entries and schedules to be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will also be noted that the resulting balance sheet will reflect an unearned surplus of approximately $83,000,000.00 and that of this sum only the amount of $75,800,-000.00 is to be classified as "paid-in surplus" for Federal income tax purposes, the balance constituting "accumulated earnings and profits" in any invested capital or source of dividend distribution computation.

A discussion was also had with regard to the book accounting in respect of the interest on the income bonds. The payment of interest on these securities cannot be determined until sometimes between January and May when the formal action of the Board of Directors in its determination of available income and authorization of the payment of interest is the ultimate act bringing into existence liability on the part of the corporation for payment. Thus from a technical viewpoint the interest is accruable only when and as there is this formal Board action. From a practical viewpoint, there is equal justification for this position since the corporation enjoys the use of the borrowed funds whether or not during each year there are available earnings to pay interest, and the use of the borrowed funds justifies a deduction of compensation equally in every year. The payment within a calendar year is a fair compensation for the actual use of borrowed money during that calendar year.

There is a further tax aspect which is of extreme importance and that is that theoretically and practically there could be no accrual of interest at any time prior to the issuance of the bonds and to insist that there were such an accrual would be an attempt to secure a small interest deduction for 1944 in comparison to the interest deduction now allowable on the old debt structure up to the turnover date under the St. Paul decision. As far as is concerned the practical booking of interest on the income bonds in 1945, subject to some objection which we cannot find in the Interstate Commerce Commission's prescribed system of accounts, it might be that there could be accrued monthly one-twelfth of an estimated annual interest payment on the bonds by a debit to interest expense and a credit to a reserve for estimated interest liability. Upon the payment of interest, for instance in May of 1945, cash could be credited and this reserve debited and the reserve balance immediately after such entry constituting a deferred charge to the remaining months in the year would be absorbed by the monthly entries of the remaining months in the year. In this manner there would be no distortion as between months of income statements. As to the handling of this, however, in the current accounts—so long as there is no reflection of liability at December 31, 1944, for any accrued interest on the income bonds—this office would be glad to receive the comments and suggestions of the accounting officers of the corporation.

Colonel Coulson suggested that as soon as the December 31st figures are available every effort should be made to have a preliminary draft of the journal entries prepared and forwarded to this office for review as to tax implications as well as for Interstate Commerce Commission presentation purposes. It was his suggestion that a memorandum of this conference and of the January 17th conference together with the exhibits be forwarded to Mr. DeGraff so as to give Mr. DeGraff the viewpoint of this office on these matters.

Dear Sir:

The audits of the Federal Income Tax Returns filed by the above named corporation are now being made by representatives of your office. In advance of the consideration of other issues, preliminary review is being given to the deduction claimed in the 1943 tax return for the loss sustained in the worthlessness occurring during that year in the stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company. In order to facilitate the consideration of this matter, and without any attempt at this time to submit arguments in support of the claim of the taxpayer, there is furnished below a summary of the facts believed pertinent in this matter. The taxpayer specifically reserves the right to supplement this statement of facts and to submit a brief in support of the propriety of the claim for deduction in 1943.

organized under the laws of the State of Delaware in 1916 and has owned at all times from on or about July 14, 1916, to April 30, 1944, all of the outstanding stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company. This latter company is a California corporation which has owned and operated railroad properties in the States of California, Nevada and Utah from 1916 to date. On August 2, 1935, a petition was filed in the United States District Court for the Northern Dist ct of California, Southern Division, for reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company under the provisions of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended; simultaneously, a copy of said petition was filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

During 1936, 1937 and 1938 various plans of reorganization were filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and hearings were held by the Commission. The resulting plan of reorganization formulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission was duly certified to the United States District Southern Division, and that Court after further hearings and argument, on August 15, 1940, entered an order approving the plan of reorganization proposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

All plans of reorganization filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the parties recognized value for the stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company. The exclusion of the stock from participation by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the plan which it promulgated was vigorously contested before the Commission and before the United States District Court, both by the debtor company and by other parties to the proceeding.

Appeals were duly taken from the aforesaid order of the United States District Court to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, and in a decision handed down November 28, 1941, the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the order of the District Court and ordered the case remanded for further proceedings. A principal contention of the debtor company, The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, and other appellants before the Circuit Court of Appeals, was that the asset value and earning power of the debtor justified the participation of its stock in the reorganization. The Circuit Court of Appeals sustained this contention to the extent of holding that the Commission and the District Court had made no findings to justify the exclusion of this stock from participation. The Commission plan was based upon a forecast of earnings in the light of the worst depression experience the railroads had ever had. It is submitted that it is obvious that at the time of the Circuit Court of Appeals' decision the financial condition of the debtor was such that it would have been impossible to make any current findings of fact which would exclude the stock from participation in the reorganization. Accordingly, the Circuit Court of Appeals' reversal of the District Court was a practical insurance of participation in the reorganization by the equity ownership of the debtor company.

Petitions for certiorari to review the Circuit Court of Appeals decision were filed in the United States Supreme Court early in 1942. These petitions for review were granted by the Supreme Court on April 27, 1942, and the matter was argued before that Court in October, 1942. In the proceeding before the Supreme Court, the debtor and The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation both vigorously presented the claim that the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals be sustained and that the demonstrated earning power and fair value of the operating properties warranted recognition of value for the stock. On March 15, 1943, the United States Supreme Court reversed the Circuit Court of Appeals and sustained the United States District Court, remanding the case to that Court for further proceedings under the provisions of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act. A petition for rehearing in this matter was denied by the Supreme Court and its decision became final on or about April 19, 1943.

Thereafter during the year 1943 the proceedings which are expressly required by the provisions of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as preliminary to a confirmation of a plan of reorganization, were taken in this case. The votes of security holders on acceptance of the plan were canvassed and recorded by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The favorable result of the vote was duly certified by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the United States District Court as required by the Bankruptcy Act. Thereafter upon notice to all parties and publication, a hearing was had on the confirmation by the United States District Court. On the record made at such hearing, the District Court under date of October 11, 1943, entered its order of confirmation of the plan. No appeals were taken from said order and it became final on or before November 20, 1943.

Under the plan of reorganization so confirmed by the United States District Court, The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation was excluded from any participation, and its stock ownership in The Western Pacific Railroad Company thereupon became worthless. The taxpayer claims that the stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company at all times, until the date of the Supreme Court decision March 15, 1943, had a real and material fair market value, and that the stock became worthless on or after March 15, 1943, and, accordingly, that the loss occasioned by the worthlessness of the stock was properly deductible under the provisions of Section 23 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code in the determination of the consolidated taxable net income for 1943.

Very truly yours,

WHITMAN, RANSOM,

We have an embarrassing situation in connection with examinations before trial in pending stockholders' suits because of various capacities in which

Curry has acted. He is president of the holding company. As such he holds certain files and papers of the holding company. We have pointed out necessity of distinction between these files and files of correspondence written or received by him or Schumacher as former officers of operating company. These files belong to operating company and should be technically in our custody as tax counsel insofar as they involve the tax matters. Curry raises question under your letter May 8, 1945 to bankruptcy trustees. Schumacher asked Curry to act as his representative in retaining custody of trustees books and records. This has been construed to include all correspondence with officers of operating company during reorganization period. In our judgment records directly affecting operating company must necessarily be turned over to operating company by bankruptcy trustees even though they remain available to bankruptcy trustees. Can you clear this situation by wire to us or directly to Mr. Curry?

Federal Income Taxes for Years 1942 and 1943 and Period January 1 to April 30, 1944.

Dear Mr. Curry:

As you doubtless know, Internal Revenue Agent Thomas Leahy has been conducting an examination of the operations of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its affiliated companies for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 and the period from January 1 to April 30, 1944. His activities in this connection seem to be approaching completion. I have thoroughly covered with him all phases of the matter and this report is being made to you so that you may be advised of its current status.

In the course of his examination, Revenue Agent Leahy originally determined, on a tentative basis, that the worthlessness of the stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company occurred in the year 1940. Although in view of the intermediate status of the matter no formal advice or notice of a proposed deficiency had been or could then be received, our tentative computations indicated that the deficiencies that would be asserted on the basis of any such determination as to the year of loss, would be considerably in excess of any reserve provision heretofore made against such tax liability. We immediately took the matter up with the local office of the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge, and various conferences were held at which were presented the taxpayer's views that this loss occurred in the year 1943.

The matter was submitted by the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge to the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington, D. C. for advice. Conferences were held with Bureau officials in Washington in connection therewith. It was first proposed by the Bureau officials at Washington to support the tentative determination of the field examiner that the stock became worthless in 1940. In further conferences in Washington it was suggested that the matter was one appropriate for disposition by settlement or agreement between the parties. At the request of the Commissioner's Office, a written proposal as a basis for settlement was made by me as attorney-in-fact under date of February 11, 1947, a copy of which I am enclosing. After consideration by the Bureau officials, the case was recently returned by them to the local office of the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge. Revenue Agent Leahy, whose investigation was to a large extent suspended during the pendency of the matter in Washington, has now resumed his activities and is, we believe, now in the process of completing the draft of his report. His conclusions, we are hopeful, are now in accord with the proposal submitted to the Washington officials.

The proposal as to a possible basis for settlement is presently pending in the local office of the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge and will continue in that status until final action thereon can be taken by the appropriate Bureau officials. Under the Bureau practice and the necessities of this particularly difficult case, there will probably be an interval of at least two months before an agreement can be reached with those who must approve it, if it is accepted. It can be revoked at any time prior to such acceptance and there will be ample time for consideration by you and your associates before definitive action is taken.

If the Government approves the proposed basis for settlement, it will be an unusually advantageous disposition of the matter. The doubts as to the construction of the applicable Internal Revenue Code provisions are so real and the factual background so involved, that the Government would certainly be fully justified in resisting our claim in its entirety, if complete recovery were to be sought for 1942 as well as avoidance of all liability for 1943 and the period ended April 30, 1944. We would then be compelled to pursue our rights even to the Supreme Court of the United States. In any such extended litigation, we would necessarily incur all of the risks usually attendant upon any litigation, plus the inevitable bringing to bear on the problem, in behalf of the Government, of a succession of fresh and ingenious minds, eager to establish full tax liability in a case involving such large sums. The determination of the year of worthlessness is a factual matter involving a risk of loss which in itself, in my carefully considered opinion, fully justifies the proposed basis of settlement. This is entirely apart from other serious defenses which would most certainly be asserted by the Government, if it were to contest our position in the case.

It is, therefore, my definite recommendation that in the event the Government advises us of its willingness to close the matter on the basis suggested in the attached proposal, that the matter be so disposed of as promptly as possible. You will, of course, be advised promptly of any definitive corporate action required from your corporation to that end. I cannot impress upon you too much the depth of my conviction as to the importance of moving promptly when and if opportunity arises to close this matter on the basis proposed. I am fortified in this by the years of my experience in the Bureau of Internal Revenue and my knowledge of the extreme sensitivity which attends the situation in the Bureau in any case of this magnitude.

I will be glad to discuss this matter with you and your associates at any convenient time.

Very truly yours,

/s/ JAMES K. POLK.

Re: The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Affiliated Corporations 1942, 1943 and 1944 Federal Income Taxes.

Dear Sir:

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its affiliated subsidiaries filed consolidated returns for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 and the said Western Pacific Railroad Corporation filed a consolidated return for the calendar year 1944 including therein its said subsidiaries for the period from January 1, 1944, to April 30, 1944, during which period affiliation existed.

On the said return for 1942 a consolidated tax liability of $4,201,821.54 was reported and duly assessed and paid. On the said return for 1943 there was reported a net loss and no taxable income. On the said return for 1944, based on a carryover of the unused 1943 net loss, there was reported no taxable income and no tax liability. A claim for refund of the tax so paid for 1942, based on a carryback of the said 1943 net loss, was filed and is now pending in your office.

The taxpayer on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries hereby offers to settle and determine the tax liabilities of the said corporations for the said taxable years 1942, 1943 and 1944 in the amounts shown on the returns filed as aforesaid. This proposal of settlement does not relate to or affect the tax liability of the said subsidiaries from and after April 30, 1944, when their affiliated status with The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation was terminated. The within proposal is made without prejudice to any rights or claims of the parties, if the proposal is not accepted by you.

As part of this proposal The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries agrees that, if this proposal is accepted, it will consent to a rejection of the said claim for refund of the 1942 taxes and further agrees not to sue upon said claim or file other or further claims in respect of 1942 taxes on any ground whatsoever. It is further agreed by the said The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries that if this proposal is accepted it will execute or procure the execution of any other or further agreements or assurances requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the purpose of effectuating the settlement.

Authority for the submission of the within propo-

Dear Mr. Polk:

After the conference between the Board Committee dealing with Corporation tax matters, and yourself, held in your office on April 15th, we have further considered the questions involved and the points raised at the conference.

We are prepared to recommend to the Board the sending to you of a letter of general approval of the proposed tax settlement, outlined in your letter to the Corporation under date of April 2nd, signed by myself as President, with a copy of an authorizing resolution of the Board.

We will expect to be informed as to the progress of the negotiations and if there are any changes in the proposed settlement the Corporation must be entirely free to reconsider its approval.

Although we wish to be entirely cooperative in this matter, the Corporation finds itself embarrassed by the action of the Western Pacific Railroad Company in opposing judicial settlement of the allocations of tax benefits, if any, derived from the application of the capital losses of the Corporation for the benefit of the Group. The Railroad Company's pleadings that the Railroad Corporation should be denied its day in court by reason of the statute of limitations and the District Court's injunctive order in reorganization, does not invite the kind of cooperation from the Railroad Corporation that a settlement of the tax case, so ably and fairly proposed by you as counsel for both the Railroad Company and the Railroad Corporation, requires. Had there been any question of the Railroad Corporation's right to a determination of the question of allocations of tax benefits, we feel sure that counsel representing both the Railroad Company and the Railroad Corporation would have specifically stipulated, at the time of the filing of the consolidated returns, for such allocation to be determined by the court, if the parties found themselves unable to agree thereto. Inasmuch as in the proposed settlement the Railroad Corporation foregoes its refund claim of $4,200,000, we think it appropriate that a stipulation promptly be entered into between the Railroad Company and the Railroad Corporation, and the other members of the Group, which will insure the Corporation its day in court for a settlement of the questions of proper and equitable allocations of tax savings, if any, as well as fixing the amount of the refund as the basis for such savings.

We trust you will use your good offices, representing both parties in this situation, to secure the approval of the Railroad Company to such a stipulation.

Very truly yours.

President.

Mr. M. J. Curry,

Dear Mr. Curry:

This acknowledges your letter of May 5th as to the pending tax matters for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944, The Western Pacific group, in which I act as tax counsel. Obviously, as your letter suggests, the only thing that I could do in connection with a possible stipulation between the various interested companies in connection with pending litigation between them as to allocation, would be to 'use my good offices''. The use of my good offices would necessarily be limited to calling to the attention of the other members of the group the fact which I have impressed upon your group; namely, that there is a common interest in concluding promptly the proposed settlement which I have been negotiating with the Treasury Department. It would in my judgment be disastrous if controversies between the members of the group, which could properly await subsequent disposition, should make impossible a settlement along the lines heretofore outlined to your group.

As you know, the legal representation of the railroad company in this matter is entirely in the hands of Mr. Allan P. Matthew of the firm of McCutchen, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene of San Francisco. I understand that Mr. Matthew is represented here in New York in connection with the New York procedings by Mr. Crouch of the firm of Clark, Carr and Ellis. My function is definitely limited to the dealings with the Treasury Department in connection with the tax controversy where certainly all members of the group have a common interest. I have sent a copy of your letter to me and a copy of this letter to Mr. Allan P. Matthew.

Naturally, I am at the disposition of you and your associates and of any other member of the corporate group as to the method of computing the settlement or any other information which will be helpful in ironing out such differences as may exist between members of the corporate group. In closing, however, let me emphasize again the vital element that this controversy between the members of the corporate group shall not be allowed to interfere with an advantageous settlement with the Treasury Department, as to which there is clearly no conflict in interest.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES K. POLK.

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Affiliated Corporations

1942, 1943 and 1944 Federal Income Taxes.

Dear Sir:

Reference is made to the conference held in your office May 6th with regard to the tax liabilities of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its affiliated companies for the taxable years 1942, 1943 and 1944.

At this conference an agreed basis of settlement of the tax liabilities involved was reached and this letter contains the written undertaking of the taxpayers effectuating the settlement.

The taxpayer on behalf of itself and its affiliated subsidiaries agrees to settle and determine the tax liabilities of said corporation for the taxable years 1942, 1943 and 1944 in the amounts shown on the returns as filed. This proposal of settlement accordingly relates to the consolidated returns filed for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 and 1944, in which said return for 1944 The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation included therein its subsidiaries for the period January 1, 1944 to April 30, 1944, during which period affiliation existed. This settlement does not relate to or affect the tax liability of the subsidiaries from and after April 30, 1944 when their affiliated status with The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation was terminated.

As part of the settlement The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation consents to the rejection of the pending claim for refund of 1942 taxes and further agrees not to sue upon said claim or file other or further claims in respect of 1942 taxes on any ground whatsoever. It is also stipulated that The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on behalf of itself and its affiliated subsidiaries will, if this settlement is accepted, execute or procure the execution of any other or further agreements or assurances requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the purpose of effectuating the settlement.

The settlement reached with your office is agreed to without prejudice, however, to any rights or claims of the parties in the event the settlement is not accepted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Authority for settlement of the tax liabilities of the above named taxpayers by the undersigned is contained in power of attorney heretofore filed with your office.

Respectfully,

Dear Mr. Polk:

In order that you may have definite authorization from this Company to proceed in connection with the pending controversy as to Federal income taxes for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944, as to which you hold power of attorney, I have today conferred with all available directors. All of the directors I have been able to reach, constituting a majority of the directors, have concurred in the proposal that you submit in writing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a definite proposal that the three years 1942, 1943 and 1944 be settled on the basis of no refund and no additional tax.

We understand that the year 1944 is involved in this controversy, so far as this Company is concerned, only during the period of affiliation, that is, through April 30, 1944, and that for the balance of the year 1944 the taxes of this Company will be determined on the basis of its separate return for that peroid outside the affiliation.

This authorization will be formally ratified at a meeting of the Board of Directors to be held early in March, 1947.

Mr. James K. Polk,
c/o Whitman, Ransom, Coulson and Goetz,
40 Wall Street,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Polk:

I am enclosing copy of a computation I have made for an estimate of the year 1943 Federal income and excess profits taxes for the consolidated group for the purpose of arriving at a figure to base our estimated tax accruals upon for the remainder of the current year. Will you be so kind as to have this computation check up and let me know, as soon as you conveniently can, whether there is anything about the principle or fixed figures I have used which is wrong.

The figures shown for "Taxable Net Income" are, of course, purely estimates but they appear conservative at the present time. However, there are many elements which may affect them to a more or less degree so they will be subject to revisions, either up or down, before we close our accounts for the year and whatever changes we find necessary there will correspondingly affect our tax accruals.

Yours truly,

/s/ D. C. DeGRAFF,
General Auditor.

Dear Mr. Coulson:

In addition to the statements heretofore sent you showing income available under the Reorganization Plan set-up for past years, I am enclosing herewith ten (10) copies of an estimate of similar income for the current year. Revised recapitulation sheets are also enclosed.

Please note that these statements are on the basis of estimated federal taxes in the amount of $8,274,000 which have been calculated as set forth in detail on a statement submitted by Mr. DeGraff to Mr. Polk by letter dated November 8th, 1943. Also note that, in the absence of information as to how or when recently granted wage increases for "non-operating" groups will be applied, we have made no attempt to compensate our 1943 estimate for such expense.

Very truly yours,

/s/ CHARLES ELSEY.

Notes

Income Taxes: As of this date, The System Railroad Companies, as constituted during 1943, expect to accrue estimated Federal Income taxes of $6,931,000 and estimated Excess Profits taxes of $1,343,000 or a total of $8,274,000. All income figures on the above statement are after such accruals.

Wages: No accounting in above figures for wage increases which may be authorized or for Land Grant rate reserves or maintenance reserves.

Note A: If any changes are made in original Plan total amount of $21,219,075 face value of Income Bonds as finally issued to Railroad Credit Corporation, all amounts marked "A" will be modified. The original unpaid interest claim of the R.C.C. ($146,503) has been materially reduced each year by credits from the Marshalling and Distributing Plan and other payments. These payments will effect reductions in amounts of securities finally issued to Railroad Credit Corporation and affect the totals of certain securities issued under the Plan. (See I.C.C. Plan—Section P-4.)

Note B: Based on amount of $20,887,888 for value of Income Bonds outstanding January 1, 1943, as it would be after purchases of $316,673 face value of such bonds by Sinking Fund of 1940-1941-1942 and $14,514 face value of such bonds purchased from "interest" at 4½% on an amount equal to face value of all bonds retired by Sinking Fund operations of years prior to 1943.

Note C: Net interest paid on outstanding Trustees' Certificates after crediting 4% on amount of $6,000,000 cash collateral on deposit with Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 3

New York, February 5, 1935.

Mr. Schumacher:

In re the Corporation's situation in connection with proposed recapitalization of The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company and the Western Pacific Railroad Company:

We have prepared a statement showing new set-up of assets of the Corporation, if and when the present proposals for readjustments of the two companies mentioned become effective. There are two statements herewith:

(1) Securities Assignable by Proposed Readjustment of Capitalization of the Western Pacific Railroad Company and The Rio Grande Western Railroad Company in Exchange for Existing Securities Owned and List of Other Assets Owned Remaining Undisturbed.

(2) Schedule of Securities Owned if Proposed Readjustment of Capitalization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company and The

Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company is effected.

The income to the Corporation, which, as you know is entirely from interest received from securities owned, will be very materially reduced, as you will note from Statement #2. The income from the first mortgage bonds received in exchange for certain of the Corporation securities on the basis proposed would amount to approximately $190,000. However, the income will, no doubt, be increased through income derived from income bonds in the contingent class. I believe it is safe to assume we would get some return from the Incomes, inasmuch as the annual fixed interest set up for both companies based on their net income, even in the poorest year, 1932, was earned. The years '33 and '34 had net income more than sufficient to take care of the proposed First Mortgage Bonds and if business conditions continue to show an upward trend, there should be earnings applicable to the income bonds.

We must also not overlook the fact that the Corporation's loans with The Chase National Bank, Curtiss Southwestern Company and Central Hanover Bank amount to $9,299,850. The interest per annum on these amounts to approximately $467,000 being 5% of The Chase and Curtiss and 4½% on the Central Hanover. In addition, our general expenses including taxes, salaries, transfer and registry fees, and office expenses, amount to approximately $60,000 per year. This is a total of approximately $527,000 per annum covering general expenses and interest on loans.

From the above it will be seen that we will be considerably short of our requirements for meeting this overhead.

As I see it from a Corporation viewpoint, if we are to carry on, we should endeavor to get our creditors to declare a moratorium on interest payments for possibly two years with the understanding that, if there is income applicable to payment of such interest, it will be paid.

An Agreement on the part of the said creditors to reduce the interest on their loans to 2½% would not see us through as the charge would be in excess of our receipts.

Another thing in connection with this is that under the Railroad Company's proposal Preferred Stock of the operating company is to be distributed to First Mortgage Bondholders as a bonus in the proportions of 25% of principal amount of First Mortgage Bonds held and 100% of 1934 deferred interest on such bonds. As all of this stock, as well as the common, is owned by the Corporation, if such an arrangement is affected, it will be necessary to call special meeting of stockholders to approve it.

M. J. CURRY.

Memorandum

September 15, 1938

Mr. Schumacher:

Re: Cash Condition of the Corporation.

Referring to our several discussions recently on the above subject.

Have given serious thought to question of economies that may be effected in connection with operations of the Corporation for the year 1939, and, as a result of such study, I would recommend, for one thing, consideration be given to taking over in this office from the Chase Bank, the work of handling transfer of our stock and incidental services in connection therewith.

Attached is a statement showing cost of services of the Chase National Bank as Stock Transfer Agent for the years of 1926-1937 inclusive.

You will note the total cost over the period covered was $72,522.39, an average per annum of $6,043.55.

Of this amount, there are certain charges, such as stationery, printing, binding and postage, upon which no savings can be effected. These items amounted to $6,436.11 for the period, a per annum average of $536.34.

Deducting these charges leaves a net amount of possible net savings if the work is handled in this office of approximately $5500 per annum.

I am satisfied, after discussing this with Mr. Andrews, that he, with the assistance of our other employees, can take on this work and handle it efficiently and expeditiously. If we employed Hatton to do this, in addition to his services as transfer agent for the Denver, it would mean, we would have to place him on some salary with the Corporation, which would have the effect of further reducing the possible savings mentioned above.

If it is decided to do the work in this office, the cost of necessary equipment such as, bookkeeping records, addressograph, file cabinets, etc. cannot be estimated, as we have hesitated to go into the subject with the officer of the Chase Bank who is in charge of our transfer work. If you feel we should contact him to ascertain all facts in connection with this proposal, we will do so. This, of course, would give them advance notice we are contemplating taking the work away from them. Whether or not this would affect our status with the Chase Bank is a question. That is the reason I have hesitated to approach them on the subject, as yet.

I find, the Corporation's By-Laws, under Section 2, Article 5, Capital Stock, it provides:

"The Board of Directors or Executive Committee may provide for registration and transfer of the Capital Stock of the Corporation of both classes in the City of New York, and in such other places within or without the United States as they may deem advisable and, for such purpose, may appoint the necessary registrars and transfer agents (who may be either Corporation or individuals), and other officers. * * *"

Under the above recited provision, the Board or the Executive Committee can designate who the transfer agent may be. As I understand it, if it is decided we should take this over, we would simply have to notify the Chase Bank, and the Board could designate its office in New York as the Transfer Office.

Another item on which I am certain we can effect a saving, is rental. Our present lease expires May 1, 1939. We are now paying $7,000 per annum, for approximately 2500 sq. ft., over $3.00 per foot. In the first place, for our purposes, we do not require that amount of space. I feel that an arrangement can be made with the Chase Bank or for space in some other building in this vicinity, on a basis of $2.00 a foot, for approximately 2,000 sq. ft. or $4,000 annual rental, which would be a reduction of $3,000 from the present rental.

As a matter of information, we have four employees on our Corporation payroll receiving salaries as follows:

	Per Month	Per Annum
Secretary to President	$187.50	$2,250.00
Clerk-Accountant	216.66	2,600.00
Stenographer	67.50	810.00
Telephone Operator	55.00	660.00
	$526.66	$6,320.00

Assuming we take over the transfer work and that we will be successful in arranging for sufficient office space at a lesser cost, these two items will result in approximate saving of $8500 per year.

We are, and have been, for several years, very watchful of the expense of operation of this office, and, in my opinion, it has been kept to the minimum. This, of course, we will continue to do and should any other means of further reducing the cost be discovered, we will take advantage of it.

Another means of reducing the cost of operations is to endeavor to get the Operating Company to bear a larger proportion of the salaries paid to our employees. The division of the total salaries paid at present is approximately 52% by the Corporation and 48% by the Company. These percentages, in my opinion, should be changed, for the reason that a greater portion of time and labor by such employees is being given to Railroad Company matters. We feel the proper division should be 75% Company and 25% Corporation. As you will note from statement above of salaries paid, the total for four employees is $6320.00 per annum, which, I am sure you will agree, is not comparable to salaries paid generally in other Railroad offices for similar work.

Consideration should also be given to the Railroad Company paying a greater share of the rental. I would suggest it be divided in the same manner as suggested for the salaries, that is, 25% by the Corporation and 75% by the Company.

I will discuss with you further at your convenience.

M. J. CURRY.

I don't believe it is worth while to withhold payment of these bills as the amount is only $972. However, I should like to have your advice.

If paid, it will leave balance in Chase of $2,500.60.

In re subject attached letter from Col. Coulson:

As you know, this question has been in our minds for a long time and, at meeting of the Board several months ago, I mentioned it to Mr. Olyphant of the Central Hanover, and handed him a statement (copy attached) showing allocation of new securities, under the approved ICC reorganization plans for the Western Pacific and the D&RGW, in lieu of securities now pledged under loan with his bank, which he said he would be glad to study and, later on, discuss the matter of possible release of the $11,248 pledged cash. iary), the entire stock of which is pledged under loan with the Curtiss Southwestern Company—the latter company having consented to such borrowing in each instance; that it seemed to me the Central Hanover loan was in far better shape collaterally than those with the Chase Bank and the Curtiss Southwestern Company and I felt that under all the circumstances the Central Hanover could very well release the cash to the Corporation, to enable it to meet its current operating expenses.

I have heard nothing further from him, neither have I broached the subject since, my thought being that at the first meeting of our Board I would again take it up with him.

In view of Mr. Coulson's suggestion, however, perhaps we should take it up formally, by letter. Will discuss this with you at your convenience.

Memorandum

New York, September 20, 1938.

Mr. Schumacher:

Referring to my memorandum September 15th re cash condition of the Corporation and comments therein, relative Railroad Company bearing a larger share of salaries of our joint employees:

Your salary, as Trustee and Chairman of the Executive Committee, being fixed by the Court at $15,000 per annum cannot be changed. All others employed in this office (with one exception mentioned below), including myself, are on the payrolls of the Company and the Corporation.

Mr. James, Chairman of the Board, is on Company payroll at $5,000 per annum, nothing from the Corporation.

Pierce & Greer, Counsel, are on the payrolls for $10,000 per annum divided 50/50 between the Corporation and Company.

We have one employee, Miss O'Neill, on Company payroll at $1,560 per annum, does not receive any salary from the Corporation.

In line with recommendation in memo referred to, I show below the names, salaries paid by Company and Corporation at present, what they would amount to if divided on basis of 75% Company and 25% Corporation, and the totals. It will be noted the salaries paid now by the Company amount to $10,700 per annum, whereas, under arrangement suggested this would be increased to $16,815, a net increase in the Company payroll of $6,115 per annum.

I cannot help feeling that under the conditions existing at the present time which will, no doubt, continue through 1939 and possibly beyond that, the division of these salaries on basis suggested is justified. If you agree, it might be well to take the question up with Mr. Ehrman to ascertain if he is willing to join you in instructing Mr. Elsey to arrange accordingly.

Memorandum

New York, September 21, 1938.

Mr. Schumacher:

Your memorandum attached:

As a partial offset to proposed increase in Company payroll of $6,115 per annum, we feel certain a saving can be effected beginning May 1, 1939, in our rental. Our present lease with the Chase Bank is on basis $7,000 per annum divided 50/50 between Corporation and Company. We have approximately 2500 sq. ft. of space, more than we actually need. When question of renewal comes up it is my purpose to request reduction in rental to approximately $4,000 per annum; failing in that we can, no doubt, secure desirable and adequate space in some other building at that rental. If proposed basis of dividing rental is arranged, that is, 75% to be paid by the Company and 25% by the Corporation, this change in rental will result in a saving of $3,000, or $2,500 to the Corporation and $500 to the Company, over what it is costing at the present time. Applying this saving to the proposed increase in payroll of $6,115 per annum, would result in a net total increase in cost of operation of this office of $5,615 per annum.

So far as effecting any savings in our general expenses is concerned, I don't believe anything more can be done as we are now and have been for several years watching these expenses closely and have brought them down to the minimum.

Below is a recapitulation of expenses for 8 months of this year, January 1 - August 31, 1938, inclusive:

		% of Total
Salaries of officers and clerks	$24,522.97	78.08
Travelling expenses	2,306.04	7.34
Stationery and printing	107.06	.34
Transfer and registry	1,194.38	3.80
Fees—Executive Committee meetings	60.00	.19
General expenses	437.12	1.39
Rent	2,333.36	7.44
Miscellaneous	445.66	1.42
Total	$31,406.59	100.00

An average of approximately $4,000 per month.

As will be seen from the above—outside of salaries, rent, transfer and registry charges and travelling expenses, our "general and miscellaneous expense" amounts to approximately $130 per month.

Included in item "General and miscellaneous expense" are the following charges: telephone, telegraph, stationery, printing, Executive Committee fees, postage, subscriptions (Official Guide, Standard Statistics service, Poor's Railroad Manual, Moody's Industrial Manual and other railway publications), etc.

Transfer and registry charges cover services of the Chase Bank and Central Hanover Bank in connection with payment of interest on our outstanding Trustees' and Equipment Trust Certificates.

It is my understanding that while the Company is undergoing reorganization, in order to avoid possibility of some creditor stepping in and taking any funds that might be on deposit here in New York to the credit of the Railroad Company, it was decided to designate these banks as the Paying Agents on the certificates. The same situation exists so far as the D&RGW is concerned. The Trustees have designated the Chase Bank as the Paying Agent on their certificates rather than the office of Hatton, Assistant Secretary and Assistant Treasurer.

When the first issue of $3,000,000 Trustees' Certificates was sold, question of payment of the principal and interest at maturity was the subject of correspondence between you and Mr. Ehrman. In Mr. Ehrman's letter to you of November 12, 1936, he stated:

"In this connection, we will also have to make arrangements for the payment of outstanding certificates when they come in on January 2nd. I doubt whether we have the facilities at the office to take care of this and would suggest that it be put in the hands of some bank or trust company to whom we could refer certificate holders who present the certificates for payment."

In your reply to Mr. Ehrman, you stated:

"* * *, as the major amount of such certificates are held here in the east, it might be desirable to have them presented to The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, as Agent, for payment and they in turn can handle with the Crocker Bank. * * * " poration, it will result in an increase in the Company's New York Office payroll of $4,247 per annum.

If reduction in rental can be effected, as suggested, this would result in a saving in this item, on basis percentages above-mentioned, of $834, making a total increase to be assumed by the Company of $3,413 per annum.

DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 4B

January 14, 1941.

Mr. Robert E. Coulson
40 Wall Street
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Coulson:

I have your letter of the 10th instant, suggesting some investigation be made of the status of the cash which this Corporation has on deposit in the Central Hanover Bank, pledged to secure, in part, our loan, before further advance from the Western Realty Company to the Corporation is made.

The principal of the demand note of this Corporation held by the Central Hanover Bank & Trust Company, dated May 25, 1932, is $635,000. Interest rate was originally 5%; however, as of February 1, 1935, the rate was reduced to 4½%. This was brought about through conference our Treasurer, Mr. Curry, had with Mr. Olyphant, Vice President of Central Hanover, and in accordance with resolution adopted at meeting of Board of Directors on January 10, 1935, which resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, that the Directors of the Corporation are of the opinion that it is for the best interest of the Corporation to have $40,000 of said deposit of $51,248.86 applied by the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company in part-payment of said loan of $675,000 and the officers are directed to use their best efforts to induce said bank to make application of said amount and to also endeavor to secure a reduction of 1% in the present rate of 5% for said loan."

Our records indicate that at the aforementioned conference Mr. Olyphant inquired if we had approached our other two creditors (Chase Bank and Curtiss Southwestern) with like request, and statement was made that we had not, for the reason that their loans were not as well collaterated as the Central Hanover loan and that therefore a reduction from the 5% rate would seem to be fair and reasonable.

The question you raise has been in our minds for a long time and, at a meeting of the Board, several months ago, Mr. Curry mentioned it to Mr. Olyphant and handed him a statement (copy attached, revised to December 31, 1940); showing allocation of new securities under the approved ICC reorganization plans for the Western Pacific and the D&RGW in lieu of securities now pledged with Central Hanover. Mr. Olyphant stated he would be very glad to study it and, later on, discuss with us the matter of possible release of the $11,248 pledged cash. It was pointed out to him that the Corporation had been carrying on, during the past several years, through borrowing funds from the Western Realty Company, the entire stock of which is pledged under loan with Curtiss Southwestern Company—that company having consented to such borrowing in each instance; that it seemed to us the Central Hanover loan was in much better shape collaterally than those of the other two cerditors and we felt, under all the circumstances, the Central Hanover should be willing to release the cash to the Corporation to help meet current operating expenses.

However, the question has not been pursued further for the reason we have felt the Central Hanover had a right to hold this cash as part collateral under the loan, which has been in default since January, 1934. Aside from this, it is my judgment it is not opportune at this time to take this up with Central Hanover, as I feel they would turn it down, and I prefer to allow it to remain "as is" until actual necessity arises, when the Western Realty Company's cash resources may not be sufficient to permit of further loans to the Corporation.

Yours very truly,

(For Identification Only)

August 7, 1941

Mr. T. M. Schumacher,
The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation,
37 Wall Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Schumacher:

Since 1936 there has been advanced to The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation something over $200,000 by the Western Realty Company. The stock of the Western Realty Company is all held by Curtiss Southwestern Company as collateral for an under-collateralized loan which is in default. The advances have been made possible by formal consents given by the Curtiss Southwestern Company to such advances. During the lifetime of Mr. James these advances represented no problem in view of the ownership of the Curtiss Southwestern Company. Today all the stock in Curtiss Southwestern Company is held by the executors under the wills of Mr. James and of Mrs. James.

We have given consideration to the question whether we could properly advise the executors to consent to the continuance of such advances. We find no basis upon which we may properly give such advice.

As you know, Curtiss Southwestern Company is one of three secured creditors of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, the other two being The Chase National Bank of the City of New York and the Central Hanover Trust Company. It is possible that some plan could be worked out for cooperation between the three secured creditors in providing The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation with needed funds on the basis of which some favorable recommendation might be made to the executors of the James' estates. We suggest that you get in touch with the other secured creditors as promptly as you can and obtain their views as to the situation.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ ROBERT E. COULSON.

Dear Mr. Campbell:

The enclosed copies of letters from Tri-Continental Corporation, this city, explain themselves.

Will you please advise as to nature of reply that should be made.

In this connection, I refer you to your letter dated May 21, 1942, to Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery (copy to me) having reference to question of whether this Corporation is subject to New York State franchise tax. The opinion expressed therein, it seems to me, may also serve as an answer to the inquiry from Tri-Continental.

DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 5B

Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz
40 Wall Street, New York

May 18, 1944

Mr. M. J. Curry, Vice President,
Western Pacific Railroad Company,
37 Wall Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

You have inquired as to the possible liability of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation for future franchise taxes in the State of New York in view of the prospective changes to be occasioned by the reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company and the transfer of the capital stock of the Railroad Company to the Reorganization Committee.

We understand that you have heretofore been advised by counsel that your corporation was not subject to any State franchise taxes under then existing laws and decisions, in the light of its activities in New York State.

However, since such advice was given, the New York State franchise tax laws have been substantially changed by enactments at the 1944 Session of the Legislature, and, in particular, by Chapter 415 of the Laws of 1944, effective March 31, 1944.

From the present point of view of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, the most significant change effected by Chapter 415 of the Laws of 1944 is a new definition of "doing business" in New York State, for purposes of franchise taxation. Prior to the enactment of Chapter 415 of the Laws of 1944, the provision under which The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation was deemed not to be doing business in the State for franchise tax purposes (Subdivision 6, Section 188, Tax Law) read as follows:

> "The holding of real property in this state by a foreign corporation shall be deemed to be doing business in this state within the meaning of this article, but a foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be doing business in this state, for the purposes of this article, solely by reason of (a) having office furniture and fixtures in this state, or (b) the maintenance of cash balances with banks or trust companies in this state, or (c) the ownership of shares of stock or securities kept in this state, if pledged as collateral security, or, if deposited with one or more banks or trust companies, or with brokers, who are members of a recognized security exchange, in safekeeping or custody accounts, or (d) the taking of any action by any such bank or trust company or broker, which is incidental to the rendering of safekeeping or custodian service to such corporation, or (e) any combination of the foregoing activities."

The provision in the new franchise tax laws (Tax Law, Section 209 (4)) which replaces Section 188, subdivision 6, reenacts substantially the above-quoted provision except that the words which we have underscored above were omitted in the new enactment. The omission of clause (a) "having office furniture and fixtures in this state" was undoubtedly intended to bring under the provisions of the New York statute all foreign corporations maintaining offices of their own in the State of New York, and we would anticipate that the maintenance of an office by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation in the State of New York, after the effective date of the new statute for such purposes, would subject the Corporation to New York State franchise taxes.

Although the new law was effective as of March 31, 1944, under its provisions a company, theretofore deemed not to be doing business in New York State under the prior law, but deemed to be doing business in New York State under the provisions of the new law, would not incur liability for tax prior to the tax period commencing November 1, 1944. The President of the Tax Commission stated the position of the Tax Commission as follows: (Paragraph 13,028-B, Prentice-Hall, State and Local Tax Service):

> "* * * For example, a corporation on the calendar year basis which would be deemed to have commenced doing business in the state on the effective date of the new law would not incur liability for tax under the new law unless it continued doing business in the state after October 31, 1944 * * *"

It is our opinion that, if The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation continues to maintain an office in New York State and continues its business activities as heretofore, after October 31, 1944, it will thereby subject itself to the provisions of the New York State franchise tax laws.

If you have any other questions in connection with these problems, we should be glad to advise you.

Very truly yours,

WHITMAN, RANSOM,
COULSON & GOETZ.

Dear Mr. Curry:

This will serve as a tardy acknowledgment of your letter to me of May 23, 1944, enclosing opinion from Messrs. Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, in respect of the recently enacted New York State franchise tax.

I understand that this tax liability does not begin to accrue until November 1, 1944, by which time we are hopeful of disposing of our controversy with Mr. Buckland. In any event I think it will be necessary to make this payment in order to enable The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation to function at least through the present calendar year.

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

Referring to our exchange of letters in May and June, last, in re. New York State Franchise tax:

As this tax will begin to accrue as of November 1, 1944, and the first report is due May 15, 1945, and the tax shown by such report is payable one-half at time of filing report and one-half on or before the succeeding November 15th, I am again calling it to your attention with request for advice as to what can be done to avoid payment, in view of conditions surrounding the Corporation at this time.

Do you feel it would be desirable to address a letter to Mr. Rollin Browne, State Tax Commissioner, at Albany, stating the facts, and request a waiver of the obligation under the new law in behalf of the Corporation? If you do, will you please let me have draft of such a letter.

Dear Mr. Curry:

Mr. Nicodemus asked me to reply to your letter of October 5, 1944, with reference to the applicability to the Corporation of the franchise tax on business corporations imposed by Article 9-A of the

New York Tax Law, as amended by Chapter 415 of the Laws of 1944, effective March 31, 1944.

Inasmuch as the tax thereby imposed does not begin to accrue until November 1, 1944, and the first return required to be made by the Corporation will not be due until May 15, 1945, it is our thought that it would not be profitable to do anything in the matter until shortly before the date for the filing of the return, at which time the Corporation will be in a position to deal with the matter in the light of such developments as may hereafter occur.

Dear Sirs:

During the year 1944 the undersigned or certain of its associated companies were the beneficial owners of securities of your corporation. In the preparation of our New York State Franchise Tax report we are required to apportion the value of such securities in accordance with the percentage of the entire capital or the issued capital stock of your corporation allocable to New York State as determined on your New York tax report for the preceding tax year.

Accordingly, we should appreciate your advising us of the percentage, if any, of the entire capital or the issued capital stock of your corporation allocated to New York State on the New York State Franchise Tax report, if any, filed by your corporation during the year 1944. It will answer our purpose, if you merely fill in such information at the bottom of this letter, or indicate that you do not file New York State Franchise Tax reports.

We shall appreciate an early reply.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of January 8, addressed to Mr. T. M. Schumacher, Trustee, has been turned over to the undersigned for reply.

As The Western Pacific Railroad Company is included in the consolidated income and excess profits tax returns filed by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation (parent company), we show below estimated consolidated figures, of which the Company's Pre-Tax Net Income is $10,290,278:

Pre-Tax Net Income	$9,501,492
Less Net Operating Loss Carry-over	1,217,213
	$8,284,279
Add Eliminations	1,575,727
	$9,860,006
Normal & Surtax (42%)	$4,141,202
Western Pacific Railroad Company's apportionment of tax	$4,078,794
Less accrued 1941	384,800
Accrued in 1942—Estimated	$3,693,994

No provision has been made for accrual of excess profits tax since it appears whatever excess profits net income there may be will be more than offset by the excess profits credit and the unused profits credit carryover.

It will be appreciated if you will treat the above information confidentially.

Mr. M. J. Curry,
Vice President,

Dear Mr. Curry:

On May 15, there were filed at the Office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, Custom House, New York, the Federal income, excess profits tax and declared value excess profits tax returns for the Western Pacific Railroad Company and its affiliated corporations. The items entering into the preparation of these returns were reviewed by us and on the basis of the information available, it is believed that the returns as filed met all of the conditions of the Internal Revenue Code and Bureau regulations in respect of the substantive matter contained therein and of supporting schedules.

It is believed, however, that a considerable amount of supporting detail and underlying data must be prepared in order that the figures set forth in the return can be supported upon subsequent Bureau audit. While it is true that much of this underlying detail will relate to the earnings and profits determination which, in turn, will probably have little effect upon invested capital, it is believed, however, desirable that the research be carried through in order that the position we assert in the returns may be hedged against the adverse implications of possible distributions out of capital which may have occurred up to the date of the last dividend payment in 1927. Further, we have used in the returns, book costs as bases for the affiliated corporation's stock investments which again may require adjustments, possible of determination only after such analyses.

It is also believed desirable to have a more complete review made of the computation of the unused excess profits credit adjustment. In the return as filed, it was assumed that the invested capital base for the years 1940 and 1941 was substantially the same as for the taxable year 1942. Undoubtedly, changes will be indicated when the schedules for borrowed invested capital and inadmissible adjustments for 1940 and 1941 have been prepared in detail. This adjustment will, in all probability, have no effect upon the 1942 tax return but will afford a more proper basis for administrative consideration of tax matters for 1943 and subsequent years.

It is further noted that a historical development of the profit and loss accounts of the several companies, not only as disclosed in their books, but as set forth in the reconciliations reported in prior Federal income tax returns, will bring to light any

Both in connection with the review of the deductions claimed for depreciation and the amounts shown for fixed capital investment returns, it will be helpful to review the significant tax positions adopted by the company and accepted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the audits by the Bureau of Internal Revenue of prior year income tax returns. While not estopped by prior considerations and decisions, the Bureau may be disinclined to depart from previous determinations of basis of fixed capital investments as shown by treatment in computing depreciation deductions and in computing gains and losses upon the disposition of assets.

It may also be noted that it is clearly demonstrable that the consolidated return basis of reporting for the year 1942 as contrasted with a separate basis of reporting, was advantageous to the group. Since consolidated returns were filed for 1940 and 1941, any unused excess profits credit inhered in the common parent corporation, had separate returns been filed for 1942. A preliminary survey of the smaller affiliates indicates that they would have incurred no excess profits tax liability. The operating company, however, if placed on a separate basis without the benefit of the credit carryovers, would have been liable for a net excess profits tax liability of $3,650,000 even if all other figures as shown in the return were left unchanged. This amount is offset by several factors. In the first place, on an individual basis, the operating companies' interest on expense deductions would have increased $703,000. It would have lost, however, its allocable share of the net operating loss reduction of approximately $438,000. Further, a portion of its earnings subject to excess profits tax rates would have been eliminated from normal tax rates. There would have been in addition, a reduction in the surtax rate on a separate basis of the 2% penalty for filing a consolidated return, which would have amounted to approximately $200,000 in tax. All of these factors combine to establish a net tax advantage of in excess of $1,550,000 in the adoption of the consolidated return under the separate return.

There is a further possibility of adjustment under the Internal Revenue Code provisions contained in Sections 23 (g) (4) and (k) (5) by which the worthlessness of the operating company's stock may produce a net loss for the year 1943 with possible carryback application. This is commented upon rather than suggested as of certain value, since it is paradoxical to compute a loss upon the operating company's stock which, through the mechanics of consolidated return reporting, could be used to nullify the very income of the affiliate whose stock had become worthless. This matter will receive more careful consideration when the completion of the reorganization makes possible the assertion of the claim for worthlessness of the operating company's stock.

Apart from the 1942 tax liability, we are informed that a request has been addressed to the company for the submission of basic data to be considered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with the application made under date of March 29, 1943 for permission to change the method of accounting from retirement to a depreciation basis for Federal income tax purposes. Under general procedures adopted in the Bureau, the permission to change the basis of accounting is premised upon the agreement of the applicant to adoption of accumulated depreciation reserve balances which, at the election of the company, may be determined by any one of the following methods:

1. The accounts may be reconstructed from their beginning, or may start with the I.C.C. valuation, setting up as a reserve the difference between cost of reproduction new and cost of reproduction less accrued depreciation as determined at the valuation date. From either starting point, the capital accounts shall be carried forward, increased by additions and decreased by retirements, except that any increase in replacement costs, or additions or betterments expensed, which have been deducted for income tax purposes, may not be restored. Depreciа-

tion at rates to be agreed upon shall be computed for all years and accrued into a depreciation reserve. From this reserve shall be deducted the cost of normal retirements, but for retirements due to casualty or special obsolescence, which would have been allowable under depreciation accounting, only the accrued depreciation thereon shall be deducted.

2. A reserve may be set up by multiplying the expired life of individual structures, or the weighted average ages of the accounts representing groups of assets, now in service, by the depreciation rates agreed upon for these assets.

3. A reserve of 30% of the total depreciable accounts at the date of change may be set up. It is to be understood that this is on overall reserve and the total amount so computed is to be allocated to the different depreciable accounts on a reasonable basis, such allocation to be a matter of agreement between each railroad and the Bureau.

We are familiar with the requirements of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with depreciation computations generally embodied in the Valuation Division questionnaire, the provisions of T.D. 4422 and related Bureau rulings, and have discussed the railroad situation with the Bureau of Internal Revenue officials to whom these matters are assigned. It will, undoubtedly, be necessary to complete preliminary computations under the elective methods prescribed, and to compare the possible annual benefits of depreciated accounting with the retirement basis heretofore followed, before administrative action can be taken to complete the application for permission to change accounting basis filed with the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

We will be glad to confer with your company officials in planning these preliminary surveys so, if possible, to minimize the work required and will be glad to make available to you the benefit of our experience in the assembly and presentation of data to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, if you elect to take advantage of the depreciation basis of tax accounting for 1943.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

The attached copy of letter dated Feb. 4, 1944, from the office of the Attorney General, State of Delaware, is self-explanatory.

The 1941 Franchise tax which you will recall was reduced by the State Tax Board early last year as a result of negotiations, will amount to $1350.90 ($1262.50 principal and $88.40 penalty interest) on April 1, 1944. Payment should be made on or before that date if forfeiture of the Corporation's charter is to be avoided.

In view of conditions confronting the Corporation, filing of consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns, etc., I should like to have your advice as to whether payment of the 1941 tax should be made on or before April 1st.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

[Marginal Note]: Mr. Campbell discussed this with Me and agreed we should request extension to July 1, 1944.

Mr. Sidney M. Ehrman,
Nevada Bank Building,
San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mr. Ehrman:

Referring to our telephone conversation last evening:

This morning I have looked up our records to see just what the expense of making up the consolidated tax returns in our office and the tax savings effected has been since The Western Pacific Railroad Company went into trusteeship.

First of all, the certified public accountants, Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, were employed by the "Corporation" from year to year to audit the accounts pursuant to provisions of the Securities and Exchange Act. Their charge for this audit has averaged approximately $1,000 a year. For the past two years we have consulted them on excess profits tax on a consolidated basis and their charge for this was $150 in 1940 and $400 in 1941, which was paid by the Corporation.

This work has all been done in this office and consolidated tax returns have been prepared and filed under Mr. Curry's supervision. I might add that during the years the Company has been in trusteeship, payment of income taxes for the consolidated group was nil because of the large consolidated deficits. In fact, the Tidewater Southern, which made a profit every year and was included in the returns, benefited by these deficits which effected a tax saving to it of approximately $116,000 for the six year period. During that period expert advice from counsel was not necessary.

However, commencing with 1942, the situation has changed considerably because the affiliated companies' earnings have greatly increased. For this reason and in view of the new complicated tax law, we now require the advice of competent tax attorneys.

For your further information, I find that the last payment of consolidated income tax was made in 1929. At that time there was a net consolidated taxable income of $365,000, on which the income tax amounted to $40,230.

Yours very truly,

/s/ T. M. SCHUMACHER.

ORDER AUTHORIZING ESTABLISHMENT OF A RESERVE FUND FOR CONTINGENT TAX LIABILITIES

The petition filed February 21, 1944, by T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, the Trustees of the properties of the Debtor above named, for authority to establish a reserve fund of $7,100,000 for contingent tax liabilities, came on duly to be heard and was heard this day and thereupon submitted. Good cause appearing therefor, the Court, being fully advised, finds that notice of the hearing upon said petition has been given as prescribed by the order of this Court, that all of the averments of said petition are true, and that it is for the best interests of the estate of the Debtor that this order be made.

Now, Therefore, It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the Trustees are hereby authorized to establish, with funds in their hands belonging to the estate of the Debtor and derived from the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943, a reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000, to be designated as the "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liabilities," to be invested in United States Treasury securities, and to be used for the payment of any Federal income and excess profits taxes which may be found due for the year 1943.

Gentlemen:

It has occurred to us as holder of Western Pacific 5s due 1946 that the large tax credit in the earnings statement for December 1943 of the Western Pacific could take place annually for some years to come, as long as the Revenue Act allows holding companies to consolidate their returns of subsidiaries for income tax purposes.

Since the ownership of the Western Pacific Railroad was declared valueless for 1943 we thought possibly this loss, which must involve upwards of $50,000,000, could be used as a tax credit for future years until the total loss is used.

We would appreciate hearing from you regarding this situation.

Very truly yours,

DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 14

September 12, 1944

Mr. Sidney M. Ehrman
Nevada Bank Building
San Francisco 4, California

My dear Mr. Ehrman:

From your letter to Mr. Schumacher which he was good enough to show me it seems evident that there is a lack of understanding in San Francisco of the nature and extent of the services rendered and being rendered by our firm as counsel for The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

They may be roughly placed in four general categories which I shall set out below in which seems to me to be the order of their importance.

First: Services rendered as counsel here for Mr. Schumacher, Trustee resident in New York, in respect of all matters of administration and operation with which he is specifically charged and as to which he requires day to day advice. These include his relations with the Association of American Railroads and with governmental authorities at Washington; negotiating, closing and renewing loans; attendance at meetings of member roads; and generally all matters for which he is jointly responsible as Trustee and wishes to consult and exchange views with counsel on the ground. My understanding is that he explained to Judge St. Sure at the outset the necessity of having such counsel and that Judge St. Sure acquiesced.

Second: Services rendered by New York counsel as a member of the Law Committee of the Association of American Railroads. The Law Committee is composed of selected counsel for the principal carriers and I have been a member for many years. Meetings are held alternately at New York and Chicago and ordinarily continue for two days. The docket rarely has less than twenty items, each of which is a problem of major importance to the railway industry. Through this source and through my membership in the Railway Conference which meets weekly in New York I have been in a position to keep Mr. Schumacher informed and keep myself informed as to what is going on in the railway industry that may affect our property. It would serve no useful purpose to review these various problems. They include, however, such matters as the dismemberment of the Pullman Company; the land grant problem; and the recent anti-trust suit in which you and Mr. Schumacher are named as defendants.

Third: Services rendered in the matter of Federal taxation. All tax returns for the Railroad Company and for the Trustees have been made from New York under advice of New York counsel. Owing to the heavily increased tax burden incident to the war economy, the complex Federal tax structure and the necessity of recurring conferences with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Treasury, the firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz on our advice were brought in a year or more ago as tax consultants. They are peculiarly well equipped to serve in that capacity. The responsibility of New York counsel for the Railroad Company has not, however, been limited to work under the existing tax laws but has required constant attention to proposed changes that might adversely affect our property. In the last Congress the so-called Johnson Bill was originally so drawn that it would deprive the Western Pacific of the invaluable carry-over and carry-back provisions of the present Act. Our firm prepared and submitted amendments tt protect the situation which Senator Johnson accepted. At the present time legislation is in process of incubation which unless the interests of the Western Pacific are guarded may prove equally embarrassing.

Four: Services rendered currently on routine matters. Included in this category are (a) attention to litigation in New York on loss and damage claims in which the Western Pacific is a participating carrier; (b) the corporate work for subsidiaries; (c) problems arising under our commitments to the New York Stock Exchange; (d) reports to governmental authorities; (e) problems under corporate mortgages; (f) correspondence with security holders in relation to their personal tax problems; and (g) a variety of matters of minor importance too numerous to classify but nevertheless being often tedious and exacting.

It is my best judgment that the allowance we are receiving currently from the trust estate is not even compensatory for the services rendered in the last category.

The question is not whether any part of our current allowance should be applied toward compensation as counsel for the Debtor in the reorganization proceedings—this would be inadmissible under the terms of the order of Court—but the real question is whether our firm should not in justice to ourselves apply at some future time for compensation for the services falling in categories First, Second and Third. As matters now stand these services have been rendered gratuitously.

It is less important, however, that our firm be justly compensated than it is that you and perhaps Judge St. Sure should have a broader understanding of what has been and is being done here in the interest of the Western Pacific property.

As Mr. Schumacher has advised you it is my purpose to attend the hearing which is set for September 25th. I cannot leave here earlier than September 21st but unless the Overland is late I expect to be on hand at the opening of the Court.

My best regards to you.

Yours very truly,

My dear Mr. Nicodemus:

I am in receipt of your letter of September 12th going into some detail in regard to the nature and extent of the services which are being rendered by you on behalf of The Western Pacific Railroad Company and its trustees. I wrote to Mr. Schumacher after you had filed your petition so that if both of us are called by the judge during the hearing on the subject of your compensation our testimony would be in harmony.

I have always been under the impression that the monthly compensation paid to your firm is the only compensation for which the trustees or the trust estate have incurred any liability. Your representation of the debtor company in the reorganization proceeding is, as I view it, a separate matter with which we as trustees are not concerned.

With kind regards,

Very truly yours,

DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT No. 22

In the District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of California, Southern Division

No. 26591-S

In the Matter of

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,

Debtor.

OPINION AND ORDER CONFIRMING THE APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES AS APPOINTED BY THE COURT AND RATIFIED BY THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The above proceeding was initiated on August 2, 1935, by the filing of a petition by the debtor representing that it was unable to meet its financial obligations as they became due and praying for the opportunity to effect a reorganization under the provisions of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

At the time the petition was filed the Bankruptcy Act made it optional with the Court either to allow the debtor to remain in possession of and to continue to operate its railroad and other properties during the pendency of the reorganization proceeding, or to appoint a trustee or trustees for that purpose.

It was represented to the Court that there was no occasion to appoint a trustee or trustees; that Mr.

Charles Elsey, a resident of this district and who maintained his office in San Francisco, was the President of the Company and in immediate charge of the debtor's railroad and properties; that he had been in the service of the Company for many years and was thoroughly familiar with its properties and its various problems; that he managed its affairs efficiently and economically; that he had not come into the service of the Company at the instance of any particular interest, nor did he represent any particular interest; that if no trustee were appointed, he would continue as President of the Company, to manage and operate its railroad and properties; and that he could be fully relied upon to do so faithfully and efficiently and in the interest of all parties concerned without distinction between them.

The Court inquired into the representations so made and examined Mr. Elsey under oath, and came to the opinion that the representations were true, that the control, operation and management of the debtor's properties could safely be left to him as the President of the debtor, and that no useful purpose would be served by the appointment of a trustee or trustees.

Because of this conclusion, the Court in its order approving the petition of the debtor as properly filed, refrained from appointing a trustee and authorized and directed the debtor to continue in the possession and operation of its properties. At the time the Court made this order it explicitly informed Mr. Elsey that the properties of the debtor were now in the custody of the Court and his primary obligation was to the Court and the Court relied upon him to see to it that the properties were properly and economically managed and operated, and received from Mr. Elsey his assurance that he so understood and would govern himself accordingly. Since that time the Court has had no reason to doubt the correctness of its opinion as to the truth of the representations made to it concerning Mr. Elsey, or its confidence in the assurances given by him.

Subsequently to the order referred to, the Bankruptcy Act was amended by Congress, making it mandatory upon the Court to appoint one or more trustees, and providing that if one who was connected with the debtor were appointed, there should also be appointed one who had no such connection, such appointment to be subject to confirmation by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Immediately upon such amendment being made, the Court proceeded, on formal hearing in the manner required by the Act, to appoint trustees for the property of this particular debtor. The Court desired that at least one trustee should be a person residing within the district, experienced in railroad management and familiar with the railroad of the particular debtor and in whom the Court had confidence. Such a person was Mr. Elsey.

The large creditors of the debtor and the controlling stockholding interest in it, requested the appointment of Mr. T. M. Schumacher, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the debtor, representing that he had conducted all negotiations looking to the formulation of a plan of reorganization. Mr. Schumacher has his residence and his office in New York. The Court was willing to accede to this request, provided there was also appointed as trustee one who resided and had his office in this district and could attend to the immediate management and operation of the property.

The selection of Mr. Elsey and Mr. Schumacher required the selection of a third trustee not connected with the debtor. As such trustee the Court selected Mr. Sidney M. Ehrman, a lawyer of large experience, in whose discernment, judgment and integrity it had full confidence.

For the reasons stated, the Court appointed three persons named. This appointment being made, the Interstate Commerce Commission was petitioned to ratify it. The Commission has now made its order ratifying the appointment of Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Ehrman, but declining to ratify that of Mr. Elsey.

It is evident that looking at the trustees as a unit, a board, as it were, the composition of the board without Mr. Elsey is very different from that which the Court contemplated. The Court conceives that the primary duty of the trustees is to manage and operate the railroad and other properties of the debtor while they are in the custody of the Court, and for this reason the Court desired that one of the trustees should be a person who could devote himself on the ground to the immediate and active management of the debtor's railroad and property. Neither Mr. Schumacher or Mr. Ehrman is in a position to do this. The Court has also some doubt as to the feasibility, or at least the efficiency, of an administration by two trustees, the concurrence of both of whom is necessay for any action taken, and one of whom resides in San Francisco and the other in New York.

The Court has the power to revoke the appointments already made and to make new appointments conforming to what it believes the necessities of the case require, such new appointments, of course, to be subject, in turn, to ratification by the Commission. That course, however, would cause considerable delay, which is to be avoided if possible, and the Court believes that the particular object it had in mind by the appointment of Mr. Elsey can be substantially accomplished by the trustees employing him as their agent to manage the railroad and properties of the debtor. The Court has consulted with Mr. Elsey, who has expressed his willingness to act in that capacity.

It Is Therefore Hereby Ordered:

1. That T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman be and the same are the trustees of the properties of the debtor, duly appointed by this Court and ratified by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

2. That each of said trustees shall forthwith and within ten (10) days from the date hereof execute and file with the Clerk of this Court a bond or bonds, with one or more sureties approved by the Clerk of this Court, for the benefit of whom it may concern, in the sum of $25,000, conditioned to the effect that he will well and truly perform the duties of his office and duly account for any moneys or properties which may come into his hands and abide by and perform all things which he shall be directed by the Court to do.

3. That said trustees be and they are hereby instructed and directed to engage Charles Elsey as their agent to operate and manage the railroad and properties of the debtor.

4. That said trustees shall have all the title and shall exercise, subject to the control of this Court and consistent with the provisions of amendatory Section 77 of Chapter VIII of the Acts of Congress relating to bankruptcy, all of the powers of trustees appointed pursuant to Section 44 of said Act; and, to the extent not inconsistent with said Section 77, the powers of a receiver in equity proceedings; and, subject to the control of this Court and the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission as provided by the Interstate Commerce Act as it now exists or may hereafter be amended, the power to conduct the business of the debtor, with authority to them to conduct such business to the extent they deem advisable in the name of the debtor and by its officers, agents, and employees.

5. That said trustees shall have all of the powers, rights, privileges, duties and obligations heretofore granted to or imposed upon the debtor by the order of this Court entered herein August 2, 1935, and any and all orders supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof; and each and all of the orders heretofore entered in this proceeding shall, except so far as the same are not inconsistent with the express provisions of this order, be of like force and effect with respect to the said trustees and the property of the debtor as though said trustees were therein specifically named in the place of the debtor, all of said orders being hereby incorporated in and made a part of this order by reference.

6. That this Court reserves full right and jurisdiction to make from time to time such additional orders herein as to the Court shall seem proper, as well as any orders amplifying, extending, limiting or otherwise modifying this order, and in all respects to regulate and control the conduct of said trustees.

The petition filed December 1, 1943, by Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, the Reorganization Committee designated to put into effect and carry out the plan of reorganization

The Court, being fully advised, finds that notice of the hearing upon said petition has been given as prescribed by the order of this Court dated December 1, 1943, that all of the averments of said petition are true, that the transfer and delivery by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation of the preferred and common stock of the debtor company to the Reorganization Committee is necessary for carrying out and making effective the plan of reorganzation of the debtor, and that it is for the best interests of the estate of the debtor that this order be made.

1. That the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, in order to carry out and make effective the plan of reorganization of the debtor, be and hereby is directed to assign, transfer and deliver or cause to be assigned, transferred and delivered to the Reorganization Committee or its nominee, all of the preferred and common stock of the debtor company; provided that such assignment, transfer and delivery

4. That the Reorganization Committee be and hereby is authorized to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission such applications for authority or approval as may be appropriate in providing for the payment of stock transfer taxes out of the debtor's estate in respect of the transfer of the pre-

estate for certain expenses incurred and to be incurred in connection with the proceedings and plan of reorganization by the Reorganization Committee, duly came on to be heard and was heard on the 16th day of October, 1944, and has been submitted.

The Court being fully advised in the premises, finds that due and proper notice of the hearing upon said petition in the form prescribed by the order of this Court dated and filed on the 29th day of September, 1944, has been admitted by all parties named in said order and that all of the allegations and representations contained in the petition are true. statements of expenditures, and for the advancement of funds to said Committee, which is set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the petition upon which this order is made, is appropriate and advisable and should be approved.

(c) That certain expenses heretofore incurred by the Reorganization Committee, in the aggregate amount of $3,144.00, the detail of which was submitted to the Court upon the hearing, were properly incurred and are within the scope of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, dated September 7, 1944.

Now, Therefore, It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed:

(1) That an allowance to be paid out of the debtor's estate for the actual and reasonable expenses incurred and to be incurred by the Reorganization Committee under the plan of reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, exclusive of fees and expenses of said Committee's counsel, is hereby made in the aggregate amount of $197,111.23, or so much thereof as may be required in carrying out the plan, of which the amount of $60,638.48, or so much thereof as may be required, is allowed for the contingent tax liability described in the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission of September 7, 1944, and the amount of $136,472.75, is allowed for all other expenses without limitation as to individual amounts with respect to component items, as described in said order; and hereby are directed to reimburse the Reorganization Committee and its officers and members out of the debtor's estate for certain expenditures heretofore incurred by them, in the aggregate amount of $3,144.00, the detail of which was submitted to the Court upon the hearing.

(3) That further payments of the actual and reasonable expenses of the Reorganization Committee (whether incurred before or after the date of this order) be made out of the debtor's estate by the Trustees thereof, so long as said Trustees are in control of the same, and thereafter by the reorganized company, by the following procedure:

(a) The Reorganization Committee shall approve bills or statements of expenditures by voucher or covering letter, as may be convenient, signed by the Chairman or Secretary of the Committee, and shall submit the same to the Treasurer for the Trustees of the debtor or of the reorganized company, as the case may be;

(b) The Auditor for the Trustees of the debtor or of the reorganized company, as the case may be, shall examine all such bills or statements and, if satisfied they are in order and that the items covered thereby are within the scope of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, dated September 7, 1944, shall approve them for payment, subject to the maximum limit of $136,472.75 contained in said order of said Commission, and said Treasurer shall then make payment of the same upon such approval by said Auditor;

(c) Said Auditor shall keep a separate and detailed account of all such bills and statements so honored and shall make reports thereof to the Court within a reasonable time after the close of each month in which any such bills or statements are honored;

(4) That funds for the payment of actual and reasonable expenses of the Reorganization Committee may be advanced to it, from time to time, out of the debtor's estate or by the reorganized company, as aforesaid, upon written request to said Treasurer, setting forth the purpose of such advances and signed by the chairman or secretary of said Committee. Said request shall be audited and reported to the Court by said Auditor under the procedure set forth in paragraph (3) of this order. Said Committee shall account to said Auditor, from time to time, for all advances and shall file with him all receipts or other evidences of expenditures paid from such advances, and shall return any unexpended portion thereof to said Treasurer.

(5) All such further payments and advances to the Reorganization Committee under the provisions of this order shall be subject to final approval and allowance by this Court, at such time or times and upon such showing as the Court may direct.

I.

A statement of account showing the cash receipts and disbursements of the Trustees for the period from January 1, 1944, through December 31, 1944, is attached hereto as Exhibit 1. The Trustees have filed periodically with the Clerk of the Court during the year 1944, copies of monthly reports giving operating results and general statistics of the administration of the property and also monthly general balance sheets. The total railway operating revenues for the entire year of 1944 rose to $52,849,946.71 from the previous high of $50,360,509.25 experienced during the preceding year, an increase of $2,489,437.46. A comparison of such revenues for each of the twelve months of the calendar year 1944, covered by this report, with each of the corresponding months of the calendar year 1943, is shown in the following tabulation:

A statement showing the monthly operating revenues, expenses and other items leading to net income, for the calendar year 1944 is attached hereto as Exhibit 2. The volume of freight and passengers carried and revenues received during 1944 were the greatest in the history of the Debtor, and the year 1944 was the fourth consecutive year in which all of the Debtor Company's records for traffic volume and gross revenues were broken. The major portion of such business resulted from handling of wartime traffic. As shown in Exhibit 2 the net income for the year 1944 amounted to $10,313,502.49 as compared with net income for the preceding year of $18,505,499.84. (As reported in the eighth report and accounting, no Federal Income or Excess Profits Taxes were accrued in 1943.)

There is attached hereto as Exhibit 3 a statement showing changes in Capital Accounts due to acquisitions, improvements and retirements of property and investments in affiliated companies by months during the calendar year 1944. Capital Accounts were increased during 1944 in the net amount of $5,433,225.59.

II.

By its order of April 17, 1944, the court authorized the Trustees to do certain addition and betterment work then deemed requisite for normal improvement, operation and maintenance of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1944 as set forth in the Petition filed by the Trustees on March 29, 1944. The total cost of such work was estimated at $2,639,269, of which $2,112,466 was estimated as chargeable to Capital Account. Due principally to war-time stringency of labor and materials, the Trustees were not able to perform all of the work authorized by the order of April 17, 1944, but progress was made on various projects contemplated by the order which resulted in total charges of $1,298,437.98 during the year, of which $1,025,216.66 represents charges to Capital Account.

As the year progressed, the Trustees were confronted with the necessity of performing certain additional improvement work not contemplated when the Court made its order of April 17, 1944. Such additional work was required, for the most part, by the continuing increase in traffic handled and by the need for facilities in connection with war activities and establishments of the Army, Navy and other war agencies. The amount expended during the year 1944 upon such additional work was $135,807.52 over and above the Contingency Item of $100,000 approved in said order of April 17, 1944. Of the amount so expended during 1944 the sum of $101,907.15 represented charges to Capital Account, over and above the similar charges of $75,000 included as part of said Contingency Item.

Thus the total charges during 1944 for work contemplated by the Court's order of April 17, 1944, together with the charges for such additional work, amounted to $1,534,245.50 of which $1,202,123.81 represents charges to Capital Account.

In addition to the expenditures enumerated in the foregoing paragraph, charges totalling $1,238,-137.66, of which $850,123.99 represents charges to Capital Account, were incurred during 1944 in connection with projects (exclusive of those enumerated in sections III, IV and V) authorized by various orders of the Court issued prior to 1944 which were carried forward or completed during the year 1944.

III.

By its order of May 3, 1943, the Court authorized the Trustees to install block signals and a centralized traffic control system for more expeditious handling of trains together with appurtenant necessary housing facilities in the Feather River Canyon area between Oroville and Portola, California, at an estimated total cost of $1,347,612. Work was commenced upon the project during 1943 and was carried forward during 1944. The expenditures upon the project during 1944 totalled $1,042,093.39 of which $999,244.69 was chargeable to Capital Account. The aggregate adjusted expenditures on the project during both 1943 and 1944 were $1,225, 721.60 of which $1,170,775.82 was chargeable to Capital Account. At the close of the year 1944 the greater part of the system was in operation, and at the date of filing this report it is anticipated that the entire system will be in full operation by the month of June, 1945.

IV.

By its order of July 21, 1941, the Court authorized the Trustees to acquire certain rolling stock to wit:

3 Diesel-electric freight locomotives
350 steel box cars
300 steel flat cars
4 stainless steel passenger coaches and to finance acquisition of such equipment by means of an Equipment Trust. The Diesel-electric freight locomotives were delivered during 1941 and 1942 and the 300 flat cars during 1942 and 1943. By its order of May 15, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to pay an estimated increase of $53,900 in the price for the 350 box cars because of advances in costs of materials and appliances. None of the box cars was delivered during 1944 but at the date of filing this report all of the cars have been received. The 1944 accounts were credited with $4,342.31 representing discounts on specialties embodied in these cars. The four stainless steel passenger cars authorized by said order of July 21, 1941, have not yet been constructed.

V.

By its order of November 22, 1943, the Court authorized the Trustees to purchase and acquire six 5400 H.P. Diesel-electric freight locomotives from Electro-Motive Division of General Motors Corporation, LaGrange, Illinois, at the approximate cost (including freight, taxes on freight charges, and coach fares for messengers) of $504,870 per locomotive, or an aggregate of $3,029,220 for the six locomotives, and to finance the purchase of such locomotives under some form of arrangement thereafter to be determined which would provide for making a down payment of approximately 25% of the cost from funds on hand and borrowing the remainder on terms calling for repayment thereof within approximately five years.

By its order of June 26, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to finance the purchase of such Diesel-electric locomotives by a conditional sale agreement with The Chase National Bank of the City of New York in substantially the form submitted to the Court as Exhibit A attached to the petition of the Trustees filed June 13, 1944. The Trustees executed such a conditional sale agreement under date of June 1, 1944, and all of the six locomotives were delivered during the year 1944. The total cost of such locomotives was $3,030,878.11, of which amount $3,030,871.17 was chargeable to Capital Account.

VI.

By its order of May 1, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to make a contract through competitive bidding for the purchase of 100 freight cars of the so-called mill type of gondola design at an estimated cost of approximately $3,875 per car, f.o.b. manufacturer's plant, the method of financing the payment of the purchase price to be submitted to the Court for approval. Such a contract was made during 1944 with Mt. Vernon Car Manufacturing Company, the low bidder, at the price of $3,897.77 per car, f.o.b. manufacturer's plant at Mt. Vernon, Illinois. The Trustees concluded that the entire

Illinois. The Trustees concluded that the entire purchase price of the cars should be paid in cash, thus eliminating the need for submission of any plan for financing the purchase price. None of the cars was delivered during 1944 but at the date of filing this report it is anticipated that deliveries thereof will be completed by June 1, 1945.

VII.

By its order of November 20, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to rehabilitate, modernize, enlarge and improve a certain freight facility of the railroad of the Debtor located at 8th and Brannan Streets, San Francisco, California, at an estimated cost of $58,246, and to amend the lease of said facility then outstanding. The work so authorized was commenced during the calendar year 1944 and the amount expended thereon during that year was $12,870.09, of which $9,860.26 was charged to Capital Account. At the date of filing this report such work has been completed and the lease of the facility has been amended as required by said order.

VIII.

Charges during 1944 for preliminary expenses incident to projects included in the program of improvement work for 1945 amounted to $3,990.27 of which $3,962.03 represents charges to Capital Account.

Accounting adjustments with respect to charges during years previous to 1944 resulted in total charges of $49,670.32 and a credit to Capital Account of $6,776.72.

Property retired during 1944 resulted in total charges of $15,411.29 with $107,734.86 being credited to Capital Account.

IX.

The total of all charges set forth in more detail in Sections II to VIII, both inclusive, in this report, is the net amount of $6,922,954.32 of which $5,977,332.06 represented net charges to Capital Account. Details of the latter amount as it was accrued monthly for Road and Equipment and Miscellaneous Physical Property Capital Accounts appear on page 1 of Exhibit 3 attached hereto.

X.

By its order of April 10, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to consent to the dissolution of Deep Creek Railroad Company, a subsidiary of the Debtor. Such consent was given and the dissolution of Deep Creek Railroad Company was accomplished during the year 1944.

XI.

The Salt Lake City Union Depot and Railroad Company (hereinafter called the "Depot Company") is a Utah corporation owning a passenger station and terminal facilities in Salt Lake City, Utah. At all times since long prior to the commencement of this proceeding one-half of the outstanding shares of common stock of the Depot Company have been owned by the Debtor and the other one-half thereof by The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company and its Reorganization Trustees.

By its order of March 20, 1944, in this proceeding the Court authorized the Debtor and the Trustees to take steps necessary to procure the amendment of the Articles of Incorporation of the Depot Company so that it would be authorized to issue shares of preferred stock having an aggregate par value of $600,000, subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. By said order the Court also authorized the Trustees to purchase one-half of said shares of preferred stock for the sum of $300,000 in cash upon condition that the Reorganization Trustees of The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company should concurrently purchase the other one-half of such shares for an equal amount. The approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission was granted and all other conditions stated in said order of March 20, 1944, were fulfilled, and pursuant thereto the Trustees purchased 3,000 shares of the preferred stock of the Depot Company for the sum of $300,000 in cash during the year 1944. The Depot Company thereupon used funds obtained by the issuance and sale of its preferred stock to discharge all of the indebtedness secured by its first mortgage and to obtain a release thereof.

Thereafter and on June 10, 1944, the Depot Company elected to terminate the lease agreement under which its station and terminal facilities had been used and operated by the Debtor and by The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company prior to the commencement of this proceeding, which lease had never been affirmed by the Trustees.

By its order of July 24, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees, subject to approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to enter into a lease of the station and terminal facilities of the Depot Company jointly with the Reorganization Trustees of The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company, such lease to be in substantially the form attached as Exhibit A to the petition of the Trustees filed in this proceeding July 5, 1944. Such proposed lease was thereafter approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the lease was thereupon executed by all parties thereto under date of December 1, 1944.

By its order of September 18, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to make a final settlement with the Depot Company for the use of its premises by the Trustees for the period ending immediately prior to the effective date of the new lease hereinabove described. Such settlement has been accomplished.

XII.

By its order of March 3, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to establish, with funds derived from the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943, a "reserve fund for contingent tax liabilities" in the amount of $7,100,000 to be invested in United States Treasury Securities and to be used for payment of any Federal income and excess profits taxes which might thereafter be found due for the year 1943. During the year 1944 such a fund was established and was invested in United States Treasury Securities.

By its order of May 15, 1944, the Court directed that as funds accumulated in the hands of the Trustees from month to month during the year 1944 for the payment of estimated Federal income and excess profits taxes accruing during that year, the Trustees should invest such funds from time to time in United States Treasury Savings Notes, Series C, to be used for the payment of such taxes as and when liability therefor should mature. Accordingly funds in the aggregate amount of $7,810,000 were invested by the Trustees in such Savings Notes during the year 1944.

XIII.

By its order of June 26, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to make, execute and deliver to certain named persons quitclaim deeds covering the right-of-way formerly occupied by the so-called Calpine Branch of the railroad of the Debtor, said Calpine Branch having been abandoned pursuant to this Court's order of February 26, 1940, and a subsequent order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Such quitclaim deeds were made, executed and delivered during the year 1944.

XIV.

By its order of July 24, 1944, the Court authorized the Trustees to stipulate for judgment in a certain condemnation action then pending in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, Northern Division, entitled "United States of America, Plaintiff, vs. 450 Acres of Land in San Joaquin County, California, Irene Louise Brichet i, et al., Defendants" and numbered No. 4456. Suc. stipulation was given and judgment thereon was entered during the year 1944.

XV.

By its order of June 2, 1944, upon petition of the Trustees and the Reorganization Committee hereinafter described, the Court approved and authorized irrevocable agreements with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States for the establishment of depreciation accounting with respect to certain road properties of the railroad of the Debtor and certain subsidiaries of the Debtor. During the year 1944 agreements were made with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with the authority granted by said order.

XVI.

During the year 1944 the reorganization plan confirmed by the order of this Court dated October 11, 1943, was placed in effect under the direction of the Reorganization Committee consisting of Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, whose designation as members of the Reorganization Committee was approved by said order of October 11, 1943.

By its order of November 27, 1944, this Court among other things directed the revesting of the properties of the Debtor in the Debtor Company, and more particularly, directed the Trustees to execute, acknowledge and deliver to the Debtor Company on or before December 28, 1944, as requested by the Reorganization Committee, a deed substantially in the form attached to said order as Exhibit "A," releasing and transferring to the Debtor Company as of 12:01 a.m. Pacific War Time on December 29, 1944, title to all property, rights and interests of every kind and description held by them as such Trustees. Pursuant to such order and the request of the Reorganization Committee the Trustees executed and acknowledged such a deed and delivered it to the Debtor Company prior to December 28, 1944, thereupon divesting the Trustees of all title to all properties and assets held by them as Trustees in this proceeding and vesting such title to all thereof in the Debtor Company. In exchange for said deed the Trustees received from the Debtor Company an agreement, substantially in the form of Exhibit "D" attached to said order of November 27, 1944, whereby the Debtor Company assumed and agreed to perform all contracts, leases, agreements, liabilities and obligations of the Trustees remaining in effect on December 31, 1944. Paragraph 12 of said order of November 27, 1944, authorized and directed the Trustees to continue their control and operation of the Debtor's business and properties until 12:00 o'clock midnight, Pacific War Time, on

December 31, 1944, at which time all right and duty of the Trustees to possess, control or operate said business and properties should cease. The Trustees did retain control and operation of the Debtor's business and properties until 12:00 o'clock midnight, Pacific War Time, on December 31, 1944, whereupon, as directed by said order, the Trustees ceased to possess, control and operate said business and properties, and all possession, control or operation of said business and properties or any thereof by the Trustees, or either of them, ceased and terminated. Possession, control and operation of all said business and properties were then and thereby transferred to and accepted by the Debtor Company at 12:00 o'clock midnight, Pacific War Time, on December 31, 1944.

At or prior to the end of the year 1944 the Trustees divested themselves of, and transferred and conveyed to and vested in the Debtor Company, all title to and all possession, control and operation of the business and properties theretofore held by the Trustees in this proceeding, all as required by orders of this Court. All duties, obligations, services and responsibilities of the Trustees in this proceeding have been duly and fully performed and completed, save only the execution of any further instruments of conveyance, transfer, substitution or release which may be requested by the Debtor Company in order to implement, consummate, confirm or further evidence the complete and effective transfer to the Debtor Company of all of the business, properties, assets, contracts, agreements, leases, actions, rights

During the intervening period of more than nine years the railroad of the Debtor has been operated by your petitioners under the control and supervision of this Court. Your petitioners have caused to be compiled a summary of the operations of the railroad, business and properties of the Debtor during the pendency of this proceeding. Copies of such summary will be furnished to this Court and to each of the parties to this proceeding upon or prior to the hearing upon this Report and Accounting.

Wherefore, the Trustees pray (1) that their Ninth and Final Report and Accounting and all of their acts and accounts be approved and confirmed; (2) that they be discharged as Trustees, reserving to them, jointly and to each of them separately, and to the survivor of them, the power and authority thereafter to execute and deliver such instruments of conveyance, transfer, substitution or release as may be requested by the Debtor Company from time to time in order to implement, consummate, confirm or further evidence the complete and effective release, transfer and conveyance to the Debtor Com-

(h) The Western Pacific Railroad Company, on December 29, 1944, executed, issued and delivered, or caused to be made available for delivery, to the holders of the Company's existing First Mortgage Bonds and to the Company's secured creditors the new securities of the reorganized Company and made payments in cash to said bondholders and secured creditors, all in accordance with and as provided in paragraph 11 of said order;

(i) Pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 14 of said order, the Reorganization Committee caused to be prepared, published and mailed a notice to the holders of First Mortgage Bonds and secured notes of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, and in all other respects have put into effect and carried out the plan of reorganization and the orders of this Court relative thereto.

4. Pursuant to the arrangements made by the Reorganization Committee with Guaranty Trust Company of New York for the services of said Company as Depositary and Exchange Agent, and the letter of instructions from The Western Pacific Railroad Company relating to the deposit and exchange of securities (all as reported to this Court at a hearing on November 27, 1944) said Guaranty Trust Company of New York has made substantial and satisfactory progress in effecting the delivery and exchange of securities and the payment of cash, as directed in paragraph 11 of said order entered November 27, 1944, and will continue to act in carrying out such directions. Said Guaranty Trust Company of New York has reported to petitioners the securities and cash delivered and exchanged to the close of business on January 31, 1946, and the securities and cash remaining to be delivered. A copy of the report of said Guaranty Trust Company is annexed hereto as Exhibit "A."

5. The available net income of the debtor and its subsidiaries for the years 1939 to 1943, inclusive, as determined and found by this Court by order filed September 25, 1944, has been applied by The Western Pacific Railroad Company as directed in ordering paragraphs 5 and 6 of said order. Pursuant to ordering paragraph 17 of the order of this Court filed November 27, 1944, The Western Pacific Railroad Company has determined and applied the available net income of the Company for the calendar year 1944 in accordance with the provisions of subdivision L of the plan of reorganization and the provisions of said paragraph 17.

6. T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, Trustees in reorganization, rendered their final account to this Court on April 30, 1945, and petitioned for their discharge and the release of their sureties. By order of this Court filed May 21, 1945, the accounts of said Trustees were approved, the Trustees were discharged and their sureties were exonerated and released.

7. Appeals were taken to the Circuit Court of

Appeals for the Ninth Circuit by The Railroad Credit Corporation and by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation from certain provisions of this Court's order filed September 14, 1944, construing the plan of reorganization in various respects and reconciling inconsistencies therein. Said appeals were argued on July 31, 1945, and on December 7, 1945, the rulings from which appeals were taken were affirmed by said Circuit Court of Appeals.

8. By order entered herein May 21, 1945, this Court made allowances of compensation to various parties in interest and their counsel (other than the Reorganization Committee and its counsel) and authorized and directed The Western Pacific Railroad Company to pay forthwith each and all of the allowances so made and said allowances were thereafter duly paid by said Company as directed in said order.

9. By order entered herein December 10, 1945, this Court made allowances to Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, and to Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro, as counsel for the Reorganization Committee, and authorized and directed The Western Pacific Railroad Company to pay forthwith said allowances, and said allowances have been paid in full by said Company pursuant to said order.

10. By order filed herein October 23, 1944, this Court made an allowance in the aggregate amount of $197,111.23 for certain expenses incurred and to be incurred in connection with the proceedings and plan of reorganization by the Reorganization Committee (exclusive of the fees and expenses of the Committee's counsel). Of said allowance, $60,638.48 was ear-marked to provide for a contingent tax liability if payment thereof should be required, and $136,472.75 was allowed for other expenses of the Reorganization Committee without limitation as to individual amounts with respect to component items. Said order also directed the Trustees of the debtor's estate to reimburse the Reorganization Committee and its officers and members out of the debtor's estate for certain expenses theretofore incurred by them in the aggregate amount of $3,144.00, the detail of which was submitted to the Court upon the hearing, and provided that further payments of the actual and reasonable expenses of the Reorganization Committee (whether incurred before or after the date of said order) should be made out of the debtor's estate by the Trustees thereof so long as said Trustees were in control of the same, and thereafter by the reorganized company in accordance with the procedure directed in said order. Said order provided further that all further payments and advances to the Reorganization Committee under the provisions of the order should be subject to final approval and allowance by the Court at such time or times, or upon such showing as the Court may direct. There is submitted herewith and made a part hereof as Exhibit "B" a summary of the expenses of the Reorganization Committee, its officers and members, incurred in carrying out and putting into effect the plan of reorganization under the supervision and control of this Court (exclusive of the fees and expenses of the Committee's counsel). The detail of these expenses will be submitted at the hearing upon this petition. It is not anticipated that there will be any further expenses chargeable to the Committee, although provision should be made in the order upon this petition for such expenses and for the contingency of the assertion of the tax liabilities referred to above or other items not presently known. The expenses shown in Exhibit "B" were necessarily incurred by the Reorganization Committee, its officers and members, in carrying out and putting into effect the plan of reorganization and the Committee believes that said expenses were in every case reasonable in amount and within the allowance authorized by the order of this Court entered October 23, 1944.

Wherefore, your petitioners pray for an order of this Court

1. Determining that the plan of reorganization of The Western Pacific Railroad Company has been carried out and put into effect by petitioners as the Reorganization Committee in this proceeding in accordance with the provisions of the plan of reorganization and the orders and directions of this Court;

2. Approving and allowing the payments and advances to the Reorganization Committee as set forth in Exhibit "B" annexed hereto;

3. Providing that The Western Pacific Railroad Company shall reimburse, indemnify and hold harmless the members of the Reorganization Committee, or any person employed by them, against any loss or expense arising out of or in connection with carrying out and putting into effect in good faith the plan of reorganization, including without limitation of the generality of said provision the contingent tax liability described in the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission of September 7, 1944, and allowed in the order of this Court entered October 23, 1944;

4. Discharging petitioners as members of the Reorganization Committee of The Western Pacific Railroad Company;

5. Terminating these proceedings, subject to such reservations of jurisdiction as may be appropriate, except as otherwise provided in the order of this Court entered May 21, 1945, discharging the Trustees in reorganization; and

6. Granting such other and further relief as may be proper in the premises.

Respectfully submitted,

FELIX T. SMITH,

Memorandum for Mr. Matthew
From Mr. Enersen
March 1, 1944

For Hearing March 3d

The Western Pacific Railroad Company
Reorganization

Contingent Tax Liability Reserve Fund

Memorandum for Hearing
March 3, 1944

Statement to the Court

1. Notice: Notice has been given as required by the order for hearing and an affidavit to that effect is on file.

2. Subject Matter: By this petition the Trustees seek authority to establish a contingent tax liability reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000 to provide for the payment of any Federal income and excess profits tax liability which may be found due for the taxable year 1943.

3. Explanatory Statement: If the operations of the railroad of the Debtor should be subject to Federal income and excess profits taxes without regard to the income or loss of the affiliated corporations, the tax liability for 1943 would be approximately $7,000,000. For several years, however, consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns have been filed covering the operations of the railroad of the Debtor and the operations of all of the affiliated corporations, including The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, the owner of all of the capital stock of the Debtor Company. During the taxable year 1943 certain of the affiliated corporations had very substantial net losses which more than offset the net income of the Debtor company. The largest net loss was that of the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its net loss was primarily attributable to the fact that upon confirmation of the plan of reorganization of the Debtor company the Debtor's corporate stock owned by the holding company became valueless. The Trustees have been advised by their accountants and tax counsel that there is no Federal income or excess profits tax due for the year 1943. However, the accountants and tax advisers have also stated that in view of the substantial amount involved the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may dispute their conclusions, with the result that there may be litigation regarding the matter. The Trustees believe that it is prudent to establish a funded reserve adequate to provide for the payment of the maximum possible tax which may be found to be due.

I desire to call Mr. Elsey to testify regarding this matter.

Testimony

1. What would be the maximum Federal income and excess profits tax liability for the Company if it filed a separate return for the year 1943, accordng to the computations of the Company's accountants and tax advisers?

Approximately $7,000,000.

2. Please explain to the Court the reason why it is believed no tax will be due under the consolidated return method of reporting the income and losses of the several affiliated corporations.

Consolidated returns have been filed by the debtor company and its affiliated corporations for several years, as permitted by the Federal income and excess profits tax laws. During the calendar year 1943 certain members of the group sustained very substantial losses, particularly The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation. That company sustained a very large loss when the stock of the debtor company owned by it became valueless upon confirmation of the Western Pacific reorganization plan in 1943. The aggregate net losses of the affiliated corporations for the year 1943 more than offset the net income of the debtor company for the same year. According to our advisers no tax is due for 1943 for that reason.

3. Do you believe, however, that it is prudent to establish a funded reserve to provide for the payment of any tax which may ultimately be found due?

Yes, I believe a funded reserve should be established for this purpose. Tax questions are seldom free from doubt. While we are confident of our conclusion in this instance, nevertheless, in view of the substantial amount here involved, the Internal Revenue Bureau may desire to litigate the matter. I think the debtor company should set aside out of 1943 earnings a sufficient amount so that it will be able to pay the highest possible tax which might conceivably be found due if the Commissioner should prevail in such litigation.

4. What is the attitude of the Trustees about the matter?

They have approved my recommendation that we establish a funded reserve of $7,100,000 out of 1943 earnings of the railroad of the Debtor.

5. How do you believe that the fund should be held?

I should think that it ought to be invested in United States Treasury securities.

Concluding Statement.

The Trustees are asking for an order authorizing the establishment of this reserve fund out of 1943 earnings of the railroad, the fund to be invested in United States Treasury securities. Counsel for the First Mortgage Trustees and counsel for the Reorganization Committee are present in Court and I believe they are prepared to state the position of their respective principals upon this matter.

Gentlemen:

In order to protect any equitable interests that The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation may have in the reserves set up by The Western Pacific Railroad Company on account of tax deductions, as well as in any refunds of tax payments arising from claims filed by the Corporation, we propose to file a Bill of Complaint in the District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, asking that these reserves and refunds, if any, be impounded pending an accounting and an equitable determination to ascertain what, if any, interests the Corporation may have therein.

Appreciating that your firm has acted as tax counsel for both the Company and the Corporation in the filing of Consolidated Tax Returns and in the proceedings now pending before the Internal Revenue Department, we would, of course, not wish to take any steps which would in any way prejudice the claims made in these returns. We would therefore appreciate your advice on this, and would be glad to have any suggestions you may make for the full protection of the interests of the Corporation therein.

I would be glad to arrange a conference between your Mr. Polk and our counsel to discuss this matter further.

Yours very truly,

.....

Dear Sir:

This refers to your letter of September 27, 1946, addressed to this firm. The undersigned has been acting as tax counsel in connection with pending tax questions arising under Federal consolidated returns made by the Western Pacific group for the period ended April 30, 1944, and prior open years. In presenting the issues as to these tax matters to the Treasury Department it will be necessary to develop the facts fully and the Treasury Department is clearly entitled to any relevant information. There would, therefore, seem to be no reason why any development of facts in a separate litigation instituted by your Company in the United States District Court in California would present necessary embarrassment in connection with the tax questions.

Very truly yours,

JAMES K. POLK.

Dec. 9, 1947

Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company

Attention: Mr. W. E. Davis
General Auditor

Gentlemen:

Reference is made to your letter dated March 20, 1947, in which you submit a statement of facts with respect to charges for transportation of war-time commodities for the Government.

The facts submitted indicate that beginning in 1941 and continuing throughout the war years you transported military and naval forces and property for the Government for the prosecution of the war. Transportation charges were collected from the various Government departments and reported as taxable income. At the time of rendering the bills for the transportation charges, you state that it was known to you, as well as the Government departments, that the bills were excessive because such bills did not reflect the lower rates in accordance with the land grants and also due to the fact that many shipments of property were of a secret nature and the contents thereof were not known to you. Furthermore, many shipments contained new commodities on which rates had not been established. It was the custom for the Government departments to pay the bills for transportation charges as presented with the understanding that adjustments would be made in accordance with section 322 of the Transportation Act of 1940 when such bills were audited by the General Accounting Office.

In accordance with section 321(a) of the Transportation Act of 1940, the Government was entitled to special rates for the transportation of military and naval forces and also military and naval property. Transportation of the military and naval forces and property is eligible for net land grant rates as provided in the several Granting Acts and Equalization Agreements. Section 322 of the same Act provides that payment for transportation of mail, persons or property for or on behalf of the United States shall be made upon presentation of the bills therefor prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office. The right is reserved, however, for the General Accounting Office to deduct the amount of any overpayment for such transportation from any amount subsequently due to the carrier.

According to the schedule submitted with your letter, it appears that the General Accounting Office began auditing the bills for the transportation charges as early as 1942, in which year demand was made for the first refunds of the excessive transportation charges. These refunds are effective for each of the years 1942 to 1946, inclusive, and additional refunds will probably be demanded for subsequent years. During these years the amounts of the refunds were taken as deductions in your Federal tax returns. The statement submitted by you shows that excessive transportation charges were received during the years 1941 to 1945, inclusive, in the amount of $22,170,000 and that this amount was refunded during the years 1942 to 1946, inclusive.

You state that by reason of the delay in the audit of the transportation bills by the General Accounting Office the charges collected have been subjected to high excess profits tax rates whereas the repayments have extended into the post-war years when the tax rates are much lower. Due to the repayments made, the Government has paid out and you have collected only the correct transportation charges but due to the high excess profits tax rates during the war years you feel that you have suffered a penalty because of circumstances which were entirely beyond your control. It is your view that taxable income for the several years involved should be adjusted and thus neutralize the effect of the receipt and repayment of the excessive charges.

Section 43 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that:

"The deductions and credits (other than the corporation dividends paid credit provided in section 27) provided for in this chapter shall be taken for the taxable year in which 'paid or accrued' or 'paid or incurred', dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed, unless in order to clearly reflect the income the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. * * *"

The facts presented by you show conclusively that by reporting the transportation charges as income on the accrual basis and deducting the repayments in the year in which repaid, the taxable income for the years involved is not clearly reflected and thus a large net tax is incurred due to the high tax rates during the war years.

In view of the facts and circumstances presented by you, under the authority conferred in section 43 permission is granted to allocate the repayments of the excessive transportation charges to the years in which the charges were reported as taxable income. Such adjustments may not be made in a prior year or years where the statutory period of limitation for assessing deficiencies or filing claims for refund as provided in section 322 of the Code has expired or a final closing agreement has been executed.

In this connection it is understood that you agree as follows:

1. All amounts received by you as transportation charges from the Federal Government departments and agencies shall be included in taxable income on the accrual basis.

2. All refunds of transportation charges made by you to the Federal Government shall be allowed as deductions in the year or years in which such transportation charges were reported as income and any deductions claimed by you in the year or years such refunds were made will be disallowed.

3. For the years 1941 to 1946, inclusive, the amount of interest on refunds of income and excess profits taxes shall be allowed only to the extent of, and limited to, the amount of interest on deficiencies resulting from these adjustments.

The adjustments agreed to above will not include any items which are the subject of presently pending claims filed on behalf of the United States by the Attorney General before the Interstate Commerce Commission for refunds from the railroads, including the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company, for excessive charges for the transportation of war-time freight.

Notification from you of your agreement with this letter will constitute authority for disposition of the issues for the years involved.

Please reply within fifteen days, for the attention of IT:P:CA-WTS.

Very truly yours,

/s/ GEO. J. SCHOENEMAN,
Commissioner.

The Western Pacific Railroad Company

43 Exchange Place,
New York, November 28, 1923.

Mr. C. M. Levey, President,
The Western Pacific Railroad Company,
Mills Bldg., San Francisco, California.

Dear Mr. Levey:

I am enclosing herewith two statements showing the taxable income, as reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on consolidated returns for the years 1921 and 1922, and proposed allocation of the taxes to the various companies, the income of which is included in the returns.

The total tax for 1921 ($31,813.09) was originally paid by The Western Pacific Railroad Company and of the tax for 1922 ($114,929.64) three-quarters has been paid by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, which company will pay the remaining one-quarter which will be due December 15, 1923. The method of allocation, viz., prorating the entire amount among the companies showing taxable income, is, so far as we are able to determine, the practice followed by other companies making consolidated returns.

If this plan meets with your approval, The Western Pacific Railroad Company can pay to The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation from New York funds:

Tax for 1922	$77,037.34
Less tax paid by W.P.R.R.Co. in excess of proporation for 1921	9,836.61
Net amount to pay		$67,200.73
In addition, The Western Pacific R.R. Corporation should receive from:
Western Realty Co.—1922 Tax		390.76
Standard R.&D. Co.—1922 Tax		206.87

The amounts due from other subsidiary companies will be carried by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation pending settlement with the various companies or adjustments as may be deemed advisable upon determination of proposed reorganization of Denver System and the clearing up of pending Sacramento Northern situation.

This proposed adjustment is on the basis of tax returns as originally filed, copies of which are on file in Mr. DeGraff's office, and is subject to revision as may finally be determined by adjustments in the amount of taxable income due to examination of the accounts by the Treasury Department.

Yours truly,

/s/ S. R. BALDWIN.

Mr. F. C. Nicodemus, Jr.,
40 Wall Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

As you know the by-laws of this Corporation provide that the annual meeting of stockholders be held in Wilmington, Delaware, on the first Tuesday in October of each year, which this year falls on October 1st.

The annual meeting last year, you will recall, was convened on the scheduled date and adjourned sine die. Upon advice of counsel and concurrence of our Board, notices of the meeting were sent to stockholders unaccompanied by proxy or proxy statement, the latter a requirement of the S. E. C.

I should like to have your opinion as to how this year's meeting should be handled, that is, will we pursue the same course as we did last year, sending out notices only, or should we proceed in the regular way? If we do the latter, it will entail considerable labor and expense and it will be necessary at next Wednesday's meeting of the Board to name a Proxy Committee, approve form of proxy and a proxy statement.

Won't you please give me the benefit of your advice in this at your early convenience, and oblige.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

Dear Mr. Curry:

This refers to your letter of August 23, 1940, with reference to the annual meeting of stockholders of the Corporation scheduled to be held Tuesday, October 1st, next, at Wilmington, Delaware.

It is our judgment that you should this year pursue the same course you pursued last year. That is, issue the notice in the usual form but do not name a proxy committee or request proxies. If a quorum fails to appear, you may again pursue the same course as last year, that is, after meeting on the scheduled date adjourn sine die for lack of quorum.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

As you know, the By-laws of this Corporation provide that the annual meeting of stockholders be held in Wilmington, Delaware, on the first Tuesday in October of each year, this year being October 7th.

I should like to have your opinion as to how this meeting should be handled; that is, should we pursue the same course as we have in the past two years and send out Notice of Meeting only to the stockholders, or, should we send out notice of Meeting accompanied by Proxy and Proxy Statement. The latter method of handling would, of course, entail considerable labor and expense and it will be necessary to have a Board Meeting to name a Proxy Committee, approve form of Proxy and Proxy Statement.

Will you please let me have the benefit of your advice in this matter, and oblige.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

Dear Mr. Curry:

Mr. Nicodemus has asked me to reply to your letter of August 2, 1941, with reference to the annual meeting of stockholders of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation to be held in Wilmington, Delaware, on October 7, 1941.

We are both of the opinion that this annual meeting should be handled in the same way as the annual meetings of the past two years, that is, a notice of meeting, omitting form of Proxy and Proxy Statement, should be mailed to the stockholders.

If a quorum should fail to appear it would be

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

The by-laws of this corporation provide that its annual meeting should be held the first Tuesday in October of each year (being October 3rd this year) at 12 o'clock noon, at its corporate office, the Corporation Trust Company, Wilmington, Delaware.

As you know, in the past four years, due to conditions surrounding the corporation, we merely mailed notices of the meetings to stockholders of record as of a specified date. Meetings were held each year but due to lack of quorum were adjourned sine die.

Subsequent to the annual meeting for 1943, special meetings of the stockholders were held on December 28, 1943, which recessed to various dates thereafter and finally adjourned, and on April 20, 1944, when that certain agreement between the Corporation and its three secured creditors was submitted and approved by a majority vote of the stockholders present in person or represented by proxy.

The provisions of the said agreement, as you know, have since been carried out, which included the transfer of the capital stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company to the Reorganization Committee, etc.

In view of the aforementioned facts and other pending matters, I should like to receive your opinion as to what we should do in connection with the forthcoming meeting. It occurs to me it would be appropriate, when mailing the notices, to also include a letter over the President's name, advising the stockholders of the status of the Corporation's affairs. Do you agree?

Dear Mr. Van Kirk:

In reference to your inquiry at the annual meeting yesterday, the cost of addressing and mailing postal cards to stockholders of the above named corporation will amount to $25.00 per thousand. It is estimated there are presently approximately 4400 stockholders so that the cost will amount to approximately $111.00.

As explained, the approval of the corporation should be attained before we can address and mail any communication to stockholders. It will also be necessary to furnish a sufficient supply of the postal cards to be addressed and mailed.

We are forwarding a copy of this letter to Mr. Curry, Pesident of the corporation, as a matter of information.

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation

Memoradum as to effect of non-payment of Delaware franchise taxes

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, held on December 18, 1941, the Chairman reported that the Delaware franchise taxes for the years 1939 and 1940, due July 1, 1940 and July 1, 1941, respectively, in the amount of $2,525 each, have not been paid and that interest is accruing thereon at the rate of 1% per month from said due dates, and further that under the Delaware Statutes payment of the 1939 tax, plus accrued interest, must be made not later than April 1, 1942, or the Corporation's charter will be voided.

Whereupon, after discussion, the Board adopted the following reolution:

> "Resolved, that the question of payment of these taxes be referred to Counsel, for investigation, to determine what effect it may have on the Corporation if payment is not made and to report to the Board the result of such investigation at its next meeting."

The statute which voids the charter of a Delaware corporation for failure to pay its franchise tax for two years is Section 71 of the Delaware Franchise Tax Law, reading as follows:

"If any corporation, accepting the provisions of the Constitution of the State of Delaware and coming under the provisions of the General Corporation Law of this State, or any corporation which has heretofore filed or may hereafter file a certificate of incorporation under the provisions of the said law, shall for two consecutive years neglect or refuse to pay the State any franchise tax or taxes, which has or have been, or shall be assessed against it, or which if is required to pay under the provisions of this Article, the charter of such corporation shall be void, and all powers conferred by law upon such corporation are declared inoperative, unless the State Tax Board shall for good cause shown to it, give further time for the payment of such tax or taxes, in which case a certificate thereof shall be filed by the said Board in the office of the State Tax Department stating the reason therefor."

Then follows Section 72 of the Franchise Tax Law, which directs the State Tax Department to report such delinquent corporations to the Governor and further directs the Governor forthwith to issue his proclamation declaring that the charters of these corporations are repealed. Said Section 72 reads as follows:

"On or before the First Tuesday of January in each year, the State Tax Department shall report to the Governor a list of all the corporations, which for two years next preceding such report, have failed, neglected or refused to pay the franchise taxes assessed against them or due by them, under the laws of this State, and the Governor shall forthwith issue his proclamation declaring that the charters of these corporations are repealed."

Section 73 of the Franchise Tax Law provides that the proclamation of the Governor be filed in the office of the Secretary of State, that it be advertised and that a certified copy thereof be transmitted to the Recorder of each County in the State and that

"* * * each Recorder shall, upon receipt of such certified copy, forthwith mark in brief upon the margin of the record of the Certificate of Incorporation named in said proclamation, which is of record in his office, the fact that the charter of said corporation is repealed, and the date of said repeal."

Section 74 of the Franchise Tax Law provides that any corporation, firm, company, association, person or persons

"* * * who shall exercise or attempt to exercise any power under the Certificate of Incorporation of any corporation, which shall have been proclaimed by the Governor, after the issuance of such proclamation, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding One Thousand Dollars ($1,000) or by imprisonment not exceeding one (1) year, or both, in the discretion of the Court."

If the charter of a Delaware corporation be repealed pursuant to the above statutes for the non-payment of franchise taxes, does it follow under the Delaware law that such corporation has ceased to exist, that it is dead and cannot be revived?

It has been held that where a charter is repealed for non-payment of taxes, there is a dissolution by operation of law. (Berle v. Crutcher, 60 F. (2d) 440 (C.C.A. 8th)).

But in and by Section 42 of the Stock Corporation Law, the Delaware Legislature has declared that corporations after dissolution shall continue for purposes of suit. Said Section reads as follows:

"All corporations, whether they expire by their own limitations, or are otherwise dissolved, shall nevertheless be continued for the term of three years from such expiration or dissolution bodies corporate for the purpose of prosecuting and defending suits by or against them, and of enabling them gradually to settle and close their business, to dispose of and convey their property, and to divide their capital stock but not for the purpose of continuing the business for which said corporation shall have been established; provided, however, that with respect to any action, suit, or proceeding begun or commenced by or against the corporation prior to such expiration or dissolution and with respect to any action, suit or proceeding begun or commenced by or against the corporation within three years after the date of such expiration or dissolution, such corporation shall only for the purpose of such actions, suits or proceedings so begun or commenced be continued bodies corporate beyond said three-year period and until any judgments, orders, or decrees therein shall be fully executed."

Moreover, Section 74 of the Stock Corporation Law sets up the machinery whereby a corporation whose charter has become inoperative by law for non-payment of taxes may procure a restoration of its charter, and provides that such reinstatement shall validate all contracts, acts, matters and things made, done and performed within the scope of its charter by such corporation, its officers and agents during the time when such charter was inoperative or void or after its expiration by limitation, with the same force and effect and to all intents and purposes as if said charter had at all times remained in full force and effect.

It is clear from the foregoing that to allow the 1939 franchise tax of The Western Pacific Railroad

Corporation to remain unpaid after April 1, 1942, will not result in the complete and final extinguishment of said corporation.

The scope and effect of the statutory provisions above referred to have been considered and defined in the following leading cases:

Watts v. Liberty Royalties Corporation, 106 F. (2d) 941

Eastman Gardiner & Co. v. Warren, 109 F. (2d) 193

In Watts v. Liberty Royalties Corporation, it was held that a Delaware corporation does not cease to exist on suspension or forfeiture of its charter for non-payment of annual license fees and that it may bring proceedings for reorganization under the Federal Bankruptcy Act (77B) even after the three years allowed by the Delaware law to wind up its affairs, in view of the Delaware statutes providing for revival or reinstatement of the charter.

The appellant contended that the corporation was prohibited from maintaining a voluntary action for reorganization by the fact that more than three years prior to the filing of its petition its charter had been forfeited for the non-payment of fees to the state of Delaware, and claimed that the failure to pay such fees automatically forfeited and cancelled its charter and its corporate franchises and that the only power the corporation possessed thereafter was to wind up its affairs within the three year period provided for by the laws of Delaware.

The Court, after referring to the various applicable Delaware statutes (which have been referred to in this memorandum) said:

> "These sections of the Delaware code, when read together, are entirely inconsistent with the theory that a corporation whose charter has been suspended or forfeited for the failure to pay fees is dead and that it has ceased to exist. The Supreme Court in the Illinois case says that such a corporation, under the Illinois law, is ended for all time and for all purposes. That is not so under the laws of Delaware. If it were, life could not be breathed into the corpse, it could not be revived nor reinstated, nor could all things done by the corporation during its period of suspension be validated by its reinstatement.
> Provisions similar to those in the Delaware law are found in the laws of many of the states and have frequently been interpreted by the courts. It has generally been held that where charter laws provide for a cancellation and forfeiture of a corporate charter and corporate powers for failure to pay fees and also provide for a reinstatement of the powers of the corporation and for restoration of its charter upon the payment of its fees, the penalty provisions providing for the forfeiture of its charter rights are largely for the purpose of collecting the charter fees and do not end the life of the corporation. (Citing California, Oregon, Washington and Colorado cases.)

So long as a corporation may be reinstated by the payment of delinquent fees and have validated all of its acts that were done while its powers were suspended, the corporation is not dead. Its powers are only in suspension and reinstatement of its charter restores it to all of its powers and validates all of its acts, including the acts done while its charter was suspended. The corporation had power to institute this proceeding for its reorganization under Section 77B."

Eastman, Gardiner & Co. v. Warren was an action against a Delaware corporation for personal injuries sustained by the appellee. The trial court upheld a demurrer to a special plea in abatement, alleging that the appellant, the Delaware corporation, had no legal existence because, since the institution of the action it had been dissolved under the laws of that State, and the plea further set forth that prior to such dissolution the corporation had sold all of its assets and distributed the proceeds to its debtors, paying only a portion of its indebtedness; that the corporation owned no property, either real, personal or mixed, that none was distributed to its stockholders, and that therefore the Court below was without jurisdiction to proceed further in the cause. In holding that the judgment of the lower Court should be affirmed, the Circuit Court of Appeals said in its opinion:

> "The argument of appellant ignores the fact, of which we take judicial notice, that the statutes of Delaware extended appellant's life as a corporation for three years for the purpose of suing and being sued. See section 2074 of the Revised Code of Delaware for 1935. As an additional safeguard, section 2078 of said code expressly provides that dissolution shall be no cause for abatement of any action pending on the date of the dissolution of any corporation. Harned v. Beacon Hill Real Estate Co., 9 Del. Ch. 411, 84 A. 229. Section 2075 permits the appointment of receivers, but their appointment is not mandatory. Statutes prolonging the existence of a dissolved corporation are remedial and should be given a liberal construction. Helvering v. South Penn. Oil Co., 62 App. D. C. 373, 68 F. 2d 420.
> It is contended that the above statutes do not apply where the corporation, before dissolution, disposed of all of its assets to its creditors. No decision of the State of Delaware is cited to show that the courts of that state have so construed its statutes, and our reading thereof does not lead us to such conclusion. We think the allegations of the plea did not prevent appellee from prosecuting his suit, and the judgment of the district court should be affirmed."

July 14, 1942.

Mr. D. C. DeGraff, General Auditor,
The Western Pacific Railroad Company,
526 Mission Street,
San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mr. DeGraff:

We are looking into the questions you raised in your letter of July 7th, File A-29-1, in connection with 1942 income tax accruals, but before answering we would appreciate reply from you on the following:

With reference to the losses sustained account abandonment of the Deep Creek Railroad Company, it has occurred to us that this loss might be considered by the Internal Revenue Bureau as a 1939 loss in view of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission issued its certificate permitting this abandonment July 1, 1939; operation of the line was abandoned as to interstate and intrastate traffic in August, 1939; highest bid for scrap was accepted in August, 1939; and copy of letter we have on our files, dated November 7, 1939, to Mr. Matthew from Mrs. Tyler, which reads as follows:

"Its investment in road and equipment of $504,-029.92 which realized only $25,698.50 will be written off to profit and loss in 1939. The company will then have no assets except the cash on hand and will not be engaged in any business."

* * *

"Mr. DeGraff and I have conferred on any possible undesirable result of 'forgiving' any unpaid balance of debt of our Reorganization Trustees against the Deep Creek. There could be no adverse tax effect if done in 1939 as in this year there has been a total writing off of the investment in road and equipment exceeding $500,000 except for the approximate sum of $25,000 received. This would greatly exceed any gift to capital that could be made by forgiving outstanding indebtedness."

"I have written thus fully concerning the status of Deep Creek Railroad Company because Mr. Elsey is desirous of winding up its affairs as soon as practical. As stated above the salvage job by the purchaser of the railroad as scrap will be completed shortly and the Auditor is winding up the small outstanding interline accounts. * * *"

As we cannot find in our records any information as to why this investment, for income tax purposes, was charged off in 1940 instead of 1939, as we feel it should have been in view of the facts recited above, please advise.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY,

Treasurer.

August 25, 1942.

Via air mail—
Mr. D. C. DeGraff, General Auditor,
The Western Pacific Railroad Company,
526 Mission Street,
San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mr. DeGraff:

With further references to 1942 income tax accruals:

At the time our 1940 and 1941 tax returns were prepared, question arose as to which of the two years (1939 or 1940) the Deep Creek loss could be utilized. It was decided this was immaterial for the same reasons as stated in your letter, namely, that the income deficits for 1939 and 1940 were so large it really made no difference in the return for either year and the 1941 carryover would remain the same. However, we made a memorandum of this with the idea of going into the matter more thoroughly before it became necessary to make up our 1942 returns. Now that the question has come up it will enable us before filing the 1942 returns to reach a definite decision in the matter.

As stated in my telegram of the 14th, we are still undecided on the Deep Creek loss. From the information contained in our records it appears this loss should be charged off in 1939, as it is our understanding the Revenue Bureau has ruled such losses should be written off the year the securities have been ascertained as worthless. However, due to the large amount involved, we would not want to take it out of 1940 unless we are certain that there is no possible reason for keeping it in that year. Therefore, we should like some more information from you to support this, such as, when did title for the scrap pass to purchaser? When was scrap entirely removed? When was payment for the scrap received? In other words, any additional reason you can supply as to why this loss should be written off in 1940, other than ICC instructions that adjusting entries be made in that year, which we understand is not sufficient evidence to satisfy the Internal Revenue Bureau.

After we have determined for income tax purposes the proper year in which this loss was sustained, there are other factors which must be considered, as you know, and which may effect the Revenue Bureau's decision as to its being allowed. I mention this for the reason you can no doubt give us additional information which will be helpful in determining the question.

First, it may be considered by the Bureau as an inter-company transaction on a consolidated return, which, in some cases has been disallowed.

Secondly, if we feel it will be allowed, the loss must be adjusted, as the Bureau has ruled that losses on advances to affiliated corporations are allowable only to the extent of the excess of the amount of the advances due over the amounts of the operating losses of the affiliate, which in prior years offset taxable income on consolidated returns. In other words, it should not be deducted twice.

Again, it might be considered in part as a contribution to capital.

So, as stated above, before arriving at a decision it would be appreciated if you can give us this additional information.

With reference to the questions raised in your letter of July 7th as to why items of 1941 income should affect carryover of previous years: Item 26 of the "Instructions for Form 1120" for 1941, Step III—"Conversion of Net Operating Loss Carryover into Net Operating Loss Deduction" fully answer this question. However, this will have no effect on the 1942 Carryover.

The $100 dividends mentioned in next to last paragraph of your letter should be adjusted as stated.

While on the subject of adjustments, if and when Internal Revenue Examiner inspects the Western Realty income tax return for 1941, we suggest his attention be called to the fact that net operating loss deduction was omitted from the 1941 return and a refund is therefore due.

Further, in connection with setting up of 1942 income tax accruals, we estimate the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation's income deficit for the year 1942 will be somewhere between $480,000 and $485,000.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

Wood, Walker & Co.,

Attn. Miss M. Abels,
Statistical Department

Gentlemen:

Your letter of September 13th, addressed to Mr. E. C. Bates, Treasurer of this Company, has been referred to this office for reply.

I notice that your communication was sent to Mr. Bates as Treasurer of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and I am therefore a bit uncertain as to just what you may be trying to determine.

With respect to the stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, I think that perhaps the best explanation is that contained in our 1944 annual report under the heading of "Taxes" which is quoted below:

> "When reference is made to the Company's income for 1944 and 1943, consideration must be given to the fact that no Federal income and excess profits tax charges were included for the first four months of 1944 nor for the year 1943.
> "Prior to the period of reorganization, which began August 2, 1935, and through 1943, the Company's tax returns had been made by the then parent, The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, a holding corporation which owned all of the Company's preferred and common stock, except directors' qualifying shares. The holding corporation filed a consolidated return for itself and its various subsidiaries, of which The Western Pacific Railroad Company was one.

"The plan of reorganization for The Western Pacific Railroad Company was confirmed on October 11, 1943, and found the preferred and common stock (owned by the holding corporation) to be "without equity or value." As a result of this loss, the consolidated return indicated no liability for 1943 Federal income or excess profits taxes. To provide against the contingency that liability of the Railroad Company for some taxes in respect of 1943 might be subsequently asserted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Reorganization Trustees obtained authority of the Court to set aside a reserve fund of $7,100,000 invested in Government securities.

"As a part of the proceedings for effectuating the plan of reorganization, the Company's preferred and common stocks owned by the holding corporation were transferred to the Reorganization Committee on May 1st, 1944. A consolidated tax return covering the first four months was filed by the holding corporation which reflected no liability for 1944 Federal income and excess profits taxes for that period.

"To provide against the contingency that liability of the Railroad Company for some taxes for the first four months of 1944 might be subsequently asserted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, your Directors on March 26th, 1945, established an additional reserve fund in the amount of $3,000,000 to be combined with the previously established reserve fund of $7,100,000. The additional reserve fund has also been invested in Government securities. This entire reserve will be held intact to protect the cash position of the Company in the event it should be later necessary to make any payment of taxes or interest resulting from an administrative or judicial ruling adverse to the Company's contention that it was not liable for any Federal income or excess profits taxes for the calendar year 1943 and the first four months of 1944."

You will note in the fourth paragraph of the above quotation that the corporation's holdings of the Company's stock were transferred to the Reorganization Committee on May 1, 1944, as part of the proceedings for effectuating the plan. If you are attempting to ascertain the value of the stock of the Corporation, I would suggest that you communicate directly with Mr. M. J. Curry, Room 5205, 40 Wall Street, New York 5, N. Y., who is the President of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation.

As a matter of information, prior to its transfer to the Company's reorganization committee, all of the stock of the Company was held by The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and it was not dealt in on the various security exchanges. That situation, of course, no longer obtains since the Company's reorganization effected as of December 29, 1944.

Very truly yours,

/s/ CHARLES ELSEY.

bcc—Mr. M. J. Curry.

Internal Revenue Depreciation Account Ruling

Internal Revenue Commissioner Helvering this week refused the request of this Association that railroads desiring to change from retirement to depreciation accounting be permitted to place in the agreement an additional clause which would provide "that the reserve for accrued depreciation to the date of the change in the accounting method shall not be used in computing invested capital for excess profits tax purposes."

"Only true earned surplus or undivided profits," Mr. Helvering said, in a letter received by Mr. Fletcher, Vice President of this Association, "can be included in invested capital, and if, for any reason, the books of a railroad do not properly reflect the true surplus, such adjustments must be made as are necessary in order to arrive at the correct amount of surplus. If, for example, the depreciation actually sustained with respect to the existing property is not reflected on the books of a corporation, earned surplus must be reduced to that extent.

"In the opinion of this office it is necessary to reduce the surplus of a corporation changing from the retirement method to the depreciation method of accounting to the extent of the amounts indicated by the reserve for depreciation required by the conditions imposed by the Commissioner before permission to change can be granted. Therefore, the Bureau cannot consent to the inclusion of the suggested clause in the agreement."

Dear Mr. Coulson:

This will reply to your letter of March 1st relating to depreciation on Way and Structures and its relation to Income Tax.

Enclosed you will find a memorandum dated March 13th, with copies of attachments referred to therein, relating to negotiations between the A.A.R. and the Internal Revenue Bureau. Since Mr. DeGraff's memorandum was written, A.A.R. Accounting Circular No. 51, dated March 9th, has been received and, with its enclosures, bears on the attitude of the Internal Revenue Department concerning depreciation accounting.

It is of interest to point out that determination of loss at the time of retirement is a matter of fact, whereas the amount of depreciation accrued must always be a theoretical premise.

We will continue to use the retirement basis for establishing tax losses rather than to select one of the other alternatives offered by the Tax Commissioner. When the reorganized company takes over, the method to be followed in subsequent years can be decided upon. Any taxes now paid will probably be subject to re-examination with respect to those due from the new company, and when this whole subject is under discussion the most advantageous method can be selected.

The "brief" referred to in the atfached papers, and particularly Commissioner Helvering's letter of October 24th, is one prepared by the A.A.R. dated April 20th, 1942, entitled To Chief Accounting Officers:

Herewith is copy of three letters, dated October 24, 1942, December 9, 1942, and March 6, 1943, addressed to this Association by Mr. Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in the matter of conditions under which railroads may change from retirement to depreciation accounting.

These letters reflect the result of negotiations which the special tax committee conducted with the Bureau of Internal Revenue and are self-explanatory.

Out of an abundance of caution, attention is directed to the fact that a taxpayer desiring to change his method of accounting must make application to the Commissioner for permission so to do within 90 days after the beginning of the taxable year in which the change is to be made. For the year 1943, the 90-day period will expire March 31st.

Yours very truly,

/s/ E. H. BUNNELL.

Attention: Mr. R. V. Fletcher

Sirs:

Reference is made to your letter of January 15, 1943, relating to the terms and conditions of the irrevocable agreement required by the Bureau upon granting permission to a railroad to change from retirement to depreciation accounting.

You suggest that an additional clause should be incorporated in the agreement reading "that the reserve for accrued depreciation to the date of the change in the accounting method shall not be used in computing invested capital for excess profits tax purposes."

Only true earned surplus or undivided profits can be included in invested capital, and if, for any reason, the books of a railroad do not properly reflect the true surplus, such adjustments must be made as are necessary in order to arrive at the correct amount of surplus. If, for example, the depreciation actually sustained with respect to the existing property is not reflected on the books of a corporation, earned surplus must be reduced to that extent.

Whether the depreciable assets of a corporation are valued on its books at the beginning of the taxable year at an amount in excess of their actual value at that time is a question of fact. Cumberland Glass Manufacturing Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F. (2d) 455; Geuder, Paeschke and Frey Co. v. Commissioner, 41 F. (2d) 308; Haugh & Keenan Storage and Transfer Company v. Heiner, 20 F. (2d) 921; Northwestern States Portland Cement Company, 7 B.T.A. 935.

In the opinion of this office it is necessary to reduce the surplus of a corporation changing from the retirement method to the depreciation method of accounting to the extent of the amounts indicated by the reserve for depreciation required by the conditions imposed by the Commissioner before permission to change can be granted. Therefore, the Bureau cannot consent to the inclusion of the suggested clause in the agreement.

Respectfully,

/s/ GUY T. HELVERING,
Commissioner.

Attention: Mr. R. V. Fletcher
Vice-President

Sirs:

Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of November 20, 1942, inquiring with respect to the form of agreement required by the Bureau upon granting permission to a railroad to change from retirement to depreciation accounting.

Each railroad is required to irrevocably agree: (1) that a reserve for accrued depreciation in accordance with one of the options set forth in Bureau letter of October 24, 1942, shall be set up as of the date the change in accounting method is effective; (2) that the remaining sum to be recovered through depreciation allowances shall be limited to the cost or other basis, less the depreciation so accrued; (3) that neither the change of method nor the amount of depreciation so accrued shall have any effect on taxable net income for any year ending prior to the date of change in accounting method; (4) that the depreciation rates agreed to are subject to modification, if subsequent experience indicates that revision is necessary in order to spread the cost of the assets over their remaining useful lives; such revision, however, is not to be made retroactive; and (5) that complete depreciation accounting in accordance with all of the applicable sections of the Internal Revenue Code and Regulations shall be adopted for those accounts which are changed from retirement to depreciation accounting.

In connection with condition (1) above it is necessary to select the option and agree upon the specific reserve for each account to be depreciated before permission is granted.

In view of the fact that it will be impossible for the Bureau to make a detailed investigation of the depreciation basis the permission letter includes a mutual understanding that the basis may be corrected to conform to the allowable basis under the Internal Revenue Code should subsequent investigation disclose errors of cost or valuation. In the event of any such correction, the accrued depreciation would be appropriately adjusted, but no retroactive adjustment will be made to the depreciation which may hav been allowed subsequent to the date of the change in accounting method.

Respectfully,

/s/ GUY T. HELVERING,
Commissioner.

In re: Conditons under which Railroads may change from Retirement to Depreciation Accounting with respect to Road Property

Sirs:

Reference is made to conferences between your Association and the Bureau of Internal Revenue on February 18 and 19, 1942, and to your brief on the above question, dated April 20, 1942.

Your brief has been considered by the Chief Counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, who has ruled in effect, that the conditions under which permission will be granted railroads to change from retirement to depreciation accounting with respect to road properties are within the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and that the reasonableness of these requirements are questions of fact, rather than of law.

This office also has given careful consideration to the brief which you submitted, and has come to the conclusion that, as a condition requisite to granting permission to change from retirement to depreciation accounting, a reserve representing past accrued depreciation shall be set up at the date of the change in accounting method.

Each railroad may elect to determine its reserve by one of the following methods:

1. The accounts may be reconstructed from their beginning, or may start with the I. C. C. valuation, setting up as a reserve the difference between cost of reproduction new and cost of reproduction less accrued depreciation as determined at the valuation date. From either starting point, the capital accounts shall be carried forward, increased by additions and decreased by retirements, except that any increase in replacement costs, or additions or betterments expensed, which have been deducted for income tax purposes, may not be restored. Depreciation at rates to be agreed upon shall be computed for all years and accrued into a depreciation reserve. From this reserve shall be deducted the cost of normal retirements, but for retirements due to casualty or special obsolescence, which would have been allowable under depreciation accounting, only the accrued depreciation thereon shall be deducted.

2. A reserve may be set up by multiplying the expired life of individual structures, or the weighted average ages of the accounts representing groups of assets, now in service, by the depreciation rates agreed upon for these assets.

3. A reserve of 30% of the total depreciable accounts at the date of change may be set up. It is to be understood that this is an overall reserve and the total amount so computed is to be allocated to the different depreciable accounts on a reasonable basis, such allocation to be a matter of agreement between each railroad and the Bureau.

Respectfully,

/s/ GUY T. HELVERING,
Commissioner.

Attention Mr. F. C. Nicodemus, Jr.

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

This Corporation has received notice from the Deputy Attorney General of Delaware stating that unless it pays the 1942 franchise tax and penalty interest by April 1, 1945, the Corporation's charter will be forfeited. The notice shows the following payments due as of April 1, 1945:

1942 franchise tax	$2,525.00
12% penalty interest	505.00
1943 franchise tax	2,525.00
12% penalty interest	202.00
Total	$5,757.00

I feel that upon application to the State Tax Board of Delaware, they will agree to reduce the tax and interest penalty as they did for the years 1940 and 1941. If a reduction is allowed on the same basis, there would be due on April 1st the following:

1942 franchise tax	$1,262.50
4% penalty interest	88.40

1943 franchise tax	1,262.50
4% penalty interest	37.90
Total	$2,651.30

The question in my mind is whether we should pay these taxes or let them go by default. If we default and our charter is voided, the question arises what would be the effect on the consolidated income and excess-profits tax returns filed by the Corporation, as parent, for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944. As you know, a very large deduction was taken in 1943, which wiped out any tax liability for that year and will also have an effect upon the 1942 and 1944 consolidated returns. I understand the total tax saving to The Western Pacific Railroad Company will amount to about 15 million dollars. Therefore, I feel the payment or non-payment of these franchise taxes must be determined particularly from the Federal income tax angle.

I would suggest that before arriving at a decision in this matter you confer with the firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, our tax counsel, who are aware of this situation and are considering the consequences which the non-payment of these franchise taxes would have from an income tax viewpoint.

If it is decided these franchise taxes be paid, my personal feeling is we should pay the tax for 1943 at the same time the 1942 tax is paid, thereby avoiding further accrual of penalty interest thereon.

I would appreciate your opinion on this at your early convenience.

A copy of this letter is being sent to Mr. Polk of the firm of W.R.C.& G., for his information.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

Dear Mr. Nicodemus:

As you know (see copies our letters dated March 21, 1944, to State of Delaware, Office of Attorney General, and March 31, 1944, to Corporation Trust Company, Wilmington, Delaware) the State Tax Board granted extension to July 1, 1944, for payment of the Corporation's 1941 franchise tax, which as of July 1, 1944, will amount to $1,262.50 principal, plus penalty interest of 4% from July 1, 1942, amounting to $101—a total of $1,363.50.

In view of conditions surrounding the Corporation at this time, I should like to have your opinion as to what should be done in the matter of payment or non-payment of the tax. If not paid on or before July 1, 1944, its charter will be voided.

Dear Mr. Curry:

As I mentioned to you yesterday, I talked with Colonel Coulson about the compromise proposal respecting the Delaware franchise tax involving the total payment as of July 1, 1944, of the sum of $1,363.50. In the course of this talk I explained to Colonel Coulson that it would be necessary to make this payment in order to continue the corporate existence of the Company through the current calendar year, and that I did not see how we could avoid making this payment out of current available cash.

I told him that I felt quite sure, and he agreed, that Mr. Buckland would recognize the necessity of this payment should he ultimately succeed in maintaining his claim of a lien on our cash derived from Standard Realty and Development Company, notwithstanding the fact that his own claim has been satisfied and he has been made whole under the Commission's Plan of Reorganization.

You may, therefore, arrange for the payment referred to in your letter to me of May 31, 1944.

INTERVENERS' EXHIBIT No. 8

March 27, 1943.

State of Delaware
State Tax Department 843 King Street
Wilmington, Delaware

Gentlemen:

Referring to letter of February 4, 1943, from the Office of the Attorney General, in regard to this Corporation's franchise taxes for 1940 and 1941, which are unpaid. Subsequently we also received from the Corporation Trust Company of Wilmington, Delaware, statement of franchise tax due on February 4, 1943, covering both years.

We have delayed replying, pending submission of the question to our Board of Directors.

We understand that under the Delaware statutes if the tax and accrued interest for the year 1940 is not paid by April 1, 1943, the Corporation's charter will be voided. As we are desirous of preventing this, if possible, we offer the following information in the hope that you will give favorable consideration to our request for relief through a compromise payment of the amount due.

This Corporation is a holding company, owning the entire capital stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, a California corporation, and one half of the common capital stock of The Denver and Rio Grande Western Railroad Company, a Delaware corporation, and, in addition, other securities of both companies, which companies have been in process of reorganization under Section 77 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act since late in 1935. Practically the entire assets of the Corporation are in these two companies, from which no income has been received since just prior to filing petitions in bankruptcy.

On March 15, 1943, the United States Supreme Court handed down its decision in the Western Pacific case, which affirmed the plan of reorganization promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by the Federal District Court in San Francisco, which plan declared the stock of the Railroad Company to be without value, thereby wiping out approximately 80% of this Corporation's assets. The Interstate Commerce Commission's modified plan of reorganization for the Denver and Rio Grande Western, which also declares the stock of that company to be without value, has not been certified to the Federal District Court in Denver, however, we feel that since the Supreme Court upheld the Commission in declaring the stock of the Western Pacific to be without value, the Commission will, no doubt, maintain its position that the preferred and common stock of the Denver and Rio Grande Western has no value.

Aside from the stocks of the Western Pacific Railroad, which the Court decision indicates to be without value, all of the assets of the Corporation, constituting securities of both companies, are pledged to secure loans which have been in default since 1934.

It therefore becomes necessary for the Corporation to liquidate and dissolve, which should be accomplished within a period of six months.

In view of the above facts, will you please advise if your Bureau is willing to accept a compromise payment of the 1940 franchise tax, that is, about half of the tax, and waive the interest which has accrued?

A prompt response will be very much appreciated.

Yours very truly,

/s/ M. J. CURRY.

Allan P. Matthew, Esquire
Balfour Building
San Francisco, California

Dear Mr. Matthew:

This acknowledges your letter of December 7th. Evidently my night letter of December 6th was not altogether clear.

My difficulty did not arise at all from the fact that Mr. Schumacher turned over his trustee files to Mr. Curry. That he seemed to me to have a clear right to do if he so desired to the extent that he was entitled as trustee to hold the files.

What did give me some concern was the definition of what constituted trustees files. Physically, the file cabinets contained all the correspondence which Mr. Schumacher or Mr. Curry had written in their capacities as officers of the operating company. In other words, the construction given your advice was that all documents which came into existence during the period of trusteeship belonged to the trustees in their fiduciary capacity. This I hoped you did not mean by your opinion. Obviously the books of account of the company were maintained in theory during the period of trusteeship by the agent of the trustees. It would be a quite impracticable theory that these books of account must remain in possession of the fiduciary trustees.

If you meant your advice to apply to all papers affecting the operation of the railroad company during the period of trusteeship then I think the situation should be clarified by a prompt application by the railroad company to the court for an order directing the trustees to turn over to the officers of the reorganized company all papers which they held as fiduciaries and which affected the operations of the railroad company, subject, of course, to a right of inspection on the part of the trustees if any occasion therefor should arise.

If there is in the books any authority entitling Section 77 trustees operating a railroad company under supervision of the court to retain the vital records of the railroad company after their fiduciary capacity has terminated, I would certainly be interested in seeing the authority.

Naturally, my interest in the question discussed in this letter is solely in protecting the operating company in connection with the Van Kirk litigation here in New York, of which you have partial counterparts in the actions brought by the holding company in California. In this connection we have received copies of your answers in the California tax action of the holding company and I have also talked with Mr. Polk about his discussions with your office.

With all good wishes of the Season, I am

Sincerely yours,

/s/ ROBERT E. COULSON.

Dear Mr. Polk:

In order that you may have definite authorization from this Company to proceed in connection with the pending controversy as to Federal income taxes for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944, as to which you hold power of attorney, I have today conferred with all available directors. All of the directors I have been able to reach, constituting a majority of the directors, have concurred in the proposal that you submit in writing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a definite proposal that the three years 1942, 1943 and 1944 be settled on the basis of no refund and no additional tax.

We understand that the year 1944 is involved in this controversy, so far as this Company is con-explained that under the Commission Plan you and your Board have an equal right with the A. C. James Co. in the designation of a representative. I have, however, agreed to put the problem up to you and have stated to my fellow trustees that I thought there was no conflict in interest between your organization and ours since we are both anxious to see the common stock given those marketable characteristics which will come from putting it on a dividend basis.

There is one further embarrassment in the situation which has led me to defer talking with you about the matter. My associate trustees, who feel strongly that we should have representation in the Reorganization Committee, are unanimous in feeling that no one of them should serve and that it is my duty to serve because of my close contact with the matter and my knowledge of the properties and personalities involved. This has raised a problem to which I have been giving some thought. Under the terms of Section 77 a reorganization committee serves without compensation. With this I have no quarrel. However, I have a very real interest in seeing the Federal taxes of the reorganized property placed upon a sound basis. We have quite an effective Federal tax department and my partner, James K. Polk, was retained some time ago by the trustees to take up this Federal tax matter in connection with the 1942 tax problems of the property. You no doubt realize how complicated this matter has become for a railroad which has gotten into the excess profits areas, especially in connection with a reorganization of its capital structure. I would be extremely reluctant to have any participation, which I might have in the Reorganization Committee, disturb the relationship which Polk and our tax department have to this problem.

When Bob Swaine talked to me about this matter, I told him quite frankly about this aspect. He seemed, a little to my surprise, quite eager that the James group should have direct representation on the Committee. No doubt he feels that a preliminary commitment on their part is, under the Commission Plan, basically necessary in setting up any permanent organization because of the voting power which they can exercise under the requirement of cumulative balloting. He said he saw no objection to a dual relationship and further volunteered that if his firm were selected as counsel for the Reorganization Committee, he would feel that their responsibility to the Reorganization Committee were completely fulfilled if their tax men merely reviewed with Polk the solutions and practical determinations worked out by Polk and his associates.

I wish you would give this entire problem consideration and either write me as to your views or arrange that you and I should sit down at some convenient time when you are here in New York and discuss the entire matter.

Mr. Boyden told me early in the week on the telephone that he hoped to get out the ballots in the Western Pacific case late this week or early next cerned, only during the period of affiliation, that is, through April 30, 1944, and that for the balance of the year 1944 the taxes of this Company will be determined on the basis of its separate return for that period outside the affiliation.

This authorization will be formally ratified at a meeting of the Board of Directors to be held early in March, 1947.

Very truly yours,

/s/ CHARLES ELSEY.

Dear Sir:

The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and its affiliated subsidiaries filed consolidated returns for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 and the said Western Pacific Railroad Corporation filed a consolidated return for the calendar year 1944 including therein its said subsidiaries for the period from January 1, 1944, to April 30, 1944, during which period affiliation existed.

On the said return for 1942 a consolidated tax liability of $4,201,821.54 was reported and duly assessed and paid. On the said return for 1943 there was reported a net loss and no taxable income. On the said erturn for 1944, based on a carryover of the unused 1943 net loss, there was reported no taxable income and no tax liability. A claim for refund of the tax so paid for 1942, based on a carryback of the said 1943 net loss, was filed and is now pending in your office.

The taxpayer on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries hereby offers to settle and determine the tax liabilities of the said corporations for the said taxable years 1942, 1943 and 1944 in the amounts shown on the returns filed as aforesaid. This proposal of settlement does not relate to or affect the tax liability of the said subsidiaries from and after April 30, 1944, when their affiliated status with The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation was terminated. The within proposal is made without prejudice to any rights or claims of the parties, if the proposal is not accepted by you.

As part of this proposal The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries agrees that, if this proposal is accepted, it will consent to a rejection of the said claim for refund of the 1942 taxes, and further agrees not to sue upon said claim or file other or further claims in respect of 1942 taxes on any ground whatsoever. It is further agreed by the said The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation on behalf of itself and its aforesaid affiliated subsidiaries that if this proposal is accepted it will execute or procure the execution of any other or further agreements or assurances requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the purpose of effectuating the settlement.

Authority for the submission of the within proposal of settlement by the undersigned is contained in a Power of Attorney heretofore filed in your office.

Respectfully,

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION,

JAMES K. POLK,
Attorney-in-Fact.

June 5, 1943

E. T. Buckland, Esq.
New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad

Western Pacific

Dear Mr. Buckland:

Bob Swaine called me up the other day to urge that you and I agree promptly upon the third member of the Reorganization Committee so that that Committee can appoint counsel and get to work on documents even prior to the formal approval of the Commission Plan by security holders. I told Bob that you and I had not yet discussed the matter of the third member of the Board and that the fault is mine.

My fellow trustees in the James Foundation (which holds all the stock of A. C. James Co.) are all clearly of the opinion that it would be advisable, if practical, for our group to have representation on the Reorganization Committee. Their argument is that, owing to the substantial bond holdings of the Foundation, the Foundation will have something like 21½% of the voting stock of the reorganized company. This interest is, of course, substantially greater than that which will be held by The Railroad Credit Corporation. It is also likely to be, of necessity, a more permanent interest. I have week. I still feel it is of the utmost importance to have the reorganization made effective on the last day of the present calendar year.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT E. COULSON.

Mr. M. J. Curry, President

Dear Mr. Curry:

This acknowledges your letter of June 21st as to the present needs of The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation.

While I am sending copies of your letter and of my reply to each of the Trustees of the James Foundation, it will probably not be possible to take formal action on your proposal until after July 1st.

In any attempt to settle the affairs of the holding company in a manner which will wipe out the large deficiency claims held by the Curtiss Southwestern Company, Chase National Bank of New York and Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, it would probably be desirable to provide, as a part of the consideration for the cancellation of the deficiency claims, that The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation agree to cooperate, by voting its stock in the Western Pacific Railroad Company, which stock has been declared worthless by the decision of the Supreme Court, to facilitate any necessary changes in the corporate structure of the operating company to effectuate the reorganization.

In a recent telephone conversation with Mr. Arthur Grotz, of the Chase National Bank, I learned that the Chase National Bank claims a lien on the stock of the operating company owned by the holding company. This lien presumably has no validity, as it has not been approved, so far as I am informed, by the necessary vote of two-thirds of the stockholders present at a stockholders' meeting. However, this situation does create some embarrassment in working out any settlement agreement.

As to the possible cancellation of your Delaware charter by failure to pay the 1940 franchise tax on or before July 1, 1943, this probably is of more apparent than real importance. Under the Delaware law the corporation continues its existence for all necessary purposes for a period of three years.

Before the Foundation gives a final and definitive answer to your proposal, I would wish to discuss with Mr. Polk the tax aspects of the problem and make that information available to the Trustees of the Foundation. You will hear from me further in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ ROBERT E. COULSON.

Following statement was issued here in connection our December figures Quote During the first eleven months of 1943 Western Pacific made accruals in anticipation of Federal Income and Excess Profits taxes for that year. A recent reexamination of certain provisions of the reorganization plan which calls for severe reductions in the capitalization of the company has resulted in the conclusion by the management that no Federal income and excess profits tax liability exists in respect of 1943. In view of this conclusion entries were necessarily made in December income accounts which resulted in elimination of all such tax accruals for 1943. These adjustments produced the unusual income results for the month of December and the year. Unquote.

Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax
Liability ~~and for Post-War
Modernization and Improvement~~

Dear Mr. Elsey:

Herewith I enclose in duplicate a proposed form of petition and a proposed form of order relating to the establishment of a reserve fund to be used for the payment of any possible Federal income and excess profits tax liability for the year 1943 and for post-war modernization and improvement of the railroad. You will notice that both the petition and the order are very brief and contain no statement of the reasons why it is believed that there is no Federal tax due for 1943. I think this subject can be fully developed at the hearing, following the outline suggested in Mr. Coulson's memorandum of

February 4, 1944, which you sent me with your letter of the same date.

The title for the fund suggested by Mr. Coulson was "Reserve for Contingent Tax Liabilities." This title has been expanded in the enclosed forms to "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liability and for Post-War Modernization and Improvement." It seems to me to be desirable to use the term "reserve fund" instead of the word "reserve" alone. Also, I believe that there may be some advantages in including "post-war modernization and improvement" as part of the title of the fund, so that in years to come the ultimate purpose of the fund will always be clearly disclosed on the books of account and balance sheets.

Please let me have your comments on the enclosed forms. You may wish to consult with Mr. DeGraff in order to make certain that the proposal is not in conflict with the accounting classifications or other rules or regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I shall defer submitting these forms to Mr. Coulson until I hear from you.

Very truly yours,

/s/ ALLAN P. MATTHEW.

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,

PETITION FOR AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH A RESERVE FUND FOR CONTINGENT TAX LIABILITY AND FOR POSTWAR MODERNIZATION AND IMPROVEMENT

T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, the duly appointed, qualified and acting Trustees of the properties of the Debtor above named, hereinafter referred to as the Trustees, hereby represent to the Court and petition as follows:

I.

The Trustees are advised and believe that the Debtor and the Trustees have no Federal income or excess profits tax liability for the year 1943.

However, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not yet passed upon the question, and the Trustees believe that it is in the best interests of the estate of the Debtor to provide a reserve fund out of which 1943 Federal income and excess profits taxes may be paid in the event that liability therefor should be established. The Trustees are advised and believe that the sum of $7,100,000 will be adequate to cover any possible liability for such taxes for the year 1943. The estate of the Debtor contains sufficient cash derived from the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943 to establish a reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000 without using funds required for other purposes.

II

It is the judgment of the Trustees that such reserve fund should be invested in United States Treasury securities and that any portion of the fund not required in order to meet such possible tax liability should be held and used for the modernization and improvement of the railroad of the Debtor after the conclusion of the present war. The Trustees propose to designate the fund as the "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liability and for Post-War Modernization and Improvement."

Wherefore, your petitioners pray that they be authorized to establish, out of the earnings of the railroad of the Debtor during the year 1943, a reserve fund in the amount of $7,100,000, to be desig-

MEREDITH H. METZGER, HENRY OFFERMAN and J. S. FARLEE & CO., INC., a Corporation, Interveners and Appellants, vs.

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, et al.,

Defendants and Appellees.

STATEMENT BY APPELLANTS THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION AND ALEXIS I. duP. BAYARD, RECEIVER, OF POINTS ON WHICH THEY INTEND TO RELY ON APPEAL

Appellants The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Alexis I. duP. Bayard, Receiver, designate the following points upon which they intend to rely on the appeal in the above-entitled cause:

1. The District Court erred in entering judgment for defendants and against plaintiffs.

2. The District Court erred in failing to hold that plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting from defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company and to a decree directing payment to plaintiffs of the entire amount of federal tax savings for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, amounting to $17,201,739, resulting from the filing of consolidated federal income and excess profits tax returns in the name of the plaintiff corporation.

3. The District Court erred in failing to hold that plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting from defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company and to a decree directing payment to the plaintiffs of some part of the above-mentioned $17,201,739.

4. The District Court erred in holding that the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company was not bound to account to the plaintiffs for the benefits which said defendant obtained as the result of satisfying its federal tax liabilities by using tax credits and deductions of the plaintiff corporation at a time when the plaintiff corporation had lost its stock equity in said defendant and arising principally out of that very loss.

5. The District Court erred in failing to hold that, where the economic unity between a parent and a subsidiary corporation has been severed and the parent's stockholdings in the subsidiary have become worthless and the subsidiary utilizes or appropriates the parent's tax credit, arising from the loss of the parent's investment in the subsidiary, by means of a consolidated return in which it satisfies its own tax liability by offsetting the parent's loss against the subsidiary's income and obtains other tax advantages from the use of the consolidated return with the parent, the former subsidiary must account to its former parent for the enrichment thus obtained.

6. The District Court erred in failing to hold that plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting from the defendants other than The Western Pacific Railroad Company and to a decree directing them to pay to the plaintiffs either all or part of their tax savings for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944 resulting from the filing of consolidated federal income and excess profits tax returns in the name of the plaintiff corporation.

7. The District Court erred in holding that the use in consolidated returns with defendants of plaintiff corporation's loss to offset income of defendants and thus to produce tax savings was, as respects the United States, improper.

8. The District Court erred in holding that because of the alleged impropriety of the defendants' use in consolidated returns of the plaintiff corporation's loss to offset income of defendants, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an accounting of the tax savings thus resulting, and that the court should leave the parties where they are.

9. The District Court erred in failing to hold that by virtue of the stipulation filed in the District Court on September 5, 1947, and its order of August 29, 1947, the sum of $3,385,290 must be deemed to have been refunded to the plaintiff corporation by the Treasury Department in the ordinary course and manner prescribed by law and by that plaintiff paid into said District Court, that the said sum is now held by defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company as agent of the District Court, that the said defendant should be directed to return said sum of $3,385,290 to the Clerk of the District Court, and that the Clerk should be directed to deliver said sum forthwith to the plaintiffs in accordance with the District Court's opinion that the funds or tax savings resulting from the settlement with the government should be left where they are.

10. The District Court erred in holding that what plaintiff seeks is not all or a share of the tax savings but rather something in the nature of equity or value for its former ownership of stock of the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company, or something denied to it in the prior Reorganization Plan of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, and that recognition of said plaintiff's claim would be recognition of a right to share in the earnings of The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

11. The District Court erred in holding that Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act or the philosophy underlying Section 77 stands as a barrier against the equitable validity of the plaintiff's claim in this cause, and that an award to the plaintiff would in some way modify the administrative or judicial judgments in the said reorganization proceedings of the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company or would nullify either directly or indirectly the purpose of said Section 77.

12. The District Court erred in holding that "duality of control" is not relevant in resolving the issues in the case.

13. The District Court erred in holding that the plaintiff corporation could not have lawfully acquired any part of the tax savings here involved by voluntary agreement between the directorates of the plaintiff corporation and the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

14. The District Court erred in holding that the plaintiff corporation's right to a recovery depends on whether it could have lawfully acquired the tax savings by voluntary agreement between the directorates of the plaintiff corporation and the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

STATEMENT BY APPELLANTS MEREDITH H. METZGER, HENRY OFFERMAN AND J. S. FARLEE & CO., INC., OF THE POINTS ON WHICH THEY INTEND TO RELY

Appellants Meredith H. Metzger, Henry Offerman and J. S. Farlee & Co., Inc., state the following points on which they intend to rely on appeal in the above-entitled case:

1. Appellants are entitled to judgment on the ground that the moneys in issue were obtained in breach of fiduciary duties to plaintiff and constitute an unjust enrichment to defendants.

2. The Court below erred in finding that the fund in issue was created in such a fashion as to require equity to leave the parties where it found them.

3. Assuming, arguendo, that the Court below correctly determined that the parties should be left where it found them, then, pursuant to that Court's own pre-trial order, the judgment should find and leave appellants with $3,385,290.00

4. The reorganization proceeding involving the defendant The Western Pacific Railroad Company not only fails to preclude appellants from obtaining a favorable judgment herein, but indeed permits the assertion of the instant claims against that defendant under an assumption order and agreement duly made in said proceedings.

5. Defendants' technical defenses are without merit.

PETITION OF REORGANIZATION COMMITTEE FOR AN ORDER APPROVING AND AUTHORIZING: INDENTURES RELATING TO FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS AND GENERAL MORTGAGE INCOME BONDS, INCLUDING FORMS OF BONDS, FORM OF INTEREST COUPON AND FORMS OF TRUSTEE'S CERTIFICATES OF AUTHENTICATION; ADJUSTMENT PAYMENTS TO PERSONS TO WHOM NEW SECURTIES ARE ISSUABLE IN RESPECT OF THE PERIOD JANUARY 1, 1939, TO DECEMBER 31, 1943, INCLUSIVE; THE AGGREGATE PRINCIPAL AMOUNT OF GENERAL MORTGAGE INCOME BONDS TO CONSTITUTE SERIES A, THE AGGREGATE PAR VALUE OF THE SHARES OF PREFERRED STOCK TO CONSTITUTE SERIES A, AND ADJUSTMENTS IN THE AGGREGATE AMOUNT OF SAID BONDS AND THE

AGGREGATE PAR VALUE OF SAID STOCK TO BE ISSUED UNDER THE PLAN; THE DENOMINATION OR PAR VALUE, RESPECTIVELY, OF GENERAL MORTGAGE INCOME BOND SCRIP OF SERIES A AND PREFERRED STOCK SCRIP OF SERIES A; AND ADJUSTMENTS IN THE AMOUNT OF GENERAL MORTGAGE INCOME BONDS OF SERIES A AND PREFERRED STOCK OF SERIES A TO BE ISSUED TO THE RAILROAD CREDIT CORPORATION AND A. C. JAMES CO.

Frederick H. Ecker, Frank C. Wright and Robert E. Coulson, being all the members of the Reorganization Committee designated to put into effect and carry out the plan of reorganization of the debtor above named, hereby represent to the Court and petition as follows:

1. The plan of reorganization of the debtor (hereinafter called "the plan") confirmed by order of this Court on October 11, 1943, provides in subdivision R. as follows:

> "The plan may be carried out either by revesting the properties formerly of the debtor in the debtor company or by transferring said properties to a new corporation organized for the purpose, and the execution by the corporation in which said properties are vested of the new mortgages and the issue by it of the new securities contemplated by the plan.

"The method of carrying out the plan shall be determined by the reorganization committee in its discretion, and the reorganization committee shall also determine, subject to the approval of the court, the form, and, except as herein otherwise expressly provided, the provisions, of all mortgages, bonds, coupons, charters, by-laws, stock certificates, voting trust certificates, acceptances, assents, and all other instruments in the judgment of the reorganization committee necessary or desirable in connection with carrying out the plan.

2. Pursuant to the foregoing provisions of the plan, your petitioners have determined, acting on advice of counsel, that the debtor company should be used in carrying out and making effective the plan of reorganization and should execute the new mortgages and issue the new securities contemplated by the plan. A separate petition is being filed by your petitioners for the approval by this Court of the use of the debtor company.

3. For the purpose of putting into effect and carrying out said plan your petitioners have approved as to substance and general form, and submit herewith for the approval of the Court, the following:

(a) Indenture relating to the First Mortgage Bonds contemplated by the plan, a printer's proof of which is filed herewith as "Exhibit A";

(b) Indenture relating to the General Mortgage

Income Bonds contemplated by the plan, printer's proof of which is filed herewith as "Exhibit B";

4. The indenture relating to the new First Mortgage Bonds (Exhibit A) contemplates the issuance of bonds of Series A in both coupon and registered form. Said indenture sets forth the form of Series A Coupon Bond, which is in the denomination of $1,000, the form of interest coupon for Series A Coupon Bonds, the form of Series A Registered Bond, without coupons, and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication, applicable to both forms of bonds. The substance and general form of the foregoing are intended to be included in the submission for approval of the Court hereunder.

5. The indenture relating to the General Mortgage Income Bonds (Exhibit B) contemplates the issuance of bonds of Series A in registered form only. It is contemplated that the bonds of Series A will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000, and such other denominations, if any, as may be authorized by the Company, said denominations to be interchangeable except that an exchange may not be made for bonds of a lesser denomination when any such lesser denomination would be less than $1,000. Said Exhibit B sets forth the form of bond of Series A and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication. The substance and general form of the foregoing are intended to be included in the submission for approval of the Court hereunder.

6. The plan of reorganization of the debtor requires, and the forms of new First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, and of new General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, contemplate that the new bonds distributed under the plan of reorganization shall be dated as of January 1, 1939. Petitioners have determined, subject to the approval of the Court, that the new Preferred Stock, Series A, and the new common stock to be issued upon consummation of the Plan should be dated as of January 1, 1944.

7. The form of indenture for the General Mortgage Income bonds (Exhibit B) submitted to the Court herewith necessarily includes (Sec. 5.03) the determinations made by your petitioners, subject to the approval of the Court, of the "available net income" of the properties of the debtor during the period from January 1, 1939 to December 31, 1943, as required by Subdivision L of the plan of reorganization and the allocation of this income in accordance with the equitable rights under the plan of the participating creditors who will receive the new securities. The plan clearly contemplates that, as between the classes of interested creditors, the available net income of the debtor for any period after January 1, 1939, until the reorganized company comes into ownership and possession of the properties of the debtor shall be treated as if the reorganized company had come into such ownership and possession of the properties on January 1, 1939, and had issued as of that date the new securities issuable under the plan, other than the $10,000,000 First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, and contemplates that for the period after January 1, 1939, until the reorganized company comes into ownership and possession of the debtor's properties, the persons to whom the new securities are issuable shall be entitled to receive appropriate payments in lieu of the interest and dividends to which they would presumably have been entitled under the provisions of the plan, if the plan had been consummated on January 1, 1939.

8. All the securities to be issued in this reorganization will be issued to first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors of the debtor. No provision is made under the plan for unsecured creditors or for owners of preferred or common stock of the debtor company. During the period from January 1, 1939, through the calendar year 1943, the properties of the debtor, which have been under the management of the Trustees appointed by this Court, have shown substantial earnings which would have been available for interest and dividends. The Reorganization Committee, under its duty to carry out the plan pursuant to its terms and intent, and subject to the approval of this Court, has determined that there should be made to said first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors at the time they surrender the obligations of the debtor which they now hold, and receive in satisfaction thereof the new securities authorized under the plan, certain adjustment payments in cash representing the amounts which said first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors might presumably have received on the new securities which they are to receive under the plan, if such securities had actually been in existence since January 1, 1939, and payments of interest and dividends made thereunder.

9. In determining the amounts of adjustment payments which it is proposed to make, at the time of the consummation of the plan, to carry out the intent of the plan as to recognition as between the various classes of creditors of their equitable right to participate in earnings on the same basis as if the new securities had actually been issued on January 1, 1939, your petitioners have reviewed the earnings records of the properties of the debtor for the period from January 1, 1939, through the calendar year 1943.

10. As reported by the accounting department maintained by the Trustees appointed by this Court, the earnings of the estate of the debtor and its wholly owned railway subsidiaries in the year 1939, after capital fund requirements and before interest (other than equipment trust and trustees' certificate interest), were $567,407.30, and were therefore such that income in that amount, viz. $567,407.30 would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds to be issued upon consummation of the plan. The corresponding earnings in the year 1940, amounting to $1,707,964.93, were such that income in the amount of $954,855 would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of full interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds for the year 1940, income of $387,447.70 for the balance of unpaid interest on such bonds for the year 1939, income of $106,090 for sinking fund requirements with respect to such bonds for the year 1940, and income in the amount of $259,572.23 would have been available for the payment of dividends on the preferred stock to be issued upon consummation of the plan or for other corporate purposes. The corresponding earnings in the year 1941, amounting to $3,650,651.56, were such that sufficient income would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of full interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds, the sinking fund requirement and a dividend of 5% on the preferred stock and after such payments a balance of $997,196.56 of income available for dividends on the common stock and for other corporate purposes would have remained. The corresponding earnings in the year 1942, amounting to $9,126,016.98, were such that sufficient income would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of full interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds, the sinking fund requirement and a dividend of 5% on the preferred stock, and after such payments a balance of $6,472,561.98, of income available for dividends on the common stock and for other corporate purposes would have remained. The corresponding earnings in the year 1943, amounting to $18,683,299.07, were such that sufficient income would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of full interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds, the sinking fund requirement and a dividend of 5% on the preferred stock, and after such payments a balance of $16,029,844.07 of income available for dividends on the common stock and for other corporate purposes would have remained. Attached hereto, as Exhibit "C," is a summary of Available Net Income and Other Data for the period January 1, 1939 to December 31, 1943, inclusive.

11. The above data (paragraph 10) as to earnings after capital fund requirements and before interest (other than equipment trust and trustees' certificate interest) for the period from January 1, 1939 through the calendar year 1943, are subject to the following comments:

(a) The amounts of such earnings for each calendar year are shown after deducting the capital fund requirements, as provided in the plan, without application of the over-all limitation of $1,000,000, which, as provided in the indenture (Section 5.05) relating to the General Mortgage Income Bonds (Exhibit B) submitted herewith for approval, has been left for adjustment, in respect of the cost of capital investments during the period between January 1, 1939 and December 31, 1943, in the discretion of the directors after the reorganization.

(b) The amounts of such earnings for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 are after deducting deferred maintenance reserves charged to operating expenses, namely, the respective amounts of $999,082 and $1,172,542, and amounts for amortization of road defense projects charged to operating expenses, namely, the respective amounts of $63,840.84 and $134,412.46.

(c) The amount of such earnings for the calendar year 1943, is before deduction of a special funded tax reserve which has been set up in the amount of $7,100,000. However, after deduction of such reserve there would still remain the amount of $11,583,299.07, which would have been available, under the provisions of the plan, for the payment of full interest on the General Mortgage Income Bonds, the sinking fund requirements and a dividend of 5% on the preferred stock, and after such payment a balance of $8,929,844.07 available for dividends on the common stock and for other corporate purposes would have remained.

(d) The amount of interest upon the General Mortgage Income Bonds and the amount of the preferred stock dividends have been computed upon the aggregate principal or par amounts of such securities contemplated under the plan to be issued in the reorganization, reduced by the minor amounts in respect of the proposed cash payments referred to under paragraph 18 hereinbelow.

(e) The aggregate amount of earnings for the entire period from January 1, 1939, through the calendar year 1943, which would have been available to pay interest to the old first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors was $35,434,735.76. This amount is to be compared with the aggregate interest for the period ($14,437,203.55) which such creditors entitled to participate under the plan would legally be entitled to receive under the obligations of the debtor which they hold but for the provision of the plan as to equitable adjustment on the basis of the new securities to be issued on the consummation of the plan.

(f) The properties of the debtor earned for the years specified below, after all interest and preferred dividends, and available for dividends on the common stock and other proper corporate purposes, the following approximate amounts per share of common stock to be issued under the plan:

Year	Earnings per share
1941	$ 3.12

In respect of the year 1943, if the special tax reserve, referred to above in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph 11, were to be deducted, the approximate earnings per share would be $27.99.

(g) The foregoing amounts per share and the aggregate amount set forth in paragraph 13 hereinbelow, have been computed upon the basis of the full number of common shares to be issued in the reorganization, as determined by the decision of this Court construing the plan, dated June 21, 1944, namely, 319,032,767 shares. This number is subject to reduction in respect of the number of shares to be issued to The Railroad Credit Corporation depending upon the amount of payments to that Corporation under the marshalling and distributing plan of 1931 which amount cannot be finally determined until the time of the consummation of the reorganization.

12. In the reports of October 10, 1938, and June 21, 1939, filed by the Interstate Commeree Commission in connection with this reorganization, the Commission has clearly expressed its desire and purpose that the new financial structure should include only such an amount of common stock as might permit reasonable dividends (sometimes specified as $3.00 per share) to be earned and paid thereon under normal conditions. The properties of the debtor earned, during the five-year period from January 1, 1939 to December 31, 1943, after interest, capital fund, sinking fund and preferred stock dividends under the new capital structure, an aggregate amount equal to approximately $73.66 per share on the proposed new common stock. However, these earnings available for common stock dividends and other corporate purposes occurred entirely in the years 1941, 1942 and 1943. The plan provides that not more than $3.00 per share with respect to any one year shall be paid to the common stockholders of the reorganized company without additional participation by the preferred stockholders.

13. After full consideration of the purpose and intent of the plan, your petitioners have determined and recommend to the Court for approval that an aggregate amount of $12,684,271.54 be paid to the present first mortgage and secured creditors, at the time of the consummation of the plan, representing their equitable right as provided in the plan to participate in earnings of the properties during the period from January 1, 1939 through December 31, 1943, to be paid at the time they surrender the obligations of the debtor now held by them for the new securities authorized under the plan.

14. The cash held by the debtor's Trustees is such that, without endangering the cash resources of the reorganized company, such adjustment payments may be made to such bondholders and secured creditors.

15. Petitioners recommend that upon the distribution of the new General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, Preferred Stock, Series A, and common stock, under the provisions of the plan of reorganization, the debtor's Trustees make or cause to be made, through the exchange-depositary to be approved by the Court by one or more checks as may be convenient, adjustment payments in cash as follows:

(a) with each General Mortgage 4½% Income Bond, Series A, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of 22½% of the principal amount thereof;

(b) with each share of Preferred stock, Series A, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of $15.82; and

(c) with each share of common stock, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of $9.00.

16. Your petitioners do not recommend that cash payments be made with the scrip certificates for the General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds or with the scrip certificates for preferred and common stock, but recommend that provision be made for a deposit of sufficient funds with an agent to be approved by the Court for payments corresponding in amounts and percentages to those stated in paragraph 15 hereof, when such scrip is exchanged for General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Preferred Stock and Common Stock, respectively.

17. The plan of reorganization of the debtor provides in subdivision P. for the issuance of a specific amount or number of bonds and shares of stock to the various creditors entitled to participate under the plan. In order to satisfy the requirements, it will be necessary, in the instance of the General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, the Preferred Stock, Series A, and the common stock to be issued under the plan, to provide bond and stock scrip. The form and substance of such scrip will be submitted later for the approval of this Court. At this time, however, your petitioners have determined, subject to the approval of the Court, that the scrip for said bonds and the scrip for said Preferred Stock should be limited in each case to one denomination or par amount; namely, $20, and that the scrip for said common stock should be for a number of fractions of a share which would not be fixed but would be filled in when issued with appropriate fractions of not less than thousandths of a share.

18. In the event the denomination and par amount of the foregoing bond and preferred stock scrip are limited to $20, the requirements of The Railroad Credit Corporation and the A. C. James Co. under subdivision P. of the plan cannot be satisfied exactly by the issuance of such scrip. Furthermore, the aggregate principal amount of Series A bonds to be issued under the plan, namely $21,219,075, does not enable a complete issuance of bonds in denominations the lowest of which is $100.00. Similarly the aggregate par value of the Series A Preferred Stock to be issued under the plan, namely, $31,850,297, does not enable a complete issuance of full shares where as in this instance the par value is $100. Accordingly your petitioners propose, subject to the approval of the Court, to provide for the issuance of an aggregate principal amount of General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, of $21,219,000 and for the issuance of Preferred Stock, Series A in the aggregate par value of $31,850,200. Your petitioners have determined in this connection, subject to the approval of the Court, that the aggregate principal amount of Series A of said bonds should be fixed at the amount of $21,219,000, the amount shown in the indenture relating to said bonds (Exhibit B) and that the total number of shares in Series A of said preferred stock should be fixed at 318,502 shares. Your petitioners propose, further, subject to the approval of the Court, to make the necessary adjustments, so that the total amount of said Series A Bonds and the total par value of said Series A Preferred Stock issued to all claimants under the plan (including bonds and stock issued to cover scrip) will equal the foregoing aggregate principal and par amounts, by reducing the amount of Series A Bonds and Series A Preferred Stock to be issued to The Railroad Credit Corporation and the A. C. James Co., with payments of the difference in cash as follows:

	Income Bonds		Preferred Stock		Total
	Per Plan	Proposed	Per Plan	Proposed	Cash
The Railroad Credit Corporation	$154,111	$154,080 in bonds 31 in cash	$241,681	$241,640 in stock 41 in cash	$ 72
A. C. James Co.	$163,724	$163,680 in bonds 44 in cash	$256,756	$256,700 in stock 56 in cash	100

Wherefore, your petitioners pray for the order of this Court:

(a) Approving, in substance and general form, the Indenture relating to the First Mortgage Bonds contemplated by the plan of reorganization of the debtor, a printer's proof of which is filed herewith as "Exhibit A," subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

(b) Approving, in substance and general form, the Indenture relating to the General Mortgage Income Bonds contemplated by the plan of reorganization of the debtor, a printer's proof of which is filed herewith as "Exhibit B," subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

(c) Approving in substance and general form, the bonds, interest coupon and trustee's certificates of authentication, the forms of which are set forth in said Exhibits "A" and "B," subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

(d) Approving the recommendation of your petitioners that First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, and General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, to be issued pursuant to the plan, be dated as of January 1, 1939, and that Preferred Stock, Series A, and common stock, to be issued pursuant to the plan, be dated as of January 1, 1944;

(e) Approving the recommendation of your petitioners, and directing the Trustees of the debtor's estate, at the time of the consummation of the plan, to make the adjustment payments in cash, set forth in paragraphs 15 and 16 hereof, in the aggregate amount of $12,684,271.54;

(f) Approval of the fixing of the aggregate principal amount of Series A of the General Mortgage Income Bonds at the amount of $21,219,000 and the total number of shares in Series A of the Preferred Stock at 318,502 shares, and the issuance of only said aggregate principal amount of said bonds and said total number of shares of said stock in fulfillment of the requirements of the plan of reorganization of the debtor.

(g) Approving the issuance of scrip in respect of General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A and scrip in respect of Preferred Stock, Series A, only in denomination and par value, respectively, of $20, and the issuance of scrip with respect to common stock in the form of open or blank denomination to be filled in when issued with appropriate fractions of not less than thousandths of a share.

(h) Approval of the adjustments in the amount of General Mortgage Income Bonds and Preferred Stock to be issued to The Railroad Credit Corporation and A. C. James Co. and the cash payments to said creditors as proposed in paragraph 18 hereof.

(i) Granting such other and further relief as may be proper in the premises.

aggregate principal amount of General Mortgage Income Bonds to constitute Series A, the aggregate par value and number of shares of Preferred Stock to constitute Series A, and adjustments in the aggregate amount of said bonds and the aggregate par value of said stock to be issued under the plan; the denominations, respectively, of General Mortgage Income Bond Scrip of Series A, Preferred Stock Scrip of Series A, and Common Stock Scrip; and adjustments in the amount of General Mortgage Income Bonds of Series A and Preferred Stock of Series A to be issued to The Railroad Credit Corporation and A. C. James Co., duly came on to be heard and was heard September 25, 1944, and has been submitted.

The Court being fully advised in the premises finds that notice of the hearing upon said petition has been given as prescribed by the order of this Court dated and filed August 23, 1944, and that all of the allegations and representations contained in the petition are true except for certain minor corrections made and noted at the hearing on September 25, 1944. The Court further finds and concludes:

(a) The proposed indenture relating to the First Mortgage Bonds contemplated by the plan (Exhibit "A" filed with the petition), with the corrections and changes submitted by petitioners at the hearing on September 25, 1944, and the denomination and form of Series A Coupon Bond, the form of Interest Coupon for Series A Coupon Bonds, the form of Series A Registered Bond without coupons, and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication applicable to both forms of bonds, all as set forth in said Exhibit "A," are consistent with the plan of reorganization and appropriate for carrying out and making effective the plan and should be approved;

(b) The proposed indenture relating to the General Mortgage Income Bonds contemplated by the plan (Exhibit "B" filed with the petition), with the corrections and changes submitted by petitioners at the hearing on September 25, 1944, and the denominations and form of Series A Registered Bond and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication set forth in said Exhibit "B," are consistent with the plan of reorganization and appropriate for carrying out and making effective the plan and should be approved;

(c) The mortgage indentures should be dated as of January 1, 1939, as provided in the plan of reorganization; the First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, should be dated as of January 1, 1939; the General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, should be dated as of January 1, 1939; and the new Preferred Stock, Series A, and the new common stock to be issued upon consummation of the plan should be dated as of January 1, 1944;

(d) The available net income of the debtor and its subsidiaries for the years 1939 to 1943, inclusive, determined under the provisions of Subdivision L of the plan, is as follows:

1939	$ 1,017,478.91
1940	2,156,001.35
1941	4,093,588.31
1942	9,484,368.12
1943	18,703,511.00
Total	$35,454,947.69

Upon the consummation of the plain an amount equivalent to such available net income should be applied as directed in ordering paragraphs 5 and 6 hereinbelow;

(e) The cash held by the debtor's Trustees is such that, without endangering the cash resources of the reorganized company, the adjustment payments recommended by the Reorganization Committee may be made to the existing first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors of the debtor;

(f) The determination and recommendation of the Reorganization Committee that adjustment payments in cash in the aggregate amount of approximately $12,681,086.52 be made to the present first mortgage bondholders and secured creditors of the debtor at the time of the consummation of the plan, are in accordance with the plan of reorganization and appropriate and should be approved; and payments corresponding in amounts and percentages to those recommended in paragraph 15 of the petition should also be made at the time of the consummation of the plan with the scrip certificates issued for General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series

A, Preferred Stock, Series A, and Common Stock, to the nearest cent in the case of each such bondholder and secured creditor;

(g) The determination and recommendation of the Reorganization Committee that the scrip certificates for General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, and the scrip certificates for Preferred Stock, Series A, be issued only in denominations of $20 and one-fifth of a share, respectively, and that the scrip certificates for common stock should be for a fraction of a share which would not be fixed but would be filled in when issued with appropriate fractions of not less than thousandths of a share, are consistent with the plan of reorganization and appropriate and should be approved;

(h) The determination and recommendation of the Reorganization Committee that the aggregate principal amount of General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, to be issued in the reorganization be fixed at $21,219,000, that the aggregate par value of Preferred Stock, Series A, to be issued in the reorganization be fixed at $31,850,200, under the provisions of the plan, and that a cash payment of $72 be made to The Railroad Credit Corporation and a cash payment of $100 be made to A. C. James Co., with corresponding reductions in the aggregate amounts of said bonds and stocks to avoid the issuance of such bonds in denominations of less than $100 and of fractional shares of such preferred stock, are consistent with the plan and appropriate and should be approved.

Now, Therefore, It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed

1. That the indenture relating to the First Mortgage Bonds contemplated by the plan of reorganization (Exhibit "A" filed with the petition), with the corrections and changes submitted by the petitioners at the hearing on September 25, 1944, and the form and denomination of Series A Coupon Bond, the form of Interest Coupon for Series A Coupon Bonds, the form of Series A Registered Bond without coupons, and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication, all as set forth in said Exhibit "A," be and hereby are approved as to substance and general form subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

2. That the indenture relating to the General Mortgage Income Bonds contemplated by the plan of reorganization (Exhibit "B" filed with the petition) with the corrections and changes submitted by petitioners at the hearing on September 25, 1944, and the form and denomination of Series A Registered Bond and the form of Trustee's Certificate of Authentication set forth in said Exhibit "B," be and hereby are approved as to substance and general form subject to such minor changes as the Reorganization Committee, upon advice of counsel, may deem advisable;

3. That the determination and recommendation of the Reorganization Committee that First Mortgage Bonds, Series A, be dated as of January 1,

1939, that General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds be dated as of January 1, 1939, and that Preferred Stock, Series A, and the common stock to be issued pursuant to the plan be dated as of January 1, 1944, be and hereby are approved;

4. That the issuance of scrip certificates in respect of General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, and scrip certificates in respect of Preferred Stock, Series A; only in denominations, respectively, of $20 and one-fifth of a share, and the issuance of scrip certificates with respect to common stock in the form of open or blank denomination to be filled in when issued with appropriate fractions of not less than thousandths of a share, be and hereby are approved;

5. That the Trustees of the debtor's estate be and hereby are directed to make or cause to be made at the time of the consummation of the plan, through the exchange depositary to be approved by the Court, in such manner as may be convenient, adjustment payments in cash, in the aggregate amount of $12,681,086.52, or such lesser or greater amount as may be required to make payments to individual creditors to the nearest cent, and in such individual amount or amounts as shall equal the total of or each of the following, as the Reorganization Committee may determine:

(a) with each General Mortgage 4½% Income Bond, Series A, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of 22½% of the principal amount thereof;

(b) with each share of Preferred Stock, Series A, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of $15.81;

(c) with each share of common stock, issued and distributed under the plan, a cash payment of $9.00; and

(d) with scrip certificates for General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, Preferred Stock, Series A, and common stock, issued and distributed under the plan, payments corresponding in amounts and percentages to those directed in this paragraph to be made with such Bonds, Preferred Stock and common stock, respectively;

6. That the balance of the available net income of the debtor and its subsidiaries for the years 1939 to 1943, inclusive, remaining after the payments directed in paragraph 5 hereof, be applied as follows:

(a) $1,699,395.92 to be credited by the reorganized company to the capital fund account within thirty days after the consummation of the plan, provided, however, that such account shall be reduced prior to or at the end of such thirty-day period to $1,000,000 either by proper charges to such account, under the provisions of the plan, or by reducing said account by the amount of the excess over $1,000,000;

(b) $424,360 to be applied to the making of the sinking fund payments required by subdivision L of the plan in respect of the General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A; and

(c) $20,659,938.92, or the remaining balance of said available net income, to be applied to any proper corporate purpose of the reorganized company;

7. That the aggregate principal amount of Series A of General Mortgage Income Bonds be fixed at $21,219,000, and that the total number of shares in Series A of the Preferred Stock be fixed at 318,502 shares of the par value of $100 each, and that $21,219,000 principal amount of said bonds and 318,502 shares of said Preferred Stock be issued in fulfillment of the requirements of the plan of reorganization:

8. That The Railroad Credit Corporation receive, in fulfillment of the requirements of paragraph 4 of Subdivision P of the plan of reorganization, $154,080 General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, $241,640 Preferred Stock, Series A, not more than 35,425 shares of common stock and cash in the amount of $72.00; and

9. That A. C. James Co. receive, in fullfillment of the requirements of paragraph 5 of Subdivision P of the plan of reorganization, $163,680 General Mortgage 4½% Income Bonds, Series A, $256,700 Preferred Stock, Series A, 37,635 shares of common stock and cash in the amount of $100.00.

Upon Appeal From the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division.

William M. Byrne, District Judge:

OPINION

These are appeals from a judgment denying relief to plaintiffs below, who are seeking to recover approximately $17,000,000 from the reorganized The Western Pacific Railroad Company, defendant and appellee.[1] Appellants are The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Corporation"), its receiver, and three of its preferred stockholders, who intervened to assert Corporation's claims.

Appellant Corporation, from 1916 until the events which gave rise to this litigation, owned all of the capital stock of The Western Pacific Railroad Company, an operating railroad company. The operating company became financially distressed during the "depression of the early thirties" and in 1935 it filed a petition under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. 205). The court, in that year, placed its affairs in the hands of trustees. In 1939 the Interstate Commerce Commission approved (233 I.C.C. 409) a proposed plan of reorganization, which was thereafter submitted to and approved by the district court in 1940. In the plan it was determined, inter alia, that the capital stock of the subsidiary, owned by Corporation, was without equity or value and therefore was not entitled to participate in the plan. Appeals followed and, after a contrary holding by this court, the Supreme Court considered and rejected the contention of Corporation that it should have the right to participate in the plan because of increased earnings of the debtor while in reorganization, and affirmed the district court on March 15, 1945.[2] Thereafter the plan of reorganization was submitted to the creditors in accordance with the statutory requirement (11 U.S.C. 205 (e)), and, following their approval, was confirmed on October 11, 1943, by the district court. On April 30, 1944, with the approval of the court, Corporation transferred all of its stock in the subsidiary to the reorganization committee and this stock was later cancelled. On December 31, 1944, the trustees turned the railroad properties over to the reorganized company, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, appellee here.

[1]There are seven appellees who are an affiliated group. The only one from whom appellants seek a money judgment is The Western Pacific Railroad Company, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "subsidiary." The term, "subsidiaries," used in the plural number, refers to The Western Pacific Railroad Company and all other members of the affiliated group of which appellant "Corporation" was the parent.

This litigation involves a dispute about taxes and tax savings for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, a period during which the railroad properties were controlled and operated by the trustees of the bankruptcy court.

During the years in which Corporation was the owner of all the outstanding stock of the pre-reorganization, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, including the years the trustees of the bankruptcy court had possession and control of the railroad properties, Corporation followed the practice of filing consolidated income tax returns in which it reported the earnings of the operating company as well as other affiliated companies.

During the year 1942 the operating company, under the control of the court's trustees, had substantial net earnings. On May 15, 1943, a consolidated return for the calendar year 1942, showing tax liability of $4,201,821.54, was filed by Corporation in behalf of all members of the affiliated group. Corporation, not having had any net earnings during 1942, did not pay any part of the tax.

On July 15, 1944, consolidated income and excess profits tax returns for the calendar year 1943, showing no taxable income, were filed by Corporation in behalf of all members of the affiliated group. The operating company, under the management of the trustees, again made substantial net earnings in 1943, but the loss sustained by Corporation by reason of the declaration of worthlessness of its stock[3] in the operating company (which had cost Corporation $75,000,000) was utilized as an offset in the consolidated returns and thus resulted in a net loss and no tax obligation for any of the affiliated group. In addition, part of the loss was "carried back" to 1942[4] and a claim for refund of the taxes paid under the consolidated return for 1942 was filed with the Commissioner by Corporation on March 9, 1945. A consolidated return in behalf of the affiliated group was filed on June 15, 1945, by Corporation for the first four months of 1944. No tax liability was shown by this return by reason of the "carry forward"[5] of an unused portion of the loss arising from the declaration of the worthlessness of the stock of the subsidiary company owned by Corporation.

The validity of the stock loss offsets was questioned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and after negotiations a tax settlement was made with the Commissioner on August 13, 1947, whereby, in consideration of the withdrawal of the claim for refund of 1942 taxes, the Commissioner accepted and approved the returns for the calendar year 1943 and first four months of 1944. Except for the offset of the capital stock loss of Corporation, the net earnings of the subsidiaries for 1943 and the first four months of 1944 would have required the payment of some $17,000,000 in income and excess profits taxes.

This suit in equity was instituted October 10, 1946, by Corporation, alleging "consolidated income tax returns were filed by the plaintiff for itself and its affiliates which reported a deductible loss by the plaintiff in an amount sufficient to eliminate all taxable income for the group as a whole" for the periods in question and praying that the rights and interests of the plaintiff and the defendants be fixed and determined. A complaint in intervention was filed by three stockholders of Corporation on April 7, 1947. The principal difference between the original complaint and the complaint in intervention is the allegations in the latter pertaining to "duality" or interlocking management and "domination" of the parent by the subsidiary. It is alleged that various directors, officers and counsel of Corporation acted as directors, officers and counsel of the subsidiary with the result that the subsidiary dominated and controlled Corporation; that said officers caused Corporation to file consolidated tax returns when Corporation had "no duty or obligation whatsoever so to do." Corporation filed an answer to the complaint in intervention in which it denied "on its own behalf and on behalf of its officers and directors all allegations * * * of domination and control of the plaintiff, its officers and directors" by the subsidiaries and affiliates, but six months later Corporation filed a supplemental bill of complaint alleging a "duality of control" and, though falling short of intervenors' allegation of "domination," it alleges "at the special instance and request of the defendants and the trustees in the reorganization proceedings acting for the defendants the plaintiff, however, consented to the filing on its behalf of consolidated * * * tax returns with defendants" for the tax periods in question. It is further alleged that plaintiff "does not aver that in so conducting themselves" the officers acting for both corporations "were aware of wrong-doing or consciously disregarded the interests of plaintiff." There is no assertion of actual fraud or specific acts of deceit nor would the record support any such assertion. Corporation's claim appears to rest on constructive fraud presumed from the intercorporate relationship which it asserts deprived it of its independence and caused it to suffer a loss.

The appellants emphasize that Corporation maintained its offices jointly with those of its subsidiaries and the trustees in New York; that Corporation's officers, who handled the tax transactions, were also employees of the subsidiaries and trustees, and their salaries and the expenses of the office were jointly paid; that because of its impoverished financial condition, Corporation was incapable, as of June 1, 1943, of paying salaries or office expenses and thereafter the subsidiaries paid all of the salaries and office expenses. Appellants refer to this as "duality of management" which they contend created a fiduciary relationship and the subsidiaries' duty to deal fairly with Corporation.

Many of the cases cited by appellants deal with the duties of trustees, agents and partners and with the granting of restitution for violation of their duties. Clarity of reasoning has suffered because of the failure to distinguish between the several varieties of fiduciaries, and the duties imposed on each. Although all trustees are fiduciaries, all fiduciaries are not necessarily trustees.

"A person in a fiduciary relation to another is under a duty to act for the benefit of the other as to matters within the scope of the relation. Fiduciary relations include among others the relation of trustee and benficiary, guardian and ward, agent and principal, attorney and client * * *. The directors and officers of a corporation are also fiduciaries, as are receivers, and executors and administrators. The scope of the transactions affected by the relation and the extent of the duties imposed are not identical in all fiduciary relations * * *." (Restatement of Restitution, Section 190, comment "a.") (Emphasis added.)

As stated by Professor Scott in 49 Harvard Law Review at page 521:

"In some relations the fiduciary element is more intense than in others; it is peculiarly intense in the case of a trust * * *." (Emphasis added.)

Appellants place a great measure of reliance on the case of Commercial National Bank in Shreveport vs. Parsons, 144 F. 2d 231. That case is distinguishable from the case before us in that the fiduciary relationship arose out of a contract which imposed the duties of a trustee upon the "new bank." The court decided the case on the established rule that a trustee owes the duty of absolute fidelity to the trust estate and may not profit by dealing with it. We know of no better way to point up the distinction than to use the words of the court cited and emphasized by appellant's brief:

"The credit thus obtained by the new bank was a profit derived from the trust property as effectively as if it had been paid that much in cash." (Emphasis added.)

Cases which deal with trustees, agents and partners are not controlling here as there is no contention that the subsidiary was a trustee, agent or partner. It is appellants' contention that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through the dual officers. If this be true, then a fiduciary relationship existed, but the duties imposed were not those of a trustee. While a trustee may not deal with the trust estate and thereby make a profit, affiliated corporations are usually associated for the very purpose of dealing with each other for profit, e.g., manufacturing and sales companies; railroads and their subsidiary short line companies. Even the corporation which dominates its subsidiary, with the resultant fiduciary relationship, properly deals with its affiliate for profit as long as there is no overreaching or unfairness.

Whether or not a fiduciary relationship exists, and the extent of the duties imposed, depends upon the particular field of substantive law involved. We must look to the law of corporations to determine whether the subsidiary stood in a fiduciary relation to Corporation. The mere fact of officers and directors in common does not create such a fiduciary relationship. There is nothing insidious about duality of management and control as such. It is very common in the realm of business, particularly in the situation of parent and subsidiary, as here. At times business convenience requires such relationship. The officers and directors who occupy this dual position are fiduciaries to both companies and owe a duty of loyalty to each. Thus they cannot favor the interests of one corporation while sacrificing or betraying those of the other. If they do so, they must respond in damages for their tortious conduct or account for any benefits derived through their breach of duty.

But rules relating to the individual officers do not reach the point involved in this case. Here we must determine whether the subsidiary corporation stood in a fiduciary relation to the parent corporation. There are several orthodox ways in which one corporation may become a fiduciary in relation to another corporation, e.g., it may hold property in trust for the other, or it may become an agent for the other. Fiduciary duties also arise where one corporation dominates the other. Consolidated Rock Co. vs. Du Bois, 312 U.S. 510. Although the presence of common officers and directors does not in itself create a domination or a fiduciary relationship between the corporations, it does subject dealings between them to judicial scrutiny as to their fairness and reasonableness to ascertain if domination exists, and if so, whether it has resulted in overreaching which will raise a presumption of constructive fraud.

There obviously existed an interlocking management between Corporation and the subsidiaries. But this situation was not of the subsidiary's making. On the contrary, it was created by Corporation, whose stockholders elected its Board of Directors, who appointed its officers. Since plaintiff Corporation owned 100% of the stock of the subsidiary, it elected all of the directors of the subsidiary, which, in turn, appointed its officers. After the subsidiary was reorganized it was no longer controlled by Corporation but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court.[6] Corporation continued in office the same directors who, in turn, continued to employ the same officers. This was not unnatural since Corporation continued to own all the capital stock of the subsidiary long after it had been divested of control of the subsidiary by reason of the reorganization.

If it be assumed that the advent of the trustees into the affiliation and the increased prosperity of the subsidiary resulted in control of the affairs of Corporation so as to raise fiduciary obligations, the scope and extent of the subsidiary's obligations would be to deal fairly with Corporation. A corporation can only act through its officers and agents. It follows that if there was domination and unfairness it was exercised through the dual officers who forsook their obligations to Corporation, by which they were appointed, and served the purposes of the subsidiary. Although the arguments of appellants are exceedingly general, it is apparent that they assign three particulars wherein the dual officers failed in their obligations to Corporation, resulting in unfairness: (1) They filed consolidated returns; (2) they failed to exact an agreement from the subsidiary requiring payment of money to Corporation as a condition to their consent to file consolidated returns; (3) they should have resigned and allowed the appointment of successors who would have exacted such an agreement from the subsidiary. We shall discuss these three particulars seriatim.

The consolidated returns were filed by Corporation as the parent, for itself and its subsidiaries. Appellants contend that the subsidiaries caused[7] Corporation to file consolidated returns when it had "no duty or obligation whatsoever so to do." The filing of these returns was in exact conformity with the practice followed since 1916. Beginning in 1927 Michael J. Curry, first as treasurer and after February 1, 1942, as president of Corporation, supervised preparation of consolidated returns, signed and filed them. In each year the consolidated tax liability was distributed pro rata to those members of the group who had taxable incomes without allocating any tax to a company showing a loss or paying such company tribute for the tax "saved" by the use of its loss in the returns. Mr. Curry supervised preparation of tentative tax returns for 1942, and on March 15, 1943, signed and filed them and arranged for an extension of time until May 15, 1943, to file the final returns. On March 23, 1943, F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., who was counsel for Corporation at the time and appears on the pleadings and briefs in this case as present counsel for appellants, suggested by letter[8] to Mr. Schumacher, one of the trustees of the operating company, that he be authorized to employ Messrs. Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, tax experts, to advise him on tax matter. This was done. Mr. Polk of this firm continued to advise with the officers of the group through the periods here in question. Mr. Polk reviewed the tax situation with Mr. Curry and Mr. Nicodemus and on May 20, 1943, prepared a detailed written report[9] addressed to Mr. Curry and circulated to Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Nicodemus. The report reviewed the tax advantages of consolidated returns and suggested the possibility that, under the recently enacted amendment to Section 23 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code, the loss of Corporation, upon a determination that its stock in the subsidiary was worthless, might constitute under a consolidated return, an offset to income of other group members. A consolidated return reporting the loss of Corporation as an offset to group income was prepared in the joint New York office, signed by Mr. Curry, and filed by him on July 15, 1944. The returns reported no tax owing. Substantially the same procedure was followed for the "carry back" claim for refund March 9, 1945, as well as the consolidated tax returns for the first four months of 1944, which were filed July 15, 1945.

It hardly seems conceivable that Corporation could complain because consolidated returns were filed. Not only was it in accordance with past practice of the group and under the supervision of Corporation's president, as in former years, but it was done under the guidance of the independent tax experts employed upon the suggestion of the General Counsel for Corporation, who represents appellants in the present proceeding. As the trial court stated[10]: "* * * when everybody was, as they were in this case, acting completely in the open in the matter, nobody was concealing anything from anyone else, the element of fraud or deception, of the kind that you refer to, is absent * * *. Everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed. * * * Everybody knew that these attorneys were being employed to file this consolidated return. It was all done right out in the open." At the time of trial plaintiff intervenors appeared to agree with these observations of the trial court,[11] but on this appeal they infer that there was something sinister about the filing of the consolidated returns.

It is interesting to note the reactions of appellants to observations in the opinion of the trial court[12] to the effect that the Commissioner erred in allowing the tax deduction in question. They vehemently argue that the filing of the consolidated returns and the use of plaintiff's loss to offset defendant's income was proper under the tax law and regulations. It is also interesting to note that the compromise of the tax claim between the Bureau of Internal Revenue and Corporation acting through its attorney-in-fact, James K. Polk,

[12]In the opinion filed by the trial court (85 F. Supp. 868), appears the expressed view that the Bureau of Internal Revenue should not have compromised the tax claim of the taxpayers and should have insisted that the claimed deductions be disallowed in their entirety. The court said, "If I had the power, I would not hesitate to set aside the tax settlement. Indeed, if I could, I would order these taxes paid to the United States. That would effectively dispose of the cause." While we agree with the principal holding of the trial court, we do not occurred after this action was commenced on October 10, 1946, and after the filing of the complaint in intervention on April 7, 1947; that no effort was made to invoke the power of the court to enjoin the officers of Corporation from continuing in their efforts to have the Bureau accept the consolidated returns as filed; that nothing was done to revoke Polk's power-of-attorney to represent Corporation in the proceedings before the Bureau; that Polk, as attorney-in-fact for Corporation, made an offer of settlement of tax liability for 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944 by letter of May 19, 1947, to the Internal Revenue Bureau; that a stipulation (hereafter discussed) was entered into between counsel in this case approving the settlement of the returns with the Government; that Corporation's Board of Directors adopted a resolution approving share this view. A taxpayer may avail himself of every means of tax deduction proper under the applicable statutes. Here the Commissioner questioned the taxpayer's right to the deduction and, after months of negotiation, compromised the disagreement with the taxpayer in lieu of litigating it in the Tax Court. The tax laws authorize the Commissioner to enter into compromises and they are binding on the court in the absence of fraud. This is particularly true in a collateral proceeding. The settlement of the tax claims is an undisputed fact in this case and whether or not it was advantageous to the government is not in issue. The trial court recognized the expression of this view as dictum when it stated: "Obviously the Court cannot pass judgment upon the validity of the tax compromise and settlement. It is now closed. It is final and cannot be reopened except for fraud." (Emphasis added.)

and ratifying the offer of settlement August 13, 1947.

The conclusion is inescapable that Corporation's officers, when they filed consolidated returns, did not violate any obligation but, on the contrary, were conforming with the policy and directions of Corporation.

Appellants suggest that Corporation was under no obligation to file consolidated returns; that it could have demanded that the subsidiaries enter into an agreement to pay it a sum of money as a prerequisite to its consent to filing such returns; that inasmuch as its officers did not exact such an agreement, they failed in their obligation to Corporation and are chargeable with an "unfair" omission to be imputed to the subsidiary by reason of the supposed domination.

Section 141 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code grants the privilege of filing consolidated returns upon the condition that all members of the affiliated group consent to the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner under the authority of subsection (b) of the same section. Regulation 104, Section 23.12, provides that the consolidated return shall be made by the parent corporation. Under the Regulations, the parent corporation is the agent for the entire group, and (except in unusual circumstances) all dealings with the Commissioner are handled by the parent.

Appellants argue that consolidated returns were designed solely for the benefit of the parent corporation. The argument is not sound. The Code and Regulations recognize that the benefit of consolidated returns is for all corporations in the group. Any subsidiary in the group, as well as the parent, may prevent the filing of consolidated returns if the filing is detrimental or contrary to the interests of such corporation. Appellants assert that in the usual case the tax saving which a subsidiary effects will insure to the parent by way of increasing the value of its stock or by way of dividends. This is quite true in the usual case. But it does not mean that this result must follow, nor does it follow that, because the value of a parent's equity in a subsidiary corporation is increased by reason of benefits flowing to the subsidiary's preferred stockholders and creditors, it may receive the benefits direct, regardless of the rights of the subsidiary's preferred stockholders, creditors and minority common stockholders.

The appellants and intervenors contend that the tax laws require "economic unity" for the filing of consolidated returns. This is incorrect. The Regulations suggest procedure in cases where a subsidiary has left the affiliated group. Regulation 104, Section 23.12 (e). Thus, the regulations specifically envison situations where economic unity shall cease and yet permit the filing of consolidated returns. If, by the time the returns are filed the affiliation has ceased to exist, any benefits to the subsidiary obviously cannot insure to the parent. That is precisely the situation in the case at bar. In the tax periods involved there was an affiliated group. When the returns and the claim for refund were filed, affiliation no longer existed. Therefore, the benefit of the consolidated return could not accrue to the parent corporation. If the assertion of appellants that consolidated returns "are not permitted for the benefit of the subsidiaries" were literally true, then there would be no lawsuit here because consolidated returns could not have been filed in the first instance.

Appellants cite three decisions of the Securities and Exchange Commission in support of their view that the rationale of the tax laws requires that any benefits resulting from the tax laws should go to the parent.[13] These decisions do not support this contention of appellants. These companies were seeking the approval of the Commission to alteration of inter-company agreements respecting income taxes. All three decisions show a decided viewpoint that the tax savings from consolidated returns shall not be paid over to the parent if this would in any way endanger the position of the creditors of the subsidiary. They also make clear that a company whose loss was utilized for the benefit of the group does not have a right to compensation from those who benefited. In the Cities Service case, supra, the Commission said:

"* * * we think it should be observed that in the ordinary case the fact that one subsidiary contributes a particular income deduction to a consolidated return does not in itself entitle that subsidiary to the benefits of the reduced taxes resulting from the deduction. Where the reductions are possible from filing a consolidated return, they ordinarily are due to a number of factors contributed by the various members of the consolidated group, including, among others, earnings, and excess profits tax credits, as well as income deductions." (Emphasis added.)

There is nothing in the Code or Regulations that compels the conclusion that a tax saving must or should insure to the benefit of the parent company or of the company which has sustained the loss that makes possible the tax saving.

Assuming, as we have, that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through control of the dual officers, it did not abuse its supposed dominant position because the officers and directors common to both corporations did not sacrifice Corporation's interests to those of the subsidiary. When the Supreme Court decided that Corporation could not participate in the increased earnings of the operating company while in reorganization, Corporation suffered a severe loss. Since it had no income, there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss. But its affiliate did have use for the loss and the group was entitled, under the tax law, to make use of that means of tax savings. The dual officers owed fiduciary duties to both corporations to promote the interests of both and to obtain for each what it was entitled to under the tax laws. Under this state of facts these officers had a positive duty to make use of the loss as they did, that is, to offset the income of members of the affiliated group with deductible losses of other members. If the positions of the corporations were reversed and the subsidiary had a loss and the parent had income, the officers would have been obliged to file consolidated returns to enable Corporation to make use of the loss. Indeed, this very thing had occurred in previous years of the affiliation and Corporation had effected substantial tax savings (Def. Ex. 46) by reason of filing consolidated returns. The record is clear that on none of these occasions was tribute paid to a subsidiary which had suffered a loss. The officers would have been derelict in their duty to the subsidiary had they failed to file consolidated returns. Their duty to Corporation required only that they not sacrifice its interests and did not require them to exact tribute for following the practice of the past twenty-five years. After the transaction Corporation was in exactly the same position that it was in before the subsidiary had effected the tax saving allowed by the tax laws.

However, it is contended that the subsidiary should have notified the Corporation's stockholders and directors of the filing of consolidated returns so that independent directors and officers could have been put in charge of Corporation's interests to make a bargain with the subsidiaries and obtain compensation as a prerequisite to filing consolidated returns. There are several things wrong with this argument. The most obvious is that the entire transaction was open and above board. Many persons having an interest in Corporation, including stockholders and counsel, were fully aware of the situation. They chose not to act. They apparently preferred to permit the transaction to stand, intending thereafter to bargain for a share in the tax savings. They made no effort to inject themselves into the tax settlement with the government. But all this assumes that it would have been proper for Corporation to have made such a bargain. The Corporation was the sole owner of the subsidiary's capital stock. As such it was under a duty to deal fairly with the subsidiary having full regard for the interests of the creditors and holders of other securities. Consolidated Rock Co. v. DuBois, 312 U.S. 510, 522. It owed a duty not to require its subsidiary to forego a legitimate tax saving and could not bargain to perform its duty. A parent company is not acting in the best interests of its subsidiary when it seeks to appropriate to itself an advantage which the tax laws give the subsidiary.

Plaintiff argues that it was a "complete stranger" to defendant when the consolidated return was filed July 15, 1944, because the affiliation terminated on April 30, 1944, when its stockholdings were transferred to the reorganization committee. A tax return is an historical document relating to the past. This return related to a period when the affiliation existed. All fiduciary duties with respect to matters arising during the relationship continue during the winding up period, and are "as sacred and inviolable after as before the expiration of its term."[14] It would be ridiculous to say that a fiduciary who performs an act winding up matters which relate to the affiliation period may exact payment merely because the relationship has technically terminated. If Corporation had required tribute as a condition of its cooperation, then it would have been acting with less than the required standard of fairness to the subsidiary's creditors. Equity will not permit a recovery as a substitute for a bargain which would have been unfair.

The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of any duty owed to Corporation. As the trial court stated, "The so-called 'duality of control' much discussed and emphasized, is not important."

Appellants contend that they have a special claim to the 1942 tax saving. They rely upon a pre-trial stipulation and order. The proposed settlement of tax liability with the government provided that the returns for 1942, 1943 and first four months of 1944 were to be approved as filed, and that the claim for refund of 1942 taxes was to be rejected. Intervenors applied to the court below for an order restraining the consummation of the settlement on the theory that the rejection of the 1942 refund claim might be prejudicial to the position of Corporation in this litigation. The parties entered into a stipulation providing that for purposes of litigation the 1942 refund claim, diminished in proportion to the diminution of the entire tax saving, should be deemed to have been allowed and "paid to the plaintiff as the agent for the affiliated group * * *." (Emphasis added.) The pre-trial order confirmed the stipulation.

The trial court did not make formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, but relied upon Section 52 (a) F.R.C.P., which provides in part: "* * * If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed, it will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law appear therein * * *." Findings of fact and conclusions of law are intended to aid appellate courts by affording them a clear understanding of the basis of the decision below. Findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal which this court may not waive. Even in cases where there are no findings, if the record is so clear that the court does not need them, it may waive the defect, on the ground that the error is not substantial in the particular case.[15]

In the instant case the trial court's opinion discloses adequately the issues of fact which were before the court and the court's findings thereon.

The trial court, in a note appended to its opinion, stated that "inasmuch as there is little factual dispute" the opinion would serve as findings of fact and conclusions of law, but "counsel if they wish, may submit findings * * *." All parties elected not to submit additional or more detailed findings except that the appellants proposed findings with respect to the above stipulation and pre-trial order, and also a conclusion of law to the effect that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $3,385,290. These proposed findings and conclusions, which were inconsistent with those embodied in the opinion, were rejected by the trial court.

Appellants argue that the court below concluded that it should leave the parties where it found them and that Corporation is therefore entitled to the assumed avails of the reduced refund claim.

The stipulation and pre-trial order were entered into and made for the purpose of protecting the position of Corporation in relation to the refund claims only if it should be found entitled to the refund. The court found it was not entitled to it. Appellants' position is no stronger with respect to the refund for 1942 taxes paid by the subsidiaries than it is with respect to the 1943 and 1944 savings of the subsidiaries. It is true that the government requires consolidated returns be filed in the name of the parent and that refunds are paid to the parent, but where such refunds are paid, the parent holds the refund as agent or trustee for the benefit of the affiliate which has overpaid.[16]

[16]Bankers Trust Co. vs. Florida East Coast, etc., 92 F. 2d 450.

In their brief appellant-intervenors allude to the losses they sustained as stockholders and imply that they have an equitable right to compensation apart from that of Corporation. To believe this would be to misapprehend their position. A corporation is a legal entity separate and distinct from its stockholders and benefits to the latter flow from the rights of the corporation. If this were not true these intervenors could not hope to gain by this proceeding as they sustained no loss by reason of Corporation being barred from participation in the reorganization plan. Their pleadings, as well as a stipulation filed in this suit, show that they acquired their stock after Corporation's stock in the subsidiary had been declared worthless. Defendants offered to prove at the trial that intervenors purchased their stock for less than one cent on the dollar. The offered evidence was properly excluded as irrelevant by the trial court. The fact, if it be a fact, that any or all of the present stockholders of Corporation acquired their stock as a speculation while the corporation was in the process of liquidation and its "stock was of trifling value" (page 11, intervenors' opening brief), is irrelevant to the issues here. Corporation is an entity and the issue is whether or not it is entitled to recover $17,000,000 from the successor of its former subsidiary. If it prevails its stockholders are entitled to reap the benefit, regardless of when they became such, or how "trifling" a sum they paid for their stock. The intervenors recognized this when they filed their complaint in intervention to assert Corporation's claims.

We have examined the other authorities cited by appellants and find nothing contrary to our holding here. Appellants cite Southern Pacific Company v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483, 492. That case was not concerned with the question of fiduciary relationship between parent and subsidiary. Rather, it was concerned with the fiduciary duty owed by the holders of the majority of the stock of a corporation to the minority stockholders. The case holds that a parent company has a fiduciary duty to any minority stockholders of the subsidiary.

Also cited is North American Co. v. S.E.C., 327 U.S. 686, 693. That case is not in point either. The court was not concerned with any question of fiduciary relationships. Rather it was concerned with the validity of the so-called "utility holding company death sentence" provision of the Public Utilities Holding Company Act.

The judgment is affirmed.

James Alger Fee, District Judge, dissenting:

There are no findings of fact which support the judgment of the Trial Court or the affirmance thereof by a majority of this Court.[1] The cause should be remanded for this reason alone.[2] The Trial Court gives two reasons for decision against plaintiff: first, that the "tax escape" was a fraud on the government, and, second, that a recovery would violate the reorganization decree. Neither has any validity.

The major portion of the opinion of the Trial Court is devoted to the proposition that the "tax escape" was a fraud upon the government,[3] and therefore the proceeds were given to the defendant, an active wrongdoer.[4] This position that there was a fraud is given no support by the tax agents of the government who made the settlement.[5] It was expressly repudiated in open court by every party in this case. The majority of this Court, as the opinion shows, does not rely upon it.

A second subsidiary theory was also advanced below with little emphasis. The Trial Court said it would be inequitable to allow recovery to plaintiff because the stock of the then subsidiary owned by plaintiff was denied participation in either the assets or earnings in the reorganization proceeding. This reason is as unstable as the first.[6] The claim of plaintiff was not one against the original company, which was placed in reorganization. Everyone admits the genesis of the loss of plaintiff occurred later. Therefore, the claim would not in any event be barred by the decree of reorganization.[7] The liability to the government for taxes was not barred by that decree either. Liability for the use of plaintiff's loss long after the closure of the reorganization proceeding to obtain a benefit for defendant by compromise of the still existing tax claim could not be discharged, nor affected by the decree in reorganization. The right furnished consideration for contractual liability between plaintiff and defendant as independent corporations. Plaintiff had a property right as owner of these shares of stock.[8] The reorganization court had power to deny plaintiff participation in the assets of its subsidiary, and, as a result, all but nominal values in the shares in the subsidiary were lost. But plaintiff was not in reorganization itself.[9] The company in reorganization did not own the stock and could not legally exercise the appurtenant property right to file a consolidated return. The reorganization court had no jurisdiction of plaintiff or of these property rights.

Decree of that court attempting to destroy rights of property in the stock owned by plaintiff would be void. The reorganization decree does not deal with the property rights in the stock and is therefore res judicata neither as to plaintiff nor as to its rights of property in the shares of stock or appurtenances.

Thus the two grounds advanced to sustain the judgment fail. The cause should be reversed for failure to state adequate findings to support the judgment. Findings must be made in the Trial Court. Appellate courts have no such right or function. The majority opinion attempts to accomplish justification of the result below by drawing inferences, deductions and conclusions from evidence which they claim to find in the record. It would be possible for other judges to set up a diametrically opposite set of facts from which a judgment in favor of plaintiff might be based. The very reason that Rule 52 requires findings of fact is illustrated by the majority opinion. For the technical difficulties of finding a basis of fact for this judgment are many. Indeed, such difficulties are insurmountable.

If recovery is to be denied, the findings of fact, upon which determination adverse to plaintiff is based, must deal with the admitted facts and the allegations of the complaints of intervenors and plaintiff. Thereby, these material claims must be negatived.

In order to indicate what findings must be made to negative plaintiff's claim, a review of various phases thereof will be made. First, plaintiff had a property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns, which could neither be given away without consideration nor cut off judicially without due process. Second, a trust fund was apparently created to pay these taxes by the reorganization court, and no order thereof has been shown vesting this fund in defendant. Third, by stipulation with defendant, plaintiff, as trustee, deposited a trust fund in court, which has not been distributed. Fourth, as an independent corporation, plaintiff, at request of defendant, filed consolidated returns and made a settlement with the United States, from which defendant derived benefit. Therefore, plaintiff is entitled to recovery for at least as much as it was worth. Fifth, a recovery much in excess of bare compensation for doing the acts is foreshadowed. Plaintiff has not been found to be in a fiduciary capacity toward defendant, and therefore the actual cash benefit obtained by defendant by use of losses of plaintiff might well be compensated by award of an equitable portion of the tax remission which the United States allowed on account thereof. The findings made do not negative these contentions.

First then, plaintiff was found by the Trial Court to have been the owner of all the stock in the operating company when the petition for reorganization was filed. The Interstate Commerce Commission held that the assets of the operating company, at the initiation of the proceeding, were so shrunken that this stock was valueless for the purpose of participation in either the assets or earnings of the reorganization. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the petition of plaintiff for this relief. Plaintiff thereby is found to have sustained a loss of $75,000,000.00. There is no finding that the property right in the shares of stock was taken away from plaintiff either by this order or by the decree of reorganization.[10] Because of this ownership of these shares, plaintiff claims, under the recent enactment of Congress, a property right appurtenant thereto to use this loss in consolidated return and to offset it against earnings made by the properties in reorganization. Since, under the law, all corporations concerned must consent to the filing of consolidated returns, it is clear, contrary to the statement in the majority opinion, that plaintiff had no duty requiring it to file these returns. Plaintiff had a legal right to refuse to file. There is neither finding of fact that this property right did not accrue to plaintiff nor a finding that the right vested in the subsidiary, the trustees in reorganization or in defendant.

It is found that plaintiff, by contract, transferred the stock in the former subsidiary to the reorganization trustees, after the right to file consolidated returns and have the benefit of offsetting losses against operating gains by the trustees, for income tax purposes, had accrued. These shares are thus recognized as property rights. There is no finding that the right to file or refrain from filing consolidated returns was sold and transferred with the shares of stock to the reorganization trustees.

And here it might be well to deal with one specious argument. It seems to be assumed that the officers of plaintiff could give away the property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns either voluntarily or acting under the control of defendant or the reorganization trustees. This is strange doctrine. At the time of the transfer of stock, rights of creditors of plaintiff as well as those of stockholders were involved. By the enactment of Elizabeth, an insolvent corporation cannot hinder, delay or defraud its creditors by a transfer of property in their despite.[11] The equitable considerations are stressed by the Trial Court. The Chancellors have universally held that a transfer of all the assets of corporation, at the time not insolvent, cannot be made even by a majority of the stock.[12] Neither officers nor directors, without a vote of the majority, have such power.[13] In this case, it is of stellar importance that this right of plaintiff was its sole asset and that, upon appropriation thereof, it became insolvent.[14] Specifically in any event, the transfer must be for adequate consideration and not in fraud of creditors or it will be invalid as against stockholders.[15] There are thus equitable considerations which the findings did not exclude.[16]

In a suit where stockholders of plaintiff intervene, there must be findings that there was adequate consideration for the shares of stock and the appurtenant right of filing a return. Otherwise, the District Court would be obliged to set aside the reorganization decree in order to grant relief by recapturing the assets of plaintiff improvidently given away.[17]

But a jury argument is made based upon a bare offer, which the Trial Court properly held incompetent, that the present stockholders of plaintiff did not pay adequate value for the stock. Suffice it to say that the James interests, which are present stockholders of defendant and which will share in this windfall, apparently acquired that stock to some extent by compromise of the interests of plaintiff in the stock which it formerly held.

Second, plaintiff claims there was a trust fund created by the reorganization court in the amount of $7,100,000.00 for the payment of taxes, and that defendant added $3,000,000.00 to the fund for the same purpose. Plaintiff claims, since these funds were saved by its action in filing the consolidated returns and making a contract of settlement with the government, that it is entitled to receive some compensation for conserving the trust funds. This claim is not valid as to the fund initiated by defendant itself. A corporation has a right to set up reserves from its funds to meet contingencies. But the money impounded by the Bankruptcy Court to pay taxes was made up of funds in the hands of the reorganization trustees. There must be a finding that the Court decreed that this money should become the property of the defendant if not used to pay taxes. Otherwise it constitutes a trust fund of undistributed assets of the reorganziation.[18]

Third, plaintiff claims defendant stipulated that the $3,385,290.00 should be treated as if it had been paid to plaintiff "as agent" and the latter had placed this trust fund in court for distribution.[19] By the stipulation, plaintiff "as agent" was trustee of an express trust and, as such, had a right to deposit the fund and ask for a determination of the rights of all parties thereto, as in the nature of interpleader. Plaintiff affirmatively demanded findings upon this feature, and the Trial Judge refused to make them. A stipulation of parties to litigation that a fund is deposited in court is sufficient. The Court must give affirmative directions that the fund be paid to the proper party.[20] Before such a judgment be entered, findings of fact are required. It is assigned as error that the Trial Judge refused to make findings on this point. The rule requires findings of fact. This is error requiring reversal. The judgment here against plaintiff did not end the case. According to the very record before us, there is still a fund in the Trial Court which has not been distributed.

Fourth, we need not go so far afield. If we disregard control of the officers[21] of plaintiff by defendant, the ownership of the stock and the appurtenant right to file returns and the presence of a trust fund, still a cause of action was proven prima facie[22] by facts which the Trial Court did find. We need only to be sophomorical enough to remind ourselves that, where one, at the special instance and request of another, does an act and benefit accrues to the one who made the request, the legal result is so standardized that for centuries it has been stated in one of the common counts.[23] Here there were two independent corporations at the time of the settlement of tax liability. They were capable of contracting with each other. Neither was longer connected with the other. Plaintiff, at the request of defendant long after the reorganization had been closed, entered into a settlement with the United States whereby its losses were used to obtain a benefit of $17,000,000 for defendant. Plaintiff was not bound to refuse consent to the filing of consolidated returns. It would seem, therefore, that sufficient facts are shown so that, in an action on the claim, plaintiff should recover (quantum meruit)[24] as much as the service was worth. Findings as to any affirmative defense should be specific.

If defendant had emerged sufficiently from reorganization to pay its own attorneys $300,000.00 for the same service, it is difficult to see how the reorganization decree prevents defendants from compensating plaintiff, at least for what the services were worth, which were rendered at its request and which resulted in benefit to it.

Fifth, it seems clear that definitive findings must be made on other phases in order to deny plaintiff a much broader recovery. An argument is made that plaintiff is a fiduciary as respects defendant. The tax statute provides that plaintiff could use its loss of $75,000,000.00 to offset the earnings of the reorganization trustees and thereby obtain a remission of taxes for the reorganized company. Without the loss to plaintiff, the statute would not have applied. Without consent of plaintiff, neither could consolidated returns have been filed nor settlement made. The tax statute does not go farther and lay down any rule for allocation of the benefits obtained from a remission of taxes. The principles of equity should control division.[25] It is said, although there are no findings that the history of prior consolidated returns is controlling.[26] Of course, it cannot probably be shown how plaintiff heretofore dealt with a consolidated return after there has been a divorce from a subsidiary. If we look at it realistically, but little question arises. If plaintiff were still the owner of the stock of defendant, then the allocation of the $17,000,000.00 to defendant would be reflected in the increased value of its stock. The transfer of the stock left the right untouched. Since increase in value of stock in defendant no longer is of avail to plaintiff, there should be another method of applying the remission to the loss.

Finally, it may be, as the Trial Court said, that there is an overwhelming public policy which dictates that the reorganized company should be left alone as owner of the "amazing and undeserved tax" remission. But, before we, as Judges, take this sole, remaining asset without compensation from stockholders of the plaintiff, who bore the losses, and give it as a surplus to distribute to the stockholders of the reorganized company, we should set out in clear and specific findings of fact the exact steps by which we accomplish such a result.

The cause should be reversed in order to permit adequate findings to be made.

Footnotes

[1]The patent insufficiency of the findings of the lower court to support the weight of the super structure now imposed is apparent. The order adopted the opinion as findings: "Findings of Fact. Plaintiff having proposed findings of fact in addition to the findings contained in the Court's opinion filed herein on September 6, 1949, and the defendant having objected thereto, and the Court being now satisfied that all facts necessary for decision are found in the opinion of September 6, 1949, now adopts by reference all such findings as its formal findings of fact in this cause, for all purposes as if the same were fully set forth herein. Conclusions of law. The Court concludes that the plaintiff shall take nothing herein and that the defendants shall have judgment in their favor for their costs of suit." Rule 52, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; 28 U.S.C.A., §2106; Interstate Circuit vs. United States, 304 U.S. 55, 56; Kelley vs. Everglades District, 319 U.S. 415, 420, 421.

[2]The opinion of September 6, 1949, thus referred to, appears in 85 F. Supp. 868. Insufficiency of findings appears in important particulars indicated below.

There are no findings as to the mechanics of use of the right of plaintiff. It is not shown whether any resolutions were passed by the Board of Directors or stockholders of plaintiff authorizing the use for benefit of defendant. There is no finding whether a gift of the right was intended or whether there was an attempted payment of consideration.

There is no finding that plaintiff was ever party to the reorganization proceeding. There is no finding that plaintiff had any connection with the proceeding except to prosecute a claim for value of stock, which was disallowed.

There is no finding that the compromise settlement with the government, in which plaintiff participated and from which benefit to defendant arose, was connected with or contemporaneous with the reorganization proceeding.

The court should have found that defendant honestly believed that it was rightfully entitled to use the loss of plaintiff without consulting those beneficially interested in plaintiff or it used the loss fraudulently in deliberate disregard of the rights of those beneficially interested in plaintiff. The court should have found whether defendant was guilty either of mistake or of fraud. The belief of defendant's officers as to its rights at the time of filing the consolidated returns is one of the key facts in the case and should have been the subject of findings.

[3]The rationale of the opinion is set forth in colorful language. 85 F. Supp. 868, 875: "An array of able counsel on both sides have put forth prodigious and ingenious efforts, one side to retain the benefits of the tax 'escape,' and the other to obtain them. And all the time the taxes escaped in reality belong to the United States! The Court cannot cause these taxes to be paid, where they should be paid, to the United States."

[4]Even if the transaction were illegal, the result reached by the Trial Court could not stand. Cf. Barney vs. Saunders, 57 U.S. 534, 543: "They can not be allowed to aver that the profits made on the trust funds should be put in their own pockets, because they were unlawful gains, for fear that the conscience of the cestui que trust should be defiled by participation in them. To indulge trustees in such an obliquity of conscience, would be holding out immunity for misconduct and an inducement to speculate with the trust funds, and put them in peril."

[5]The fact that the agents of the government, who effected the settlement, did not agree that there was a fraud on the United States is shown by United States ex rel. S. Roberts vs. The Western Pacific Railroad, 9 Cir., No. 12,723, June 15, 1951.

[6]The error of the lower court was in assuming that plaintiff is seeking an interest in the defendant corporation instead of compensation for property taken by defendant which belonged to plaintiff. The Trial Court made no finding as to the nature of the right to file consolidated returns, which only plaintiff could exercise. (Reg. 104, §23-16(a)) but which it could refuse to exercise (Reg. 104, §23.11(a)). Until such findings are made, there is no basis for a judgment denying participation in benefit.

[7]The effect of the decree is provided by 11 U.S.C.A., §205(f), Tilt vs. Kelsey, 207 U.S. 43, 52. Since the tax settlement between the government and the corporation occurred after the decree in reorganization, there could be no res judicata. Commissioner vs. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591, 597, et seq.; Diaz vs. United States, 223 U.S. 442, 449.

[8]An incontrovertible proof of the proposition that plaintiff had no duty to apply the loss for the benefit of defendant may be cited. If plaintiff had sold a gold mine for a profit of over $75,000,000.00, its loss on the stock of the subsidiary could have been applied to offset any taxes against plaintiff. In that event, the trustees in reorganization would have been required to pay taxes against the operating company. Once used, the power of applying the loss would be functus officio, and plaintiff would have received the entire benefit.

[9]Callaway vs. Benton, 336 U.S. 132. The error in this proceeding, therefore, was the failure to reorganize plaintiff also. An illustrative case, where the parent was in reorganization, is reported in a series of opinions as In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F. Supp. 857-921. There a consolidated return was filed during the proceedings and the benefits appropriately distributed.

[10]It is inconceivable that a decree of reorganization prevents the company, when released from tutelage, from entering engagements and incurring liabilities. Otherwise, the reorganization would be perpetual. See In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F. Supp. 857, 873.

[11]Act of 1571, 13 Eliz. c. 5; Glenn, Fraudulent Conveyances and Preferences, (Rev. Ed., 1940), §§61 d, e, Vol. I, 95-99.

[12]Des Moines Life & Annuity Co. vs. Midland Insurance Co., 6 F. 2d 228. The statutes carry out the principle with various limitations. As plaintiff is a Delaware corporation, see Del. Rev. Code (1935) §65.

[13]Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations (Perm. Ed.) §1107.

[14]The trust fund theory probably applies. See Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations (Perm. Ed.) §7371.

[16]An interesting case in this Court, where the subsidiary was held liable for the unauthorized transfer of property of the parent by an officer of the subsidiary, is Clark & Wilson Lumber Company vs. McAllister, 101 F. 2d 709.

[17]Since plaintiff is a Delaware corporation, the decisions of that state are cited as illustrative of the general principle. Robinson vs. Pittsburgh Oil Refining Corporation, 14 Del. Ch. 193, 199; Hutton vs.

West Cork Railway Company, 23 L.R. Chancery Div. (1883) 654, 671, 677; Revised Code of Delaware (1935), Ch. 65, §65, Ch. 174. Cf. Laws of Delaware (1941), Ch. 132, §1.

[18]The Court below, the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, was the reorganization court. 34 F. Supp. 493. It therefore had the power to set aside the decree in reorganization, 11 U.S.C.A., §§ 11(8), 205(1), and administer this unadministered asset. Incidentally, the defendant cannot escape under any theory since it is under bond to pay all claims against the trustees.

[19]The stipulation of the parties was that a fund was paid into Court by plaintiff and therefore it must be returned to plaintiff's possession, unless some affirmative proof showed defendant was entitled thereto. The Trial Court held: "But, as between the parties no persuasion of conscience or equity impels me to do otherwise than to leave the parties where they are, the defendant with its amazing and undeserved tax success; the plaintiff as the reorganization left it, without interest in the debtor." Instead of restoring the parties to status quo ante, the Trial Court affirmatively awarded this to defendant. But no findings to sustain affirmative award are present.

[21]As to the nature of the confidential relationship involved, where corporations have officers in common, see cases collected in annotation in 114 A.L.R. 299.

[22]Other grounds for constructive trust, which it is possible for the trier of the fact to find upon the basis of evidence in the record, are fraud (Restatement of Restitution, § 166, Comment b; Templeton vs. Hollinshed, 119 Oregon 620, 250 P. 747), mistake (Restatement of Restitution, §§ 49, 170; 3 Scott on Trusts, § 468), and conversion or misappropriation (Burke Grain Co. vs. St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Co., 8 Cir., 94 F 2d 458; Pioneer Mining Co. vs. Tyberg, 9 Cir., 215 F. 501). As noted in the text following, a trust need not be worked out in all probability since simpler theories may serve for recovery.

ON APPELLANTS' PETITION FOR REHEARING

Before: Healy, Circuit Judge, and
Fee and Byrne, District Judges.

James Alger Fee, District Judge, (dissenting and suggesting a rehearing en banc of all Circuit Judges):

This cause involves the disposition of over $21,000,000.00. The solution requires application of novel statutory language affecting the fields of bankruptcy and taxes. I have expressed myself heretofore and still feel that the findings of the lower court do not support the determination made by two judges on the panel here.

I am unable to agree with either the denial of rehearing or the striking of the petitions which ask for a rehearing by the full complement of Circuit Judges of this Court en banc. Two District Judges and one Circuit Judge constituted the panel which heard the case. As has been pointed out in this serious and important litigation, three District Judges have, respectively, expressed three widely divergent views, while no member of the Court of Appeals has written a line on the merits.

I therefore suggest to the Court of Appeals a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges. For this there is precedent in this Circuit.[1] The practice as I understand it, substantially accords with that of the Third Circuit,[2] which is admirable. Inasmuch as this might be the court of last resort in this case, it seems fairer to have the issues disposed of by Circuit Judges.

The Supreme Court of the United States at least once has given permission to an appellant to apply to this court for a hearing en banc. 316 U.S. 649.[3] In taking that action, reference was made to Textile Mills Securities Corporation vs. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 314 U.S. 326.

[Endorsed]: Filed February 18, 1952. Paul P. O'Brien, Clerk.

PETITION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A MOTION TO VACATE ORDER STRIKING APPELLANT'S PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC AND REINSTATING SUCH PETITION

To the Honorable William Denman, Chief Judge, and to the Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit:

The petition of appellants, Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Alexis I. duP. Bayard, Receiver, respectfully shows:

On January 30, 1952, this Court (Healy, Circuit Judge; Fee and Byrne, District Judges) entered an order striking the appellants' petition for rehearing en banc as being without authority in law or in the rules of practice of the court. A copy is attached as Appendix I.

On February 18, 1952, Judge Fee filed a dissenting opinion and suggested a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges. A copy is attached as Appendix II.

This petition asks leave to file a motion to vacate the above order and to reinstate the petition for consideration and action by the court. A copy of the motion is attached hereto as Appendix III.

Summary

In striking appellant's petition for rehearing en banc, two judges foreclosed consideration thereof by the members of the court.

This is a direct holding that no litigant is entitled to petition for a rehearing en banc, and that such a petition is to receive no consideration whatever.

It is submitted that this action is without support in law, and that a litigant is entitled under the law to (1) file such a petition, and (2) have it considered and acted upon by the court.

Authorities

Section 46(c) of the Judicial Code, enacted in 1948, provides:

Note: Emphasis is supplied unless otherwise noted.

"(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court en banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court en banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."

According to the reviser's note, this section "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case," i.e., Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326.

In United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649 (1941), the Supreme Court granted certiorari to this Court, and at the same time vacated this Court's judgment and remanded this case

"for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc."

citing the Textile Mills case.

This is a direct recognition of the right of a litigant to apply for a rehearing en banc.

We have been unable to find any authority for the proposition that a litigant may not apply for a hearing en banc, or that a court may strike a petition therefor, save Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F. 2d 767, decided by this Court and cited here as authority for the action taken. Although certiorari was applied for and denied in that case, an examination of the moving papers discloses that this point was not raised.

Argument

This Court consists of all of the judges thereof (Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326), and it may sit en banc. Section 46(c) of the Judicial Code provides in terms that it may rehear cases en banc if "ordered by a majority of the circuit judges who are in active service."

If hearings en banc can only be had when ordered by a majority of the circuit judges who are in active service, it follows that a litigant is entitled to have the matter presented to such judges for consideration and action, and that a petition therefor cannot be stricken nor can it be denied by a panel consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges.

In Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 175 F. 2d 983 (1949), where a petition for rehearing en banc was denied by this Court, Chief Judge Denman, dissenting, stated (p. 992):

> "The attempt of two judges in a panel of three judges to deny a petition for rehearing en banc violates the law as established in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, 650, S. Ct. 1301, 86 L. Ed. 1732, and Textile Mills Securities Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, 333 et seq., 62 S. Ct. 272, 86 L. Ed. 249.
>
> * * *
> "In view of the Supreme Court decisions cited above, it is too obvious to need argument that two judges cannot thus assume to an act on a petition addressed to seven judges."

The Independence case was followed by a note on the subject in 63 Harvard Law Review 1449. Speaking of that case, it is there said (1451):

> "Indeed, since the three judges here could not under §46 have ordered a rehearing, their action in considering the petition seems singular."

In the same note, the following appears (1450):

> "Although it is perhaps impossible to have fixed and detailed criteria for the selection of the cases to be heard en banc, fuller development of the rules governing the procedure by which the hearings are granted or denied seems both necessary and practicable. * * * perhaps formal petition of counsel, as in the instant case, is the most suitable method for initiating a hearing en banc in a particular case. See Hearings before Subcommittee on Judiciary on S. 1053, 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 16, 40 (1941). * * * Section 46(c) merely provides that the court may sit en banc if a majority vote to do so * * * (only four out of nine justices enough, generally, to grant certiorari) * * * The petition should, it seems, be entitled to such consideration that denial of the petition results only when a majority of the individual judges are unwilling to grant it."

Procedure of Striking Petitions

The procedure of two judges denying a petition addressed to the whole court seems not to have been repeated in this Court after the Independence Lead Mines case. Instead, in Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F.

2d 767 (Feb., 1950), this Court (per curiam, before Judges Healy, Orr and McAllister) inaugurated the procedure of striking a petition for rehearing en banc "as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court."

Twice in May of the same year an identical order was made on the authority of the Kronberg case by a panel consisting of Circuit Judge Bone and District Judges Goodman and Mathes. Freuhauf Trailer Co. v. Myers, 181 F. 2d 1008, and Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Milwaukee v. Gilbert, 182 F. 2d 256.

The order in the instant cause, striking the petition for rehearing en banc, cites Kronberg v. Hale as authority. The order was that of but two judges, one circuit judge and one district judge.

We respectfully submit that the practice inaugurated in Kronberg v. Hale and followed in this case, i.e., striking the petition for rehearing en banc by the order of a majority of the court which heard the case, is not supported in law, or the rules of this Court and that it is not justified under the statute authorizing and recognizing rehearings en bac.

The statement that a petition for rehearing en banc is "without authority in law" is contrary to what the Supreme Court said and did in the Robinson case, supra. In remanding a cause to this Court so that a petition for rehearing might be filed and entertained, the Supreme Court necessarily construed the statutes as giving a litigant "authority in law" to file a petition for rehearing.

The statute (Title 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c)) provides for a rehearing en banc. Surely there must be a procedure whereby a litigant may request a court to take the action the law authorizes the court to take. Otherwise, two judges may prevent the other five from even being cognizant of the request for relief which the statute empowers the five to grant. And where two district judges are on the panel, two district judges could thereby prevent 7 circuit judges from granting a rehearing en banc, although only the circuit judges are qualified to pass on the question under Title 28 U.S.C., Section 46(c). Commercial National Bank in Shreveport v. Connolly, 177 F. 2d 514 (1949), and United States v. Sentinel Fire Ins. Co., 178 F. 2d 217, 239 (1949).[1]

If it is error for 2 judges to deny a petition addressed to 7, it must be error for 2 to interpose an iron curtain between the litigant and the remainder of the court by striking out the petition.

As for lack of authority "in the rules of the court" for petitions for rehearings en banc, we submit that it is incumbent upon the court to provide a procedure whereby the authority granted by Title 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) may be invoked. In the absence of an express provision in the rules, it would seem clear that a motion or a petition addressed to the court is a proper and appropriate procedure

[1]In each of these cases there was a disagreement whether a retired circuit judge was entitled to vote. There was no disagreement to the proposition that a petition for rehearing en banc could be acted on only by circuit judges.

to set the machinery in motion. It is significant that there is no provision in the rules that such a motion or petition will not be received or entertained, or delegating authority to a panel to deny it or strike it out.

An application to a court for an order is by motion. R.C.P. Sec. 7(b)(1). It must follow that where a court is empowered to make an order, the litigant must have the right to apply for it, i.e., the right to file a motion or petition. The doors of courts must always be open to litigants to apply for orders which the court is competent to grant.

Legislative History of Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c)

Title 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) was occasioned by a conflict between this circuit and the third. In Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F. 2d 867 (1938), this Court held that there was no basis in law for hearings or rehearings en banc. The third circuit held to the contrary in Commissioner v. Textile Mills Corporation, 117 F. 2d 62 (1940). On certiorari in the Textile Mills case, the Supreme Court upheld the third circuit.

It was then felt that the procedure approved by the Supreme Court should find more explicit expression in the statute, and S. 1053 was introduced in the 77th Congress to amend Section 212 of old Title 28 U.S.C. This bill was not then enacted, but it was adopted in substance when the Judicial Code was revised in 1948, becoming Section 46(c).

On August 16, 1948, Mr. Henry P. Chandler,

Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, transmitted to the Courts of Appeal the Final Report of the Committee on Codification and Revision of the Judicial Code (Judge Maris, Third Circuit, Chairman). This report states the contents of Section 46(c) and adds:

> "These new provisions will call for changes in the rules of each of the Circuit Courts of Appeal."

It appears, however, that the rules of this Court were not changed as a consequence of the new Judicial Code, except as to the name of the court and the title of the Chief Judge.

In the hearings before the Subcommittee on Judiciary on S. 1053, 77th Congress, 1st Session, the following occurred:

> "Senator Danaher: * * * On whose motion would the court assemble en banc?
>
>
> "Senator Danaher: Who is going to make a motion that the whole court sit on this case? The counsel in the case?
>
> * * *
> "Mr. Chandler: The counsel can make a suggestion of course." (p. 16)

Again:

> "Senator Danaher: Judge Groner, do you gentlemen of the bench have any thought to give us as to how we are going to let a majority of the circuit judges decide * * * when they are going to convene the court en banc?

"Judge Groner: Well, I never thought of that. My own thought in the administration of my own court would be that it would not be done unless counsel requested it, or unless the court of its own motion * * * deemed it advisable * * *" (p. 40)

Hearing En Banc Particularly Appropriate in This Case

The present case involves unique and important questions of bankruptcy and taxes. The decision conflicts with the decisions of two other circuits, the Second and the Fifth, George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F. 2d 72, and the Shreveport Bank cases, Commercial National Bank in Shreveport v. Parson, 144 F. 2d 231; Commercial National Bank in Shreveport v. Connolly, 176 F. 2d 1004; Connolly v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 189 F. 2d 608.

The case was decided by a panel consisting of two district judges and one circuit judge, and the opinion of the court was written by a district judge. As Judge Fee points out in his opinion of February 18th, three district judges have written opinions in the cause. Both of those sitting in the Court of Appeals concurred that the opinion written by the district judge below was wholly erroneous. Yet the two district judges writing opinions in the Court of Appeals have completely differed from each other as well as from the district judge below. And no circuit judge has written a line on the merits.

Finally, one of the participating judges has suggested a rehearing en banc.

Conclusion

We respectfully pray for leave to file the attached motion to vacate the order striking the petition for rehearing en banc, and submit that the motion should be granted and the petition for rehearing en banc should be reinstated and submitted to the court for its action under Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c).

Per Curiam

The petitions of the appellants and intervenors for a rehearing are denied. Insofar as the petitions seek a rehearing en banc, they are stricken as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court. See Kronberg v. Hale, 9 Cir., 181 F. 2d 767.

ON APPELLANTS' PETITION FOR REHEARING

Before: Healy, Circuit Judge, and
Fee and Byrne, District Judges.

James Alger Fee, District Judge, (dissenting and suggesting a rehearing en banc of all Circuit Judges):

This cause involves the disposition of over $21,000,000.00. The solution requires application of novel statutory language affecting the fields of bankruptcy and taxes. I have expressed myself heretofore and still feel that the findings of the lower court do not support the determination made by two judges on the panel here.

I am unable to agree with either the denial or rehearing or the striking of the petitions which ask for a rehearing by the full complement of Circuit Judges of this Court en banc. Two District Judges and one Circuit Judge constituted the panel which heard the case. As has been pointed out in this serious and important litigation, three District Judges have, respectively, expressed three widely divergent views, while no member of the Court of Appeals has written a line on the merits.

I therefore suggest to the Court of Appeals a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges. For this there is precedent in this Circuit.[1] The practice, as I understand it, substantially accords with that of the Third Circuit,[2] which is admirable. Inasmuch as this might be the court of last resort in this case, it seems fairer to have the issues disposed of by Circuit Judges.

[1]Judges Denman, Mathews and Stephens sat in Hopper vs. United States, 9 Cir., 142 F. 2d 167, and Judges Wilbur, Denman and Healy sat in Crutchfield vs. United States, 9 Cir., 142 F. 2d 170. At page 177 of 142 F. 2d appears Circuit Judge William Denman's motion for a rehearing en banc of the Hopper case, supra, wherein it is stated that the cause is "now pending for rehearing in this Court." Accordingly, the rehearing of that case was held en banc before Judges Wilbur, Garrecht, Denman, Mathews, Stephens and Healy, being all of the Circuit Judges of this Court. Hopper vs. United States, 9 Cir., 142 F. 2d 181.

[2]United States vs. Gallagher, 3 Cir., 183 F. 2d 342, was heard by a panel of two Circuit Judges and one District Judge, and, upon suggestion of one of the Judges, was heard en banc by all Circuit Judges.

The Supreme Court of the United States at least once has given permission to an appellant to apply to this court for hearing en banc, 316 U.S. 649.[3] In taking that action, reference was made to Textile Mills Securities Corporation vs. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 314 U.S. 326.

In re Petition of Western Pacific Railroad Corporation for Leave to File a Motion Denominated "Motion to Vacate Order Striking Appellant's Petition for Rehearing En Banc and Reinstating Such Petition."

Case No. 12,506, supra, upon its coming at issue in this court, was regularly assigned for hearing and determination to a court or division of three judges comprising Circuit Judge Healy and District Judges Fee and Byrne. Subsequent to argument and submission of the case the court handed down an opinion and order affirming the judgment of the district court, Judge Fee dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Thereafter the appellants petitioned for "rehearing and rehearing en banc," and the court on January 30, 1952, denied the petition, Judge Fee again dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Insofar as the petition sought a rehearing in banc it was ordered stricken as unauthorized by law or practice.

On March 10, 1952, the Western Pacific Corporation presented the petition for leave described in the caption. In its supporting brief it asserts that it is its right under the law to have its petition for rehearing considered and acted upon by all the circuit judges. On order of a majority of the circuit judges, the court has been assembled in banc for the purpose of announcing the principles of law and practice it deems applicable in respect of in banc hearings. This course is thought appropriate in order that litigants and the bar may be advised not only of the position taken by the court but of the reasons for it.[1]

[1]In recent years it has become the custom of counsel almost as a matter of course to petition the full membership of the court for a rehearing in banc, upon suffering an adverse decision at the hands of a court of three judges. This hopeful concept of the right of litigants appears to stem from declarations in the dissenting opinion in Independence Lead Mines v. Kingsbury (1949), 9 Cir., 175 F. 2d

The governing statutory provision, 28 USCA §46 (c), reads:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."[2]

The obvious intendment of this statute is to perpetuate the United States Courts of Appeals as courts of three judges in all cases save those in which an in banc hearing is ordered by all or a majority of the circuit judges. No doubt Congress was 983, at p. 992, cert. den. 338 U.S. 900, to the effect that two judges in a court or division of three are without authority to pass upon or deny a petition for rehearing addressed to all the circuit judges.

The numerous petitions of this nature have been disposed of by the court or division concerned either (1) by ignoring the application for in banc action and treating the petitions simply as ordinary petitions for rehearing, or (2) by striking them insofar as they sought in banc action. The treatment has not in the least served to discourage losing counsel or to stem the growing tide of such petitions.

[2]The section was enacted as part of the 1948 Judicial Code revision. In its entirety it reads as follows:

"§46. Assignment of judges; divisions; hearings; quorum

"(a) Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs.

"(b) In each circuit the court may authorize the fully alive to the fact that these courts, despite the increase in their membership, would be unable to keep abreast of the constantly growing volume of judicial business unless they continued in all normal circumstances to function as courts of three.

Important light will be shed on the problem under inquiry if we examine the method pursued in the assignment of cases, as prescribed by our Rule 4.[3] In practice the calendars for the court are tentatively made up by the chief judge in collaboration hearing and determination of cases and controversies by separate divisions, each consisting of three judges. Such divisions shall sit at the times and places and hear the cases and controversies assigned as the court directs.

"(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit.

"(d) A majority of the number of judges authorized to constitute a court or division thereof, as provided in paragraph (c), shall constitute a quorum."

[3]Rule 4, subdivisions 1 and 2, reads:

"Assigning of Causes For Hearing

"1. The calendars of the court shall be made up by the Clerk under the direction of the Chief Judge subject to the approval of the majority of the judges.

"2. The Chief Judge after conference with the Circuit Judges shall designate and assign the judges who are to hear the causes placed upon the calendars of the court; such designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority of the judges."

with the clerk. On these calendars each case is assigned for hearing and determination to a court or division of three named judges, unless it has been otherwise ordered. The proposed calendar is circulated among all the judges, and any designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority. When the calendar is approved by the judges their action is uniformly manifested by their initialing the same, as is done in the case of court orders generally. Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative determination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc. In the instances in which at the time of assignment it is agreed by all or a majority of the judges that a particular case should be heard and determined in banc, it is calendared as such.[4] It

[4]Since the decision in Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U. S. 326 (1941) approximately thirty cases in all have been heard in banc in this circuit. Nineteen of these, or about two-thirds of the whole, were assigned to the court in banc at the time they were originally calendared. Perhaps more than half of the nineteen were cases of great public consequence, such, for example, as those growing out of the suspension during the war of the writ of habeas corpus and the institution of martial law in Hawaii, or cases involving the forcible removal of the Japanese from the Pacific Coast states. Others were contempt matters involving claimed violations of the constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination.

There are no definite criteria that we know of by which to determine what cases are suitable for in banc consideration. However, causes of extraordinary public importance or those involving constitutional questions probably belong in the category.

sometimes occurs, too, that examination of a case preliminary to hearing, or consideration of it after argument, leads the judges to whom it was assigned to conclude that it is an appropriate cause for in banc consideration, and they so indicate to the remaining judges. If the latter or a majority of all agree, the case is then reassigned for hearing by all the judges.[5]

If we examine the status of Case No. 12,506 in the light of this practice, it becomes apparent that it was calendared and heard by court order as one in which in banc consideration was not deemed requisite. There remains to inquire whether the losing party in the cause is at this juncture entitled as of right to have its petition for rehearing considered and ruled upon by a court composed of all the circuit judges.

The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a "court or division of three judges" the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, subject to review only as prescribed by 28 USCA §1254. Circuit judges other than those designated to sit on such court or division are not members of it, and officially they play, and are entitled to play, no part in its deliberations at any stage. That this is so is made clear by subdivision (a) of §46 (see Note 2 above) providing that "Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs." If regard be had for this mandate circuit judges may not intrude themselves, or be compelled on petition of a losing party to intrude, upon a court or division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit.

A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all of a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration.[6]

[6]This was the course followed in Hopper v. United States, 9 Cir., 142 F. 2d 181; Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 9 Cir., 180 F. 2d 295, 186 F. 2d 926; Evaporated Milk Ass'n v. Roche, 130 F. 2d 843; and Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. SEC, 139 F. 2d 298. In the Hopper case, supra, and to a lesser degree in Southern Pacific v. Guthrie, intracircuit conflicts were resolved. The other two cases cited in this note were nondescript matters.

Adoption of the view currently being urged would render merely tentative or provisional the decisions of the court in 98 per cent or more of the cases that come before it. On petition of a dissatisfied party its decisions would automatically be subject to a species of horizontal appeal which would completely nullify the prime statutory objective of affecting a division of the court's work. The judges other than those to whom the cases had been assigned would perforce be required to acquaint themselves with the issues and problems involved in the same painstaking manner as did their associates who had heard and determined the causes initially, and this without the latter's advantage of having heard oral argument. Obviously, unless he is prepared to stultify himself, no judge would undertake to rule upon petitions for rehearing without adequate and full study and investigation of the merits.

On these considerations and in harmony with its understanding of the statutory scheme, the court has consistently retained to itself as a matter of administrative and intramural concern only the problem whether or not any given case should be heard or reheard in banc. Accordingly, in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion the court has declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings. The position it takes is that, apart from the possible disqualification of a judge, the composition of the court to which a case may be assigned for determination is a matter wholly outside the province of the parties.

It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts. The hazard, we think, may easily be overestimated. It is minimized by the alertness of counsel and by informal and unofficial interchanges among the judges. Where conflicts occur they are capable of remedy by in banc action without wholesale duplication of effort, as our own practice and experience have demonstrated.

The petition for rehearing in this cause has already been authoritatively denied by the division to which the cause was assigned. The petition for leave to file, addressed to the court in banc, is denied.

From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges, will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing.

Denman, Chief Judge, dissenting from the court's holding that the circuit judges not participating in a division, here six of the seven such judges, (a) are without power to consider a litigant's petition for a rehearing en banc, and (b) where a rehearing or rehearing en banc has been denied by a division, are without power to vote to grant a rehearing en banc, if two of the division's judges, here with but one circuit judge, do not desire such a rehearing. This appears from the following language of the opinion:

"A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily[1] be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all or a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration."

"The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a 'court or division of three judges' the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, subject to review Only as prescribed by 28 U.S.C. §1254." Thus squarely is denied the power of the court en banc to review a division's decision in a "rehearing en banc * * * ordered by a majority of the circuit judges." See 28 U.S.C. 46 (c).

* * *

"From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing."

In this case the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, hereafter the Corporation, petitions the Court en banc for leave to file a petition for a rehearing en banc. The latter seeks to establish, inter alia, that the judgment of the division which heard the case decided the main issue therein contrary to the decision of a prior division of this court.

The division in the instant case, consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges, has ordered "stricken" a petition addressed to the seven judges constituting the court en banc. This order follows a precedent of similar strikings of petitions for rehearings en banc in the cases of Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F.2d 767 (Cir. 9), Fruehauf Trailer v. Myers, 181 F.2d 1008 (Cir. 9), Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 182 F. 2d 256 (Cir. 9).

Since Kronberg v. Hale, the Clerk has distributed no petitions for rehearings en banc to the non-participating circuit judges. From a casual remark of counsel in a social contact, I learned of the Corporation's instant petition and instructed the Clerk to distribute it to the six circuit judges not sitting in the division. But for this casual discovery and my suggestion that the stature and determination of the Corporation's counsel made it likely they would seek mandamus in the Supreme Court, the petition would have had the "striking" treatment of the above cases.

The court's opinion came after a conference originally called for the consideration of the adoption of the rule considered last in this dissent, which would have made the burden of such petitions one we easily could bear.

A. The court's decision violates (as well as ignores) the Supreme Court's decision in United States ex rel., Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U. S. 649, 650, a decision aimed to settle differences in the circuit's divisions.

The case of Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, held that notwithstanding the three-judge provision of section 212 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., a court of appeals might lawfully consist of a greater number of judges, and that the five active circuit judges of the third circuit might sit in banc for the determination of an appeal.

The Third Circuit in C.I.R. v. Textile Mills Corp., 117 F.2d 62 at page 70, in holding that its five circuit judges could sit en banc, states that otherwise they would not have the power to correct differing views of the judges in the divisions of the court such as the Supreme Court describes as occurring in the Fifth Circuit in John Hancock Ins. Co. v. Bartels, 308 U.S. 180, 181.[2]

The Supreme Court in its Textile Mills case at page 334 in affirming the Third Circuit and overruling our decision in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F.2d 867, 869, where we held we could not sit en

[2]Following this the Textile Mills case states at page 71:

* * * "Where, however, there is a difference in view among the judges upon a question of fundamental importance, and especially in a case where two of the three judges sitting in a case may have a view contrary to that of the other three judges of the court, it is advisable that the whole court have the opportunity, if it thinks it necessary, to hear and decide the question * * *" banc where two divisions of the court differed as to the law controlling, states of rehearings en banc[3] that:

* * * "Certainly, the result reached makes for more effective judicial administration. Conflicts within a circuit will be avoided. Finality of decision in the circuit courts of appeal will be promoted. Those considerations are especially important in view of the fact that in our federal judicial system these courts are the courts of last resort in the run of ordinary cases * * *"

In enacting 28 U.S.C. § 46 (c) Congress codified the Textile Mills decision, the Reviser's Notes stating that that section "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case."

Prior to this codification of the Textile Mills decision, there was decided by one division of this circuit the case of Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, and later in a division of three other judges, the case of Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547. The two divisions differed on the controlling law. Certiorari was sought in the Robinson case before the Crockett case was decided and it was denied. A petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court was denied. The Crockett case was then called to the attention of the court in a second petition for rehearing which was granted. The order denying the petition for certiorari was set aside and the writ of certiorari granted. Certainly this action of the Supreme Court was purposeful and deliberate.

[3] What is said of the need of rehearings en banc for the then Third Circuit applies a fortiori today to the Ninth Circuit. The Third Circuit in the 1941 fiscal year had but five judges and 285 docketings. The Ninth Circuit has had an increase in population of six million in twelve years. In the fiscal year 1952 it had 446 docketings. On the national average of docketings for circuit judges the Ninth Circuit should have ten judges. It has seven judges but the Senate has passed a bill increasing the judgeships to nine and the House Judiciary Committee has agreed they are needed. No doubt within a year we will have nine judges with three divisions sitting simultaneously. That is to say, we have 56% more docketings and will have almost half again the number of divisions in which exist the hazard of conflicting decision referred to in the Textile Mills decisions.

In granting certiorari the Supreme Court in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, held it was the duty of this court en banc to entertain a petition for leave to file a petition for rehearing en banc, for it vacated our judgment and remanded the case to us, stating:

"* * * In view of the conflict of views which has arisen among the judges of the Ninth Circuit with respect to the decision in this case (see Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, 1001, and Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547, 548, 549), and in view of this Court's decision in Waley v. Johnston, ante, p. 101, reversing 124 F. 2d 587, the judgment is vacated, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court of Appeals for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc. See Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326 * * *"

The Corporation strongly urges the above contentions in its denied petition, all of which is ignored in this court's opinion. Instead it is said of the seeking of the leave to file the petition, that consideration of such action by any of the circuit judges not in the division (here six) would be, "to intrude upon a * * * division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit."

How absurd it was, one must conclude, for the Supreme Court to order such an intrusion in Robinson v. Johnston!

B. The Cavalier Refusal of the Court to Consider the Contentions of the Corporation's Petition.

The shabby treatment of the litigant and his counsel in refusing to consider their contentions and authorities comes after the court's claim that its opinion gives consideration to "the principles of law * * * which it deems applicable to en banc hearings."

No self-respecting federal judge sleeps comfortably if he is conscious of having rendered an opinion deciding a case in which he has purposely failed to consider a substantial contention supported by authorities submitted to him and by such evasion has based his decision on a ground directly opposed to the evaded contention.

A possible explanation for the silent treatment of the litigant's contention and authorities in this case is that Robinson v. Johnston was deemed irrelevant because decided before the codification of the Textile Mills case in 28 U.S.C. §46 (e). That seems absurd, however, for the Supreme Court's construction of a law before its exact codification, as here, is applicable after codification. Otherwise, why in 28 United States Code Annotated are there the thousands of citations in sections of the Judicial Code, enacted in 1948, which codifies the then law and statutes?

C. The Opinion's Absurd Misstatements Respecting the Assignment of Cases to the Court's Divisions.

The opinion states:

"* * * Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative predetermination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc * * *"

The Supreme Court in the Textile Mills case has established a definite criterion for the rehearings en banc provided for in 28 U.S.C. § 46 (c). It is the only one there stated, though there are others. It is that conflicts of law between the decisions of two of the court's divisions are cause for rehearing en banc. By clearing the law en banc, the circuit does so for the 96.3% of litigation in which this court's decisions are final.

Such en banc action prevents the burden on the Supreme Court, such as in the certification of the question of such differing divisions in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F. 2d 867, 869, a burden the Supreme Court later refused to assume in its return of Robinson v. Johnston for our en banc consideration of our divisions' divergencies.

It is almost a rude question to ask, "How, in heaven's name, are the seven judges en banc to know tentatively or otherwise that the division to which they assign the case will thereafter decide it without conflict with a prior decision of a different division"? The phrase, "How, in heaven's name," is used advisedly, for our tentative decision would require divine omniscience.

The opinion states that another criterion is whether the case to be assigned to a division is "one involving constitutional questions."

The slightest reflection shows that the court en banc could make its tentative assignment of a case to a division because not involving a constitutional question only by examination of all the briefs in all the cases to be assigned to determine whether such a constitutional contention is at issue.

Were this truly what we have done, it would have involved a volume of judicial effort comparable to that the court's opinion seeks to avoid with petitions for rehearings en banc.

In the eleven years since the Textile Mills case, the Clerk advises, we have assigned to division over two thousand two hundred cases. In but nineteen cases, less than one per cent, have they been assigned to the court en banc. These were cases whose extraordinary importance had wide newspaper notoriety. In none of the remaining two thousand two hundred cases has the court en banc assigned them to division after an examination of the briefs for that purpose.

D. Further to avoid considering the corporation's contention and authorities, the opinion misstates the source of the contention that rehearings en banc are needed to cure the divergence of divisions.

On the source of this contention the court's opinion states, "It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts."

"Some commentators"! To what extent will the court go in order to avoid mentioning that this hazard was stated first by the Third Circuit in the Textile Mills case and on its appeal by the Supreme Court, and later implicitly by the Supreme Court in returning Robinson v. Johnston to this court because of the difference in viewpoint of our divisions. That is to say, in such holdings on the criterion of divergence, the Third Circuit and the Supreme Court are no more than mere commentators.

The opinion seeks to minimize the likelihood of a division overruling sub silentio a prior division's holding and this with the certainty of nine judges and three divisions in the near future.[4] The idea is that the judges in the division so acting, by informal and unofficial interchanges" with the nonparticipating judges, will advise the latter that the decision is at variance with that of a prior division. In my seventeen years on the bench I have had no associate so confess his mistaken act.

An examination of the three cases cited, supra, the Kronberg, Fruehauf Trailer and Northwestern

[4]See footnote 3, supra.

Mutual cases, in which the petitions for rehearing en banc were stricken, shows that two of them were founded on such conflict of divisions and the third on conflicts in district court decisions on important matters. Also in the seven cases of Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, 12684; Acheson v. United States, 2772; Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 11959; Tanimura v. United States, 13014; California v. United States, 12184; Sunbeam Lighting Co. v. Sunbeam Corp., 12357, and Zamlock v. United States, 12753, the division judges refused consideration of the petition addressed to the seven and thus prevented the court en banc from considering the contention in each that the division's decision conflicted with the decision of a prior division.

E. The court's confessed fear of the burden of an overwhelming volume of such petitions may be avoided by an amendment of its rules.

Against a flood of such petitions we can protect ourselves, as has the Supreme Court, by amending our Rule 25 as follows:

"Rule 25.

"Rehearing

"A petition for rehearing of a decision by a division of the court may be presented within 30 days after judgment. It must be printed, and briefly and distinctly state its grounds, and be supported by certificate of counsel that in his judgment it is well founded and that it is not interposed for delay. Twenty printed copies must be filed with the clerk of this court.

"Where there has been a denial of a rehearing of a decision by a division, a petition for a rehearing in bank may be filed within fifteen days. The petition shall be in the form above described and with the same certificate of counsel. No petition will be entertained, unless one of the judges participating in that decision shall join in seeking such rehearing."

The Supreme Court has similarly protected itself on its petitions for rehearing by a provision in its Rule 33, of which the pertinent portion is:

"Such a petition * * * will not be granted unless a justice who concurred in the judgment desires it and a majority of the Court so determines."

In the last seven years there have been but 75 dissents, an average of less than 11 per year. Probably less than 11 judges per year would join in petitioning for a rehearing en banc.

In view of our prospective three divisions and the likely need for such rehearings en banc, an average of eleven such petitions would not be an intolerable burden, less than 4% of our submitted cases. It would substantially reduce the likelihood of conflict between the divisions.

By requiring first a rehearing by the division, the district judges would not be barred from the reconsideration of a decision.

The motion to file should have been considered on its merits and granted.

SUPPLEMENT TO DISSENTING OPINION OF CHIEF JUDGE DENMAN, FILED HEREIN ON JULY 9, 1952

Since the writing of my dissenting opinion herein I have been advised by Chief Judge Harold M. Stephens of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that that court has rendered a series of decisions in conflict with the decision of this court on the question of the right to consider a petition or motion for rehearing in banc where made by a litigant alone or by a single judge in the division which has decided the case.

It thus appears that this case is of the character described in Rule 38 (5) (b) of the Supreme Court. The decisions of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia determining its practice there are those contained in the following communication to me from Chief Judge Stephens:

"Washington, D. C.
September 11, 1952

Honorable William Denman
Chief Judge
U. S. Court of Appeals
United States Post Office and Courthouse
San Francisco.

My dear Judge Denman:

In response to your inquiry regarding the practice in this court with respect to hearings in banc and rehearings in banc under the provisions of Section 46 of Title 28 of the United States Code, I wish to advise as follows:

In determining in which cases to sit in banc, two methods have been followed in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, namely:

/1/ Any judge or judges or any division of the court may request that a case be heard originally or reheard in banc. Such judge or judges or division of the court usually addresses a memorandum to all of the active circuit judges indicating why he or they thinks the case should either be heard or re-heard in banc, and requests the judges to notify the chief-judge of their votes on the request. If a majority favor the in banc hearing, an order to that effect is entered and the case is scheduled for the in banc hearing or rehearing.

/2/ Any party to a case may by written motion or petition request that the original hearing or a rehearing to be held in banc. Such a motion or petition is submitted to and ruled upon by all of the active circuit judges of the circuit.

In the following cases rehearings in banc were ordered on the request of one member of the division of the court which originally heard the case:

No. 10446, Kephart vs. Kephart, 193 F. 2d 677.
No. 11081, Quinn vs. U. S. Not yet decided.
No. 10943, Emspak vs. U. S. Not yet decided.

In the following case rehearing in banc was ordered on the request of a judge not a member of the division which originally heard the case:

No. 10063, Stewart vs. Overholser, 186 F. 2d 339.

In the following cases the original hearings in banc were ordered on the request of the original division:

No. 11039, Thompson Co. vs. D.C. Not yet decided.
No. 11044, D.C. vs. Thompson Co. Not yet decided.

In the following case the original hearing in banc was ordered on the request of one member of the court:

No. 10473, Overholser vs. Boddie, 184 F. 2d 240.

In the following cases rehearings in banc were ordered on the petition of one of the parties:

No. 10504, in the Matter of John W. Carter, 192 F. 2d 15.

No. 10854, Columbia National Bank vs. D.C., 195 F. 2d 942.

No. 10846, Citizens Bank vs. D. C., 195 F. 2d 946.

No. 10835, D.C. vs. Catholic Education Press. Not yet decided.

Very truly yours,

/s/ HAROLD M. STEPHENS,
Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit."

It is ordered that the above opinion be printed as a part of the record in this case and that a properly certified copy be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States as a part of the certiorari proceedings sought by Western Pacific Railroad Corporation.

Chief Judge.

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. .....

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION and ALEXIS I. duP. BAYARD, Receiver, Petitioners,

vs.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, SACRAMENTO NORTHERN RAILWAY, TIDEWATER SOUTHERN RAILWAY, DEEP CREEK RAILROAD COMPANY, THE WESTERN REALTY COMPANY, THE STANDARD REALTY AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY and DELTA FINANCE CO., LTD., Respondents.

Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

Western Pacific Railroad Corporation and Alexis I. duP. Bayard, its receiver, pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit entered on October 29, 1951, and also to review that court's order of January 30, 1952 striking from the files their petition for rehearing en banc.

Emphasis is supplied unless otherwise noted.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court (R. 258) is reported in 85 F. Supp. 868. The opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 2214), a dissenting opinion (R. 2239), the opinion of the court on striking the petition for rehearing en banc (R. 2260), and the opinion of Fee, J., suggesting a rehearing by all the circuit judges (R. 2261), have not yet been reported.[1]

JURISDICTION

The District Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1331, 1332, and the Court of Appeals under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1291 and 1294(1). That court's judgment was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). On December 17, 1951, within the time allowed by order (R. 2257-9), a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing en banc were filed (R. 2259-60). On January 30, 1952, the petition for rehearing was denied, and the petition for rehearing en banc was ordered stricken, as without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court (R. 2259). On April 19, 1952, by order of Mr. Justice Douglas petitioner's time to file a petition for certiorari was extended to June 27, 1952. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Must a former parent corporation join in consolidated federal income and excess profits tax returns with its former subsidiary, so that a loss incurred by the former parent may be used to extinguish the tax liability of its former subsidiary, without any accounting by the former subsidiary to the former parent for the benefit thus obtained? The loss so utilized was the parent's loss of its entire investment in the subsidiary (I.R.C., Sec 23(g)(2) and (4)).

2. Does not a Court of Appeals exceed its appellate office and so far depart from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings as to call for this Court's power of supervision (Supreme Court Rule 38(5)(b)), where it finds facts ab initio to affirm a judgment which it holds to be non-sustainable on either the legal theories applied or the facts found by the trial court, particularly where its findings are contrary to those which the trial court made clear it would have found had it considered the issues material?

3. May a litigant petition a Court of Appeals for a rehearing en banc under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) after decision by a three-judge panel; or may two judges of the panel strike out such petition "as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of this court", thus preventing the petition from being considered by the court of seven judges?

STATUTES INVOLVED

The pertinent provisions of Internal Revenue Code, Section 23(g)(2) and (4), 52, and 141, Treasury Regulation 104, Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c), and R.C.P. 52(a), are printed in an appendix hereto.

STATEMENT

As stated in the opinion of Judge Fee suggesting a rehearing en banc,

> "This cause involves the disposition of over $21,000,000.00. The solution requires application of novel statutory language affecting the fields of bankruptcy and taxes" (R. 2261).

The panel deciding this cause was composed of one circuit judge and two district judges, one of whom wrote the majority opinion and one a dissent. Both opinions concur that the trial court's legal views were erroneous. And so, as Judge Fee notes (R. 2261):

> "in this serious and important litigation, three District judges have, respectively, expressed three widely divergent views, while no member of the Court of Appeals has written a line on the merits."

This is an action by petitioner Western Pacific Railroad Corporation to compel respondent Western Pacific Railroad Company to account for the benefit obtained from the use, in consolidated income tax returns, of a $75 million loss of petitioner to satisfy respondent's own federal tax liability of $17 million.[2]

For many years petitioner had owned all the capital stock of respondent, an operating railroad. Petitioner had paid $75 million for that stock (R. 262). In 1935 respondent went into bankruptcy, and trustees were appointed, remaining in possession until December 29, 1944 (R. 1908, 1916).

The plan of reorganization proposed for respondent by the I.C.C. (233 I.C.C. 409, 452) and sustained by this Court on March 15, 1943 (Ecker v. Western Pacific Railroad Corp., 318 U.S. 448), excluded petitioner from participation in the reorganization and wiped out its $75 million investment in respondent. The plan was confirmed by the District Court, October 11, 1943.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, Section 141, a parent company and its subsidiaries may file consolidated returns in which losses of all are offset against the gains of all. I.R.C., Section 23(g)(4) as amended in October 1942, provided for the first time that a loss arising from worthlessness of stock in a subsidiary is an ordinary rather than a capital loss and thus deductible from taxable income. Thereby petitioner's loss, resulting from this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, became available as an offset against income.

Consolidated returns for 1943 and 1944 and a claim for refund of the 1942 tax previously paid were filed, using petitioner's stock loss to offset respondent's income. Had respondent filed separate returns, its tax liability would have been $21,000,000. As the result of a settlement with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the returns for 1943 and 1944 were accepted in consideration of withdrawal of the claim for refund (R. 262).

[2]Petitioner Bayard is petitioner Corporation's receiver, appointed by the Delaware Chancery Court to realize on all the Corporation's assets and claims (R. 292). Any recovery will go to him for distribution to the Corporation's stockholders under the Chancery Court's supervision. For brevity we shall refer to the Corporation as petitioner and to Western Pacific Railroad Company as respondent. The other respondents were joined as defendants because they were parties to the consolidated returns, but no relief was sought against them.

As the court below states: "Except for the offset of the capital stock loss of Corporation, the net earnings [of the respondent] would have required the payment of some $17,000,000 in income and excess profits taxes" (R. 2217-8).

Thus respondent avoided payment of $17 million in taxes by using petitioner's tax rights.[3]

THE RESULT WAS OBTAINED BY RESPONDENT'S TAKING OVER PETITIONER'S AFFAIRS AND DIRECTING ITS ACTIONS.

This extraordinary result was accomplished by respondent's taking over and managing petitioner's affairs for its own benefit, without regard for the rights of petitioner or its stockholders who had provided the $76 million, the loss of which furnished the tax credit.

As the trial court found, respondent through its tax counsel conceived the idea of using petitioner's loss to offset its own income (R. 261), decided to put the idea into effect (R. 265, 266), prepared all the operative documents, and settled the tax controversy with the government, acting under a power of attorney in petitioner's name (R. 262, 263, 470, 1442). Respondent's tax counsel who conceived the idea called it "paradoxical" (R. 265). The "paradox" lay in the fact that the loss so used to enable respondent to avoid taxes arose from the very fact that petitioner was cut off by the bankruptcy from any further economic interest in the respondent and could gain no benefit as a stockholder from the discharge of respondent's taxes.

[3]Respondent made accruals of over $10 million to meet its expected tax liability for 1943 and the first four months of 1944, and placed these in government bonds, first as a reserve fund for contingent tax liabilities, and later as a reserve to meet a judgment in this case, and still has the reserve (R. 263, 517-18, 616). On emerging from the reorganization respondent had an unappropriated earned surplus of $30 million (P. Ex. 20 D, p. 15), since increased to over $47 million (1951 Annual Report, Moody's Manual of Railroads).

Respondent was able to do these things because it controlled Curry, petitioner's president and actually its only officer.* As described by the trial court, Curry was "just a presiding officer and a sort of figurehead" (R. 646, 647).

Petitioner was so impoverished after this Court's decision of March 15, 1943 that it could no longer pay its officers' salaries, and respondent took them over as its own "full time employees" before the tax returns were filed. After June 1, 1943, Curry was in respondent's exclusive pay, as were most of respondent's board of directors (R. 1135-1139).

All the documents were signed and filed in petitioner's name by Curry. As the trial court found, they were never submitted to petitioner's Board of Directors for consideration or approval* (R. 261). Curry followed the instructions of respondent's tax counsel, who testified that he was responsible to respondent alone (R. 1431); his firm was later paid $300,000 by respondent for their services in the premises (R. 1749).

BASIC AND INCONTROVERTIBLE FACTS SUMMARIZED.

1. Petitioner sustained a loss of $75 million when its stock in respondent became worthless.

2. It ceased to have any economic interest in respondent on March 15, 1943.

3. Respondent thereafter used petitioner's loss to discharge respondent's tax liability of $17 million.

4. Respondent conceived the plan of using petitioner's loss and carried it into execution by directing the action of petitioner's president, who was also an officer of respondent and in its exclusive pay.

5. Respondent's tax saving resulted from the conjunction of two elements. First, it had to obtain petitioner's joinder in con-

*Petitioner's only two independent directors testified that while they supposed consolidated returns would be filed, not until shortly before this suit was commenced did either know that petitioner's stock loss was being used or that thereby respondent was saving taxes (R. 1129, 1132, 1019, 1022).

solidated returns. In addition, it had to use the loss. The loss was petitioner's loss.

Under these facts, petitioner contended that respondent must account for the benefits obtained by it through the use of petitioner's tax credits.

THE DECISIONS OF THE TWO COURTS BELOW.

The District Court held against petitioner on two legal theories. The Court of Appeals swept both of them aside as erroneous in law. The dissenting opinion of Judge Fee states the situation (R. 2239-40):

> "The Trial Court gives two reasons for decision against plaintiff: * * * Neither has any validity.
>
> "The major portion of the opinion of the Trial Court is devoted to the proposition that the 'tax escape' was a fraud upon the government, and therefore the proceeds were given to the defendant, an active wrongdoer, * * * The majority of this Court as the opinion shows, does not rely upon it.[5]
>
> "A second subsidiary theory was also advanced below with little emphasis. * * * This reason is as unstable as the first."[6]

The majority nevertheless affirmed the judgment, by (a) announcing a new principle of law (discussed at pp. 9-19 below), and (b) applying it to supposed facts not found by the trial court and contrary to what the court indicated it would have found had it believed the facts material (discussed at pp. 20-26 below).

STRIKING OF PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC.

After decision, petitioner not only filed a petition for rehearing but also petitioned the entire Court of Appeals for a rehearing en banc under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c). The petition for rehearing en banc was never permitted to reach the whole court. The panel, by a per curiam order of two judges, struck it, "as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court." (R. 2260).

Judge Fee, dissenting from this order, made the statements quoted at page 3 above and concluded "I therefore suggest to the Court of Appeals a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges." (R. 2262)

Thereafter on March 10, 1952, petitioner filed a petition for leave to file a motion to vacate the order striking the petition for rehearing en banc, so as to reinstate it and submit it to the entire court for its consideration and action. (R. 2263, 2282) The court below has taken no action on this petition, although the time within which to petition for certiorari was extended 60 days by order of Mr. Justice Douglas to permit it to do so.

REASONS FOR GRANTING A WRIT

The court below has decided important questions of federal law which have not been, but should be, settled by this Court, as well as an important question of local law in a way in conflict with applicable local decisions. The questions are of wide public interest, concerning the rights and duties of parties to federal consolidated returns under the Internal Revenue laws and Treasury regulations. The decision of these vital questions is not only erroneous but it is in conflict with decisions of the Second, Fourth and Fifth Circuits. Furthermore, the court below has so departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings, as to call for an exercise of this Court's power of supervision.

These reasons will be presented under three main heads.

The decision of the Court of Appeals is commented upon in the May, 1952, issue of the Harvard Law Review, where it is suggested that the decision is erroneous (65 Har. Law Rev. 1256-1258).

I.

The Decision Is Based on a Novel Rule of Law, Affecting Taxes, Corporate Reorganization, and the Law of Unjust Enrichment, Without Support of Any Known Principle or Authority.

The basic reasoning of the majority opinion is as follows: If respondent controlled petitioner, it had a fiduciary obligation to deal with it fairly (R. 2223). But it did not violate this duty in filing the consolidated returns or in the failure of the common officers to request and obtain an agreement for compensation for use of petitioner's tax rights, or in respondent's failure to give petitioner an opportunity to appoint independent officers who could have made such an agreement. These acts were not unfair, said the court, because petitioner was under a duty to file such returns; it could not have demanded an agreement of compensation for doing so, all because petitioner was bound to give to respondent the benefit of its loss (R. 2232-2234).

The opinion sums up: "Equity will not permit a recovery as a substitute for a bargain which would have been unfair," i.e., no bargain for any compensation would have been fair (R. 2235). In short, it was petitioner's duty to give up its sole asset to respondent for nothing.

The majority opinion thus announces a new principle of law, viz.:

That wherever the tax laws permit two corporations to join in consolidated federal tax returns, and one has a loss and the other has income, the former must join with the latter and permit its loss to be used for the latter's benefit, without payment, consideration or compensation.

And since respondent was no longer a subsidiary of petitioner,[7] the principle as applied went further, namely:

A former parent is under a duty to join in a consolidated return and permit its loss to be used to satisfy the former subsidiary's tax, without consideration or compensation, even though it has no economic interest in the latter and can derive no benefit therefrom.

[7] As the opinion itself states, "when the returns and the claim for refund were filed, affiliation no longer existed" (R. 2230-1).

This is tantamount to holding that the income corporation can sue in equity for a mandatory injunction to compel the loss corporation to join and confer the benefit of its loss, gratis.

Fundamentally, petitioner is entitled to recover on the principles of unjust enrichment. Restatement of Restitution, Section 1. The discharge of respondent's tax liability by use of petitioner's loss was an enrichment as much as if respondent had taken dollars from petitioner and used them for this purpose. As stated in 65 Harvard Law Review at 1257, "If, as has been suggested, the Court should not have found that [petitioner] had a duty to file consolidated returns, then principles of restitution for unjust enrichment should have governed the decision."

RETENTION BY RESPONDENT OF THE BENEFITS RECEIVED FROM USE OF PETITIONER'S LOSS IN CONSOLIDATED RETURNS IS INCONSISTENT WITH THE RATIONALE OF CONSOLIDATED RETURNS AND THE PURPOSE OF CONGRESS IN ALLOWING THEM.

The principle underlying consolidated returns is this: A group of affiliated corporations is an economic entity and, unless the group as a whole in the conduct of the business enterprise shows a net profit, those who conduct the business—the parent's owners—have realized no gain. Handy & Harman v. Burnet, 284 U.S. 136, 140[8].

[8]The legislative reports and similar material are conveniently assembled in II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-47 issue, pp. 632, 633.

Consolidated returns were first required, but only for excess profits tax, by Treasury Regulation in 1917. This was validated by the 1921 Act. Consolidated returns were compulsory for both normal and excess profits taxes between 1918 and 1921, inclusive. They were permissive but not mandatory for 1922-1933, inclusive. They were not permitted, except in case of certain railroad corporations, from 1934-1939, inclusive. They were permissive for all corporations with respect to excess profits taxes in 1940 and 1941. In 1942 the Revenue Act, Section 141(a), extended the privilege to all corporations for all years after December 31, 1941, with respect to both normal taxes and excess profits taxes.

The rationale "is the recognition of this common owner's right to set off against his gains in the one [corporation] his losses in the other [corporation]." Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 44 F.2d 543 at 545 (4 Cir.), cer. den. 282 U.S. 903;[9] Alameda Inv. Co. v. McLaughlin, 28 F.2d 81 (D.C. N.D. Cal.), aff'd 33 F.2d 120 (9 Cir.).

When the tax law permits one affiliate's profits to be offset against another's losses, its purpose and its effect is to benefit the ultimate owners of the business entity, i.e., the parent's stockholders. The means it adopts is the amelioration of the loss suffered by them because of losses of any one affiliate.

Two principles are evident: (1) The tax saving should go to the ultimate owner of the economic entity, the parent, and (2) it should go to the party suffering the loss, to ameliorate it. So long as the economic unity continues, these two principles coincide. And they coincide here, because the loss used to produce the tax savings was the former parent's loss.

The majority opinion below permits the tax saving to be retained by the former subsidiary, after severance of the economic unity—the very event producing the parent's loss—without making restitution to the parent. Thereby it defeats both equities underlying the principles of consolidated income tax reporting. New owners of the former subsidiary are reaping a sheer windfall from the misfortune of the old owners. The income tax laws are subverted into a tool to enrich strangers to the economic entity for whose protection consolidated returns are permitted.

In Woolford Realty Co. v. Rose, 286 U.S. 319, this Court (Cardozo, J.) held that the use of consolidated returns did not permit a corporation to deduct from its profits the loss of an affiliate sustained in a year prior to affiliation. "The mind rebels against the notion that Congress in permitting a consolidated return" was willing to permit a corporation to profit by the loss of one who was a stranger when the loss was sustained.

[9]This case contains an excellent statement of the history and purpose of consolidated returns and the concept of the economic unity.

Here is the converse situation, for the tax savings were claimed after the economic unity was severed. The mind rebels against the notion that, after that severance, respondent may confiscate the tax utility of petitioner's loss. In the words of Woolford, "to such an attempt the reaction of an impartial mind is little short of instinctive."

In his dissenting opinion below Judge Fee summarized the matter thus (R. 2248):

> "If we look at it realistically, but little question arises. If the plaintiff were still the owner of the stock of defendant, then the allocation of $17,000,000 to the defendant would be reflected in the increased value of its stock. The transfer of the stock left the right untouched. Since increase in value of stock in defendant no longer is of avail to plaintiff, there should be another method of applying the remission to the loss."[10]

Senate reports on various revenue bills have justified consolidated tax reporting on the ground that "no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results,"[11] and that "no improper benefits are obtained from the privilege."[12] On the basis of these passages, J. D. & A. B. Spreckels Co., 41 B.T.A. 370, 375, held that "the framers of the statute [did not intend] that the privilege of making consolidated returns may be enjoyed in cases where the affiliation does not serve a business purpose, as distinguished from a tax-reducing purpose."

[10]In Bondholders, Inc. v. Powell, 342 U.S. 921 (Jan. 28, 1952) and again in Chemical Bank & Trust Co. v. Group of Institutional Investors, 343 U.S. ..... (June 10, 1952), Mr. Justice Frankfurter notes that due to erroneous estimates of future earning power, valuable equities were forfeited in a series of railway reorganizations of which the first was Ecker v. Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, 318 U.S. 448. Here, although petitioner's stock in respondent was declared worthless in the Ecker case, respondent's earned income in 1942-4 was so large that a tax of $21,000,000 would have been paid had it not been discharged by the use of petitioner's loss. The creditors of respondent, not content with wiping out petitioner's equity in respondent and acquiring it for themselves, now contend that respondent, in addition, is entitled to use petitioner's loss, without accountability.

But, unless the tax savings here are applied to ameliorate petitioner's loss, an "ultimate advantage under the tax laws" has resulted, "improper benefits are obtained from the privilege," and only a tax reducing purpose has been served: respondent has escaped its taxes because an economic stranger had a huge loss. The District Court was understandably indignant at this result. "If I had the power," it asserted, "I would order these taxes paid to the United States. That would effectively dispose of the cause." (R. 270).

Yet it left the funds with respondent, the unjustly enriched party responsible for what was done. And the majority opinion below, while disapproving the trial court's reasoning, permits its result to stand.

The consequence is that the revenue laws have been subverted and made absurd.

BY FIAT THE MAJORITY OPINION BELOW MAKES MANDATORY WHAT CONGRESS LEFT OPTIONAL.

The tax laws make clear that (1) only the parent corporation may file consolidated returns; that (2) there was no duty to file such returns; (3) that consolidated returns may be filed only if all affiliates join, and (4) that a parent is under no duty to a subsidiary, nor any affiliate to any other, to file consolidated returns, each being free to make its own decision on the basis of its own interest. Treas. Reg. 104, Sec. 23.11(a), 23.16(a), II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-7, pp. 649-650. Duke Power Co. v. Comm., 44 F.2d 543, 545 (4 Cir.) cer. den. 282 U.S. 903; George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F.2d 72 (2 Cir.); Trinity Building Corp. of New York, 40 B.T.A. 1315.

By judicial fiat the court below makes mandatory what Congress and the Treasury left optional. Wherever consolidated returns may be filed with a resulting tax reduction to anyone, this decision decrees that they must be.

The rule so created not only confers on one corporation a right to use another's assets, but it does so free of any requirement of just compensation.

No principle supports such a right. Rather, as Judge Fee stated (R. 2242):

> "plaintiff had a property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns, which could neither be given away without consideration nor cut off judicially without due process."

As he further stated (R. 2243):

> "Since, under the [tax] law, all corporations concerned must consent to the filing of consolidated returns, it is clear, contrary to the statement in the majority opinion, that plaintiff had no duty requiring it to file these returns. Plaintiff had a legal right to refuse to file."

65 Harvard Law Review at 1257 comments:

> "The ground relied on by the Court of Appeals was that * * * [respondent] could have violated no duty to act fairly since [petitioner] was under a duty to file the consolidated returns anyway. The court's argument that [petitioner] had such a duty, however, is not convincing. The Internal Revenue Code imposes no such obligation."

Moreover, there are many factors besides offset of losses which bear on the question whether it is advantageous to join in consolidated returns (cf. II Montgomery, Federal Taxes on Corporations, 1942-1943, pp. 492, 493-5). Burdens as well as advantages flow from such action. Thus each company joining in the return becomes liable for the full amount of taxes owed by the group (Treas. Reg. 104, Sec. 23.15(a); T.R. 110, Sec. 33.15(a)), and is subjected to requirements affecting its future tax situation. For example, by virtue of elimination of intercompany transactions, the basis at which property is held may be affected (T.R. 104, Sec. 23.38; Tr. 110, Sec. 33.38). In certain circumstances such returns must be filed in a later year (T.R. 104, Sec. 23.11(a); T.R. 110, Sec. 33.11(a)), although "future developments may make the filing of separate returns for future years more advantageous." (II Montgomery, p. 492). Here one consequence of petitioner's joining in the consolidated returns was to make it liable for any taxes payable by respondent. All this demonstrates how indefensible it is to hold that an independent company has any duty to assume such a liability and such possible disadvantages simply to benefit another company which wants to use its loss.

Still again Judge Fee observed (R. 2251):

> "An incontrovertible proof of the proposition that plaintiff had no duty to apply the loss for the benefit of defendant may be cited. If plaintiff had sold a gold mine for a profit of over $75,000,000.00, its loss on the stock of the subsidiary could have been applied to offset any taxes against plaintiff. In that event, the trustees in reorganization would have been required to pay taxes against the operating company. Once used, the power of applying the loss would be functus officii, and plaintiff would have received the entire benefit."

ONE'S RIGHTS OR PROPERTY MAY NOT BE APPROPRIATED MERELY BECAUSE HE CANNOT USE THEM PROFITABLY HIMSELF.

The last quotation from Judge Fee's opinion reveals the fallacy of the majority opinion.

If a prosperous corporation (e.g., Standard Oil Company) had owned respondent's stock, none would claim that it had to join in a consolidated return and give respondent the tax utility of its loss, without accounting for the benefit, for Standard could use the loss to discharge its own taxes.

But because petitioner was so unfortunate as to be left destitute and with no taxable income, the majority opinion applied a different standard. It argues that respondent "did not abuse its supposed dominant position because the officers and directors common to both corporations did not sacrifice Corporation's [petitioner's] interests to those of its subsidiary" (R. 2232). The reason given is that petitioner "had no income" and so "there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss," whereas "its affiliate [respondent] did have use for the loss" (R. 2232). "Under this state of facts these officers had a positive duty to make use of the loss as they did" (R. 2233), that is, to give it to respondent, to satisfy the taxes that otherwise it would have had to pay.

This is merely to assert that a corporation able to dominate another may take its tax credits without compensation if it can profitably use them and the dominated corporation cannot.

Almost anyone can advantageously use another's property or rights—and will, if he can get them for nothing. But the opinion below stands alone in holding that he is entitled to do so as of right. Protection of one's assets from seizure or trespass by another has never depended on what use or profit he can make of them. The contrary rule reflects itself in a host of instances in every field of law, of which a few are listed in the margin.[13]

A recent example is Reading v. The Attorney General, 1951 Appeal Cases 507, affirming Reading v. The King [1949] 2 K.B. 232, reviewed in Harvard Law Review for January 1952 at 502. There the Crown was held entitled to bribes received by a soldier

> "[petitioner's] stock loss was an asset having value * * * even though [respondent] was the sole market and [petitioner] could utilize the stock loss in no other way."

The tax credit was petitioner's sole asset. The majority opinion has given to that fact the very reverse of its true significance. As Judge Fee pointed out (R. 2242):

> "* * * It seems to be assumed that the officers of plaintiff could give away the property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns either voluntarily or acting under the control of defendant or the reorganization trustees. This is strange doctrine. * * * a transfer of all the assets of a corporation * * * cannot be made even by a majority of the stock. Neither officers nor directors, without a vote of the majority, have such power. In this case it is of stellar importance that this right of plaintiff was its sole asset and that, upon appropriation thereof, it became insolvent."

As 65 Harvard Law Review 1257 says:

> "[Respondent's] enrichment may have been unjust if, having caused [petitioner] to file the consolidated returns, it deprived petitioner of the opportunity to bargain for the value of its corporate assets: the right to use its stock loss for tax purposes."

CONFLICT WITH THE FIFTH CIRCUIT.

On the subject matter of this action, the appropriation of tax credits or rights belonging to one who could not use them by another who could, the decision below is in conflict with the Shreveport Bank cases, a series of decisions of the Fifth Circuit. Connolly v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 189 F.2d 608, Commercial National Bank in Shreveport v. Connolly, 176 F.2d 1004, Commercial National Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231, cer. den. 323 U.S. 796, affirming Leslie v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927.

There an insolvent bank transferred its assets to a new bank in pledge to pay its liabilities. The State imposed a tax on the capital stock of banks, assessable against the bank. In determining assessable value, the value of real estate owned by the bank was deductible from what would otherwise be the value of the stock. Reporting the real estate transferred to it by the old bank as its own, the new bank paid less taxes than it otherwise would. It was ordered to account to the old bank for the tax savings.

These cases not only hold, as 65 Harvard Law Review 1257 says; that "a tax saving may constitute enrichment," but they also make clear that the fact that one has a tax credit or advantage which he cannot himself use does not give another the right, free, to use it to his advantage. "The fact that the Old Bank suffered no loss * * * makes no difference." Leslie v. Comm. Natl. Bank in Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927, 933.[14]

The decision below is in conflict, also, with Bankers Trust Co. v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., 92 F.2d 450 (5 Cir.). That case recognized the duty of an affiliate to account for tax benefits obtained from consolidated reporting to the party whose tax credits conferred the benefit.

CONFLICT WITH THE SECOND AND FOURTH CIRCUITS.

To justify its conclusion, the majority opinion below states that if the loss were respondent's and the income petitioner's, peti-

[14]The majority opinion dismisses the Shreveport Bank cases on the ground that the "new bank" was a "trustee." But there was no trust in the strict sense. There was a situation in which the officers were in dual relationships with respect to the two banks. Leslie v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927, 933. The words "trust" and "trustees" are used in the Shreveport opinions because the courts were applying the "grand rule," the principle "that wherever a person clothed with a fiduciary character gains some personal advantage by availing himself of his situation as a trustee he becomes trustee of the advantage so gained * * *," and recognized that the rule "includes persons who are not trustees properly so called, but all those who stand in what is called a fiduciary position." Pound and Plucknett's Readings on the History and System of the Common Law (3rd ed. 1927), p. 629; 4 Pomeroy's Equity Juris. (5th ed.), p. 263. On this principle respondent should account to petitioner.

tioner could have compelled respondent to confer upon it the benefit of the loss by joining in consolidated returns.

This is in direct conflict with the Second and Fourth Circuits and the Board of Tax Appeals which held that a corporation, including one in bankruptcy, is free to join or not to join in consolidated returns as it sees fit.

In George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F.2d 72 (2 Cir.) and Trinity Building Corporation of New York, 40 B.T.A. 1315, the Commissioner was upheld in refusing to accept consolidated returns filed by a parent and subsidiaries, because the trustees of a bankrupt subsidiary had refused to join. Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F.2d 543 (4 Cir.), cer. den. 282 U.S. 903, reached the same conclusion as to such returns filed by two subsidiaries where the parent refused to join. The taxpayers were thus unable even to utilize the losses of those who did join.

PETITIONER WAS NOT A FIDUCIARY FOR RESPONDENT. THE REVERSE WAS TRUE.

To extend its rule of mandatory filing of consolidated returns to a situation where the parent-subsidiary relationship has been severed, the opinion stated that a tax return is an historical document, that a fiduciary's duties with respect to matters arising during the fiduciary relationship continue through the period of winding up, and that the fiduciary who performs an act of winding up may not exact payment (R. 2234-5).

But petitioner was not respondent's liquidating agent nor its fiduciary. What makes one a fiduciary for another are the elements of dominance and the exercise of control and management. Southern Pacific Company v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483 at 492; North American Co. v. S.E.C., 327 U.S. 686 at 693; 65 Harvard Law Review, 1257. As said in 65 Harvard Law Review, 1257, "It may be strongly argued, then, that in the unique situation where the usual relationship is reversed, the subsidiary controlling the parent, the fiduciary duty is also reversed."

The majority opinion itself notes that after 1935 respondent "was no longer controlled by Corporation but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court" (R. 2223) and that after adoption of the Plan of Reorganization "affiliation no longer existed" (R. 2231). The Plan cut off all possibility of a return of control, management, or financial interest. The loss arose from the Plan. The prior association could not impose the duty on petitioner to make a free grant to respondent of the only asset which the reorganization left petitioner, i.e., the tax utility of its loss.

On the contrary, by controlling petitioner's president so as to file the tax returns, respondent assumed a "determining position over the rights" of petitioner and thereby "owed an obligation to it". Young v. The Higbee Co., 324 U.S. 204, 209, 210.

II.

If an Issue of Fact Not Found on by a Trial Court Is Thought Material, the Cause Should Be Remanded for Findings Thereon. The Court Below Exceeded Its Appellate Office by Making Findings ab Initio to Affirm the Judgment Upon a Legal Theory Different from That on Which the Trial Court Acted, and These Findings Were Contrary to What the Trial Court Made Clear It Would Have Found, Had It Considered the Issues Material, as Well as Contrary to Some Actually Made.

The majority opinion holds that petitioner may not recover although respondent appropriated its rights by dominating and controlling it. Concurrently, the majority reaches its decision by factually assuming that petitioner, not respondent, filed the tax returns, and that respondent did not dominate and use petitioner's officers. But, as said in 65 Harvard Law Review, at 1258, the moment "the issue of control [is] determinative of whether there could be recovery * * *, it would seem necessary for the court to have remanded to the district court for findings on that issue."

This is not a case where an appellate court has reversed a judgment because it believes the findings to be "clearly erroneous." What occurred here is, so far as we can find, unprecedented. Here an appellate court, sweeping aside a trial court's legal theories as unsound, has affirmed on a theory presupposing a set of facts upon which the trial court has not found and contrary to what that court has shown it would have found had it deemed them material, after hearing the witnesses and presiding over a living trial.

Nor is this a case where an appellate court, in affirming a judgment on a legal theory different from that of the lower tribunal, does so on the basis of facts found below which support the new theory. Here the legal theory is new and rests on facts found ab initio by the appellate court.

The majority opinion says (R. 2235):

> "The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of any duty owed to Corporation. As the trial court stated, 'The so-called "duality of control" much discussed and emphasized, is not important.' "

A casual reading of this extraordinary statement would suggest that the trial court had found absence of domination. But what the trial court said was this (R. 272):

> "Whether there was, or was not, 'duality of control' respecting the directorates of the two companies, appears to me to be not too important. True, there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control.' "

And by "duality of control" it said that it meant

> "that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant." (R. 264)

The trial court declined to find any facts not material to the two legal theories on which it based its decision. It concluded that "there is little factual dispute pertinent to the issue decided," i.e., pertinent to its legal theories (R. 276), and that "The so-called 'duality of control', much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue", i.e. the issue deemed by it to be important (R. 274).

Contrary to an assertion in the majority opinion below, the trial court gave permission to counsel to submit findings only if "they are limited to the issues involving the essential equitable considerations upon which the decision rests" (R. 276).

Thus, after hearing all the witnesses and performing the function which the law assigns to a trial court, the District Court made clear that, had it believed the issue material, it would have found in accordance with petitioner's claim, i.e. that respondent controlled petitioner and by means of that control caused it to file the consolidated returns for respondent's benefit. The importance which this Court attaches to a trial court's ability to see the witnesses face to face is shown by United States v. Oregon Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 339 (Apr. 28, 1952).

But the Court of Appeals held that the trial court erred, both in what it considered the "essential equitable considerations" and in its two legal theories, and therefore that its findings did not support its judgment.

In consequence the parties have never had an opportunity to submit, argue and settle findings on the issues on which the Court of Appeals based its decision.

Judge Fee's dissenting opinion clearly states the situation (R. 2241):

> "Thus the two grounds advanced [by the Trial Court] to sustain the judgment fail. The cause should be reversed for failure to state adequate findings to support the judgment. Findings must be made in the Trial Court. Appellate courts have no such right or function. The majority opinion attempts to accomplish justification of the result below by drawing inferences, deductions and conclusions from evidence which they claim to find in the record. It would be possible for other judges to set up a diametrically opposite set of facts from which a judgment in favor of plaintiff might be based. The very reason that Rule 52 requires findings of fact is illustrated by the majority opinion. For the technical difficulties of finding a basis of fact for this judgment are many. Indeed, such difficulties are insurmountable."

Earlier Judge Fee had said (R. 2239):

> "There are no findings of fact [by the Trial Court] which support the judgment of the Trial Court or the affirmance thereof by a majority of this Court. The cause should be remanded for this reason alone."

THE TRIAL COURT REFUSED ADDITIONAL FINDINGS BECAUSE IT DEEMED THEM IMMATERIAL IN ITS VIEW OF THE LAW, WHICH THE COURT OF APPEALS REPUDIATED.

Contrary to the majority's assertion, petitioner submitted to the trial court proposed findings going to an essential basis on which the majority decided the case (R. 277-279). Their purport was to state that respondent and not petitioner had acted in the premises. Because of the limitation placed by the trial court on proposed findings that it would receive, petitioner was precluded from asking for findings on "duality" and "domination" as such. But the same facts bore on whether petitioner took part in the tax transactions so as to be party to the wrongdoing which the trial court believed had been worked on the government. Findings on these issues were requested (Cf. R. 462, 463).

On settlement of the findings the trial court said that it agreed with petitioner's proposed finding to the effect that respondent and not petitioner had conducted the tax proceedings and that respondent had achieved this through control of petitioner. "There is no question about that," the court said (R. 468).

Petitioner urged, with prescience, that the facts should be stated clearly in "a set of findings so that the whole subject can be properly appraised above" (R. 463). The trial court thought that everything mentioned by petitioner could be gleaned from its "opinion some place or another" (R. 476 and see R. 470), but indicated it would make a specific finding as requested.

In the end it failed to do so and adopted its opinion as its findings. Notwithstanding the clear position of the trial court on these issues, the Court of Appeals made a contrary finding.

WHERE A TRIAL COURT FAILS TO FIND ON ESSENTIAL ISSUES, THE CAUSE MUST BE REMANDED.

R.C.P. Rule 52(a) provides that the trial judge "shall find the facts." That rule "was advisedly made mandatory * * *." 5 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.), p. 2657, fn. 21.

Where a finding has been made in the trial court, a Court of Appeals may set it aside where it is "clearly erroneous" and may reverse the judgment in consequence. But when a Court of Appeals does not have the benefit of an initial finding on a material fact by the trial court, it may not itself supply it.

"It is not the function of [an appellate court] to search the record and analyze the evidence in order to supply findings which the trial court failed to make." Kelley v. Everglades Dist., 319 U.S. 415, 421; Securities & Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 88. A reversal should follow failure to find at all on an issue held to be material. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 304 U.S. 55.

The Courts of Appeals have repeatedly so stated the law.[15]

There is an essential difference in the function of an appellate court and a trial court. As stated in oft-cited Saginaw Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Commission, 96 F.2d 554, 559 (D.C. Cir.), an appellate court's function is to compare (1) rulings with the law and (2) findings with the record, not to extract findings from the record itself. When it has no specific finding before it, it has nothing to compare against the record and should reverse. So also Commissioner v. Kolb, 100 F.2d 920 (9 Cir.).

---

[15]E.g., Waialua Agricultural Co. v. Maneja, 178 F.2d 603, 607, 608 (9 Cir.): "It is not the function of an appellate court to make findings on its own account." "The absence of findings * * * leaves no pediment on which a judgment can stand"; Jacuzzi Bros. Inc. v. Berkeley Pump Co., 191 F.2d 632, 638 (9 Cir.): "The law does not commit that function to us, but solely the power to reverse if his findings be clearly erroneous"; Helbush v. Finkle, 170 F.2d 41, 42 (9 Cir.): Where a determination "would necessitate findings on questions on which the District Court has made no findings * * * such findings should be made by the District Court, not by this Court"; Paramount Pest Control Service v. Brewer, 170 F.2d 553, 554 (9 Cir.): "This Court of Appeals has no power ab initio to consider" issues on which no findings were made.

So also Jones v. Waterman SS Corporation, 155 F.2d 992, 997 (3 Cir.); Kistler v. Gingels, 171 F.2d 912 (8 Cir.); Campbell v. Campbell, 170 F.2d 809 (D.C. Cir.); McClure v. O. Henry Tent & Awning Co., 184 F.2d 636, 639 (7 Cir.).

The vice of exploring the record to find facts ab initio is not only that it involves the appellate court in a new kind of task, but that it deprives the litigant of an opportunity to be heard. No proper machinery exists in an appellate court to settle findings in the first instance.

THE MAJORITY OPINION SETS UP A NOVEL AND FALSE PRINCIPLE CONCERNING THE POWER OF AN APPELLATE COURT.

The majority opinion disposes of the lack of findings to support its theory by saying that "Findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal," and that an appellate court "may waive the defect on the ground that the error is not substantial in the particular case," if it feels able to find the facts itself (R. 2236). It supports this assertion by citing three cases, Mayo v. Lakeland Highlands Canning Co., 309 U.S. 310, Goodacre v. Panagopoulos, 110 F.2d 716 (D.C. Cir.), and Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, 136 F.2d 796 (D.C. Cir.).

This Court nowhere stated in the Mayo case that when a case comes up without findings on issues which the appellate court deems material, it may make them ab initio. Its opinion contained a statement that findings are intended to benefit appellate courts. That statement is converted by the court below into a declaration that if the appellate court decides to find the facts itself it may dispense with findings by the trial court.

In Goodacre v. Panagopoulos and Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, there was no lack of supporting findings, but merely informality or irregularity in the mode of expressing them.

SUPPOSED PAST PRACTICE IN FILING CONSOLIDATED RETURNS FURNISHES NO. BASIS FOR THE CONCLUSION THAT PETITIONER MUST FILE SUCH RETURNS AFTER IT HAD LOST ALL FINANCIAL INTEREST IN RESPONDENT.

In good part the majority opinion's factual conclusion that the use of petitioner's loss for respondent's benefit was petitioner's undominated act is based upon the practice in earlier years of filing consolidated returns.

But the relationship of petitioner and respondent was completely changed by this Court's approval in 1943 of the I.C.C.'s Plan of Reorganization. Prior to that time petitioner was respondent's owner. Thereafter they were total strangers to each other. A practice once followed between husband and wife is not pertinent to what should be done between divorced spouses. As Judge Fee pointed out, dissenting (R. 2248):

> "It is said, although there are no findings, that the history of prior consolidated returns is controlling. Of course, it cannot probably be shown how plaintiff heretofore dealt with a consolidated return after there has been a divorce from a subsidiary."[16]

Furthermore, the loss here resulted from worthlessness of petitioner's stock in respondent. Since the tax law did not permit such a loss to offset operating income until October 1942, there was no prior practice on the use of such a loss.

Petitioner's loss with its utility for tax saving was its sole asset. There was no past practice about giving away a sole asset.

Moreover, if past practice were relevant, petitioner would be entitled to a finding thereon by the trial court.[17]

[16]The trial court itself had said (R. 1377):

"I just don't see the point of what any affiliated company has done in the past as a matter of practice in these returns, because they have all been decisions that have been made by the parent company, and when the parent company decided that it was proper to file affiliated returns, it filed them, * * *. What we have in this case is not concerned with that."

[17]For the 11 years prior to the first tax year here involved, there was not a single year in which respondent had any income (R. 1263), and in the last 5 years of that period neither respondent nor petitioner had any income. The losses of neither were used to offset income of the other (R. 2040, 2041). In still earlier years a subsidiary group joining with petitioner in consolidated returns did account to petitioner for the resulting tax savings (D. Ex. 40).

III.

It Was Error to Deny Petitioner the Right to Petition for a Rehearing en Banc

Petitioner duly filed a petition for rehearing and for a rehearing en banc. Two of the three judges hearing the appeal denied the petition for rehearing and struck out the petition for rehearing en banc, as "being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of this Court." Judge Fee dissented and suggested a rehearing en banc.

HISTORY OF REHEARINGS EN BANC.

Section 46(c) Judicial Code, provides that a rehearing may be held before a Court of Appeals en banc by order of a majority of the circuit judges in active service. This section was occasioned by a conflict between the Ninth Circuit and the Third (Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F.2d 867 (9 Cir., 1938); Commissioner v. Textile Mills Corporation, 117 F.2d 62 (3 Cir., 1940)). Upholding the Third, this Court held that hearings could be had en banc, Textile Mills Corporation v. Commissioner 314 U.S. 326.

S. 1053 was then introduced in the 77th Congress to give more explicit expression to the procedure approved by this Court. While not then enacted, it was adopted in substance as Section 46(c) upon revision of the Judicial Code in 1948. It "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case." (Reviser's note).

In United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 694 (1941), this Court, on certiorari to the Ninth Circuit, remanded the case

> "for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc," citing the Textile Mills case.

The statement by the court below that a petition for rehearing en banc is "without authority in law" is contrary to what this Court said and did in the Robinson case. This Court necessarily construed the statutes as giving a litigant "authority in law" to file a petition for rehearing en banc.

In the hearings before the Subcommittee on Judiciary on S. 1053, 77th Congress, 1st session, the following occurred:

> "Senator Danaher: * * * On whose motion would the court assemble en banc? * * * Who is going to make a motion that the whole court sit on this case? The counsel in the case?
>
> * * * * * * *
> "Mr. Chandler: The counsel can make a suggestion of course." (p. 16)

Again:

> "Senator Danaher: Judge Groner, do you gentlemen of the bench have any thought to give us as to how we are going to let a majority of the circuit judges decide * * * when they are going to convene the court en banc?
> "Judge Groner: Well, I never thought of that. My own thought in the administration of my own court would be that it would not be done unless counsel requested it, or unless the court of its own motion * * * deemed it advisable * * *." (p. 40)

In view of the reference to Judge Groner, we note that the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, as the Clerk advises, does entertain and pass on petitions for rehearing en banc, as we are informed is also the practice in the Third Circuit.

PRACTICE OF NINTH CIRCUIT.

A Court of Appeals consists of all of the judges thereof (Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326). There are 7 judges in the Ninth Circuit. If the panel that heard a cause may strike out a petition for rehearing en banc, two judges may prevent the other five from even being cognizant of the request for relief which the statute empowers the five to grant. Where two district judges are on the panel, as here, two district judges could prevent 7 circuit judges from granting a rehearing en banc, although only the circuit judges are qualified to pass on the question under Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c).[18]

In Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 175 F.2d 983 (9 Cir. 1949), Chief Judge Denman, dissenting, stated (p. 992):

> "The attempt of two judges in a panel of three judges to deny a petition for rehearing en banc violates the law as established in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston * * * and Textile Mills Securities Corp. v. Commissioner * * *.
>
> "In view of the Supreme Court decisions cited above, it is too obvious to need argument that two judges cannot thus assume to act on a petition addressed to seven judges."

Commenting on the Independence case, 63 Harvard Law Review 1449 said that "since the three judges here could not under § 46 have ordered a rehearing, their action in considering the petition seems singular", (p. 1451), and that

> "* * * fuller development of the rules governing the procedure by which the hearings are granted or denied seems both necessary and practicable. * * * perhaps formal petition of counsel, as in the instant case, is the most suitable method for initiating a hearing en banc in a particular case. * * * The petition should, it seems, be entitled to such consideration that denial of the petition results only when a majority of the individual judges are unwilling to grant it." (p. 1450)

Although certiorari was denied in the Independence case, the procedure of two judges denying a petition addressed to the whole court has not been repeated in the Ninth Circuit or elsewhere, so far as known. Instead, in Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F.2d 767 (Feb. 1950), a new procedure was initiated in the Ninth Circuit—that of striking a petition for rehearing en banc "as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court."[19] Three times since, including the present case, an identical order has been made in the same circuit, solely on the authority of Kronberg, by panels each consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges.[20]

In each of these cases there was disagreement whether a retired circuit judge was entitled to vote, on a petition for rehearing en banc, but none that only circuit judges could do so.

PETITIONS FOR REHEARING EN BANC ARE ADDRESSED TO THE ENTIRE COURT AND SHOULD NOT BE STRICKEN BY A PANEL.

No authority may be found elsewhere for this practice of declining to entertain a petition for rehearing en banc and of permitting two judges to prevent a litigant from even reaching the ear of the court.

Since the statute provides for a rehearing en banc, there must be a procedure whereby a litigant may request a court to take the action the law authorizes it to take. The Robinson case, supra, necessarily so holds.

And since hearings en banc can only be ordered by a majority of the active circuit judges, a litigant must be entitled to have his request presented to all those judges for consideration and action.

If there is lack of authority for petitions for rehearing en banc "in the rules of the court," the court should provide a procedure whereby the authority granted by Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c) may be invoked.[21]

[19]Although certiorari was applied for and denied in Kronberg v. Hale, the point was not raised.

[20]The other two instances are Freuhauf Trailer Co. v. Myers, 181 F.2d 1008, and Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Milwaukee v. Gilbert, 182 F.2d 256.

[21]On August 16, 1948, Mr. Henry P. Chandler, Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, transmitted to the Courts of Appeal the Final Report of the Committee on Codification and Revision of the Judicial Code. This report states the contents of Section 46(c) and adds, "these new provisions will call for changes in the rules of each of the Circuit Courts of Appeals." But the rules of the Ninth Circuit were not changed except as to the name of the court and the title of the Chief Judge.

CONCLUSION

We respectfully submit that this petition for certiorari should be granted.

STATUTES INVOLVED

1. Internal Revenue Code, Section 141.

"(a) Privilege to file consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns. An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of consolidated returns shall be upon the condition that the affiliated group shall make both a consolidated income-tax return and a consolidated excess-profits-tax return for the taxable year, and that all corporations which at any time during the taxable year have been members of the affiliated group making a consolidated income-tax return consent to all the consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax regulations prescribed under subsection (b) prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. The making of a consolidated income-tax return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year, the consolidated returns shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group. * * * *

"(b) Regulations. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax returns and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the income- and excess-profits-tax liability and the various factors necessary for the determination of such liability, and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability. * * *

"(c) Computation and payment of tax. In any case in which consolidated income-tax and excess-profits-tax returns are made or are required to be made, the taxes shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such returns; except that the tax imposed under section 15 or section 204 shall be increased by 2 per centum of the consolidated corporation surtax net income of the affiliated group of includible corporations. * * *

"(d) Definition of 'affiliated group'. As used in this section, an 'affiliated group' means one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is an includible corporation if—

"(1) Stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

"(2) The common parent corporation owns directly stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

"As used in this subsection, the term 'stock' does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

"(g)(2) Securities becoming worthless. If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) become worthless during the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

* * * * * * *

"(4) Stock in affiliated corporations. For the purposes of paragraph (2) stock in a corporation affiliated with the taxpayer shall not be deemed a capital asset. For the purposes of this paragraph a corporation shall be deemed to be affiliated with the taxpayer only if:

"(A) At least 95 per centum of each class of its stock is owned directly by the taxpayer; and"

4. Internal Revenue Code, Section 52.

"* * * In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control."

5. Title 28 U.S.C., Section 46(c).

"Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."

This privilege is given, however, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1941, upon the condition that all corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year for which the return is made consent to these regulations, and any amendments thereof duly prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of the return; and the making of the consolidated return is considered as such consent. * * *"

Sec. 23.15(b): Liability of a Corporation in Bankruptcy or Receivership.

"If, at the time of filing a consolidated return, one or more, but not all, of the members of the affiliated group are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United States or in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, then the liability under paragraph (a) of each such member of the group with respect to the period covered by such return shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability for such period as the several corporations included in the consolidated return may, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, agree upon, or, in the absence of such an agreement, an amount equal to its liability for such year computed as if a separate return had been filed."

Sec. 23.16(a): Scope of Agency of Common Parent Corporation.

"Except as provided in paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section—

"The common parent corporation shall be for all purposes, in respect of the tax for the taxable year for which a consolidated return is made or is required, the sole agent, duly authorized to act in its own name in all matters relating to such tax, for each corporation which during any part of such year was a member of the affiliated group. The corporations, other than the common parent, shall not have authority to act for or to represent themselves in any such matter. * * *"

Reply Brief in Support of Petition for Certiorari

When the petition for certiorari was filed herein on June 23, 1952, the Court of Appeals had not yet acted upon our petition for leave to file a motion to reinstate a petition for rehearing in banc, which had been stricken on January 30th, by the order of two judges, as unauthorized in law.

On April 19th, we applied for and received from Mr. Justice Douglas an extension to June 27, 1952, in which to petition for certiorari, in order to give the court below an opportunity to pass on the pending petition. But it finally became necessary to file without awaiting action by that court.

Emphasis in quotations is supplied unless otherwise indicated.

Thereafter, on July 9, 1952, recognizing the importance of the question presented, the court did act, all seven active circuit judges participating. The importance of the question was stated thus by the court (R. 2289):

> "On March 10, 1952, the Western Pacific Corporation presented the petition for leave described in the caption. In its supporting brief it asserts that it is its right under the law to have its petition for rehearing considered and acted upon by all the circuit judges. On order of a majority of the circuit judges, the court has been assembled in banc for the purpose of announcing the principles of law and practice it deems applicable in respect of in banc hearings. This course is thought appropriate in order that litigants and the bar may be advised not only of the position taken by the court but of the reasons for it."

With Chief Judge Denman dissenting, the court denied the petition for leave to file the motion. Copies of the majority and dissenting opinions are before this Court in a Supplemental Transcript of Record (R. 2287-2311).

As the dissenting opinion of Chief Judge Denman points out, the court's holding is based on the proposition that the full court is without power to grant or even to consider a petition for rehearing in banc without the prior approval of a majority of the panel which heard the cause.

In part IV below we comment on the decision of July 9th as deciding an important question of judicial administration and doing so in conflict not only with the statute (28 U.S.C. Sec. 46 (c)) but the practice and procedure in the Third and District of Columbia Circuits. Since the court refused to entertain our motion to reinstate the petition for rehearing, the erroneous ruling to which certiorari lies is the order of January 30th. But the opinions of July 9th show the wide importance of the question and the desirability of granting a writ.

First, however, we point out the inadequacies in respondent's brief in opposition to our petition for certiorari. The theory of that brief seems to be that if it can make the issues in a case appear to be thoroughly confused, so that time and labor will be required for its consideration and disposition, this Court will not entertain the cause.*

We believe respondent to be in error in this view. The issues presented by the petition for certiorari are clear and involve important questions of federal law and procedure as well as important questions of local law. They do not involve questions of fact. Confusion is produced only by respondent's effort to convert, and by the action of the court below in converting, an appellate court into a fact-finding body. That action furnishes the second of the three issues presented by our petition for certiorari. Because an answer to what respondent states on that issue will dispose of its attempt to confuse, we turn to it first.

I.

THE COURT BELOW EXCEEDED ITS APPELLATE OFFICE AND SO FAR DEPARTED FROM THE ACCEPTED AND USUAL COURSE OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS AS TO CALL FOR THIS COURT'S POWER OF SUPERVISION, IN THAT IT FOUND FACTS AB INITIO TO AFFIRM A JUDGMENT WHICH IT HELD TO BE NON-SUSTAINABLE ON THE LEGAL THEORIES APPLIED AND THE FACTS FOUND BY THE TRIAL COURT.

Respondent does not attempt to justify action of an appellate court in finding facts ab initio to affirm a judgment which it holds to be non-sustainable on the legal theories applied and the facts found by the Trial Court† (Pet. for Cer., pp. 20-25). It merely asserts that "the findings and conclusion of the District Court were sustained" by the court below (Br. 11) and that the latter made

*For instance, respondent's brief has an Appendix II purporting to give the range of stock quotations of the Western Pacific Railroad Company from 1943 to 1952, although this appears nowhere in the record and has no possible bearing on the issues.

†In addition to cases cited in the petition, cf. L. Hand, J. in Petterson Lighterage & Towing Corp. v. New York Central R. Co., 126 F.2d 992 (2 Cir.); Girard Trust Co. v. Windt, 178 F.2d 359 (2 Cir.); United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F.2d 416, 433 (2 Cir.); United States v. Forness, 125 F.2d 928, 942 (2 Cir.); Ginsberg v. Royal Ins. Co., 179 F.2d 152, 154 (5 Cir.).

no findings of its own and disapproved none of the Trial Court (p. 14). To create an impression that both lower courts decided the case on the same ground, it asserts that both found that plaintiff's claim had no equity (Br. 10, 11, 14), and it notes the Court of Appeals' statement (Br. 11, 14) that "We agree with the principal holding of the trial court * * *." But this "principal holding" was merely the ultimate decision that plaintiff recover nothing. While both courts concluded that equity, i.e., "the law", did not entitle plaintiff to recover, they had totally different views of what the controlling principles of law were and rested on totally different views of the facts.

The Court of Appeals Did Make Findings Ab Initio.

The two courts agreed upon the ultimate decision, but they wholly disagreed upon the grounds of that decision, both factual and legal. This is pointed out by Judge Fee in his dissent (R. 2239-2241, et seq.), and it is perfectly clear from a reading of the decisions. The majority opinion, addressing itself to Judge Fee's objection that it was supplying new findings to support the judgment, did not deny the fact but asserted a power to do so by saying that "findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal which this court may not waive" (R. 2236).

The District Court felt that respondent had defrauded the Treasury* and that a court should not lend its aid to determine who should have the avails of the fraud.† Wholly disagreeing

---

*It said, "If I had the power * * * I would order these taxes paid to the United States" (R. 270).

†It stated its main ground of decision as follows:

"To assume * * * that the Congress intended by 23(g)4 to statutorily authorize what was done in this case, is to attribute plain stupidity to the Congress of the United States * * *

"But here the inexplicable occurred. For $4,144,828, the United States released $21,346,567 in taxes upon a basis which is completely incomprehensible. The tax 'escape' invites a type of scrutiny which this Court is powerless to give it.

"Obviously the Court cannot pass judgment upon the validity of the tax compromise and settlement. It is now closed. It is final and with this view, the Court of Appeals, by a two-to-one decision, held that the former parent had a fiduciary duty to join in a consolidated return and give its former subsidiary the benefit of its tax loss of $17 million without any consideration whatever.

Respondent asserts that no problem of findings was raised in the Court of Appeals, since we assigned no error for failure to find, and our opening brief stated that "the facts * * * are not in dispute" (Br. 14, 15). The facts which in our submission require judgment for plaintiff are not in dispute; the facts found by the Trial Court require such judgment. The vice of the Court cannot be reopened except for fraud. [R. 270]

* * * * * * * *

"Perhaps it may be said that it is impertinent for the Court to concern itself with a closed tax transaction and agreement such as this. But if equity principles are our guide, then this tax settlement is of the web and woof of the issue to be decided. Equity has no precise boundaries, and certainly not in this unique controversy.

"* * * this so-called 'saving' is inextricably entwined with the equities. Its very nature shapes and molds these equities. It is a 'pot of honey equally attractive to principals and advocates.' When equity is invoked to divide or distribute the 'pot', it cannot be blindfolded as to the origin or nature of the 'honey'.

"* * * in my opinion, the tax escape was erroneous and unjust. It cannot be cured by committing the further inequity of distributing the gain thus made to others.

"Debtor having made good its 'escape', now comes plaintiff and prays for a share, if not all, of that which 'escaped'. Whether there was, or was not, 'duality of control' respecting the directorates of the two companies, appears to me to be not too important. True, there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control'. Be that as it may, I am compelled to rest decision upon the fundamental issue of the justice and equity of plaintiff's right, if any, to be paid for that which was escaped. Analytically speaking, what the plaintiff seeks is to collect from the defendant an amount equal to all, or a substantial part of, taxes that the debtor did not pay to the United States." (pp. 271, 272)

The Court of Appeals disagreed with this whole line of reasoning (R. 2227, 2228).

Contrary to respondent's assertion, the theory that the Treasury should not have permitted tax savings was not dictum; it is the fundamental ground of one of the two reasons on which the District Court concluded that there was no equity in the cause. It is erroneous not only for the reason stated by the Court of Appeals, but also, as noted in the opinion of Judge Fee, because it left the proceeds with the "active wrongdoer" (R. 2240, and fn. 4 on 2250).

of Appeal's decision is that, advancing an entirely different theory of law under which a new range of facts became material, it then proceeded to find them for itself and found them inconsistently with the facts as determined by the trial court or as it made clear it would have determined them.

Respondent's Statement of the Case Shows That the Court of Appeals Made Findings.

Respondent's own statement of the case belies its claim that the Court of Appeals made no findings, since its characteristic feature is the assertion, as fact, of matters which are so declared by the Court of Appeals but were either not found upon by the trial court at all or are contrary to what it did find; e.g., assertions about past practice (Br. 4, 5), and statements that the tax transactions were handled in the ordinary course of business (Br. 6), that the tax savings were not accomplished by respondent's taking over and managing petitioner's affairs (Br. 7), and that respondent did not dominate and control petitioner for its own benefit. The District Court explicitly refrained from finding on the issue of domination because it considered is to be irrelevant on its theory of the law. Yet it made it clear that, if material, it would have found such control, domination and taking over.

Respondent asserts (Br. 29) that

> "The District Court recognized the fact of dual relations but concluded that 'The so-called "duality of control" much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue' (R. 274). The Court of Appeals expressly approved (R. 2235)."

But the two courts were not saying the same thing. The Trial Court said that, if it were material, it would find "duality" and that by "duality" it meant that respondent controlled petitioner's board of directors and by reason of that control caused the consolidated returns to be filed for its own benefit (Pet. 21). The Court of Appeals, on the other hand, held the fact to be relevant and found that there was no domination and control.

The issue presented to this Court is not which fact is true but whether a Court of Appeals has a right to make such findings.

Respondent's further assertion (Br. 29) that petitioner "has no standing to exploit the domination theory in view of its expressed denials of all allegations of 'domination and control' by its answer to the Complaint in Intervention in this cause," is without any justification. Subsequent to that answer, petitioner filed a supplemental bill of complaint (R. 208) in which it alleged such domination and control for respondent's benefit and in entire disregard of petitioner's rights. As the opinion of the Trial Court pointed out, in the supplemental bill, petitioner "further alleged that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of defendant" (R. 264). This position was maintained throughout the trial and afterwards. In the light of this record, respondent's assertion is not only without merit; it is inexplicable.

II.

RESPONDENT SEEKS TO INJECT A FALSE ISSUE, I.E., WHETHER PETITIONER'S CLAIM IS BARRED BECAUSE NOT PRESENTED TO THE BANKRUPTCY COURT IN THE REORGANIZATION PROCEEDINGS.

Respondent also seeks to introduce a false issue by suggesting that petitioner's rights were cut off, even though valid, because not presented to the Bankruptcy Court in respondent's reorganization proceedings.

This defense was strenuously urged in both courts below, but it was adopted by neither. Each held for respondent on different grounds and it is no answer to a petition for certiorari to argue that the particular judgment might be supported on a wholly different basis not stated.

Only one judge even adverted to respondent's contention, Judge Fee, and he did so to state that it had no merit (R. 2240-2241). That this is so is shown by the following:

First, petitioner's claim arose after the revesting of the assets in respondent and the trustees' surrender to it of the property in December, 1944 (R. 2215). The claim for refund of 1942 taxes, as well as the 1944 tax return, was filed thereafter (R. 2217). The trustees had nothing to do with either. Respondent argues that the income to which the returns pertained accrued while the railroad was being operated by the trustees. But respondent assumed the obligation to pay the taxes on that income by an "Assumption Agreement" (R. 1711-1713), required of it under the revesting order (R. 36, 40, 76). The liability thereafter remaining was respondent's, not the trustees'. It was the reorganized respondent, not the trustees, who then utilized petitioner's loss and rights to avoid paying taxes and to discharge that liability.

As respects the 1943 taxes, as well as those just mentioned, a claim for an accounting of the tax savings could not accrue before there were tax savings, i.e., before August, 1947, when the Treasury accepted the returns pursuant to a settlement wholly negotiated and effected by respondent after it emerged from the reorganization, as the Trial Court found (R. 262, 468; Resp. Br. 6).

Even if it could be said that the trustees had become liable to petitioner upon the filing of the consolidated returns for 1943, respondent assumed that liability by the Assumption Agreement. The revesting order discharged various liabilities but excepted those which it directed to be assumed, and pursuant thereto respondent executed an assumption agreement in which it agreed to

> "2. Assume any and all outstanding current liabilities and obligations incurred by said Trustees * * * and generally any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business, including liabilities and obligations hereafter arising up to midnight December 31, 1944." (R. 1711, 1713.)

Evidently respondent does not apply the same argument to the claim of its tax counsel. They were employed by the trustees.

rendered services to the trustees, presented no claim in bankruptcy, yet were paid $300,000 by respondent for their services in conceiving and consummating the tax saving (R. 1749).

Second, respondent succeeded to and now possesses intact the $10,000,000 funded reserve of which most had been set aside by the Trustees to discharge the taxes in question and which later, after the taxes were discharged by the use of petitioner's loss, was set aside by respondent to pay any judgment in this action.

Third, it is ungenerous as well as unfounded to suggest that the Bankruptcy Court did not intend that the trustees should meet any just obligations incurred by them.

Respondent Is the Same Corporate Entity That Went Into Bankruptcy, but Its Former Stockholders Were Completely Wiped Out.

Respondent seeks to distinguish between the "prereorganization The Western Pacific Railroad Company", the "reorganized The Western Pacific Railroad Company" and the trustees during the reorganization. This effort, coupled with its assertions that the taxes accrued while respondent was in bankruptcy and were not incurred by it, that the filing of consolidated returns was in accord with past practice, and that petitioner's interest in respondent was cut off at the outset of the bankruptcy in 1935, is in part immaterial and in part contradictory.

Respondent is the same corporate entity for whose stock petitioner paid $76 million. The assets taken over by the trustees in 1935 were revested in the same corporate entity in December, 1944. The difference is that the capital stock was owned by different people after the reorganization than before. Respondent emerged from the reorganization entirely shed of petitioner's stock interest which was wiped out by the Reorganization Plan. From the moment respondent went into bankruptcy, petitioner lost all control over and interest in it. During all the time involved in these tax returns, petitioner and respondent were complete economic strangers, and petitioner had no control whatever over respondent.

That being so, and the relationship of parent and subsidiary which formerly existed having been completely and permanently severed, how unjustifiable it is to contend (1) that former income tax procedures when the parties were still parent and subsidiary is of the slightest materiality,* and (2) that the former parent, stripped of its control and all economic interest, could be under any fiduciary duty to give away to a total stranger the sole remaining asset of its stockholders who had lost their $76 million investment.

III.

ON THE SUBSTANTIVE QUESTION WHETHER A FORMER PARENT CORPORATION MUST JOIN IN CONSOLIDATED FEDERAL TAX RETURNS WITH A FORMER SUBSIDIARY SO THAT LOSSES OF THE FORMER MAY BE USED TO EXTINGUISH THE TAX LIABILITIES OF THE LATTER WITHOUT ACCOUNTING FOR THE BENEFIT THUS RECEIVED.

On the important substantive issue, respondent's arguments may be reduced to two: (a) that no federal question is involved (Br. 12, 15) and (b) that the court below laid down no general rule but decided the case on particular equities (Br. 12, 13, 15). Neither contention is sound.

There Is an Important Federal Question.

It is little short of amazing to assert that a judgment determining the legal consequences attaching to the filing of consolidated tax returns under federal tax laws raises no question of federal concern. If that is not a federal question, it is certainly a novel and important question of equity jurisprudence and of local law arising in an exclusively federal context and is equally within this Court's certiorari jurisdiction.

In fact, it is a federal question, and it would be a perversion of the tax laws to rule, as the court below did, that the mere fact of

*The trial judge considered it not to be material. He said, "I just don't see the point of what any affiliated company has done in the past as a matter of practice in these returns * * *. What we have in this case is not concerned with that" (R. 1377).

past affiliation gives former subsidiary corporations a right to appropriate their former parent's tax credits to extinguish their tax liabilities.

Like its competitor railroads, the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe, respondent was expected to pay federal taxes on its war-swollen traffic. There is no reason in public policy why this railroad, emerging from bankruptcy, should not pay taxes like any other. When the Interstate Commerce Commission approved the Reorganization Plan, it provided that respondent should pay its taxes (233 I.C.C. at 455). The Bankruptcy Court's "revesting order" provided that it should do so (R. 36, 40). The amendment to the Revenue Act which first permitted the use of petitioner's stock loss to achieve the tax savings here involved was enacted after the Reorganization Plan was promulgated. The only reason of public policy that excused respondent from paying its taxes was that petitioner's stockholders had lost $76 million and the resulting tax remission was to ameliorate that loss.

Had the parties filed consolidated returns and paid the taxes before tax counsel had discovered the utility of petitioner's loss, and if claims for refund had then been filed based on the use of that loss,* the refund would have come, under the tax laws, to petitioner, and it would now be in possession of the $17 million. The result cannot be different merely because petitioner's credit was utilized when the returns were first filed.

Respondent attempts to answer the argument that Congress intended tax benefits arising from losses to ameliorate those losses, by its prejudiced assertion that Congress did not intend to confer special benefits on holding companies (Br. 16, 17). Congress intended precisely that, for none but a parent company could suffer the loss that Congress made allowable. However, Congress certainly did not intend, when it granted the loss allowance to the parent, to confer windfall benefits on one-time subsidiaries. The Congressional purpose in allowing consolidated returns was similarly to recognize an economic unity and thereby to ameliorate the losses of the party economically suffering them, again the parent and not the subsidiary.

*This was in fact done for 1942, and the parties stipulated and the Trial Court considered that the refund had been allowed in part (R. 163, 169).

Neither does respondent answer petitioner's claim when it deprecates "the sort of bargaining about tax losses which is demanded here" (Br. 25). That principle applies to arrangements made to prevent the accrual of taxes. It has no application to respondent's efforts to evade the debt it incurred when it used petitioner's property right to discharge its own tax liability.

The Court of Appeals Laid Down a General Principle Concerning the Duty of Affiliates to Give Tax Credits to Each Other.

Respondent's next major argument is that the court laid down no general principle concerning the obligation of one affiliate to join in consolidated returns with another and to confer upon it, gratis, the tax advantage of its losses. It asserts that the court's decision that it was the former parent's duty to join in the returns was rested on the special equities of the case (Br. 12, 13, 15). In truth, the court laid down a sweeping rule as to the obligation of any affiliate, having a loss, to another, having income, regardless of which was subsidiary or parent. For example, respondent proffers as one of the special equities that petitioner had been respondent's stockholder and that respondent's creditors received less than full payment of their debts in the reorganization. But no such consideration entered into the court's decision. On the contrary, it said that if respondent had the loss and the petitioner the gain, petitioner could have compelled respondent to join in consolidated returns and to confer the benefit upon it (R. 2233).

Nor does the circumstance that respondent's creditors were not paid in full constitute any special equity against petitioner. Creditors of a reorganized company, after wholly supplanting the former shareholders as they did here, no matter under what sanction of law, have no right to appropriate still other property of the former shareholders. The reorganized respondent certainly could not have with impunity seized $17 million cash of petitioner to pay its taxes, merely because the prereorganization creditors had not been paid in full.

In asking that the benefit of the tax savings be adjudged to belong to it, petitioner does not remotely seek something in the nature of equity or value for its former stock ownership. It accepts in full the consequences of the plan of reorganization. The plan was drastic and wiped out the entire stock ownership of the old stockholders. But its consummation, having stripped petitioner of that ownership, left it with something in its place—a huge loss which had a tax utility. It was then that respondent went beyond the plan and seized what petitioner had left. Respondent emerged from the reorganization with a just obligation to pay its taxes and with more than ample funds to do so. If petitioner is denied recovery, the new owners of respondent will not only have taken ownership of the company from petitioner, as the plan contemplated, thereby inflicting a $75 million loss, but they will also have taken from petitioner, now an economic stranger impoverished for respondent's benefit, petitioner's tax credits to enrich their position by an additional $17 million.

How absurd and how unmoral to contend that because an unfortunate corporation has lost its total investment in its subsidiary the bankruptcy laws, after completely wiping out that investment, intended further stripping of the unfortunate owner of its sole remaining asset.

Rights Do Not Depend Upon the Owner's Ability to Employ Them.

Little need be said of the other alleged "special equities." One of them, the so-called past practice, has already been discussed. The major one on which respondent relies is that petitioner has no rights because it was not harmed, "it had no use for its tax credit"—directly contrary to the decision of the Fifth Circuit in banc in the Shreveport Bank Cases (see Pet. for Cer., 18). It is strange doctrine that one may be despoiled of his rights simply because he has no use for them. Those rights were worth $17 million to respondent, to pay its taxes, as valuable to it as $17 million in gold. They were so valuable that respondent was happy to pay a $300,000 fee to its tax counsel, who discovered their value and used them. Petitioner's right was property to the extent that it was usable and used for respondent's benefit.

The "paradox" in the case arises from the fact that petitioner is poor and has no funds, that its officers and the majority of its directors were in the pay of respondent and did its bidding, and that respondent, emerging from bankruptcy as a prosperous railroad enjoying war time earnings, escaped the payment of taxes because it appropriated its former parent's sole remaining asset.

If petitioner were a wealthy corporation, one could not even conceive of respondent appropriating its tax credit and paying nothing for it. Petitioner's rights cannot depend on its wealth.

IV.

IT WAS ERROR TO DENY PETITIONER A RIGHT TO PETITION FOR REHEARING IN BANC.

The Court of Appeals' July 9th opinion, after noting the importance of the question of rehearings in banc, makes clear that "in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion the court has declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings" (R. 2295). "From this time forward," it concludes,

> "petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing." (R. 2296)

The issue is not whether a rehearing in banc should be granted in a particular case, nor yet what criteria a Court of Appeals may validly establish by rule to govern the granting of such rehearings. The issue is more fundamental. It is whether the court has the power to grant a rehearing in banc and whether the litigant has the right to gain the court's ear in order to call its attention to considerations that should impel it to grant such a hearing. The Ninth Circuit answers "no" to both questions.

The Ninth Circuit Holds That a Court of Appeals Has No Power to Grant a Rehearing In Banc Unless the Three-Judge Panel Approves.

The court below assigns two reasons for refusing to entertain petitions for rehearing in banc.

The first reason given is that once a case has been assigned to a panel of three judges, it belongs to them, and that it would be an act of intrusion for the remainder of the court to participate, unless at least two of the three judges should vote to relinquish the case to the whole court. Referring to the provision of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(a) that "Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs," it asserts (R. 2294) that

> "If regard be had for this mandate circuit judges may not intrude themselves, or be compelled on petition of a losing party to intrude, upon a court or division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit" and after assignment to a division,

> "If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals."

Again, it states (R. 2294):

> "A petition for rehearing in any such case [i.e., one assigned to and decided by a panel of three] whatever its form or wording, must necessarily be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination."

This reasoning is equivalent to a statement that a three-judge panel, once constituted, is the court, and the other circuit judges are powerless to take over the cause even should they feel inclined to do so.

Direct Conflict With the Statute.

Thus the court below recognizes that it has the power to direct a hearing in banc but reasons that the power is lost by an assignment to a panel and that the court has no power to grant a rehearing in banc unless the panel approves.

This is contrary to the statute. 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) provides:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service."

The statute draws no distinction between the power to order a hearing in banc and the power to order a rehearing in banc.

Conflict With the District of Columbia and Third Circuits.

We have quoted the statement by the court below that a petition for rehearing in a case decided by a panel must necessarily be treated as addressed to that panel alone and subject to its sole disposition.

Contrast this with the views of the District of Columbia Circuit. They are shown by this Court's records in Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce v. R. Stanley Dollar, et al., No. 247, October Term 1951. There the Attorney General of the United States filed a motion addressed to the whole Court of Appeals for a hearing in banc, stating, "This motion is made pursuant to 28 U.S.C. (Sup. II) 46(c)." (No. 247, Oct. 1951 Term, R. 52.) Judge Clark, presiding, responded that the statute

> "* * * allows you to file a motion for rehearing before the Court en banc, at which time the full court passes upon it." (No. 247, Oct. 1951 Term, R. 61)

The panel then presented the motion to the whole court and later announced,

> "The motion for hearing in banc has been considered by the full Court, and denied" (No. 247, Oct. 1951 Term, R. 62).

We are advised that the same practice obtains in the Third Circuit.

The Ninth Circuit Apparently Retains the Views This Court Disapproved in 1941.

The problem is the identical one, and again there is the identical conflict between the Ninth Circuit, on the one side, and the Third Circuit, which led this Court to grant certiorari in Textile Mills Corporation v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326. The problem was there stated to be

> "whether a Circuit Court of Appeals may be composed of all the circuit judges of the circuit in active service, more than three in number, sitting en banc", and this Court stated that

> "We granted the petition for certiorari because of the public importance of the * * * problem and the contrariety of the views of the court below * * * and the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit (Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F.2d 867) as respects its solution."

The reasons assigned by the court below for refusing to entertain petitions for hearing in banc are the same reasons why the same court held in 1938 in Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F. 2d 867, that a Court of Appeals lacked power to sit in banc. Although this Court, in Textile Mills Corporation v. Commissioner, 314 U. S. 326, held the Ninth Circuit to be in error, and although Congress thereafter enacted 28 U.S.C. Section 46(c) to eliminate any basis for the reasoning that prompted the action of the Ninth Circuit, that court appears to adhere to its original position.*

In Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, the Ninth Circuit reasoned that a court had no power to sit in banc because

> "Any other interpretation of the legislation would lead to grave difficulties of administration. If, because there are four or six circuit judges in a circuit, a four or six-judge court were deemed created by Congress, then each judge may well have the right and the duty to demand his place in the hearing on each appeal." (p. 870)

*In Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, supra, Judge Denman, now Chief Judge, wrote the opinion, but as shown by his dissenting opinion of July 9th in this cause, he now gives full effect to this Court's reasoning in the Textile Mills case and to the policy expressed by Congress in 1948.

Since this Court thereafter held, and Congress declared, that there is power to sit in banc, it would follow, on the Ninth Circuit's own reasoning of 1938, that the other judges do have a right, and in a proper case the duty, to sit. Yet the court now fails to follow the logic of its own prior statements.

This Court in Textile Mills Corporation v. Commissioner, 314 U. S. 326, agreeing with the Third Circuit,* said of the view of the Ninth, that it "would not only produce a most awkward situation; it would on all matters disenfranchise some circuit judges," [Italics are the court's] and that it would "imply that Congress prohibited some circuit judges from participation in the most important function of the 'court' (the hearing and decision of appeals)" (p. 333).

Despite this Court's decision in the Textile Mills case, and despite its later order to the Ninth Circuit in United States ex rel Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, to permit a petition for a hearing before the court in banc, the Ninth Circuit appears to have remained fixed in its view that a case becomes the exclusive jurisdiction of a particular panel of three judges once it has been assigned to them. For example, in 1943, dissenting in Crutchfield v. United States, 142 F.2d 170, Judge Denman stated:

> "The senior circuit judge still refuses to convene the court en banc even to consider the question of the jurisdiction of the court en banc to take over a case pending before three judges, in which judgment has been rendered by two judges

*In Commissioner v. Textile Mills Corporation, 117 F.2d 63, the Third Circuit disagreed with the Ninth Circuit, stating (p. 71):

> "Common sense and sound practice dictate that the five judges of this court should be in a position to decide the principles of law and practice to which the court is to be committed."
>
> "The whole cannot be less than the sum of its parts. To hold otherwise is not merely to affirm a plain contradiction in terms, but is also to destroy the authority of the court as a court and to open the way to possible confusion and conflict among its personnel and in its procedure and decisions." (p. 70) of a three-judge panel, either on the petition of the litigant or myself, a dissenting judge of the three-judge panel.

"* * * As I understand it, the ground of the senior circuit judge's refusal is that once the three judges so assigned by the whole court to consider the case have rendered judgment, though the judgment is not the final action of the court and the case is still before the court during the period for rehearing, only the setting aside of the judgment by two or more of the three judges participating in the decision permits a petition for a rehearing en banc. That is to say, that the seven judges have resigned to two judges selected by the seven the jurisdiction to prevent a rehearing by the seven of a decision of the two not yet final." (Italics are in the original) (p. 180)

This statement made in 1943 would seem to describe the majority opinion of July 9, 1952.

The Judges of the Ninth Circuit Appear to Have Three Different Views.

In Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, decided by the Ninth Circuit on August 27, 1952, Circuit Judge Pope, dissenting from an order of a panel denying a petition for rehearing in banc, stated that he disagreed with Judge Denman's interpretation of the court's decision of July 9th in the present case, which appears at R. 2296, 2297. Judge Pope thought that the full court could grant a rehearing in banc but that a litigant was not entitled to petition for such action; he believed that Judge Denman had misinterpreted the court's decision as holding that the full court lacked all power unless the panel first relinquished the cause to it. A copy of the opinions in Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice is attached hereto as an appendix.

Judge Pope's construction of the July 9th opinion runs counter, we submit, to the declarations in that opinion that "circuit judges may not intrude themselves * * * upon a court or division", that if the panel, or a majority of it, denies a petition for rehearing "that ends the matter", and a petition must "necessarily be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition" by the panel.

Judge Pope's expressions in the Bradley case are significant as indicating that there are at least three views on the subject among the judges of the court below.

Apprehension That the Court Would Be Overburdened Should Not Result in Denial of All Right to a Litigant to Petition For a Rehearing In Banc.

The second ground stated in the opinion of July 9th for holding that petitions for rehearing in banc should not be permitted is that a contrary holding would burden the court with overwork and "completely nullify the prime statutory objective of effecting a division of the court's work" (R. 2295). But this is the same reasoning stated by the same court in Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F.2d 867. There, the court had said:

> "More important still, it would increase so greatly the amount of work of each individual judge that it would cause again the arrearages which the additional judges have been created to remove." (p. 870)

We do not mean to depreciate the matter of overwork. But we think it a fair submission that the apprehension should not lead to a total denial to litigants of the right of petition.

Neither the District of Columbia Circuit nor the Third Circuit finds that recognition of the litigant's right produces an intolerable burden. The Third Circuit, like the Ninth, has 7 judges, and the District of Columbia has 9.

In many cases no petitions for rehearing are filed at all. In still fewer are requests made for a rehearing in banc. Not only is the federal bar not inclined to waste time and effort, but it does possess self-restraint and a sense of professional obligation to the court. Rules of practice should not be created on the premise that the bar does not.

A petition for rehearing in banc was here filed because of the unusual combination of factors: (a) the case involved important and novel questions of law, (b) the panel had consisted of but one circuit judge and two district judges, (c) although the majority affirmed the decision of the District Court, it disapproved the District Court's reasoning and decided the cause on a wholly different ground, (d) no Circuit Judge wrote a line on the merits, and each of the three District Judges participating expressed an entirely different view of the law. The appropriateness of a rehearing in banc was indicated by the request of one of the three-judge panel that it be granted. Before such a cause should be presented to this Court upon petition for certiorari, it seemed proper that it should be brought to the notice of the entire Court of Appeals.

The art of the law is discrimination. No doubt petitions for rehearing in banc will not often be granted, and overwork may be a proper factor to consider in deciding whether to grant a petition in a particular cause. But we cannot believe that it is a logical basis for denying all right to file such petitions.

Courts are made for litigants, not litigants for the courts. The device of having an appellate court sit in divisions is but the equivalent of having a number of coordinate intermediate appellate courts answerable to another superior to them. Both devices are in common use throughout the country, and the propriety and necessity of permitting a petition to the whole court, where it sits in divisions, or to the higher court, is not only obvious, but the practice is widespread.* The certiorari jurisdiction of this Court is an example.

Unless petitions for rehearing in banc are recognized, there would be in the Ninth Circuit not one Court of Appeals but a multiplicity of them. Chief Judge Denman speaks of three panels, but in fact seven judges can be constituted into 35 different panels of three. Where District Judges sit on the Court of Appeals, as was the case here, there could be a much greater number of panels, increasing greatly the opportunity for divergent views between different panels. If there is to be an opportunity to review their decisions, there must be a right to petition for rehearing in banc

*As we are informed, in California, where there are 8 intermediate appellate courts, at least half their decisions are followed by a petition for hearing in the State Supreme Court.

unless the burden is to fall on this Court in its certiorari jurisdiction. If there is a burden on courts by reason of the quantity of litigation, it cannot be escaped. It can merely be passed from Courts of Appeals to the Supreme Court.

No Study of Long Records Should Be Required, In Passing on a Petition For Rehearing In Banc, If the Court of Appeals Confines Itself To Its Proper Appellate Office.

In Bradley Mining Co. v. Boise, Judge Pope explained his concurrence in the July 9th opinion on the ground that a judge should not be expected, and that the statute should not be construed as requiring him, to read long records in cases in which he has not sat in the original hearing. But a reading of a whole record should not ordinarily be necessary to pass on a petition for rehearing in banc, any more than to pass on a petition for certiorari, since the question presented is not the final decision but merely the desirability of consideration by the court. That ordinarily should turn on the kind of issues presented, not the evidence. An examination of such petitions for rehearing in banc as are filed should usually suffice to show whether they are worthy of more careful consideration. Appropriate screening rules could be adopted.*

The instant case is a good illustration. The face of the majority opinion on the merits (R. 2214, et seq.) showed that it announced a sweeping rule of law. No delving into the record was necessary to appraise the importance of that legal issue. It also showed that the majority was usurping the office of the District Court in making findings. No exploration of the record was necessary to determine the facts, because the issue was whether the Court of Appeals should or could find facts at all. No brief in opposition to the petition for rehearing was filed, so that no statement of fact was challenged. The desirability of granting a rehearing in banc was determinable on the face of the petition and the majority and dissenting opinions.

*For example, as suggested by Chief Judge Denman (R. 2307), a court might adopt a rule that a petition for rehearing in banc would not be granted unless at least one of the judges on the panel so voted.

Since a Court of Appeals Has Power to Grant a Rehearing In Banc, the Litigant Should Not Be Denied the Right of Petition.

The ground stated by Judge Pope in Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice for concurring in the July 9th opinion herein is that, while the court may grant a rehearing in banc, a litigant has no right to request it. This view, we submit, is not supportable. A litigant must have the right to request a court to exercise a power which it possesses and to grant the kind of relief which the law empowers it to grant. The question is not, as stated in the opinion of July 9th, whether a court may "be compelled on the petition of a losing party" to sit in banc, but whether the litigant may request the judges to do so, if they think it warranted in the particular cause.

Chief Judge Denman's dissenting opinion denominated the denial of any right to petition as "shabby treatment of the litigant" (R. 2302). The majority opinion itself uses the term "uncontrolled discretion". Whatever the characterization, and either is enough to give one pause, it would appear that to deny a litigant the right to petition a court to exercise its power is arbitrary, and our system of jurisprudence looks with disfavor on arbitrary and uncontrolled power.

Supplemental Opinion of Chief Judge Denman.

On September 11, 1952, Chief Judge Denman filed a supplement to his dissenting opinion of July 9th. A supplemental record containing it will go forward to this Court. In it he quotes a letter to him from Chief Judge Stephens of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Judge Stephens states that in his court any party to a case may, by motion or petition, request that a rehearing be held in banc and that such motion or petition is submitted to and ruled upon by all the active Circuit Judges. He also lists a number of cases where rehearings in banc have been ordered, including several ordered on the petition of one of the parties.

CONCLUSION

We respectfully submit that the petition for certiorari should be granted.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

BRADLEY MINING CO., a corporation, Appellant, vs. EDWARD H. BOICE, Appellee.	No. 12,684 Aug. 27, 1952

Before: HEALY, BONE, and POPE, Circuit Judges

PER CURIAM

In this case we affirmed a judgment against the appellant, one member of the court dissenting. 194 F.2d 80. Appellant petitioned for a rehearing in banc, and rehearing was denied. Application for certiorari followed and was denied. 343 U.S. 941. Upon the coming down of the mandate appellant moved for leave to file a motion to vacate the denial of its petition for rehearing in banc and for the reinstatement of its petition. That motion is the matter before us for disposal.

The case was not in any aspect of such character as to suggest the advisability of its being heard or reheard in banc. It involved purely factual issues. Depending upon how the jury might evaluate the evidence, or how appraise the credibility of the witnesses, it was concededly a case in which both actual and exemplary damages were awardable. The charges made against the defendant, and presumably accepted by the jury as true on the evidence before it, were for conduct of a nature calculated to blast at the threshold the efforts of a young doctor to establish himself in his profession. The problem presented bore scant resemblance to Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 186 F.2d 926, and speculation as to the probable attitude here of the judges who participated in Guthrie has no perceivable basis.

The judge who presided at the trial, convinced that the jury was not motivated by passion or prejudice and that its verdict, while large, was not excessive, denied a motion for a new trial.* Being ourselves disinclined to usurp the functions of the jury or to invade the province of the district judge, and being, moreover, of opinion that the judge was right in refusing to disturb the verdict, we affirmed. Appellant has had its appeal and its opportunity for certiorari or other relief in the Supreme Court. It is not entitled to pursue the process a second time.

The motion for leave to file is denied.

POPE, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

I think that a just disposition of this case requires that the appellant be granted an opportunity to reargue the case before the court sitting in banc.

In a recent opinion of this court in banc in Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, et al., appellants, v. Western Pacific Railroad Company, et al., appellees, No. 12506, handed down July 9, 1952, the court, after denying the right of a defeated litigant to require all of the judges of the court to consider a petition for rehearing of a case originally heard by a division of the court, pointed out that it recognized that certain cases are appropriate ones for consideration by a court in banc. The opinion enumerated certain types of cases which have frequently been treated in this manner.†

*92 F. Supp. 750.

†I have a somewhat different view of the purport of the opinion in the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation case mentioned above than that which Judge Denman expressed in his dissent in that case. As I understand the majority opinion, it went no further than to hold that a disappointed litigant in the position of the appellant in that case could not, by filing a petition for rehearing in banc, require all the judges of the court to consider and pass upon that petition. I concurred in that opinion because in my mind a contrary holding would mean that the court would, as a practical matter, lose the opportunity which it now has to expedite its disposition of

In my opinion the circumstances make this particular case, in the light of the views expressed by all the members of the court with respect to some of the problems here involved, one in which a hearing in banc should be granted. I think that we, as members of this division which heard the case originally, should recommend a hearing in banc and by our action invite all the judges to participate.

My views in this respect are not based upon the mere fact that I have disagreed with the result reached in the majority opinion here, nor upon my feeling that a grave miscarriage of justice has been given the stamp of approval by this court. Rather my views are based upon the demonstrable probability that were this case heard by all seven judges a different result would be achieved. A study of the views expressed by all seven of the judges in Southern Pacific Company v. Guthrie, 186 F.2d 926 (1951), will disclose why I think it evident that a hearing in banc would produce a different result.

As I have pointed out in my previous dissent in this case, the verdict upon which judgment has been entered here has the vice not merely of being excessive in amount but its validity is tainted by the errors in injecting into the case matters highly prejudicial and calculated to arouse the passion and prejudice of the jury. It is a stronger case than was Guthrie.

The point that I am making is that in any case where the division hearing the matter can say that there is a fair probability cases through the hearing of matters before divisions. For instance, in the present case the record fills four printed volumes comprising nearly 2000 pages and I know what a task it was to read that whole record. I do not think the statute intended that I, not a member of the division which heard the Western Pacific case, should have to read all the record in that case, as I might well find necessary in order to vote intelligently upon the petition.

There is language in subdivision (c) of § 46 of Title 28 which would seem to grant to a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit the right to order a hearing or rehearing in banc in any case, a procedure which I am of course not proposing here. That is a question which was not determined by the majority opinion in the Western Pacific case, although Judge Denman seems to think that it was. Upon that question I reserve judgment until such time as determination becomes necessary.

that all seven of the judges would arrive at a different conclusion than that expressed by a mere majority of a division, the case is an appropriate one for a hearing in banc. It is unthinkable to me that a division of the court may lay down a rule or enter a judgment knowing that a majority of the judges who constitute this court would probably disagree. That is this case and for that reason I think that a rehearing should be granted.

D. Summary recapitulation of basic and incontrovertible facts 36

E. Decisions of the two courts below 36

Specifications of Error 39

Summary of the Argument 40

Argument 49

I. The Relief Sought by Petitioner Does Not Circumvent Respondent's Bankruptcy Reorganization or Permit Petitioner to Share in the Equity Which the Reorganization Plan Denied It 49

II. Petitioner Is Entitled to Recover Under Principles of Unjust Enrichment 56

A. The basic principle 57

B. The Shreveport Bank cases:—The duty of restitution applies where the enrichment consists of tax savings 58

Page

C. The retention of the benefits received by respondent would be unjust for two major reasons 60

III. First Major Reason Why Retention of the Enrichment Received by Respondent Would Be Unjust: Such Retention Is Inconsistent with the Rationale of Consolidated Returns and the Purpose of Congress in Allowing Them 60

The law and regulations concerning joinder in consolidated returns by one in receivership or bankruptcy 66

S.E.C. decisions 68

Petitioner's right to recover is supported by equitable rules of contribution 72

Severance of the economic unity may not be ignored 75

IV. Second Major Reason Why Retention of the Enrichment Received by Respondent Would Be Unjust: Respondent, Occupying a Fiduciary Position to Petitioner, Appropriated Petitioner's Rights to Its Own Use 76

A. Petitioner neither made nor could make a gift to respondent 77

B. Respondent and its attorneys were fiduciaries to petitioner in the conduct of the tax matters 79

A corporation which dominates its affiliate is a fiduciary of it 84

C. As a fiduciary, respondent must account for benefits gained 85

D. The existence of common officers requires the highest standards of conduct in intercorporate dealings: duality 89

E. Respondent must account for an enrichment resulting from acts of its agents who were fiduciaries of petitioner 93

V. All Arguments Advanced Against Recovery by Petitioner Are Opposed to Elementary Principles 93

Page

A. Petitioner was under no duty to join in consolidated returns or to confer upon respondent the benefits of its tax credits 94

No such duty can be found in the tax laws or regulations 94

The bankruptcy-court could not have compelled petitioner to give its loss to respondent 96

No such duty can be found in any principle of law or equity 97

Petitioner assumed burdens in filing consolidated returns 98

Petitioner was not a fiduciary for respondent. The reverse was true 99

Common officers may not sacrifice the rights and assets of one corporation for the benefit of the other 100

Conflict with the Second and Fourth Circuits and Tax Court 101

No duty such as the Court of Appeals postulates can be extracted from the rights of respondent's pre-reorganization creditors 102

The alleged duty is incontrovertibly refuted by considering the situation of a corporation having income 103

B. Petitioner's right rests on benefits conferred and is not confined to detriment sustained. One's property or rights cannot be appropriated merely because the owner cannot use them profitably himself 104

Suits for the use of land 106

In unjust enrichment cases recovery is measured by benefit received 106

Where a fiduciary profits from the relationship .. 110

S.E.C. case 111

The utility to respondent gave value to petitioner 112

Page

That only one person may have a use for property does not give him the right to appropriate it 114

Cases of eminent domain 115

In the field of patents and literary property 115

C. Respondent's claims that it committed no wrong and that petitioner had no property right are not valid 116

Respondent's tax saving did not result automatically from the tax law; it required the use of petitioner's loss in consolidated returns 117

Petitioner had a "property" right 118

Regardless of terminology, petitioner should recover 119

D. Respondent may not retain the enrichment by refusal to recognize the severance of the economic unity and by invoking alleged "past practice" 121

E. Respondent may not retain the enrichment on the theory that petitioner could not have made an agreement with it about allocation of the tax savings 124

F. Respondent may not retain the enrichment on the theory that the treasury should not have allowed the use of petitioner's loss to offset respondent's income 128

G. Petitioner is not barred by non-presentation of its claims to the bankruptcy court 131

Petitioner's claims arose after the revesting of the railroad properties in respondent 131

Respondent assumed all liability for petitioner's claims 135

VI. Respondent May Not Retain the Enrichment by Denying That It Dominated and Controlled Petitioner's Officers. To the Extent That the Court of Appeals Proceeded on the Premise of Lack of Such Domination and Control, It Exceeded Its Appellate Office 138

Page

A. The assertion that there was no domination and control has no support in the record; it cannot be substantiated and is simply a conclusion based on irrelevancies 139

B. The court below made findings ab initio to affirm the judgment upon a legal theory different from that on which the trial court acted, and these findings were contrary to what the trial court made clear it would have found, had it considered the issues material, as well as contrary to those actually made 142

C. The function to find facts is in the trial court, not the Court of Appeals 146

The majority opinion sets up a novel and false principle concerning the power of an appellate court 147

VII. The Court of Appeals Erred in Denying Petitioner the Right to Petition for a Rehearing In Banc 148

Conflict with the statute 149

Conflict with the holding of this court 149

Conflict with other circuits 152

The right to petition comports with reason and principle 152

The right to petition comports with fair and efficient judicial administration 153

VIII. Judgment Should Be Directed for Petitioner for the Full Amount of the Tax Savings 155

Conclusion 156

B. The Respondent Conceived the Tax Saving, Took Over and Handled Petitioner's Tax Affairs, Appropriated Petitioner's Tax Credits in Order to Accomplish the Tax Saving, and Ignored Its Fiduciary Relation to Petitioner by Refusing to Account.

We have just related the bare facts of how respondent received a benefit of $17 million through the use of petitioner's loss. Under principles to be discussed in the Argument, these facts, without more, entitle petitioner to judgment.

But beyond that, the manner in which the transaction was handled, the relationship of the parties, the resulting duties and obligations, not only fortify petitioner's claim but furnish an independent ground of recovery.

The taxes were saved through a method conceived, planned and executed by respondent while occupying a fiduciary relation to petitioner in disregard of its fiduciary obligations. Under the law and the Treasury regulations, consolidated returns must be filed in the name of the parent corporation, claims for refund are filed in its name, and all refunds are payable to it. Respondent used petitioner for its own purposes, without any consideration for petitioner's rights. It was able to do this because it controlled Curry, petitioner's president and actually its only officer. As described by the trial court, Curry was "just a presiding officer and a sort of figurehead" (R. 646, 647).

1. SUMMARY OF THE FACTS.

One week after this Court's decision on March 15, 1943, respondent employed the firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson and Goetz (attorneys for the James Interests) as its tax attorneys. One of the partners was Polk, who had formerly been employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. He conceived the plan of using petitioner's loss to cancel respondent's tax liability. He convinced respondent of the possibility of success of his plan, obtained its authority to proceed, and carried through his plan. He was employed, directed and compensated solely by respondent, and never gave petitioner any advice as to its rights.

Petitioner was in an impoverished condition following this Court's decision of March 15, 1943. It could not even pay officers' salaries. Its officers were taken over as "full time employees" by respondent on July 1, 1943, before the tax returns were filed, and continued as such until May 1, 1945, when Mr. Curry, petitioner's president, accompanied by petitioner's files, was moved to Polk's office to be available for these tax matters, ostensibly as an employee of Polk's firm but actually compensated by respondent.

Pursuant to his plan Polk used these officers to file consolidated tax returns in petitioner's name and caused its loss to be offset against respondent's income, without knowledge of petitioner's Board of Directors. Polk obtained from Curry a document naming him petitioner's 'attorney-in-fact'. Without petitioner's knowledge, but only after specific authorization of respondent, he made and carried through an offer of settlement with the Treasury in petitioner's name as its "attorney-in-fact".

2. STATEMENT OF THE FACTS.

Petitioner's Stunned Condition.

Respondent Polk, and all connected with the transaction, considered petitioner a dying corporation and gave no consideration whatever to its rights.

After this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, petitioner was, to select an appropriate metaphor, in a state of coma, Court striking the petition for rehearing in banc (R. 2260), the opinion of Fee, J., suggesting a rehearing by all the circuit judges (R. 2261), the opinion of the Court in banc denying leave to reinstate the petition for rehearing in banc (R. 2288), and a dissenting opinion (R. 2296) are reported in 197 F.2d 994. A supplement to the last dissenting opinion (R. 2313) has not yet been reported.

JURISDICTION

The District Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1331, 1332, and the Court of Appeals under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1291 and 1294(1). That court's judgment was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). On December 17, 1951, within the time allowed by order (R. 2257-9), a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing in banc were filed (R. 2259-60). On January 30, 1952, the petition for rehearing was denied, and the petition for rehearing in banc was ordered stricken as without authority in law or in the rules of practice of the court (R. 2259). On April 19, 1952, by order of Mr. Justice Douglas petitioner's time to file a petition for certiorari was extended to June 27, 1952. The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed June 23, 1952, and granted October 13, 1952. The jurisdiction of this Court rests on 28 U.S.C., Sec. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Must a former parent corporation join in consolidated federal income and excess profits tax returns with its former subsidiary, so that a loss incurred by the former parent may be used to extinguish the tax liability of its former subsidiary, without any accounting by the former subsidiary to the former parent for the benefit thus obtained? The loss so utilized was the parent's loss of its entire investment in the subsidiary (I.R.C., Sec. 23(g)(2) and (4)).

2. Does not a Court of Appeals exceed its appellate office and so far depart from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings as to call for this Court's power of supervision (Supreme Court Rule 38(5)(b)), where it finds facts ab initio to affirm a judgment which it holds to be non-sustainable on either the legal theories applied or the facts found by the trial court, particularly where its findings are contrary to those which the trial court made clear it would have found had it considered the issues material?

3. May a litigant petition a Court of Appeals for a rehearing in banc under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) after decision by a three-judge panel; or may two judges of the panel strike out such petition "as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of this court", thus preventing the petition from being considered by the court of seven judges?

STATUTES INVOLVED

The pertinent provisions of Internal Revenue Code, Section 23(g)(2) and (4), 52 and 141, Treasury Regulation 104, Title 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c), and R.C.P. 52(a), are printed in Appendix One hereto.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Throughout this brief the term "petitioner" will be used to denote The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, the plaintiff in the District Court. The term "respondent" will denote The Western Pacific Railroad Company, the principal defendant.

Petitioner seeks to compel respondent to account for a $17,201,739 federal tax benefit derived from respondent's use of a right belonging to petitioner. Respondent obtained that benefit by causing consolidated income and excess profits tax returns to be filed by petitioner and by using in those returns a $75 million loss of petitioner to offset respondent's taxable income. Thereby taxes otherwise payable by respondent were discharged. As the trial court found and the Court of Appeals repeated, the amount of the tax benefit so obtained by respondent from its use of petitioner's loss was $17,201,739 (R. 267, 2217-18). For convenience, this will be referred to as $17 million.[1]

The co-petitioner, Mr. Bayard, is the receiver of petitioner, appointed in October 1949 by the Chancery Court of Delaware on the petition of the Attorney General of that state for the purpose of realizing on all of petitioner's assets and claims (R. 292). The receiver was then joined as a party plaintiff in the present case (R. 317), was one of the appellants (R. 326), and is a co-petitioner here. The term "petitioner" in this brief includes the receiver after November 1949 unless the context shows otherwise.

The real parties in interest on petitioner's side are its 4,700 stockholders, living throughout the United States,

[1]Six additional companies were named as defendants and are respondents here but for practical purposes may be ignored. Four were and are wholly owned subsidiary companies of the principal defendant. Another, Western Realty Company, was wholly owned by petitioner. The sixth was wholly owned by Western Realty and is now wholly owned by the principal defendant. These companies were joined as defendants merely because they were parties to the consolidated income tax returns; no relief was sought against them.

The corporate relationships are shown on a chart (P 1). Printing of this exhibit in the record was dispensed with by order of the court, but it is reproduced at the end of this brief.

more than 1,000 of them in California (R. 659). They had invested $110 million in petitioner's stock.[2] It in turn had invested over $75 million in the stock of respondent, and it was the loss of that stock which created the loss which respondent used to discharge its taxes.

Any recovery by petitioner will go to the receiver for distribution to petitioner's preferred stockholders[3] under the Delaware Chancery Court's supervision.

The petitioners in No. 160, a case companion to this, were interveners below. They were stockholders of petitioner who had filed a stockholders' suit in New York against it and its directors, alleging (among other things) that the directors had failed to protect and enforce petitioner's interest in connection with the use of its loss in the tax returns mentioned above. Thereafter, petitioner brought this suit in California, and these stockholders were permitted to intervene. This was prior to the appointment by the Chancery Court of Delaware of Mr. Bayard as receiver and his joinder as co-plaintiff here. The interveners present no claims of their own, and their interest is identical with that of petitioner.

The District Court rendered judgment for respondent although it found the facts to be as contended by petitioner. On appeal the Court of Appeals, composed of one Circuit Judge and two District Judges, found the District Court's legal theories to be erroneous but affirmed the judgment on a different legal theory. Judge Fee dissented.

The decisions of the two courts are more fully described at pages 36-38 below, after the facts have been stated.

[3]The preferred stock exceeds the amount recoverable in this suit (R. 1717).

A. Petitioner's Loss: How It Came About; the Economic Unity of Petitioner and Respondent and Its Severance.

Until April 30, 1944, petitioner owned all of the capital stock of respondent, an operating railroad company. For this stock petitioner had invested $75 million in respondent (R. 262).

In 1935, the respondent went into bankruptcy under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act[4] (R. 1908). Trustees were appointed on September 23, 1935 (R. 1916), and remained in possession until December 29, 1944. The term "respondent" or "Company" as used in this brief includes the trustees during that period.

On June 21, 1939, the Interstate Commerce Commission approved a plan of reorganization, which found that petitioner's stock in respondent was without equity or value and was not entitled to participate in the reorganization.[5] The bankruptcy court approved the Commission plan (R. 1666). On November 28, 1941 the Ninth Circuit reversed,[6] but on March 15, 1943, this Court affirmed the bankruptcy court's approval of the plan.[7]

THE TWOFOLD CONSEQUENCES OF THIS COURT'S DECISION OF MARCH 15, 1943.

Following this Court's decision, the reorganization plan was confirmed by the bankruptcy court on October 11, 1943 (R. 1674). The consequences were twofold.

First, this Court's decision of March 15, 1943 established that petitioner's entire $75 million investment in respondent was worthless and confirmed its loss in that amount. Petitioner had no other substantial assets.[8]

Second, the economic unity which had previously existed between petitioner and respondent was severed forever, and they became economic strangers. The proprietary interest of petitioner in respondent was at an end; the community of economic interest was over.

For the purpose of determining the relative rights and duties of the parties this Court's decision marks the date of the loss. It then became the duty of the District Court (in the absence of some unusual circumstances) to confirm the plan if the requisite percentage of creditors voted in favor of it and probably even if they did not.[9] The James Interests, the largest stock interest in both petitioner and respondent (R. 1717; Chart, P 1), had previously fought the plan and sought to maintain petitioner's equity in respondent.[10] But immediately after this Court's decision the James Interests decided to support the plan and entered into an agreement with other major creditors to work wholeheartedly for its prompt consummation (R. 577, 578, 618).

For tax purposes it is immaterial whether petitioner's loss was in March or October, 1943, for in either event it is a 1943 loss. But for the purpose of fixing the relative rights, duties and obligations of the parties, the date of March 15, 1943 is important.

HOW THE TAX BENEFIT WAS OBTAINED.

Under the Internal Revenue Code,[11] a parent company and its subsidiaries may file a consolidated tax return in which losses of all are offset against gains of all, and taxes are paid only on the net. In October 1942 Section 23(g)(4), I.R.C. was amended so as to provide for the first time that a loss arising from worthlessness of stock in a subsidiary is an ordinary rather than a capital loss and thus deductible from taxable income.[12]

As just noted, this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, fixed the date when petitioner sustained a $75 million loss, and, at the same instant, its financial interest in respondent terminated and it became a complete economic stranger. In this state of facts respondent's tax counsel conceived the plan of having petitioner and respondent file consolidated returns in order to set off the petitioner's loss against respondent's income, and thus discharge respondent's tax liabilities.

This respondent then caused to be done.

Respondent made large profits in the war years of 1942, 1943 and 1944, at which time the excess profits tax was in effect. Taxable net profits were nearly $11 million in 1942, over $18 million in 1943, and in 1944 up to April 30th nearly $3 million (P 3, 4, 5). Throughout 1943 and the first four months of 1944 respondent made accruals of $10,100,000 to meet its anticipated tax liability (R. 915, 1818-1824).

[11] Internal Revenue Code, Sec. 141; Treasury Regulation 104, relative to income taxes, and Regulation 110, relative to excess profits taxes. Regulations 104 and 110 were merged into Regulation 129, applicable to tax years beginning December 31, 1949. We shall therefore refer to 104 and 110, since they were in effect during the years here involved.

[12] Revenue Act of 1942, Sec. 123(a), adding subsection 4 to Section 23(g), I.R.C.

Consolidated income and excess profits tax returns for 1943 were filed in petitioner's name on July 15, 1944 (P 4A and B). They reported petitioner's stock loss of $75 million sustained in 1943, used $18 million of it to offset that amount of respondent's taxable net income, and thus reported no net income and no tax due.

The unused portion of the loss could be carried forward and back (I.R.C., Sec. 122(b)(1) and (2)). On March 9, 1945, respondent's tax counsel filed a claim for refund in petitioner's name to recover the $4,201,821 paid as respondent's 1942 taxes (R. 1656), the basis of the claim being the use as a carryback of over $10 million of the unused portion of petitioner's 1943 loss. And on June 15, 1945 respondent's tax counsel filed consolidated returns in petitioner's name for the period January 1-April 30, 1944 (P 5A, 5B), offsetting against nearly $3 million of respondent's income another portion of petitioner's loss, thus reporting no tax due.

In 1947, the taxes were finally settled by agreement with the Treasury Department on the basis of the returns as filed, the 1943 and 1944 taxes being nil, and the claim for refund for 1942 being rejected (see further detail at pp. 23-26, infra). The net tax benefit accruing to and retained by respondent from the use of petitioner's stock loss was $17,201,739 (R. 267).

The question before this Court is whether petitioner and its stockholders, who provided the capital which was lost and who sustained the loss, are entitled to an accounting by respondent of the benefit obtained by it through its use of that loss.

stunned by the misfortunes heaped upon it. It had lost its chief asset, its $75 million investment in the respondent. Its other assets were pledged to secure loans then in default (R. 571-573; also R. 1767, 1768, 1695-98). Consequently, in March 1943, its directors were contemplating dissolution and so advised its chief creditors, including the James Interests (R. 571). The James Interests would be the controlling interest in the reorganized respondent (Corporate Relationship Chart, P Ex. 1), and they were represented by Mr. Coulson, Polk's partner.

Petitioner's Delaware franchise taxes were in default, but Polk considered it essential that it remain in existence until the reorganization was consummated (R. 1764). Funds to pay these taxes were then provided by the James Interests (R. 713).

Petitioner's Lack of Independent Representation.

The positions occupied during the critical period by those who were directors or officers of petitioner and respondent are shown by plaintiff's Exhibit 2A, which we reproduce at the end of this brief.[13]

Prior to June 1, 1943, petitioner had maintained its offices jointly with those of the respondent and the Trustees in New York. Its officers were also employees of respondent, and their salaries and the expenses of the office had been jointly paid.

As of June 1, 1943, petitioner was incapable of further paying salaries or office expenses. Thereupon all of the officers and employees of the New York office, including petitioner's president and secretary, were taken over by respondent by decision of its president. In his words, they became its "full time" employees (R. 1738). This situation continued until respondent's New York offices were closed on May 1, 1945, at which time petitioner's president and secretary, accompanied by petitioner's files, were moved to the offices of respondent's tax counsel and thenceforth received their compensation from them, they being ultimately reimbursed by respondent (R. 1735, 1738).

From June 1, 1943, until this suit was filed in October 1946, nine persons were at one time or another directors of petitioner. With three exceptions (Messrs. Osborn, Wood and Hatton), every one of them was an employee of respondent from which they received their livelihood, and one of them, Mr. Schumacher, was not only a director and Chairman of the respondent's Executive Committee but was also one of its trustees in bankruptcy.

Of the three who were not employees of respondent and who did not receive compensation from it, one of them, Mr. Osborn, was a director of respondent and another, Mr. Hatton, was a clerk in the employ of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad and as such recognized Mr. Schumacher as his superior and chief, for Mr. Schumacher was an officer of that company (R. 1135). Three of the nine were clerks in respondent's employ—Miss Sheehan, switchboard operator; Mr. Wienken, stenographer; Miss Valouch, stenographer and clerk. Miss Sheehan and Mr. Hatton were put on the board to make up a quorum (R. 1138, 1139), and Miss Valouch did not become a director until the day the New York office was closed, when she became a regular employee of respondent's tax counsel.

Of the entire group of directors, none—other than Mr. Wood and Mr. Osborn—had the capacity, business experience or financial independence to give competent disinterested attention to petitioner's affairs in any matter wherein respondent could have an adverse interest. Yet not until shortly before the present suit was filed in October 1946, did either Wood or Osborn ever know or was either advised that petitioner's stock loss was being used in tax returns or that thereby respondent was saving taxes; neither knew or was advised of the legal or economic consequences of the filing of the returns involved in this case (Wood, R. 1129, 1132; Osborn, R. 1019, 1022).[14]

Meanwhile, petitioner had, actually, only one officer, Mr. Curry. Mr. Curry was a competent chief clerk, and he so regarded himself (R. 639, 646, 647, 736, 756). When Mr. Schumacher retired as petitioner's president, primarily because of petitioner's financial distress (R. 644, 645, 743), there was "nothing facing us but liquidation and dissolution * * * he [Schumacher] felt I [Curry] could carry through", and Mr. Curry was therefore, on February 1, 1942, appointed president and treasurer (R. 743). He was, at the same time, an employee of the respondent, its vice president, assistant secretary, assistant treasurer, a director and a member of its executive committee.

[14] Wood and Osborn were under the impression that consolidated returns were being filed, but they did not know of the use of petitioner's stock loss. The idea of using the loss in such returns was considered by Polk, respondent's tax counsel, as a mere speculation of a possibility when he first thought of it in May, 1943, "commented on rather than suggested * * * since it is paradoxical," and for that reason not recommended to be used until December, 1943 (R. 1448, 1484) and never brought home to Wood or Osborn.

After June 1, 1943, although Mr. Curry continued as petitioner's president, he received no compensation from it (R. 645) and thereafter received his livelihood from respondent until May 1, 1945 (R. 1729-33) when he went on pension from the respondent (R. 530, 532) and a retainer from its tax counsel at its ultimate expense (R. 1744, 1749). He did not consider that he had any understanding of, or competence in, tax matters and relied implicitly on tax counsel for respondent. "Tax matters were wholly Greek to me", he testified (R. 808).

The trial court observed Mr. Curry on the witness stand and summed up its estimate of him and of the significance of his testimony by describing Curry as "just a presiding officer and a sort of figurehead". Curry responded, "I admit that this is so" (R. 646, 647). He was a signing officer and "signed whatever documents they told you to sign" (R. 642).

Messrs. Coulson and Polk.

A description of what was done requires an identification of Mr. Coulson and his partner, Mr. Polk, and of the James Interests.

From 1925 until his death in 1941, Mr. Arthur Curtiss James and his wholly owned companies owned 8.8% of petitioner's preferred stock and 61% of its common stock (Chart, R 1). Mr. Coulson and his firm (Whitman, Ransom, Coulson and Goetz) were attorneys for Mr. James and his companies and were and are attorneys for all the James Interests, including the James Foundation of which Mr. Coulson is a trustee (R. 536).

James died in 1941, and after this Court upheld the plan of reorganization on March 15, 1943, Mr. Coulson and the

James Interests decided to cast their lot with respondent, although as a major creditor they could still have voted against the plan (R. 577, 578).[15]

The common stockholdings of the James group in petitioner became worthless when the plan was approved by this Court. On the other hand, their securities in respondent gave them stock and convertible bonds of the reorganized respondent, for both of which they ultimately received 28% of its stock (Chart, P 1).

Mr. Coulson Introduced Himself Into the Parties' Tax Matters, February 1943, and His Firm Became Tax Counsel for the Respondent March 1943.

On February 24, 1943, three weeks before this Court's decision, when his firm was not tax counsel for either petitioner or respondent, Mr. Coulson introduced himself into their federal tax matters by writing to respondent's president for tax information (R. 537). He did so on behalf of the James Interests (R. 538) because, so he testified, the effect of taxes on respondent was of vital concern to the James Interests (R. 965). Disturbed by the reply, on March 15th, the day of this Court's decision, he asked his partner, Mr. Polk, to look into the situation, stating (R. 539):

> "Actually, I happen to know that the only person over at the corporation [petitioner's] office here in New York who has any knowledge of taxes is a girl who is primarily Schumacher's secretary * * * I would be a little surprised if the report were intelligently prepared."

[15]Mr. James' allegiance during his lifetime lay with petitioner; he sought to save its equity in the respondent and was active in resisting the plan of reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission which denied that equity (R. 536).

Polk replied that "Only the lady referred to [Valouch] had any part in the preparation of the return * * *. Mr. Curry says they are too impoverished to hire accounting help." (R. 540)

Eight days later, on March 23, 1943, Mr. Coulson and his firm became tax counsel for the Trustees and the respondent, and the actual work was delegated to Mr. Coulson's law partner, Polk, who specialized in tax matters (R. 543-6).

Messrs. Coulson and Polk and their firm obtained all their compensation and received all their instructions from respondent,[16] but they conducted themselves as attorneys at law and attorneys-in-fact for petitioner as well.

Petitioner Was Under No Duty Under the Tax Laws to File Consolidated Returns.

Under the law and the regulations, only the parent corporation can file consolidated returns (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.16 (a)). The fact that a consolidated return has been filed in one year gives rise to no duty or obligation to file such a return in a subsequent year, if the law or regulations have been so changed as to make it less advantageous (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.11(a)). In that case separate returns may be filed.

Each of the years 1942, 1943 and 1944 was one in which any member of an affiliated group was free to file separate returns, irrespective of whether consolidated returns had been previously filed (II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-7, pp. 649, 650). And at the time each return in question here was filed, there existed the right in petitioner not to file a consolidated return if it was so advised. Unless the respondent could become a party to consolidated returns with plaintiff, it would have to file or pay taxes on the basis of separate returns. Mr. Polk was aware of these facts (R. 1458).

[16]On November 15, 1948, Coulson rendered a final statement to respondent "covering professional services in the tax disputes as to the taxable period January 1, 1942 through April 30, 1944" in the amount of $300,000. At the same time he also rendered a bill to respondent for the retainer payments to Curry, petitioner's president, for the period July 1, 1945 to December 31, 1948, in the amount of $10,500 (R. 1749). These respondent paid.

Prior to this Court's decision tentative returns on a consolidated basis had been filed for 1942 and an extension obtained until May 15, 1943 for the final returns. Under the regulations, the filing of a tentative consolidated return did not preclude filing the final returns on a separate basis (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.10(b)). Whether the final return should be a consolidated one was one of the first questions considered by Mr. Polk (R. 544).

The severance of the economic unity between petitioner and respondent took place between the filing of the tentative returns and the filing of the final returns for 1942.

1942 Tax Returns.

Without calling any of these factors to petitioner's attention, Mr. Polk decided that it was in the interest of respondent that consolidated returns should be filed (Polk, R. 1444, Coulson, R. 1482). He had these returns prepared and placed before Mr. Curry, vice president of the respondent and president of the petitioner, for signature. Mr. Curry had been informed by Mr. Schumacher that Mr. Polk was tax counsel for both companies (R. 660). When the returns were laid before him for signature, he therefore inquired whether they had Mr. Polk's approval. Being informed that they had, he signed without consulting or advising the petitioner's board of directors and without being advised by Mr. Polk or anyone else that petitioner did not have to file consolidated returns (R. 663, 664).

The 1943 Returns: The Decision to Use Petitioner's Stock Loss Was Made by Respondent.

The use of a loss of the character of petitioner's as an ordinary, rather than a capital, loss was first made possible by the October 1942 amendment to the Revenue Act. The idea of using petitioner's stock loss occurred to Mr. Polk in May 1943. In a letter to Mr. Curry as vice president of respondent, on May 20, 1943, he stated it to be a mere speculation of a possibility and was "commented on rather than suggested * * * since it is paradoxical" ("paradox letter," R. 588, P. 50). Polk sent no advice of it to petitioner. The "paradox" lay in the fact that the loss to be used to enable respondent to avoid taxes arose from the very fact that petitioner was cut off by the bankruptcy from any further economic interest in the respondent and could gain no benefit as a stockholder from the discharge of respondent's taxes.

In December 1943, Mr. Polk first decided to advise the use of the petitioner's stock loss (Polk, R. 1448; Coulson, R. 1484). When he came to that conclusion, he did not advise petitioner or Mr. Curry. Instead, he went to San Francisco to discuss the tax matters with respondent's officers, the agents of the reorganization trustees, and in January 1944 he recommended to them the filing of consolidated returns and the use of petitioner's loss (R. 1448, 1484), although he refused to advise that respondent could "bank" on the Treasury's allowing the deduction.[17] Without advising or consulting petitioner, he told respondent's president, that "We [the respondent] were within our legal right in taking the corporation's stock loss as a deduction in our consolidated return" (R. 1268).

The decision to use petitioner's loss was made in San Francisco by respondent's president, in January 1944 (R. 1448, 1484). He insisted on a written opinion to protect him (R. 1268), and such an opinion, dated January 11, 1944, signed by Mr. Coulson, was addressed to him as president of respondent. Petitioner was not consulted. Nevertheless, the opinion stated flatly, > "Accordingly, there will be allowed in the consolidated return a loss to the parent company of approximately the cost of the railroad company stock. This loss however computed would appear to far exceed the incomes of the other members of the affiliated group. Accordingly, for the year 1943 on a consolidated return basis there would appear to be no excess profit tax or income tax liability." (R. 605, at 609, 610).

A copy of this letter was sent to Mr. Schumacher as one of respondent's Trustees (R. 613, 614). But no one sent a copy to the petitioner or advised it (R. 665). Respondent's annual report for 1943, issued May 1, 1944, 2½ months before the returns for 1943 were filed, contained a statement that "A consolidated tax return for 1943 can and will be filed by the holding company" (R. 512). This determination that the petitioner "will" file a consolidated rethe corporation's stock loss as a deduction in our consolidated return. * * * I was very much surprised at that statement, and asked him if I could bank on it. He said no, that that matter will not be finally decided until the Treasury Department completes their audit on our '43 returns." Note that in this conversation petitioner's loss is treated as though it belonged to respondent.

turn was not made by it but by respondent without consultation with petitioner. The decision was made in the office of respondent's president (R. 1277, 1278, 1450).

In due course the 1943 returns were prepared under Mr. Polk's direction and were laid before Mr. Curry for signature as president of petitioner. Mr. Curry had had no part in their preparation, but, being assured that Mr. Polk approved them, he signed, again without consulting petitioner's board of directors and without being advised that petitioner need not file a consolidated return if it did not wish to do so (R. 663-665).

1942 Refund Claim Based on Carry-Back of Petitioner's Loss.

In March 1945, the claim for refund of 1942 taxes based on the carry-back of petitioner's loss was prepared by Mr. Polk on his own initiative and without discussing it with any representative of petitioner. Mr. Polk sent it to Mr. Curry with the request that he sign it as petitioner's president (R. 1418, 1450, 1451), and Mr. Curry, being told that Mr. Polk wanted him to sign, did so, again without consulting petitioner's board of directors (R. 667).

1944 Tax Returns:—Mr. Curry in Mr. Coulson's Office.

Late in 1944, Mr. Polk decided to recommend consolidated returns for the first four months of 1944, again using petitioner's loss (R. 1486). He so advised respondent (R. 623). But petitioner was not advised about this decision. The decision to file such consolidated returns was made by respondent (R. 1450).

These returns were not filed until June 1945. By that time Mr. Curry was occupying office space with Mr. Coulson's firm. On May 1, 1945, respondent's New York offices had been closed and all employees let out. On April 21, 1945, in anticipation of that event, Mr. Coulson wrote respondent's president to obtain approval of retaining Mr. Curry at $3000 per year; Mr. Coulson wished to hire petitioner's president for the purpose of serving respondent's interests in the tax matters here involved (R. 1496). He wrote,

> "As president of the old holding company [petitioner] which is a party in interest (without financial stake) in the consolidated return period, it seems to us essential that we have Mr. Curry available to secure us necessary data from the files of the holding company" (R. 1743, 1744)

Mr. Coulson did not advise the petitioner that it had no financial stake in the consolidated returns, nor did he advise it of his purpose in taking Mr. Curry on this retainer. Respondent approved Mr. Curry's retainer.

On June 1, 1945, Mr. Curry, together with petitioner's files, were moved to Mr. Coulson's office. There he remained until September 10, 1948, when, after the statute of limitations had run against any tax deficiency claim (see p. 26, infra), Mr. Coulson requested him to vacate (R. 656). For 3½ years while in Mr. Coulson's office, Mr. Curry received $3000 per year from Mr. Coulson's firm, for which it was reimbursed by respondent (R. 1749). The only services which Mr. Curry performed for his retainer was to sign the 1944 tax return and execute, as petitioner's president, a power of attorney in its name in favor of Polk (R. 657-8).

The 1944 return was filed June 15, 1945. It was prepared in Mr. Polk's office and brought to Mr. Curry, who occupied a room a few feet away (R. 1442), to sign (R. 1418). When Mr. Curry first moved to Coulson's office, he was told by Mr. Coulson that he was "to put himself at Mr. Polk's disposal in connection with the consolidated return" (Coulson, R. 1498). When told that Mr. Polk wanted him to sign the 1944 return, he signed, again without consultation with his board of directors and without being advised that petitioner need not file a consolidated return (R. 666).

The Power of Attorney and the Settlement with the Government.

The extent to which petitioner was disregarded and its tax affairs were taken over by respondent is shown by the way the tax settlement with the government was carried out. All negotiations for settlement were conducted by Mr. Polk in petitioner's name but without its knowledge (Polk, R. 1451).

On May 31, 1946, Mr. Polk wrote to the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge, justifying the use of petitioner's loss (R. 1779) but never, at any time, did he advise the petitioner or Mr. Curry of that letter (Polk, R. 1443; Curry, R. 667).

Since the government recognizes only the parent corporation in consolidated returns, it then became necessary for Mr. Polk to obtain a power of attorney from petitioner to continue settlement negotiations. On June 26, 1946, he prepared such a power of attorney running to himself (R. 1784) and sent it to Mr. Curry to sign. Mr. Curry signed because he was told that Mr. Polk wanted it (Curry, R. 668) and he did so without consulting his board of directors. Thereafter, Mr. Polk "conducted all the negotiations in the name of the plaintiff Corporation under [this] power of attorney" (Polk, R. 1441, 1451).

On February 11, 1947, Mr. Polk made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the offer of settlement that was accepted by the government in August 1947 (R. 1662). It was made and signed in petitioner's name by Mr. Polk; yet he showed no copy to petitioner or to Mr. Curry, sent no copy to them, and did not even advise them what was going on until April 1947, although during that period Mr. Curry was occupying a room in the Coulson suite (Polk, R. 1442; Curry, R. 654), and despite the fact that this suit had been filed the previous October and was then pending.

While ignoring petitioner, Messrs. Polk and Coulson were meticulous in obtaining authority from respondent to make the offer of settlement in the name of petitioner. Mr. Polk, in Washington negotiating with the Treasury, telephoned Mr. Coulson in San Francisco to secure respondent's authority to make the offer. Mr. Coulson and Mr. Elsey, respondent's president, agreed that this would require authorization by respondent's directors (R. 1283, 1284). It was only after respondent's directors had been polled and approved the offer that Polk delivered it (Coulson, R. 1493-4; Polk, R. 1430). This may be contrasted with his action in writing and delivering the offer in petitioner's name and under its power of attorney, not only without consulting it, but without informing it until two months later.

The reason assigned by Mr. Polk on the witness stand for ignoring petitioner was that he supposed "my responsibility was to them [respondent] and not the Corporation [petitioner]" (R. 1431), although the offer was made in the name of the petitioner and not the respondent. However, "I knew of the pending litigation," and finally it dawned upon him that his conception of his duty was peculiar, and "I came to the conclusion that they should be notified" (R. 1431). Mr. Polk was in San Francisco conferring about this case with the respondent's attorneys when this revelation came upon him; he telephoned to his New York office to send out a letter over his signature to Mr. Curry as president of petitioner and this was done on April 2, 1947 (R. 1461, 1787).

Therein he requested petitioner's approval of the offer of settlement. Mr. Curry referred it to petitioner's board of directors. Not until then did the board know that Mr. Curry had signed a power of attorney (R. 1023). The board caused a reply to be sent to Mr. Polk on May 5, 1947 (R. 1794). It did not grant approval of the settlement. Commenting on > "the action of the Western Pacific Railroad Company in opposing judicial settlement of the allocations of tax benefits, if any, derived from the application of the capital losses of the Corporation for the benefit of the Group," it said: "Had there been any question of the Railroad Corporation's right to a determination of the question of allocations of tax benefits, we feel sure that counsel representing both the Railroad Company and the Railroad Corporation would have specifically stipulated, at the time of the filing of the consolidated returns, for such allocation to be determined by the court, if the parties found themselves unable to agree thereto. Inasmuch as in the proposed settlement the Railroad Corporation foregoes its refund claim of $4,200,000, we think it appropriate that a stipulation promptly be entered into between the Railroad Company and the Railroad Corporation, and the other members of the Group, which will insure the Corporation its day in court for a settlement of the questions of proper and equitable allocations of tax savings, if any, as well as fixing the amount of the refund as the basis for such savings. * * *"

In the meanwhile, on May 6th, Mr. Polk again wrote to petitioner requesting approval of the offer of settlement (R. 1797). But on that very day, without awaiting a reply and knowing that petitioner's request of May 5th had not been met, Mr. Polk renewed the offer of settlement, in petitioner's name, in a conference with Treasury officials, and confirmed that renewal by letter of May 19, 1947 (R. 1799). He signed that letter in petitioner's name and in it he asserted that "The taxpayer [i.e., petitioner] on behalf of itself and its affiliated subsidiaries agrees to settle and determine the tax liabilities of said corporation for the taxable years 1942, 1943 and 1944 in the amount shown on the returns as filed," although the petitioner had not yet given him the authority requested in his letter of May 6th. Mr. Polk never informed petitioner of this letter (Polk, R. 1443), and Curry never heard of it until the trial (R. 681).

Polk's offer of settlement to the Treasury was that the tax returns be accepted as filed, the 1943 and 1944 returns showing no tax, and the claim for refund of the 1942 tax be rejected (R. 171). This offer was accepted by the Treasury on August 13, 1947 (R. 174) and the claim for refund was formally rejected on August 26, 1947 (R. 175).

This settlement could have been repudiated by either party (Botany Worsted Mills v. United States, 278 U.S. 282), but was not, and the tax saving became certain and final for the first time on June 30, 1948, when the statute of limitations ran against any deficiency assessment (R. 1751).

Coulson and Polk Never Advised Petitioner of Its Rights.

At no time did Mr. Coulson or Mr. Polk give any advice to any officer of petitioner as to what its rights might be against any other member of the group arising out of the filing of consolidated returns or the use of petitioner's stock loss, or advise petitioner that it was free not to file consolidated returns, although they knew that to be true (Polk, R. 1451-1458).

Petitioner Learns of the Use of Its Stock Loss and Files This Suit in 1946.

In June 1946, a stockholder's bill was filed in New York by certain of petitioner's stockholders (the petitioners in No. 160), charging that petitioner's directors had violated their duty in various respects, including a failure to prosecute petitioner's claim against respondent for its use of petitioner's stock loss in consolidated returns to the advantage of respondent. It was from that suit that petitioner's directors first learned of the use of its loss (R. 1024). Thereupon petitioner's directors caused this suit to be filed in October 1946 (R. 5, 11)

Supplemental Complaint Filed December 1947.

In December 1947, petitioner filed its supplemental complaint, in which it alleged that respondent through its officers and attorneys had controlled petitioner and that by virtue of that control petitioner was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of respondent (R. 208, 231).

3. FINDINGS.

The trial court found the facts in accordance with petitioner's contention. Thus it found:

"On December 17, 1947, plaintiff filed a supplementary bill of complaint * * * It was there further alleged that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant. Throughout the proceedings and in the trial, this has been referred to as 'duality of control'." (R. 264)

And:

"* * * there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control.'" (R. 272)

Again:

"* * * in 1943, after the filing of the 1942 return and payment of the tax, the tax attorneys for defendant 'discovered' Section 123 of the Revenue Act of 1942. (26 USC 23(g)(4).) They proposed what they denoted a 'paradoxical' theory, by which the worthlessness of the plaintiff's stock (which had cost the plaintiff some $75,000,000) in the operating railroad company (debtor), might be availed of as an offset to the operating income of the debtor and thus result in a net loss and no tax obligation." (R. 261, 262)

And again:

"* * * the tax attorneys caused the filing of consolidated tax returns for 1943 and for the forepart of 1944 in the name of plaintiff, in which sufficient portions of the $75,000,000 stock loss were used as offsets against the operating accounts for these years, so as to show no net income." (R. 262)

"* * * the tax attorneys for the defendant conceived a 'paradoxical' plan. They decided that they would file > * * * consolidated returns on behalf of the parent company and its subsidiaries and in them set up the plaintiff's stock loss * * * as an income tax deduction against the operating profits." (R. 265, 266)

And:

> "The returns * * * were prepared by the employees of the debtor [respondent] and signed by the president of the plaintiff corporation, although they were never submitted to its board of directors for approval or consideration" (R. 261)

Also:

> "a claim for refund * * * was filed in the name of the plaintiff" (R. 262)
>
> "The validity of the offsets was questioned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and conferences were had between the tax counsel for the defendant and the Commissioner. As a result, a tax settlement was made with the Commissioner whereby, in consideration of the withdrawal of the claim for refund, the Commissioner accepted and approved the returns" (R. 262, 263).

In short, the trial court found that respondent filed the returns and effected the settlement with the government, making use of petitioner's name, and that petitioner was not the actor. This is further shown by the proceedings on the settlement of the findings.

In its opinion the trial court admonished that it would only receive proposed findings pertinent to its theories (R. 276); petitioner was thus precluded from requesting findings on "duality" and "domination" as such (see p. 36, infra), but the same facts bore on the issue whether petitioner took part in the tax transactions so as to be party to the wrongdoing which the trial court believed had been worked on the government. The matter was therefore raised.

On the settlement of the findings, the trial court said that it agreed with the petitioner's proposed finding on the subject. Noting that the court's opinion "decided the case on the basis that the taxes ought to have been paid the government" which sounded "on the principle that the court will not interfere between wrongdoers, or possibly like the doctrine of unclean hands," petitioner's counsel said that his proposed findings "in essence * * * go to the fact * * * that the plaintiff did not itself conduct the tax transaction" (R. 462, 463). And this colloquy occurred:

> "* * * the evidence certainly discloses that the tax operations, however they may be characterized, were conducted by the defendant and its tax counsel, not by the plaintiff.
>
> "The Court: There is no question about that." (R. 468)
>
>
> "The Court: Why couldn't one finding be sufficient to cover that, then: that the court finds that in the preparation of the documents, in the conferences and in all matters having to do with the settlement arranged with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the plaintiff did not participate? Couldn't you simplify that by making one finding?
>
>
> "Mr. Lasky: Your Honor's opinion of course also referred to the signing of various papers by the plaintiff's president. Of course Mr. Curry was the plaintiff's president, and our point here was that while he signed them, that really was not the plaintiff's act.

"The Court: Didn't I say too the Board of Directors were not—

"Mr. Lasky: I think you may have said it with respect to some matters but not others. I don't think it was said with respect to the power of attorney." (R. 470).

The court then said "that most everything you have mentioned is really in the opinion some place or another" (R. 476) and finally entered an order adopting its opinion as its findings (R. 319).

C. Other Relevant Facts.

STIPULATION OF AUGUST 1947 AND PRE-TRIAL ORDER.

Settlement with the government in August 1947 had not yet been effected when this suit was commenced in October 1946.

Petitioner was concerned that the form of the settlement should not prejudice its rights. Under the law and regulations, any refund of 1942 taxes would be paid to it (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.16(a)). But the form of the proposed settlement called for rejection of the claim for refund and would thus leave respondent in possession of all the tax savings.

Petitioner therefore negotiated with respondent for a stipulation to protect it. Before it was executed, intervening stockholders (petitioners in No. 160), being fearful that the stipulation did not adequately protect petitioner's rights, applied to the District Court for relief. After hearing (R. 335-339) that Court made a pre-trial order construing the stipulation (R. 163), upon the basis of which the parties executed it on September 3, 1947 (R. 168-175).

The effect of the pre-trial order was to distribute the tax savings of $17 million over the three-year period, attrib-uting $3,385,290 to 1942. The claim for refund was not to be deemed to have been abandoned but to be diminished in proportion to the diminution of the entire tax savings, and placed in the same status as if it had actually been refunded and paid by the government to the petitioner and by it paid into court to await judgment.

CONSUMMATION OF THE REORGANIZATION.

The reorganization plan provided that it could be carried out either by revesting the properties (then in the trustees' hands) in the debtor, or by transferring them to a new corporation formed for the purpose (233 I.C.C. 453). The Reorganization Committee concluded that it would be advantageous to have the properties revested in respondent (the debtor) (R. 621). But to permit this, it would be necessary to secure the surrender by petitioner of its stock in respondent.

Accordingly, on November 22, 1943, the Reorganization Committee made a contract with petitioner and certain of its creditors, whereby petitioner agreed to surrender its shares to the Committee or its nominee for this purpose. On December 17, 1943, the bankruptcy court approved the "use of the debtor company" in carrying out the plan (R. 1930), and on April 30, 1944, the stock was surrendered by petitioner to the Reorganization Committee (Chart P 1).

Thus the affiliation for income tax purposes between petitioner and respondent did not cease until April 30, 1944. But the economic interest of petitioner in respondent had ceased for all time in 1943 when this Court affirmed the I.C.C. decision denying petitioner any participation in the reorganization and declaring its stock holding to be worthless. All control of respondent by petitioner had forever ceased when the bankruptcy trustees were appointed in 1935.

The reorganization plan was confirmed in October 1943 (R. 1674). In November 1944 the bankruptcy court made its revesting order (R. 36). Pursuant to that order and on December 29, 1944, the properties were turned back to respondent by Trustees' deed and, under date of December 14, 1944, respondent executed an Assumption Agreement assuming, among other liabilities, "any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use, or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business * * *" (R. 1711, 1713). Pursuant to the plan respondent also assumed all taxes due the United States from the debtor or the debtor's trustees for any period prior to January 1, 1945 (R. 36 at 49).

The tax returns for 1943 and 1944 and the claim for refund for 1942 were all filed after the economic unity of the group had ceased and also after tax affiliation had ended. The filing of the 1942 refund claim and the 1944 returns also occurred after respondent was out of the hands of the Trustees.

RESPONDENT IS THE SAME CORPORATE ENTITY THAT WENT INTO BANKRUPTCY, BUT ITS FORMER STOCKHOLDERS WERE COMPLETELY WIPED OUT.

Respondent has sought to distinguish between the "pre-reorganization The Western Pacific Railroad Company," the "reorganized The Western Pacific Railroad Company" and the trustees during reorganization.

But respondent is the same legal entity in which petitioner made its original investment of $75 million. It is and was the same legal entity throughout, before, during, and after bankruptcy. The actual railroad operations continued without interruption during the bankruptcy in the name and under the direction of respondent's officers.[18] And, as just noted, the assets were revested in the same corporate entity at the end of 1944.

But respondent is now a complete financial stranger to petitioner and has been since March 15, 1943, albeit "paradoxically" affiliated for income tax purposes until April 30, 1944. From the moment respondent went into bankruptcy in 1935 and its properties passed into the control of the bankruptcy trustees (R. 1916), petitioner lost all control over it, and never regained it. During all the time involved in the tax returns, petitioner and respondent were complete economic strangers, and petitioner had no control whatever over respondent.

As the Court of Appeals correctly stated, after 1935 respondent "was no longer controlled by Corporation [petitioner] but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court" (R. 2223), and after adoption of the plan of reorganization "affiliation no longer existed" (R. 2231).

When it emerged from reorganization on December 29, 1944, the respondent had entirely new owners. Petitioner's investment of $75 million had been wiped out as well as its advances amounting to $7,750,000. No other interest was exterminated except that of a subsidiary of petitioner amounting to $61,667. Other interests were given income or equity securities in place of fixed debt, or scaled down, but these securities were greatly enhanced in value by the operations during bankruptcy when $30 million of revenue was devoted to additions and betterments and $6 million to rolling stock (1944 Annual Report, P-20C, p. 9; reprinting in the record of the annual reports was dispensed with by order).

[18] The court order provided that the "business shall be conducted in the name of the debtor by its regularly elected or appointed corporate officers, agents and employees, but under and subject to the direction of said trustees" (R. 1921).

THE $10,100,000 RESERVE FUND TO PAY THE TAXES.

Throughout 1943 respondent made accruals in excess of $7 million to meet the expected 1943 tax liability, and for the first four months of 1944 it made accruals in an amount exceeding $3 million (R. 614, 1818-1824).

When Polk advised respondent in December 1943 that petitioner's loss could and should be used in the 1943 returns, he recommended that respondent's accruals for 1943 taxes be placed in a special reserve until the taxes were finally determined (R. 601-3). By order of the bankruptcy court on March 3, 1944, $7,100,000 was designated "Reserve Fund for Contingent Tax Liabilities" and invested in U. S. Treasury securities to be used to pay any federal taxes found to be due for 1943 (R. 616).

In March 1945, three months after it was out of the hands of the Trustees, respondent established a further reserve of $3 million against federal taxes, which was also invested in government securities (R. 616).

These reserves, aggregating $10,100,000, were still intact in respondent's hands at the time of the trial (R. 616). Since the tax settlement with the government, respondent has carried them as a contingent reserve to meet any judgment in the present action (R. 517, 518).

D. Summary Recapitulation of Basic and Incontrovertible Facts.

1. Petitioner sustained a loss of $75 million when its stock in respondent became worthless.

2. It ceased to have any economic interest in respondent on March 15, 1943.

3. Respondent thereafter used petitioner's loss to discharge respondent's tax liability of $17 million.

4. Respondent conceived the plan of using petitioner's loss and carried it into execution by directing the action of petitioner's president, who was also an officer of respondent and in its exclusive pay.

5. Respondent's tax saving resulted from the conjunction of two elements. First, it had to obtain petitioner's joinder in consolidated returns. In addition, it had to use the loss. The loss was petitioner's loss.

E. Decisions of the Two Courts Below.

The trial court found the facts in favor of petitioner but rendered judgment for respondent. The basis of its decision was its belief that it was "puzzling, if not downright amazing" that respondent could avail itself of petitioner's loss (R. 267); that respondent's tax "escape" was "erroneous and unjust" (R. 271), and that if the court "had the power, I would not hesitate to set aside the tax settlement" and "order these taxes paid to the United States" (R. 270). In short, its theory was the view that the tax savings ought not to have been allowed by the Treasury, that a wrongdoing or species of fraud had been worked on the government.

The trial court's second but minor ground was that petitioner was somehow seeking to go behind the reorganization proceedings, which had denied petitioner any interest in respondent's properties.

Not the least of the peculiar consequences of the trial court's conclusion was that it left the proceeds with the party whom the court found to be the wrongdoer. The dissenting opinion of Judge Fee in the Court of Appeals clearly stated the situation (R. 2239-41):

> "The Trial Court gives two reasons for decision against plaintiff: * * * Neither has any validity.
>
> "The major portion of the opinion of the Trial Court is devoted to the proposition that the 'tax escape' was a fraud upon the government, and therefore the proceeds were given to the defendant, an active wrongdoer. * * * The majority of this Court, as the opinion shows, does not rely upon it.
>
> "A second subsidiary theory was also advanced below with little emphasis. * * * This reason is as unstable as the first."

The Court of Appeals swept aside the trial court's legal theories as erroneous. It stated of the major theory, "We do not share this view" (R. 2227-2228, fn. 12). Nevertheless, by a 2 to 1 decision, it decided against petitioner and affirmed the judgment on a legal theory all its own.

Its basic reasoning is as follows: If respondent controlled petitioner, it had a fiduciary obligation to deal with it fairly (R. 2223). But it did not violate this duty in filing the consolidated returns or in the failure of the common officers to request and obtain an agreement for compensation for use of petitioner's tax rights, or in respondent's failure to give petitioner an opportunity to appoint independent officers who could have made such an agreement.

These acts were not unfair, said the court, because petitioner was under a duty to file such returns; it could not have demanded an agreement of compensation for doing so, all because petitioner was bound to give to respondent the benefit of its loss (R. 2232-2234).

The opinion sums up: "Equity will not permit a recovery as a substitute for a bargain which would have been unfair," i.e., no bargain for any compensation would have been fair (R. 2235). In short, it was petitioner's duty to give up its sole asset to respondent for nothing.

The majority opinion thus announced a new principle of law, viz.:

That wherever the tax laws permit two corporations to join in consolidated federal tax returns, and one has a loss and the other has income, the former must join with the latter and permit its loss to be used for the latter's benefit, without payment, consideration or compensation.

And since respondent was no longer a subsidiary of petitioner,[19] the principle as applied went further, namely:

A former parent is under a duty to join in a consolidated return and permit its loss to be used to satisfy the former subsidiary's tax, without consideration or compensation, even though it has no economic interest in the latter and can derive no benefit therefrom.

This was tantamount to holding that the income corporation can sue in equity for a mandatory injunction to compel the loss corporation to join and confer the benefit of its loss, gratis.

[19] As the opinion itself states, "when the returns and the claim for refund were filed, affiliation no longer existed" (R. 2230-1).

SPECIFICATIONS OF ERROR

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit erred:

1. In holding that wherever the federal tax laws permit two corporations to join in consolidated federal income and excess profits tax returns, and one has a loss and the other has income, the former must join with the latter and permit its loss to be used for the latter's benefit, without consideration or compensation.

2. In holding that a former parent corporation is under a duty to join in consolidated income and excess profits tax returns and to permit its losses to be used to satisfy the former subsidiary's tax liabilities, without consideration or compensation, even though it has no economic interest in the latter and can derive no benefit therefrom, and particularly, that it must do so to permit the former subsidiary to utilize the very loss sustained by the former parent by reason of losing its stock interest in the former subsidiary.

3. In holding that after a parent corporation has had its equity in another corporation wiped out by reorganization in bankruptcy and has thus been left with a huge loss, the former bankrupt may then use the loss for its own financial advantage.

4. In holding to be irrelevant the facts that respondent dominated and controlled petitioner, that petitioner's officers were employees and officers of the respondent deriving their livelihood from it, and that by reason of such domination and control respondent was a fiduciary to petitioner and was enabled to and did appropriate, seize and use petitioner's tax rights for respondent's own enrichment without petitioner's consent.

5. In affirming the judgment of the District Court which denied any relief to petitioner, and in failing to hold that petitioner is entitled to an accounting from respondent and to a decree directing payment of an equitable portion of the respondent's tax savings for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, amounting to $17,201,739.

6. In failing to direct entry of judgment that petitioner have and recover from respondent the full amount of said tax savings.

7. By exceeding its appellate office in making findings of fact ab initio to affirm the judgment of the District Court upon a legal theory different from that on which the District Court acted, the theory of the Court of Appeals being unsupported by and inconsistent with the facts found by the District court.

8. In holding that a litigant (here petitioner) has no right to petition for a rehearing in banc or to have such petition considered and acted upon by all the members of the court, and in holding that a Court of Appeals has no power to grant such a rehearing after decision by a panel in the absence of approval of a majority of the panel.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

I. Respondent has been enriched by $17 million by appropriating petitioner's tax rights to extinguish its own federal tax liabilities.

Assertions that a judgment for petitioner will in effect give it an interest in respondent denied by the reorganization plan, and thus circumvent the plan, and that it will give petitioner an interest in respondent's earnings accrued while in the bankruptcy trustees' possession, are fallacious.

Petitioner's claim does not circumvent the plan because the plan contemplated and required that respondent pay its taxes and did not contemplate that it would appropriate a stranger's (petitioner's) property to satisfy them. A judgment for petitioner will not take earnings respondent is entitled to keep but moneys which it would have paid into the Treasury if it had not appropriated and used petitioner's loss; respondent will be deprived of nothing it would possess if it had filed its own separate income tax returns and paid its taxes.

The benefit to respondent from taking and using petitioner's loss to discharge its taxes, and the applicable legal principles, are exactly the same as if respondent had taken currency from petitioner and used it for the same purpose. What petitioner prays is compensation for property belonging to it which respondent took after the plan of reorganization was consummated and which did not even exist until after that consummation. The consummation of the plan created the factual situation which made the later tax savings possible. Drastic as it was, and because it was drastic, the plan left petitioner with a $75 million loss possessing value for tax utilization. Having impoverished petitioner by taking ownership of respondent as the plan contemplated, respondent's new owners have gone beyond the plan, by taking from petitioner, an economic stranger, all it had left in order to enrich themselves further.

The plan was promulgated by the I.C.C. in 1939 before the tax savings were even conceived. Indeed the statute which made them possible was not enacted until October 1942. Both the plan and the revesting order required respondent to pay its federal taxes; it expressly assumed the obligation; and it emerged from the reorganization with more than ample funds to do so, in a financial state vastly better than the plan envisaged, and with cash reserves set aside for the purpose. But thereafter it discharged its obligation by seizing and using what belonged to petitioner.

II. Petitioner is entitled to recover under principles of unjust enrichment, which require restitution. A person is enriched where he has received a benefit from use of what belongs to another. Saving one from loss or expense confers a benefit. Tax savings constitute enrichment subject to the principles of unjust enrichment. An enrichment is unjust if retention by the enriched party of the benefit would be unjust. Respondent's retention is unjust for two major reasons.

III. The first major reason is that retention would be inconsistent with the rationale of consolidated returns and the purpose of Congress in allowing them.

The rationale is that a group of affiliated corporations is an economic entity and, unless the group as a whole shows a profit, those who conduct the business, the parent's owners, have realized no gain. For this reason the common owner's right to set off the gains in one corporation against the losses in another is recognized, with the purpose and effect to benefit the ultimate owners of the business entity, i.e., the parent's stockholders. The object is to ameliorate the losses.

Two principles are evident: The tax savings should go (a) to the ultimate owner of the economic entity, the parent, and (b) to the party suffering the loss to ameliorate it. These two principles coincide here because the loss used to produce the tax savings was the former parent's loss. The two principles also coincide wherever the economic unity continues. Where the unity has been severed so that the benefit of the tax remission granted by Congress cannot reach the parent through its stock ownership, the parent should be allowed to recover directly in order that the remission may be applied against the loss.

Consolidated reporting has been justified by Congress and the courts on the ground that "no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results" and that "no improper benefits are obtained from the privilege," for Congress did not intend the privilege [to] be enjoyed solely for "tax reducing purposes." If the former subsidiary, after severance of the economic unity—the very event producing the parent's loss, is permitted to retain the tax savings without making restitution to the parent to ameliorate its loss, both equities underlying the principles of consolidated income tax reporting are defeated, an ultimate advantage under the tax laws has resulted, improper benefits have been obtained, and only a tax reducing purpose has been served: New owners of the former subsidiary will reap a sheer windfall from the misfortune of the old and the income tax laws will be subverted into a tool to enrich strangers.

IV. The second major reason why retention of the enrichment would be unjust is that respondent was able to appropriate petitioner's loss and right of use because it dominated petitioner and occupied a fiduciary relation to it.

One is entitled to recover for a benefit conferred unless he intended to make a gift. There was no gift here; respondent simply took petitioner's asset. Petitioner's directors lacked power to make a gift, duality of representation precluded any corporate intent to make one, and petitioner's directors knew nothing of the use of its loss.

After this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, everyone having to do with petitioner's affairs was under the highest obligation to see that such rights as were left to it and to its stockholders were not dissipated, violated or neglected, and those representing it and respondent, in dual capacity, were under the rigid duty not to permit petitioner's rights to be used for the benefit of respondent without an accounting. Desiring to use petitioner's tax rights, respondent should have openly disclosed to petitioner the utility of those rights and the legal and economic consequences of their use and should have requested petitioner's consent and given it the opportunity to obtain independent representation to permit a consensual arrangement. Respondent did not do so but sought to deprive petitioner of the opportunity to protect for itself the value of its corporate asset.

Respondent was a fiduciary to petitioner because it took over the conduct of petitioner's tax affairs and assumed to deal with petitioner's properties and rights in a manner designed to benefit itself; to this end it used petitioner's officers who were respondent's employees paid by it; and it took it upon itself to act as petitioner's agent and while so acting used petitioner's rights. By reason of petitioner's moribund condition and its loss of control over respondent, coupled with the latter's reinvigorated condition and the fact that petitioner's officers and most of its directors were mere employees of respondent from which they received their livelihood, the former subsidiary was the fiduciary to the former principal, for what makes one corporation a fiduciary of another are the elements of domination and the existence of control and management.

A fiduciary may not avail himself of any advantage or facility that the position gives him. He must account to the beneficiary for the full benefit derived from the use of any property or rights of the beneficiary, from the fact of the relationship or from the opportunities or facilities it affords.

V. The arguments advanced against recovery are without merit.

1. The basic holding of the Court of Appeals is that petitioner was under the duty to join in consolidated returns and to confer upon respondent, gratis, the benefit of its tax credit. No such duty can be found in the tax laws or regulations, which make clear that the parent is free to make its own decision about filing consolidated returns on the basis of its own interest. This is particularly true where the economic unity has been severed.

The court below by judicial fiat has made mandatory what Congress left optional. No duty of petitioner to give its tax rights away can be derived from any principle of equity. Creditors of a reorganized company, after supplanting the former shareholders, have no right to appropriate still other property of the former shareholders.

2. Underlying the basic decision below is the further holding that respondent had a right to expropriate petitioner's loss because petitioner was so unfortunate as to be left destitute, with no taxable income, and could therefore not itself achieve tax advantages by use of its loss, while respondent had use for it. But petitioner's rights to recover rest on benefits conferred and are not confined to detriment sustained. Property, assets or rights cannot be taken from one without compensation merely because he cannot use them profitably himself. Their protection from seizure or trespass does not depend upon what use or benefit the owner can make of them. The contrary rule reflects itself in every field of law, in suits for the use of land, in unjust enrichment cases where recovery is measured by benefits conferred, not detriment sustained, in every case of a fiduciary's profiting from the relationship where he must account for the profit though the beneficiary suffered no loss and could not have made the gain, in patent and condemnation cases, and in a variety of other situations.

The utility of the loss to respondent itself gave and measured the value to petitioner.

3. Respondent asserts that a loss is "negative", may therefore not be called "property" or an asset or placed in any traditional category of common law liability: therefore it cannot furnish the basis of a right and a remedy. Terminology, such as "property," is not the source of rights; the reverse is true. The loss had a positive value, because it had a valuable use and was actually used by respondent to save $17 million. The tax savings did not spring automatically from the tax law; the law merely permitted the savings provided respondent could introduce itself into consolidated returns with petitioner and offset its loss against respondent's income.

4. The decision below was based in large part on the so-called practice of the parties in filing consolidated returns in earlier years. But alleged past practice is irrelevant. (1) It ignores the severance of the economic unity; it ignores the fact that while petitioner was respondent's owner before this Court's approval of the reorganization plan in March 1943, thereafter the parties became total strangers to each other and respondent was no longer in any real sense the same party that had filed consolidated returns with petitioner in prior years but a total economic stranger. (2) Prior to October 1942 the tax laws did not permit the use here made of a loss like this and therefore there was no prior practice on the use of such loss. (3) There was no past practice about giving away a sole asset. (4) The evidence does not support the alleged past practice. And (5) past practice can be relevant only to the construction of a contract, but here there was no contract, and what was done prior to the severance of the economic unity is no evidence of a contractual consent to what was done thereafter in circumstances utterly different. The District Court considered the alleged past practice to be irrelevant.

5. Petitioner's rights do not depend on whether a prior agreement between it and respondent would have been possible. But such an agreement would have been perfectly legal.

6. There is no merit to the trial court's theory that petitioner should be denied recovery because respondent defrauded the government. The tax savings, having resulted from a final settlement with the Treasury, must be accepted as a starting point in the case. And if a wrong was perpetrated, respondent was the wrongdoer and should not have been rewarded by being allowed to retain the enrichment. A fiduciary cannot refuse to account for gains arising from his own wrongdoing.

7. Respondent asserted in its brief in opposition to certiorari that petitioner's claims, even if valid, were cut off by failure to present them to the bankruptcy court. But petitioner's claims arose after the revesting of the railroad properties in respondent in December 1944. Not only were the claim for refund of 1942 taxes and the 1944 tax returns filed thereafter, but none of the tax savings arose until settlement was made with the Treasury in 1947, and they resulted only from the acts of the respondent, after bankruptcy was over, in adopting the returns and, in petitioner's name, prevailing upon the tax authorities to accept them.

Furthermore, respondent in writing assumed all obligations and liabilities incurred by the trustees and so assumed the liability to petitioner if it had theretofore arisen. The assumption was required by order of the bankruptcy court made pursuant to the settled practice and principle that the purpose of bankruptcy proceedings is to discharge or readjust debts existing at their inception and not to destroy claims arising from acts of the court's officers during the proceedings.

VI. The Court of Appeals said that it would deny recovery even though respondent did dominate and control petitioner, although concurrently it denied the fact of such domination and control. This denial was but a conclusion based on the irrelevant alleged past practice of filing consolidated returns. The trial court found the fact of domination and control and resulting appropriation, both formally and informally, and made clear that it would have formally made further findings except that the issue was immaterial to the legal theories on which it decided the case.

The record not only supports but requires this finding by the trial court of domination and control. If there were any basis for a conclusion that the trial court had not found the fact and that a contrary finding is possible, the cause would have to be remanded to the District Court for findings. A Court of Appeals may not affirm a judgment on a legal theory different from that on which the trial court acted, when the new theory is based upon a fact not found or contrary to one found by the trial court. The Court of Appeals exceeds its appellate office by making findings ab initio.

VII. The Court of Appeals erred in denying petitioner the right to petition for a rehearing in banc.

VIII. Since the undisputed facts and the trial court's findings of fact require judgment for petitioner, further proceedings following reversal are unnecessary, and the cause should be remanded with directions to enter judgment for petitioner. The amount of recovery should be the tax savings, because (1) this will ameliorate petitioner's loss, thus serving the purpose of consolidated tax reporting, while retention of any part by respondent would be a sheer windfall, and (2) the principles respecting abuse of the fiduciary relationship so require. By failure of complete disclosure and by unilateral seizure of petitioner's rights, respondent denied petitioner the right to determine for itself the value of its asset. The "price of denial" is that respondent must now account.

ARGUMENT

I.

The Relief Sought by Petitioner Does Not Circumvent Respondent's Bankruptcy Reorganization or Permit Petitioner to Share in the Equity Which the Reorganization Plan Denied It.

From the outset respondent has urged that petitioner is here endeavoring to circumvent the reorganization plan by seeking to share in the equity which the reorganization plan denied it.[20]

This argument ignores completely the basis of petitioner's claims. Petitioner seeks to compel respondent to account for the unjust enrichment resulting from respondent's appropriating and using petitioner's tax rights to satisfy respondent's federal tax liability. Judge Fee, dissenting in the Court of Appeals, commented (R. 2251): "The error of the lower court was in assuming that plaintiff is seeking an interest in defendant corporation instead of compensation for property taken by defendant which belonged to plaintiff."

If the subject matter of this suit were a bag of gold coin belonging to petitioner which was appropriated by respondent to pay its taxes, no court would hesitate to hold it accountable to petitioner. That the subject matter is a $75 million loss sustained by petitioner, which respondent used to discharge its tax liability, may present a unique factual situation but it does not involve unusual legal principles.

Petitioner's claim is not remotely in derogation of the reorganization plan. In asking that the benefit of the tax savings be adjudged to belong to it, petitioner does not remotely seek to undo the plan, but accepts its consequences in full. The consummation of that plan was not the end, but only the threshold, of this case.

[20]The District Court said that the suit was "a circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership, rejected in the reorganization plan" (R. 272), and that "to make any award in this cause, under the assumed authority of equity principles, would be in effect to modify the administrative and judicial judgments in the reorganization proceeding" (R. 274).

The tax savings arose after the plan was fully consummated. It was the fulfillment of the plan—the very fact of its full and complete consummation—that created the factual situation which made the later tax savings possible. The plan was drastic. It wiped out the entire stock ownership of the old stockholder. In Bondholders, Inc. v. Powell, 342 U.S. 921 (Jan. 28, 1952) and again in Chemical Bank & Trust Co. v. Group of Institutional Investors, 343 U.S. 982 (June 9, 1952), Mr. Justice Frankfurter noted that due to erroneous estimates of future earning power, valuable equities were forfeited in a series of railway reorganizations of which the first was respondent's, Ecker v. Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, 318 U.S. 448. Although petitioner's stock in respondent was declared worthless in the Ecker case, respondent's taxable earned income in 1942, 1943 and the first quarter of 1944 was $32 million.

Nevertheless no complaint is made by petitioner of this deprivation of its stock ownership and no relief against it is sought in the present suit. But the consummation of the plan, having stripped petitioner of that ownership, left it with something in its place—a huge loss and a right to utilize it for tax purposes.

It was then that respondent went beyond the plan and seized what petitioner had left—its loss and right—to increase respondent's surplus by an additional $17 million.

This was no part of the plan. Indeed, the plan could not have commanded petitioner to give its tax rights to the bankrupt, even had it purported to do so (Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132).

The tax savings here involved had no bearing on the type of reorganization. They were unexpected—in the words of respondent's counsel, "fortuitous." The 1942 amendment to the Revenue Act which for the first time permitted the use of the stock loss to offset ordinary income and thus made possible the saving here was not enacted until long after the plan was promulgated (see p. 8, supra).

The plan contemplated that the reorganized respondent should pay its income taxes. It explicitly stated (233 I.C.C. at 455) that > "Notwithstanding any other provisions of this modified order, the reorganized company shall assume the liability for, and shall pay in full in due course, any and all taxes due to the United States from the debtor or the debtor's trustees for any taxable period prior to the date of the confirmation of the plan * * *."

The "revesting order" of November 27, 1944, by which the properties were restored to respondent and freed of bankruptcy administration, provided (para. 9) that respondent must > "assume liability for, and pay in due course, any and all taxes lawfully due to the United States from the debtor or the debtor's Trustees for any taxable period prior to January 1, 1945 * * *." (R. 36 at 49)

In consideration of the transfer to it by the Trustees of all assets in their hands, respondent executed an "Agreement of Assumption" on December 14, 1944, effective December 29, 1944, in the form authorized by the revesting order (R. 1711). Thereby it specifically agreed to > "assume the liability for, and pay in due course, any and all taxes lawfully due to the United States from the debtor or the debtor's Trustees for any taxable period prior to January 1, 1945 * * *." (R. 1716)

Respondent thus assumed the liability to pay the federal taxes. And it proceeded to make provision to do so. It paid the taxes for 1942, it made monthly accruals to pay them for 1943 and 1944, and it set aside reserves of $10,100,000 for that purpose. As late as August 1944, the trustees reported to the bankruptcy court that, after the deduction of the $7,100,000 reserve fund for 1943 taxes, the 1943 earnings were so large as to leave $8,929,844 available for dividends on the common stock, in addition to more than $11,500,000 required to carry out the provisions of the plan (R. 1195, 2179, 2188).

Like its competitors, the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe, respondent was expected to pay its taxes on its war-swollen profits. This tax liability, which it was bound by the plan to pay and for which it had made cash provision, it discharged—not with the cash which it had set aside, and which it still had available for the purpose and which it yet has, but by the subsequent appropriation and use of petitioner's tax credits, which the Treasury accepted in August 1947.

Petitioner's rights are based on principles of law which became operative by reason of that subsequent appropriation and use.

Here the plan of reorganization had been prepared, approved and affirmed by this Court before the notion of saving taxes by use of petitioner's loss was even conceived. Even after its subsequent conception in 1943, it remained a "mere speculation of a possibility" until respondent first decided, in January 1944, to make use of the loss. In the meanwhile the plan was approved by the creditors and confirmed by the bankruptcy court, and thus had already become effective to fix the rights and legitimate expectations of respondent, its creditors and security holders.

The plan did not contemplate that the reorganized respondent would emerge from bankruptcy with any surplus at all. But it emerged with an unappropriated earned surplus of nearly $30 million.[21] The capital structure fixed by the plan was devised by the Interstate Commerce Commission so that the reorganized Company would be able to pay a dividend of $3.00 per share per annum out of the income it could reasonably expect to earn. But in 1943 the company earned $27.99 per share of common stock, after setting aside the $7,100,000 tax reserve, or $50.24 before setting aside the reserve, and in 1942 it earned $20.28 per share (R. 2179 at 2189, 2190, par. 11f and 12).

During the trusteeship $30 millions of operating revenues were used for additions and betterments, and another $6 millions of operating revenues were used to replace old equipment (p. 35, supra). After all this, the remaining income from the effective date of this plan until December 31, 1943 was sufficient to meet all bond interest and to make all payments into the capital fund and sinking fund required by the plan, and still leave $20,658,938 (R. 1196).

Enjoying all the benefits of the drastic features of the plan, respondent, its new stockholders, and those investing in its securities, as well as the court, all expected it to pay its taxes. The statements issued by respondent to the public disclosed the contingent tax liability and the existence of $10,100,000 of reserves in government bonds set aside to meet it. No one supposed—no one would have had a right to suppose—that respondent would escape this liability by appropriating what belonged to another.

A judgment for petitioner will take from respondent nothing that it would have had if it had filed separate income tax returns and paid its taxes in cash. On the other hand, if respondent has judgment, its new owners will not only have taken ownership from petitioner (as the plan contemplated), thereby inflicting a $75 million loss, but they will also have taken from petitioner, now an economic stranger already impoverished for respondent's benefit, tax credits resulting from that loss to enrich their position by an additional $17 million, something never contemplated by the plan.

The trial court argued that petitioner is seeking to share in respondent's earnings and that this Court's affirmance of the reorganization plan denied it that right by divesting it of stock ownership (R. 273).

But suppose that respondent had discharged its tax liabilities with cash taken from petitioner. Or suppose that the rolling stock used by respondent had been owned by petitioner and leased to respondent, and respondent then seized it outright. A plan of reorganization holding, as this plan did, that petitioner's stock ownership was worthless would cut off its right as a stockholder, but it would not transfer to respondent the rolling stock, and it could not if it would (Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132). If, then, respondent took the rolling stock, would it be exonerated from duty to pay for it? It could be said, no doubt, that if respondent repaid the cash taken or paid for the rolling stock, it would do so out of its "earnings." But the statement would be a mere play on words.

The judicial divestiture of petitioner's ownership of respondent does not render the latter immune from the duty, otherwise existing, to account for the value of other rights of petitioner which it seized after the consummation of the plan of reorganization—rights which were not in existence until after the plan was consummated—to the further enrichment of respondent and its new owners.

II.

Petitioner Is Entitled to Recover Under Principles of Unjust Enrichment

Fundamentally, petitioner is entitled to recover on the principles of unjust enrichment. It is in the law of quasi-contract that law and equity continue to maintain that capacity to do justice in new situations for which the Anglo-American system of jurisprudence is deservedly famous.[22]

As stated of this case in 65 Harvard Law Review at 1257, "If, as has been suggested, the Court should not have found that [petitioner] had a duty to file consolidated returns, then principles of restitution for unjust enrichment should have governed the decision."

[22] 1 Williston on Contracts (Rev. ed.), p. 9, states:

> "* * * quasi-contractual obligations are imposed by the law for the purpose of bringing about justice without reference to the intention of the parties * * *."

and

> "As the law may impose any obligations that justice requires, the only limit in the last analysis to the category of quasi contracts is that the obligation in question more closely resembles those created by contract than those created by tort."

And cf. Humboldt Sav. Bank v. McCleverty, 161 Cal. 285, 292, 119 Pac. 82: "It has always been the pride of courts of equity that they will so mould and adjust their decrees as to award substantial justice according to the requirements of the varying complications that may be presented to them for adjudication." And cf. Addison v. Holly Hill Co., 322 U.S. 607 at 620.

A. THE BASIC PRINCIPLE.

The applicable principle is set forth in the Restatement of Restitution, Section 1:

> "A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other."

The meaning of this rule is amplified by the Comment that follows:

> "a. A person is enriched if he has received a benefit (see Comment b). A person is unjustly enriched if the retention of the benefit would be unjust (see Comment c). A person obtains restitution when he is restored to the position he formerly occupied either by the return of something which he formerly had or by the receipt of its equivalent in money. Ordinarily, the measure of restitution is the amount of enrichment received (see Comment d), but as stated in Comment e, if the loss suffered differs from the amount of benefit received, the measure of restitution may be more or less than the loss suffered or more or less than the enrichment."

Comment b states:

> "What constitutes a benefit. A person confers a benefit upon another if he * * * in any way adds to the other's security or advantage. He confers a benefit not only where he adds to the property of another, but also where he saves the other from expense or loss. The word 'benefit,' therefore, denotes any form of advantage. The advantage for which a person ordinarily must pay is pecuniary advantage * * *."

It is self-evident that respondent has been enriched. The discharge of its tax liability, by the use of petitioner's loss and credits, was the conferring of a benefit upon respondent and its enrichment, just as much as if it had taken dollars from the petitioner and with those dollars discharged its tax liability.

B. THE SHREVEPORT BANK CASES:—THE DUTY OF RESTITUTION APPLIES WHERE THE ENRICHMENT CONSISTS OF TAX SAVINGS.

The duty to make restitution applies just as much where the enrichment consists of tax savings as where it consists of some other kind of benefit. As said in 65 Harvard Law Review 1257, "a tax saving may constitute enrichment."

In Connolly v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 189 F.2d 608 (5 Cir.), Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Connolly, 176 F.2d 1004 (5 Cir.), and Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231, 145 F.2d 491 (5 Cir.), cer. den. 323 U.S. 796, one corporation was ordered to account to another for tax savings resulting from the use of the latter's tax credits. Numerous other issues were involved in the suit, but on the issue that is relevant here the facts are as follows:

The Commercial National Bank of Shreveport [the old bank], being in financial straits, transferred its assets to a new bank, Commercial National Bank in Shreveport [the new bank], and the latter assumed its liabilities. Later a receiver for the old bank was appointed and, still later, sued the new bank for an accounting.

The State of Louisiana, in which the banks were located, imposes a tax on the capital stock of national banks, assessable against the bank. In determining the assessable value of the stock, the Louisiana law provides that the assessed value of real estate owned by the bank is deductible from what would otherwise be the value of the stock.

Over a period of 5 years the new bank, in determining the tax value of its capital stock, deducted the value of the real estate of the old bank, which had been transferred to the new bank and stood in its name, as its own property. As a result it paid in taxes $192,000 less than otherwise would have been exacted.

In Leslie v. Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927, the District Court found that the property had been transferred by the old bank to the new in pledge and therefore still belonged to the old bank. On this factual basis it held that the new bank must account to the old bank for this tax savings, even though the old bank had suffered no detriment.

The Fifth Circuit agreed with the District Judge on this phase of the case. Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231, cer. den. 323 U.S. 796. The court said:

> "* * * appellant had no right to deduct from the assessed value of its own capital stock the value of such real estate as was shown on its published statements, because it was not the owner thereof within the meaning of the statute authorizing such deductions. The credit thus obtained by the new bank was a profit derived from the trust property as effectively as if it had been paid that much in cash."

On remand the new bank sought leave to deny that the assets had been transferred in pledge and to assert that they had been transferred outright. The trial court adhered to its decision relative to the tax savings. Connolly v. Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport, 72 F. Supp. 961, 963. On a second appeal, the Court of Appeals, in banc, held that most of the assets had been transferred outright to the new bank, but that some of the assets had not, and that the new bank must account to the old for tax savings resulting from the use of the latter. Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Connolly, 176 F.2d 1004. On the first appeal there had been one dissent as to the duty to account for the tax savings. On the second appeal the court's opinion was written by the judge who had dissented on the first appeal. Thus the whole court finally concurred that there was a duty to account for tax savings to the party whose rights were used to achieve that saving.

On a third appeal, the Fifth Circuit in banc held that the New Bank must account to the Old Bank for all the tax savings, Connolly v. Commercial National Bank in Shreveport, 189 F.2d 608.

C. THE RETENTION OF THE BENEFITS RECEIVED BY RESPONDENT WOULD BE UNJUST FOR TWO MAJOR REASONS.

Respondent has been enriched. If the enrichment was unjust, petitioner is entitled to recover. The enrichment was unjust for two independent major reasons: (1) such retention would be a perversion of the tax laws, and (2) respondent occupied a fiduciary relation to petitioner and violated it in appropriating petitioner's loss to its own use.

We proceed to discuss each of these reasons.

III.

First Major Reason Why Retention of the Enrichment Received by Respondent Would Be Unjust: Such Retention Is Inconsistent with the Rationale of Consolidated Returns and the Purpose of Congress in Allowing Them.

The principle underlying consolidated returns — their rationale — is summarized in II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-1947 issue, at page 633, where legislative reports and similar material are quoted.[23] The principle is this: A group of affiliated corporations is an economic entity and, unless the group as a whole in the conduct of the business enterprise shows net profits, those who conduct the business—the owners of the parent—have realized no gain, despite the legal fiction of separate corporations. As said in Handy & Harman v. Burnet, 284 U.S. 136, 140, the purpose is > "to require taxes to be levied according to the true net income and invested capital resulting from and employed in a single business enterprise, even though it was conducted by means of more than one corporation."

The rationale of consolidated returns "is the recognition of this common owner's right to set off against his gains in the one [corporation] his losses in the other [corporation]." Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 44 F. 2d 543 at 545 (4 Cir.), cer. den. 282 U.S. 903, containing an excellent statement of the history and purpose of consolidated returns and the concept of the economic unity. So also Alameda Inv. Co. v. McLaughlin, 28 F.2d 81 (D.C. N.D. Cal.) aff'd 33 F.2d 120 (9 Cir.).

---

[23]Consolidated returns were first required, but only for excess profits tax, by Treasury Regulation in 1917. This was validated by the 1921 Act. Consolidated returns were compulsory for both normal and excess profits taxes between 1918 and 1921, inclusive. They were permissive but not mandatory for 1922-1933, inclusive. They were not permitted, except in case of certain railroad corporations, from 1934-1939, inclusive. They were permissive for all corporations with respect to excess profits taxes in 1940 and 1941. In 1942 the Revenue Act, Section 141(a), extended the privilege to all corporations for all years after December 31, 1941, with respect to both normal taxes and excess profits taxes. (For the foregoing history see II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-1947 issue, at p. 632.)

In Appendix Two to this brief we quote some of the legislative history on the subject.

When the law recognizes the group of affiliated corporations as an economic entity and permits the off-setting of the profits of one affiliate against the losses of another, it does so for the purpose and with the effect of benefiting the ultimate owners of the business entity, who are, of course, the stockholders of the parent corporation. The means which the law adopts to benefit these ultimate owners is the amelioration of the loss suffered by the ultimate owners because of losses of any one affiliate; this amelioration is accomplished by permitting the losses to reduce or eliminate, for tax purposes, the profits of other affiliates.

In the present case there are two significant facts: (1) the economic unity between the parent and the subsidiary was severed before the tax saving was claimed or achieved, (2) the saving resulted from the use of the loss which resulted from the severance of that unity. In such a case, if the tax saving is permitted to be retained by the former subsidiary after severance of the economic unity, without making restitution to the parent, particularly where the loss was that of the parent directly, both of the underlying principles of the consolidated return provisions of the income tax law have been defeated: (1) The stockholders of the parent corporation will not obtain the benefit resulting from filing a consolidated return, and (2) in addition, the loss which they suffered—and here suffered directly—will not have been ameliorated.

On the contrary, new owners of the former subsidiary will reap a profit—a sheer windfall—from the misfortune of the old owners. The income tax laws will have been used to enrich complete strangers to the economic entity for whose protection consolidated returns are permitted. The fact that the retention of the enrichment would defeat the policy of the statute shows the enrichment to have been unjust.

In Woolford Realty Co. v. Rose, 286 U.S. 319, this Court (Cardozo, J.) held that the use of consolidated returns did not permit a corporation to deduct from its profits the loss of an affiliate sustained in a year prior to that in which the affiliation began. "The mind rebels against the notion," it said, "that Congress in permitting a consolidated return" was willing to permit a corporation to profit by the loss of one who was a stranger when the loss was sustained.

In the present case we have the converse situation, for here the tax savings were claimed after the economic unity was destroyed, and laws and regulations had come into effect subsequent to Woolford which permitted the tax saving in this case. But it is just as shocking to one's sense of justice to permit respondent to appropriate for its own benefit losses with which it had nothing to do, as it was in the Woolford case to contemplate the appropriation by one affiliate of the losses suffered by another in years prior to the affiliation.

If the economic unity had not been severed, the benefits would still inure to petitioner though retained by respondent. But "the mind rebels against the notion" that after the economic unity has been terminated, respondent may appropriate petitioner's tax credit resulting from petitioner's losses without making restitution. In the language of the Woolford case, "to such an attempt the reaction of an impartial mind is little short of instinctive." This "instinctive reaction" of which the Court speaks is the equivalent of the conscience of the chancellor, the "good conscience" with which the law of quasi-contract and unjust enrichment is concerned, and which determines whether an enrichment is just or unjust. The party whose loss made the tax saving possible should receive it as a partial amelioration of its loss, rather than another who was not in good conscience entitled to any tax saving whatever.

In his dissenting opinion below Judge Fee summarized the matter thus (R. 2248):

> "If we look at it realistically, but little question arises. If the plaintiff were still the owner of the stock of defendant, then the allocation of $17,000,000 to the defendant would be reflected in the increased value of its stock. The transfer of the stock left the right untouched. Since increase in value of stock in defendant no longer is of avail to plaintiff, there should be another method of applying the remission to the loss."

In Helvering v. Morgan's, Inc., 293 U.S. 121, 127, the Court said that "After affiliation, as before, the affiliated corporations, although filing consolidated returns, continued to be separate taxable units. The consolidated returns operated only to unite them for the purpose of tax computation and the equitable apportionment between them of the tax thus computed."

Equitable apportionment of the tax involves equitable apportionment of the savings, and what is equitable must be decided in the light of the fact which distinguishes our present case from all others, namely, that the corporations are in fact separate entities, not merely legally, as the Morgan's case indicates is true of all affiliates filing consolidated returns, but also economically and factually.

The Report of the Senate Finance Committee on the Revenue Bill of 1928, 70th Congress, 1st session, Senate Report 960, which we quote in part in Appendix Two to this brief, also stated that "Much of the misapprehension about consolidated returns will be removed when it is realized that * * * no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results." Similarly, in the Report of the Senate Finance Committee on the Revenue Bill of 1932, 72nd Congress, 1st session, Senate Report 665, at page 9, it was said concerning consolidated returns, "No improper benefits are obtained from the privilege."

After quoting these passages, the Board of Tax Appeals in J. D. & A. B. Spreckels Co., 41 B.T.A. 370, 374, 375, answered in the negative the question "whether or not the framers of the statute intended that the privilege of making consolidated returns may be enjoyed in cases where the affiliation does not serve a business purpose, as distinguished from a tax-reducing purpose."

No purpose other than a tax-reducing purpose could have been served in the present case except by applying the tax savings to ameliorate petitioner's loss. Otherwise, an "ultimate advantage under the tax laws" has resulted and "improper benefits are obtained from the privilege": respondent has escaped its taxes because an economic stranger had a huge loss. The District Court was understandably indignant at this result. "If I had the power," it asserted, "I would order these taxes paid to the United States. That would effectively dispose of the cause." (R. 270.)

Yet it left the funds with respondent, the unjustly enriched party responsible for what was done. And the majority opinion below, while disapproving the trial court's reasoning, permits its result to stand.

The consequence is that the revenue laws have been perverted and made absurd, a result wholly inadmissible under rules of statutory interpretation often stated in this Court's decisions, many of which are collected by Judge Learned Hand in Cabell v. Markham, 148 F.2d 737 (2 Cir.). A congressional purpose as to who should have the tax savings, apparent from its enactments, should be given effect. Cf. United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 235; Van Beeck v. Sabine Towing Co., 300 U.S. 342, 351.

THE LAW AND REGULATIONS CONCERNING JOINDER IN CONSOLIDATED RETURNS BY ONE IN RECEIVERSHIP OR BANKRUPTCY.

Section 52 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that when a trustee in bankruptcy is operating the business of a corporation, he shall make the income tax returns for it in the same manner and form as corporations are required to do, and the tax due on the basis of the returns shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporation.

Treasury Regulation 104, Sec. 23.15, subd. (b), provided that if one or more, but not all, of the members of an affiliated group are in bankruptcy, the tax liability of each such member for the period covered by a consolidated return shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability as the affiliates may agree upon, or, in the absence of such an agreement, an amount equal to its liability "computed as if a separate return had been filed."

In the fall of 1942, while the Ecker case was on this Court's docket, Section 23(g)(4) was added to the Internal Revenue Code to permit the loss of a parent corporation resulting from worthlessness of stock of a subsidiary to be used as an operating loss. But for this amendment petitioner's loss could not have been used to offset respondent's income.

Bankruptcy of a subsidiary usually makes the stock interest of the parent valueless and deprives the parent of control over it. However, under the foregoing provisions, any stock loss of the parent resulting from the bankruptcy can be offset against the income of the subsidiary, the subsidiary being permitted to pay a tax computed "as if a separate return had been filed," thus giving the tax benefit of the parent's loss to the parent.

The several provisions of the law and regulations thus show a legislative intention that a parent whose subsidiary goes into bankruptcy, with resulting loss of the value of the parent's stock, should have the benefit of any tax saving resulting through the filing of consolidated returns and the offsetting of the subsidiary's income by the parent's loss.

Respondent's tax counsel, Polk, testified that this case could not have happened but for the addition to the Internal Revenue Code in 1942 of Section 23(g)(4), and explained its purpose thus (R. 1447):

> "* * * there was a very unfair situation in consolidated return accounting up to that point that section 23(g)(4) was designed to correct. You see, under consolidated returns inter-company transactions are eliminated, and where a parent corporation puts out its cash for a subsidiary company and then the subsidiary company becomes worthless, if you eliminate the worthlessness as an inter-company transaction, there has been, in the usual case, a deprivation of capital, a loss of capital, and no reflection for tax purposes, and that was corrected by the insertion into the Internal Revenue Code of Section 23(g)(4)."

The "unfair situation" of which Polk spoke was that the parent had lost capital but derived no tax benefit from it. The purpose of the 1942 amendment was to correct this unfairness. But to permit the subsidiary to profit, instead of having the tax saving applied to ameliorate the parent's loss, would utterly fail to achieve that purpose.

S.E.C. DECISIONS.

In point is a ruling of the Securities and Exchange Commission, entitled "In the Matter of Consolidated Electric and Gas Company," 15 S.E.C. 161 (1943). That case arose under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.[24] Section 12 prohibits certain intercorporate transactions between parents and subsidiaries, and the Act requires notice of intended transactions to be filed with the Commission to give it an opportunity to pass upon them. S.E.C. Regulation U-45 prohibits certain donations between parents and subsidiaries with exceptions in the case of consolidated tax returns.

In the particular case Consolidated Electric and Gas Company filed a notice with the Commission that it and its various subsidiaries had entered into a contract whereby it was to be primarily responsible for the payment of the taxes resulting from consolidated returns and each of the subsidiaries should pay as its share an amount representing that percentage of the total consolidated taxes of the group which the tax of the particular company, computed on a separate basis, would bear to the total amount of taxes of all the parties, computed on a separate basis.

[24]Since that Act regulates gas and electric holding companies and does not apply to a railroad corporation, the Act itself is not pertinent, but the problem arising under it and presented to the S.E.C. involved principles applicable here.

A consolidated return was to be filed for 1943, and a tax saving of $2,156,804 would result from the fact that the parent had or would suffer a loss in disposing of its investment in approximately nine subsidiaries. This loss was, for tax purposes, in every respect identical with the loss sustained by petitioner here from the worthlessness of its stock in respondent.

Consolidated Electric desired approval of its determination to alter the agreement so as to permit the remaining subsidiaries to make direct payment to it of amounts equal to those that they would save under the consolidated return by virtue of the capital loss incurred by the parent company.

The Commission approved this proposal, thereby holding that it was equitable that the affiliate securing the benefit of the tax saving resulting from the parent's loss should pay the amount of such saving to the parent which had suffered the loss. The Commission said that

> "To the extent that tax savings may accrue to the parent in connection with such sales, the result is in effect to reduce the amount of loss accruing to Consolidated by virtue of the transaction" (p. 163) and expressed its conclusion as follows:

> "Under all the circumstances, we believe that it is more realistic to view the tax savings as, in effect, partial offsets to the capital losses otherwise suffered by Consolidated in connection with the sales." (p. 164)

In the Consolidated case the affiliation continued. Consequently, as the Commission remarked, the savings eventually would have inured to the parent anyway by virtue of dividend payments, or, if the parent should dispose of its stockholdings in the subsidiaries, by increasing the value of the stock. The injustice of not having the tax savings transferred immediately to the parent would therefore not have been great. Nevertheless the Commission felt that a direct transfer was appropriate. As shown in 13 S.E.C. at 653, "the announced program of Consolidated is one for the liquidation of the Consolidated system." Thus the economic unity was to be severed, and therefore the S.E.C. recognized the equity that the tax savings resulting from the use of the parent's loss go to it at once. A fortiori, in the present case, where the economic unity has been split so that the tax savings cannot inure to the parent by virtue of dividends, the justice of requiring respondent to transfer the tax saving to petitioner to ameliorate its loss, by virtue of which alone the savings was possible, is apparent.

In another matter before the S.E.C. involving the same parent, In the Matter of Consolidated Electric and Gas Company, 13 S.E.C. 649, the loss was that of Islands, one of the subsidiaries, instead of the parent. By means of consolidated returns the parent and affiliates other than Islands saved nearly $1,500,000 in taxes by reason of Islands' loss.

The S.E.C. approved an application of the parent to pay to Islands an amount equal to the tax savings of the parent and other affiliates, since (13 S.E.C. at 658)

> "The tax savings * * * has its origin in a loss sustained by Islands and it seems eminently equitable that the cash be applied, as proposed, to the satisfaction of the Series A bonds of Islands, the holders of which have legal recourse against Islands alone."[25]

[25]Respondent has sought to distinguish this case on the ground that Islands by joining in the consolidated returns would be subject to a future tax and that the arrangement was merely to put it in

Two principles are apparent from these cases: (1) the tax saving should go to the ultimate owner of the economic entity, the parent, and (2) it should go to the party suffering the loss, to ameliorate it. So long as the economic unity continues, these two principles coincide, for no matter which affiliate sustains the loss in the first instance, the parent also sustains it—at once if it is the affiliate, or ultimately if the loss was that of a subsidiary. Thus, in the Islands case the parent allocated the tax benefits, resulting from a loss, in a manner best serving its own interests, for by using the tax savings to pay off the subsidiary's bonded debt the parent increased the value of its own equity.

In the present case, too, both equities coincide, the equity that the tax saving should go to the parent and the equity that it should go to the party sustaining the loss, to ameliorate it. Both equities sustain petitioner's right to recover. And both demonstrate that it would be inequitable for the tax savings to go to one that was neither the parent nor the sufferer of the loss.[26] the same position as if it had filed a separate return. But this is not the fact, for the S.E.C. found that the amount of the future tax would "be considerably less than the tax savings to be presently effected" (13 S.E.C. at 653). The proposal was that the whole of the tax saving should be paid to Islands, and it was this proposal that the S.E.C. approved (13 S.E.C. at 652).

[26]Respondent's briefs below quoted from an S.E.C. release discussing accounting practice, wherein it is said that no part of tax savings is "ordinarily" paid to the loss company. The text of the release shows that the S.E.C. was not directing its remarks to a case, such as this, where the loss is that of the parent itself. Ordinarily losses are those of subsidiaries, since the parent, not being an operating company, can sustain losses only in the unusual case of worthlessness of its security holdings. The S.E.C. was referring to the normal situation of a continuing economic unity, and the alternatives noted were (a) allocation of all the savings to the affiliate having the loss or (b) sharing it. There was no mention whatever of the third course that respondent espouses—that of

PETITIONER'S RIGHT TO RECOVER IS SUPPORTED BY EQUITABLE RULES OF CONTRIBUTION.

Situations often arise where, as respects a third party to whom a duty is owed, two persons are both liable; yet, as between themselves, the burden should be discharged in whole or in part by one of them only, either because of agreement between them or apart from agreement. If one of the parties discharges the obligation, he is entitled to restitution from the other who should have done so. Restatement of Restitution, Section 81, Comment thereunder, and the sections following, as well as the "Introductory Note" under Topic 3 at pages 327, et seq.

As stated on page 328 of the Restatement, even if the parties do not have in mind the necessity of such restitution, or do not think of it in detail, a duty will be imposed.

These principles apply to tax situations, including those involved in consolidated returns.

Bankers Trust Co. v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., 92 F.2d 450 (5 Cir.) illustrates that application. That case involved a consolidated return in which the net income of one of the affiliates, "A", was overstated, resulting in an excess tax chargeable to it of $195,000, and the income of another affiliate, "B", was understated. The tax deficiency resulting from the understatement amounted to $99,000. Offsetting the two, there was a net refund of $96,000 resulting from the overstatement.

retention of all the savings by the affiliate whose taxes are reduced by use of the parent's loss.

The significant lesson to be drawn from the S.E.C. is that when an affiliate's tax savings resulting from the use of another affiliate's loss cannot or may not reach the party suffering the loss through ordinary channels, as by way of dividends or increase of its equity, the benefit of the tax savings should be passed to the party who suffered the loss.

One of the questions in the case was whether A was entitled to recover $99,000 from B.[27] A had overpaid that amount in addition to the $96,000 and would have been entitled to its refund from the tax authorities except for the fact that it was applied to pay the additional tax due from B. In short, A's credit paid B's tax, as a result of the consolidated reporting.

It was held that the affiliate whose income had been overstated was entitled to reimbursement in the amount of $99,000 from the receiver of the affiliate whose income had been understated.

So, in the present case, respondent's tax liability was discharged, not by its paying anything, but by use of a tax credit belonging to the petitioner.

The two affiliates in the Florida East Coast case were subsidiaries of a common parent. The one that had received the benefit of the other's tax credits was in the hands of receivers. Were it not for the intervention of the receivership, it would have been a matter of no practical concern whether or not the affiliate receiving the benefit of the other's credits accounted to it, because in either event the common parent would be the ultimate economic beneficiary. It would be irrelevant whether the gain reached the parent through its ownership of the one corporation or of the other, and the ultimate disposition of the benefit would lie in the parent's hands. But the insolvency of the first affiliate, resulting in the receivership, meant that the rights of that [27] Another question was to whom the refund of $96,000 should go. This presented no problem. The refund went to A, not because A had paid the money but because the refund was due to A's own tax credits; that is, on a separate return basis the $96,000 would never have had to be paid by A.

affiliate's creditors intervened between it and its parent; there was a severance of the economic unity. If the tax benefits were allowed to remain in the hands of the receivers, they would never reach the parent. It thus became important that the incidence of gains and benefits should be placed where it properly belonged. And it was so placed in the Florida East Coast case by the judgment rendered.

In the Florida East Coast case the severance occurred because of the intervention of the rights of creditors. Here the severance occurred as the result of adjudication in 1943 that petitioner was not entitled to an equity in the reorganized defendant. The principle is the same in both cases.

If a tax liability is justly that of one party, either in whole or in part, and another discharges it, the latter is entitled to recover from the former. Phillips-Jones Corp. v. Parmley, 302 U.S. 233; Wolters v. Henningsan, 114 Cal. 433, 46 Pac. 277.

In tax cases a right to contribution from other members of an affiliated group may arise from overpayment of one's share. Koppers Co., 11 T.C. 894; Koppers Co., 8 T.C. 886, 891. Although all members of an affiliated group may be severally liable to the government for the whole tax, "as between themselves, each affiliate [is] mutually obligated under principles of general law to pay only its fair share of the common burden." Koppers Co., 8 T.C. at 891.

In the present case, petitioner had no income and its fair share of the tax burden was nothing whatever. Since respondent's tax liability was fully discharged by the use of petitioner's tax credits, petitioner has a right to restitution for the benefit received.

SEVERANCE OF THE ECONOMIC UNITY MAY NOT BE IGNORED.

Respondent has argued that "economic unity" in matters of consolidated returns is a false factor, because a subsidiary may have bonds or non-voting preferred stock outstanding. This flies in the face of the principle upon which consolidated returns are based, namely, that a single business enterprise, though conducted by separate corporations, shall be taxed as a unit. For consolidated returns to be available, the parent must own not only 95% of the voting stock but 95% of all non-voting stock other than preferred stock limited as to dividends (I.R.C., Sec. 141(d)). In short, the parent must own what for practical purposes is the entire equity.

Holdings by others of interests which do not share fully in the equity do not affect the economic unity. If, as respondent argued, tax savings go to pay bondholders or preferred stockholders, then payment of these overriding obligations pro tanto lifts the load depressing the equity and correspondingly increases its value to the benefit of the parent. The economic unity continuing, precise mathematical admeasurement of the benefit to the parent is of no consequence. As said in Estate of John B. Lewis, 10 T.C. 1080, 1086 (1948):

> "To say that a corporation, as such, can have motives and purposes apart from its stockholders, the collective group of individuals who own it, is to indulge in metaphysical reasoning * * * And to say that what is advantageous to the stockholders * * * is of no advantage to the corporation is utterly unrealistic."

On the other hand, if the overriding load is so great that in fact there is no equity, e.g., if the subsidiary is insolvent, the economic unity has in effect been severed. Such, for example, was the situation presented in Bankers Trust Company v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., 92 F.2d 450.

IV.

Second Major Reason Why Retention of the Enrichment Received by Respondent Would Be Unjust: Respondent, Occupying a Fiduciary Position to Petitioner, Appropriated Petitioner's Rights to Its Own Use.

March 15, 1943 is a critical date in fixing the relative rights, duties and obligations of the parties. Before then petitioner as the owner of all of respondent's stock and as the hopeful suppliant for the continuance of that ownership after reorganization received the advantage of any benefit that accrued to respondent. After this Court's decision affirming the denial of petitioner's claim to share in the equity of the reorganized company, everyone having to do with petitioner's affairs was under the highest obligation to see that such rights as were left to it and the rights of its stockholders were not dissipated, lost, violated or neglected. From that date those persons who, with propriety, had theretofore acted in dual capacities or as joint officers of petitioner and respondent were now under the highest obligation to see that no act and no inaction of theirs should prejudice the rights of either company against the other.

In view of petitioner's misfortune and its stricken condition, it was the high fiduciary duty of its agents to be diligent to protect its rights, to utilize every opportunity that might retrieve something for its stockholders from the debacle, above all not to permit the use of its rights, including its stock loss, for the benefit of another, without accounting.

Respondent could have openly approached and fully disclosed to petitioner the view of respondent's tax counsel that petitioner's loss could be used in consolidated returns to discharge respondent's taxes; it could then have requested petitioner's cooperation and consent to the filing of consolidated returns and use of the loss. Had this disclosure and request been made, petitioner could have obtained independent officers and counsel and the parties could then have arrived at an equitable agreement apportioning the tax saving. Such an agreement would have been an easy, simple and honorable way to settle the question.

But this was not done. No such agreement was made, simply and bluntly because respondent took over and managed the entire tax matter for its own benefit by controlling and directing petitioner's officers and agents.[28]

As 65 Harvard Law Review 1257 says of this case:

> "[Respondent's] enrichment may have been unjust if, having caused [petitioner] to file the consolidated returns, it deprived [petitioner] of the opportunity to bargain for the value of its corporate assets: the right to use its stock loss for tax purposes."

A. PETITIONER NEITHER MADE NOR COULD MAKE A GIFT TO RESPONDENT.

Professor Scott says of quasi-contractual liability:

> "In general one is entitled to recover for benefit conferred unless he intended to make a gift or acted officiously." (2 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 269.3, p. 1520)

---

[28] The duality of position of petitioner's representatives—the fact that they were in the employ and pay of respondent—would have made an agreement between the parties impossible unless and until independent representation was obtained. No such agreement would be binding, and petitioner would still have the right to an unfettered determination of its right by the courts. See authorities on duality, discussed at pp. 89-92, infra. But respondent did not even seek an agreement. It simply appropriated petitioner's rights.

How much more so is this true where one does not voluntarily confer the benefit but where it is seized. Petitioner here made no gift of its loss to respondent. The latter simply took it. Even if petitioner's directors had realized what was being done and even if they had had a donative intent, no gift could occur.

In the first place, the duality of position of petitioner's representatives would preclude any claim of an effective corporate intent to make a gift (see authorities on duality at pp. 89-92, infra).

In the second place, petitioner's directors had no power to grant a gratuity, for stockholders' rights cannot be given away. Brayton v. Welch, 39 F. Supp. 537; Greene County Nat. Farm Loan Assn. v. Federal Land Bank, etc., 57 F. Supp. 783. Here the real parties in interest are petitioner's stockholders.[29]

As the dissenting opinion of Judge Fee pointed out (R. 2244):

> "* * * It seems to be assumed that the officers of plaintiff could give away the property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns either voluntarily or acting under the control of defendant or the reorganization trustees. This is strange doctrine. * * * a transfer of all the assets of a corporation * * * cannot be made even by a majority of the stock. Neither officers nor directors, without a vote of the majority, have such power. In this case it is of stellar importance that this right of plaintiff was its sole asset and that, upon appropriation thereof, it became insolvent."

[29]Petitioner's loss being essentially its sole asset, the directors could not even have sold it without the approval of the stockholders. See authorities cited in Judge Fee's opinion (R. 2252, fn. 12, 13, 14, 15).

B. RESPONDENT AND ITS ATTORNEYS WERE FIDUCIARIES TO PETITIONER IN THE CONDUCT OF THE TAX MATTERS.

Where one corporation has been given or takes control over the property or affairs of another, and exercises it in a manner to obtain benefits for itself, it becomes accountable for those benefits, because control by the one over the property or affairs of the other creates a fiduciary duty not to use the control for the fiduciary's profit.

In the Shreveport Bank cases that rule was applied where the benefits were tax savings (see p. 58, supra).

Note the mechanics whereby respondent appropriated for its own benefit the tax credits resulting from petitioner's loss:

The operative documents which produced this result were (a) the consolidated tax returns for 1943 and for the first four months of 1944, (b) the claim for refund of the 1942 taxes, and (c) the power of attorney from petitioner to Polk. It was respondent, through its tax counsel, which prepared these documents. With them in hand, it was enabled to eliminate its tax liability and did so. It filed the documents and settled the tax controversy with the government, all in petitioner's name. All of these documents were signed by Curry as petitioner's president. At the time he signed them he was vice president, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer of respondent with his headquarters in its office (until May 1, 1945, when his headquarters were moved to the office of its counsel). He was receiving his sole compensation from respondent and, in the signature of these documents, he was following the directions of Polk, who was its tax counsel and who, although he later solicited and secured a power of attorney from petitioner, testified that he considered he owed his responsibility to respondent and not to petitioner.

The decision to use petitioner's loss by way of offset to respondent's income was made by respondent through its president, Elsey. That decision was carried into effect by respondent's attorney, Polk, whose directions to execute the documents were obeyed by Curry. Curry was completely subject to the control of respondent and its attorney, Polk, and Curry and Polk considered themselves to be, and they in fact were, the employees of respondent. What they did with respect to the tax returns was in law the act of respondent. Insofar as tax matters were concerned, respondent was in complete control of petitioner.

Respondent was a fiduciary because at its own instance it voluntarily took over the conduct of petitioner's tax affairs and assumed to deal with petitioner's property and rights in a manner designed to benefit itself.

It was a fiduciary because petitioner's officers, whom respondent used to appropriate the petitioner's loss, were respondent's employees and the employees of its tax counsel, and paid by it and them.

It was a fiduciary because it assumed to act as petitioner's agent. While so acting, and by use of its principal's rights, and by taking advantage of its relationship to petitioner, it received the tax benefit.

In Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. (U.S.) 70, 84, this Court notes the fiduciary character of one who manages a business for another "without consulting him in any way, and with little regard for his * * * interest * * *."

As said by Judge Cardozo in Meinhard v. Salmon, 164 N.E. 545, 548, 249 N.Y. 458,

> "Salmon had put himself in a position in which thought of self was to be renounced, however hard the abnegation. He was much more than a co-adventurer. He was a managing co-adventurer. * * * For him and for those like him the rule of undivided loyalty is relentless and supreme."

As this passage shows, it is enough to create the fiduciary relation that one voluntarily places himself in control of another's affairs.[30] Southern Pacific Co. v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483, 492.

In Overfield v. Pennroad Corporation, 42 F. Supp. 586, 48 F. Supp. 1008, a judgment of $22,104,515 was entered in a stockholder's suit in favor of the Pennroad Corporation against the Pennsylvania Railroad and its directors, the liability of the defendants being "based upon their dealings with Pennroad's property and powers in a manner designed to benefit Pennsylvania Railroad." (42 F. Supp. 610)[31]

One becomes another's fiduciary where he assumes to and does take over and manage another's affairs. The law of quasi-contract had its very origin in that situation. Its principles are derived from the Roman law, and one of the principal classes of quasi-contract was where one took over "the management of the affairs of another" or took over

[30] 3 Bogert on Trusts (part 1) p. 80, quoting, states that "A party may voluntarily assume a confidential relation towards another * * *."

[31] The Circuit Court of Appeals later held the claim barred by the statute of limitations but did not question the principles declared by the district court. The same issues were involved in an earlier stockholders' suit which was then revived and settled for $15 million. Perrine v. Pennroad Corp., 47 Atl.2d 479, 29 Del. Ch. 531.

the "management of common property." Bouvier's Law Dictionary (Rawle's Revision), Title "Quasi-Contractus." Sandars Edition of Justinian's Institutes (7th ed.) p. 385, Liber III, Tit. XXVII states:

> "if I take upon me the management of my neighbor's affairs * * * have things in common with others who are not my partners * * * the mere fact of my so conducting myself imposes on me certain duties which the law will force me to fulfill."

As said in Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Owens, 78 F.2d 768, 773 (10 Cir.):

> "The term fiduciary is derived from the civil law. * * * It connotes the idea of trust or confidence. * * * The relation arises whenever the property of one person is placed in charge of another. McKinley v. Lynch, 58 W. Va. 44, 51 S.E. 4, 9."

In the case cited (McKinley v. Lynch) the court quotes from several text writers thus:

> "It is difficult to define the term 'fiduciary relation'; but * * * such a relation arises wherever a trust, continuous or temporary, is specially reposed in the skill or integrity of another, or the property or pecuniary interest, in the whole or in part, or the bodily custody, of one person, is placed in the charge of another.' "

And again:

> " 'The principles which cover the cases of dealings of persons standing in a fiduciary relation apply * * * generally, to the case of persons who clothe themselves with the character which brings them within the range of principal.' "

A mortgagee or pledgee is not ordinarily a fiduciary to the mortgagor or pledgor, Restatement of Trusts, Sec. 9(c) and (b), pp. 30, 31; 1 Scott on Trusts, p. 70, but he is if he has control of the property. De Martin v. Phelan, 115 Cal. 538, 543, 47 Pac. 356. Such was the holding in the Shreveport Bank cases (see p. 58, supra).

The majority opinion in the Court of Appeals sweeps aside these settled principles by saying that "cases which deal with trustees, agents and partners are not controlling here as there is no contention that the subsidiary was a trustee, agent or partner" (R. 2221). This assertion ignores the fact that petitioner has contended throughout that respondent occupied a fiduciary relation to it, and was its agent and trustee.

Furthermore, "fiducial relationships * * * do not depend upon nomenclature," Oldland v. Gray, 179 F.2d 408, 414, cer. den. 339 U.S. 948. The term "fiduciary" is not confined to fixed classified relationships like trusts. It exists wherever confidence is reposed, particularly where there is a disparity of position. 3 Bogert on Trusts (part 1), pp. 82, 83. In the words of Judge Cardozo, "Equity refuses to confine within the bounds of classified transactions its precept of a loyalty that is undivided and unselfish." Meinhard v. Salmon, 164 N.E. 545, at 548. And see Bogert, p. 78.

A striking example is Reading v. The King [1948] 2 K.B. 268, affirmed in [1949] 2 K.B. 232 and in Reading v. The Attorney General, 1951 Appeal Cases 507 (reviewed in Harvard Law Review, January 1952, p. 502). Reading, a British army sergeant stationed in Cairo, would ride in uniform on trucks carrying contraband. His presence in uniform deterred the Egyptian police from investigating, and he was rewarded by large sums.

The court held that the Crown was entitled to the funds because the facilities provided by it in the shape of the uniform, and the use of the soldier's position in the army, were the reason why the payments were made to him.

It was further held that no fiduciary relationship was necessary to establish the Crown's rights, but, if one were necessary, it was present, for "the term 'fiduciary relation' in this connection is used in a * * * very comprehensive sense," and "in the wide sense in which the term is used in the relevant cases such a relation subsisted in this case as to the user of the uniform and the opportunities and facilities attached to it." ([1949] 2 K.B. at 236 and 238; [1951] Appeals Case 507, at 516)

A Corporation Which Dominates Its Affiliate Is a Fiduciary of It.

The relation between a parent and a subsidiary corporation is fiduciary, if one dominates and controls the other. The fiduciary relationship does not arise from the fact that one is a parent; it is created by the elements of dominance and the exercise of control and management. Southern Pacific Co. v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483, 492; North American Co. v. S.E.C., 327 U.S. 686, 693; 65 Harvard Law Review 1257.

Ordinarily, the parent is the fiduciary. But here respondent was petitioner's fiduciary, for it dominated and controlled petitioner's actions and directed them for its own benefit. This respondent was enabled to do because of the moribund condition of petitioner, its loss of control over respondent, resulting from the bankruptcy, respondent's reinvigorated condition, the switch of allegiance of the James Interests to respondent, and the fact that petitioner's officers and most of its directors were mere employees of respondent and received their livelihood from it.

As said in 65 Harvard Law Review 1257, regarding this suit, "It may be strongly argued, then, that in the unique situation where the usual relationship is reversed, the subsidiary controlling the parent, the fiduciary duty is also reversed." And in Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231 at 236, "The dominant officers of the new bank were the directors of the old, and they were doubly bound to treat the latter fairly."

More than once a parent corporation has invoked and received the protection of fiduciary standards against unfair treatment at the hands of a subsidiary; e.g., Potter v. Sanitary Co. of America, 194 Atl. 87, 22 Del. Ch. 110; Bancokentucky Co.'s Receiver v. National Bank etc., 137 S.W.2d 357, 281 Ky. 784.

C. AS A FIDUCIARY, RESPONDENT MUST ACCOUNT FOR BENEFITS GAINED.

Once a fiduciary relationship is established, the rights and duties are similar to those existing in the case of a trust. As 4 Pomeroy on Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed.) 263 says:

> "Wherever there is a fiduciary relation * * * the dealings of the parties with each other and with the subject-matter of the relation are governed by the same rules which determine the duties of actual trustees towards their cestuis que trustent * * *."[32]

In Barney v. Saunders, 16 How. (U.S.) 534, 542, the principle is stated thus:

> "It is a well-settled principle of equity, that wherever a trustee, or one standing in a fiduciary character, [32]Thus the rule of Cal. Civ. Code, Sec. 2235, concerning trustees is said to apply to all fiduciary relationships. Metropolis etc. Sav. Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 598, 132 Pac. 833.

deals with the trust estate for his own personal profit, he shall account to the cestui que trust for all the gain which he has made."

In Young v. Higbee Company, 324 U.S. 204, a reorganization plan was proposed and confirmed by the District Court over the objection of two preferred stockholders. The two appealed. During the appeal they sold their stock and right of appeal for more than the market value of the stock. Other preferred stockholders sued them to obtain their profit. This Court held for the plaintiffs. The two stockholders, it said, had voluntarily become fiduciaries even though they had filed their objection on their own behalf and not on behalf of the preferred stockholders as a class, because success on the appeal would have redounded to the advantage of all. By appealing the two had assumed a "determining position over the rights of others" (p. 209) and "owed an obligation to them." (p. 210.). The plan of reorganization having been confirmed, the other preferred stockholders had lost nothing to which they were entitled. Yet it was held that the retention of the profit from the sale of their shares by the two stockholders was unjust; it "was not paid for anything they owned" (p. 212). So here, the tax saving now held by respondent was not the result of any tax credits belonging to it.

Pound and Plucknett's "Readings on the History and System of the Common Law" (3rd ed. 1927), at page 629, quoting Maitland's Equity, p. 83, refers to:

> "* * * one grand rule. It is this: that wherever a person clothed with a fiduciary character gains some personal advantage by availing himself of his situation as a trustee, he becomes a trustee of the advantage so gained. * * *

"The rule includes persons who are not trustees properly so called, but all those who stand in what is called a fiduciary position. * * *"

This primary principle has been stated by the authorities in much the same language regarding every variety of fiduciary situation. Its gist and substance is this: The fiduciary may not avail himself of any advantage or facility that the position gives him. If he derives any benefit either from the use of any property or rights of the beneficiary or from the fact of the relationship or from the opportunities or facilities it affords, he must account to the beneficiary for the full benefit. All profits and advantages belong to the beneficiary, regardless of whether they spring from performance or from violation of the fiduciary's duty.

The basic reason for this is that the fiduciary owes the duty of highest loyalty to his beneficiary, his personal interests must be utterly subjugated, "he must act with an eye single to the interest" of the beneficiary. And it matters not that the beneficiary has suffered no injury, that the profit was not made at his expense, or that he could not himself have made the gain. It matters not that the fiduciary acts in good faith or bad faith. Any other rule would tempt him to consider his own interest and put him in a position of conflict of selfishness with loyalty. Agreements altering these consequences may be possible, but they must follow "full disclosure of all relevant facts" and "an opportunity to obtain independent advice."

See Restatement of Agency, Sec. 387, 388; Restatement of Trusts, Sec. 203; 2 Am. Jur., Agency, Sec. 268, p. 215; 3

C.J.S., Agency, Sec. 165, p. 53; 3 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 502, p. 2422; 3 Bogert on Trusts (Part 1), p. 79.[33]

"These high standards" courts are "not disposed to whittle down," Fleishhacker v. Blum, 109 F.2d 543, 547 (9 Cir.), cer. den. 311 U.S. 665.

These fiduciary rules are applied "with particular stringency" to dealings between interlocking corporations. Mayflower Hotel Stock. P.C. v. Mayflower Hotel Corp., 173 F. 2d 416 (D.C. Cir., 1949).

The fiduciary principle has been applied to innumerable varieties of facts, many of which "do not fall readily into any general classification." (3 Bogert on Trusts (Part 1) p. 153.) As Bogert further says:

> "The ways in which a fiduciary can take a position hostile to the trust and seek a private advantage are without number. In whatever form the disloyalty appears, equity penalizes it with the privilege in the cestui of obtaining a constructive trust of the advantage obtained by the wrongdoing trustee." (p. 156)

Thus the principle has been applied to compel an accounting of tax savings (Shreveport Bank cases, p. 58, supra) and of bribes (Reading v. The King, p. 83, supra).

The majority opinion of the Court of Appeals dismissed the Shreveport cases on the ground that there the "new bank" had the duties of a trustee (R. 2220-1). But no trust in the strict sense was there present. There was a pledge which placed the officers in dual relationships with respect to the old and new banks. Leslie v. Commercial National [33] "Thus where a person who is in a fiduciary or confidential relation to another obtains property from the other by taking advantage of the relation, a constructive trust arises." 3 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 468, p. 2336 and cases cited.

Bank in Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927, 933; Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231, 233. The words "trust" and "trustees" are found in the Shreveport opinions only because the courts recognized with Maitland and Pomeroy that the "grand rule" binding fiduciaries (quoted p. 86, supra) "includes persons who are not trustees properly so-called, but all those who stand in what is called a fiduciary position."

The opinion of the court below concedes that if respondent dominated petitioner, it was a fiduciary (R. 2221). The district court found that there was a preponderance of evidence of such control (R. 272).

D. THE EXISTENCE OF COMMON OFFICERS REQUIRES THE HIGHEST STANDARDS OF CONDUCT IN INTERCORPORATE DEALINGS: DUALITY.

Here we have the case of a subsidiary dominating its former parent and directing its actions for its own benefit. But aside from the fact of domination and control, the existence of common officers in the two companies created a fiduciary relation.

Numerous decisions declare the equitable principles that are brought into operation by duality. For example, Geddes' v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 254 U.S. 590; Chelrob v. Barrett, 57 N.E. 2d 825, 293 N.Y. 442; Overfield v. Pennroad Corporation, 42 F. Supp. 586.[34] These contain such a comprehensive discussion of the law with a review of the leading cases that no amplification is necessary.

[34]Others are: Globe Woolen Co. v. Utica Gas & Electric Co., 121 N.E. 378, 224 N.Y. 483 (per Cardozo, J.); Merger Mines Corporation v. Grismer, 137 F.2d 335 (9 Cir.), cer. den. 320 U.S. 794; Goodell v. Verdugo Canon Water Co., 138 Cal. 308, 71 Pac. 354; 3 Fletcher Cyc. Corporations, Per. ed., Sec. 961, pp. 433, 434; Eshleman v. Keenan, 187 Atl. 25, 2 A2d 904, 23 Del. Ch. 234; Price v. Standard Oil Co., 55 N.Y.S.2d 890, a case where a corporation's employees were mere employees (not directors) of another corporation; annotation and cases, 114 A.L.R. 308.

In the Geddes case this Court said (p. 599):

> "'The relation of directors to corporations is of such a fiduciary nature that transactions between boards having common members are regarded as jealously by the law as are personal dealings between a director and his corporation, * * *. Especially is this true where a common director is dominating in influence or in character. This Court has been consistently emphatic in the application of this rule, which, it has declared, is founded in soundest morality, and we now add in the soundest business policy.'"

In the Pennroad case the directors of the Pennroad Corporation were directors, officers or employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with loyalty to the latter. It was held that this was sufficient ground for the recovery from Pennsylvania Railroad of all losses incurred by Pennroad as the result of investments made under the direction of these officers and directors, despite their integrity and good faith.

Chelrob v. Barrett, supra, involved a public utility system comprising three corporations. A owned the voting stock of B which owned the voting stock of C. B sold gas to C at a price fixed by the directors of the two corporations, all of whom had been chosen by A. A majority of the directors of B and of C were also directors, and in some cases paid officers, of A, and some of the directors of A were also directors of B. Judgment was rendered directing additional payment by C to B.

The case is of particular interest because the court noted that so long as B and C earned enough to pay dividends on the preferred stock, it was not material what price was charged for the gas, since the earnings of either eventually reached the ultimate parent, A, the owner of the common stock. The problem arose only when earnings fell off so that dividends on the preferred stock went into arrears. Thus, in the present case, it would have been unimportant whether the tax savings went to respondent or the petitioner so long as the latter owned the former. The severance of that tie created the problem.

Bernheim v. Louisville Property Co., 214 S.W. 801, 185 Ky. 63, involved common agents and officers of two corporations which had formerly been affiliated but whose interests had been severed. The court remarked on the failure of the individuals occupying dual positions to appreciate that "the severance of 1908 in reality changed the relationship between the two companies."

The principles of duality apply to every variety of situation where the same person or persons represent two or more interests—e.g., agency (cf. Restatement of Agency, Sec. 390, 392), trusts (cf. Restatement of Trusts, Sec. 170), attorneys at law (cf. Peyton v. William C. Peyton Corp., 7 A.2d 737, 747, 23 Del. Ch. 321; Re James Estate, 86 N.Y.S. 2d 78 (1948)).

Both the Peyton and the James cases, like the present, involved the conduct of Mr. Coulson.

The consequences here of duality are: (1) equity requires respondent to account to petitioner; (2) respondent must account for the benefits received rather than petitioner's detriment; (3) the duality precludes any contention of gratuity; (4) all issues must be decided in the light of the fiduciary duties resting upon respondent, the actor; and

(5) every detail of the transaction is opened to the scrutiny of the court.

Respondent argued below that the presence of duality was not significant because some of it had its origin at a time prior to the bankruptcy proceeding when petitioner still controlled respondent. The contention is irrelevant, for the conditions extant when the relation was created no longer existed. Duality is a fact, a condition of inconsistent interests, imposing rigorous fiduciary standards of rectitude regardless of how the duality came about. A fiduciary cannot be excused from his duty of fair dealing to his principal because his principal created the relation. Otherwise the agent, the trustee, would usually be free to victimize his principal or beneficiary.

The argument that duality is to be ignored because petitioner "created the duality" is precisely the argument advanced to sustain the actions of Mr. Coulson in the case of In re James' Estate, 86 N.Y.S.2d 78. The court set aside certain transactions because of the duality, and it dismissed as of no consequence the fact that the duality was proper in its origin. It said (p. 84):

> "At this point the court makes note that the persons acting in these dual capacities did so by reason of the terms of the will and that no criticism may be made of their occupying the offices to which they were appointed. Such dual functions nonetheless bring into this case legal principles which exact special standards of fiduciary conduct from persons so situated."

The controlling fact was "that there did not exist independence of operation" (p. 90).

E. RESPONDENT MUST ACCOUNT FOR AN ENRICHMENT RESULTING FROM ACTS OF ITS AGENTS WHO WERE FIDUCIARIES OF PETITIONER.

We have shown that respondent was the fiduciary of petitioner and must account for the unjust enrichment resulting from the use of its position. But beyond this, petitioner is entitled to recover because the officers and the tax counsel of respondent were also agents of petitioner, openly assuming to act for it. Respondent's counsel had himself designated as "petitioner's attorney-in-fact" so that he could deal with the Treasury Department and make a settlement in its name. Petitioner's president, who signed the documents, was also respondent's employee and agent. Respondent's enrichment is a direct and immediate consequence of their act; it is an enrichment independent of the volition of petitioner. The fruits of their acts are in respondent's possession. As Judge Cardozo pointed out in Whiting v. Hudson Trust Company, 138 N.E. 33, 234 N.Y. 394, where a common trustee of two estates robbed one to replace funds taken from the other and the latter was held to account to the former, "We cannot characterize enrichment so procured as other than unjust."

V.

All Arguments Advanced Against Recovery by Petitioner Are Opposed to Elementary Principles

The arguments advanced against recovery by petitioner have been many and varied. The trial court relied on one set of arguments, the Court of Appeals relied on a wholly different set, disagreeing with the trial court in toto. Respondent has advanced still other arguments which both courts ignored.

A. PETITIONER WAS UNDER NO DUTY TO JOIN IN CONSOLIDATED RETURNS OR TO CONFER UPON RESPONDENT THE BENEFITS OF ITS TAX CREDITS.

The Court of Appeals based its decision on the view that petitioner was under the duty to join in consolidated returns and to confer upon respondent, gratis, the benefit of its tax credit. It therefore held irrelevant the fact that respondent took over and managed petitioner's tax affairs without consultation with petitioner or consideration of its rights.

There is no basis for the premise. As stated in 65 Harvard Law Review 1257, commenting on this case:

> "The ground relied on by the Court of Appeals was that * * * [respondent] could have violated no duty to act fairly since [petitioner] was under a duty to file the consolidated returns anyway. The court's argument that [petitioner] had such a duty, however, is not convincing. The Internal Revenue Code imposes no such obligation."

No Such Duty Can Be Found in the Tax Laws or Regulations.

No duty such as the Court of Appeals assumed can be found in federal tax laws or regulations. The tax laws in effect during the period in question make clear:

1. Only the parent corporation may file consolidated returns (Treas. Reg. 104, Sec. 23.16a).

2. There was no duty to file consolidated returns (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.11a; II Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships, 1946-7, pp. 649-650).

3. A parent is under no duty to a subsidiary to file consolidated returns and is free to make its own decision on the basis of its own interest. Duke Power Co. v. Comm., 44 F.2d 543, 545 (4 Cir.).

4. Similarly, a subsidiary is free to refuse to join, Geo. A. Fuller Co. v. Comm., 92 F.2d 72 (2 Cir.); Trinity Building Corp., 40 B.T.A. 1315, although such a refusal is not likely since the subsidiary is ordinarily controlled by the parent.

Therefore, insofar as tax law is concerned, petitioner was free, in each of the years in question, to file a separate return (although its tax counsel, who were counsel for respondent, failed to so advise it, p. 27, supra). The principle and its rationale are declared in Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 44 F.2d 543, 545 (4 Cir.), cer. den. 282 U.S. 903, where it was held that a subsidiary had no right to the benefits of a consolidated return where the parent chose to file a separate return. The court there said:

> "It [the law] assumed that if there was that degree of affiliation which the law required, there was a dominant control, and it gave to that dominant control the right to make the choice. The argument, therefore, that this construction of the law prevents one of the group from making its election, and forces it by the conduct of its associates or its parent to a definite course against its own interest, is untenable for the reason that such an argument destroys the entire premise on which the optional provision is based. A corporation is owned by its shareholders, who are the ultimate source of power controlling its corporate action. If its stockholders decide that its best interests require filing by it of a separate tax return, no provision of the law denies it this privilege, but in that event the effect of its action is to deprive its associates of the benefits, if there are any, of a consolidated return, and imposes upon each the duty of filing a like > form of return, but if all the corporations affiliated be owned by the same interests, and that of course is the presumption on which the right is made to rest, it is fair to assume that they will act harmoniously and for the interest of the common owner, and it is the recognition of this common owner's right to set off against his gains in the one his losses in the other that induced the permitted consolidated return." (P. 545)

Since this is true when the economic unity exists, patently the parent owes no duty to a former subsidiary to join in consolidated returns for the latter's benefit, after the economic unity has been severed, merely because continuance of technical affiliation makes such returns permissible. In this case the economic unity was severed before the tax returns were filed. In the words of the trial court during the trial (R. 1380), the parties were "free agents to agree with one another to file this type of return"; that is, to agree or to refuse to agree.[35]

The Bankruptcy Court Could Not Have Compelled Petitioner to Give Its Loss to Respondent.

Certain it is that the bankruptcy court could not have ordered petitioner to join in consolidated returns and to give respondent the benefit of its loss. Not only was respondent already out of bankruptcy when the 1944 return and the claim for refund were filed, but, quite apart from [35] Yet, oddly, when it decided the case, the trial court observed in its opinion that "there is some merit to defendant's contention that a firm obligation rested upon plaintiff to conform and cooperate" to give defendant the benefit of its loss (R. 275). But the opinion contained no suggestion of any reasons to support this view, and elsewhere the opinion asserts that the tax savings were "amazing and undeserved" (R. 276). It is impossible to reconcile the two statements. How could one be under an obligation to give another an "amazing and undeserved" benefit?

---

that fact, the bankruptcy court would have been without jurisdiction to make any such order. Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132.[36] Nor did it do so.

No Such Duty Can Be Found in Any Principle of Law or Equity.

The holding of the Court of Appeals that petitioner was under an obligation to join in consolidated returns with respondent for the latter's benefit can only mean that respondent by an independent suit in equity against petitioner could have compelled it to join in such a return gratuitously.

Thus by judicial fiat the court below makes mandatory what Congress and the Treasury left optional. Wherever consolidated returns may be filed with a resulting tax deduction to anyone, this decision decrees that they must be.

The rule so created not only confers on one corporation a right to use another's assets, but it does so free of any requirement of just compensation.

No principle supports such a right. Rather, as Judge Fee stated (R. 2242):

> "plaintiff had a property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns, which could neither be given away without consideration nor cut off judicially without due process."

---

[36]Under Section 77 (the railroad reorganization section) a bankruptcy court's in personam jurisdiction is confined to the debtor, here respondent. It has no jurisdiction over disputes with others not involving property in the debtor's possession. Bankruptcy Act, Sec. 77(a); Title 11 U.S.C., Sec. 205(a); Thompson v. Terminal Shares, 104 F.2d 1 (8 Cir.), cer. den. 308 U.S. 559. In Callaway v. Benton, it was held that a bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction to compel another to transfer rights to the trustees or to enter into a contract with them.

As he further stated (R. 2243):

> "Since, under the [tax] law, all corporations concerned must consent to the filing of consolidated returns, it is clear, contrary to the statement in the majority opinion, that plaintiff had no duty requiring it to file these returns. Plaintiff had a legal right to refuse to file."

Petitioner Assumed Burdens in Filing Consolidated Returns.

There are many factors besides offset of losses which bear on the question whether it is advantageous to join in consolidated returns (cf. II Montgomery, Federal Taxes on Corporations, 1942-1943, pp. 492, 493-5). Burdens as well as advantages flow from such action. Thus each company joining in the return becomes liable for the full amount of taxes owed by the group (Treas. Reg. 104, Sec. 23.15(a); T.R. 110, Sec. 33.15(a)), and is subjected to requirements affecting its future tax situation. For example, by virtue of elimination of intercompany transactions, the basis at which property is held may be affected (T.R. 104, Sec. 23.38; T.R. 110, Sec. 33.38). In certain circumstances such returns must be filed in a later year (T.R. 104, Sec. 23.11(a); T.R. 110, Sec. 33.11(a)), although "future developments may make the filing of separate returns for future years more advantageous" (II Montgomery, p. 492). Here one consequence of petitioner's joining in the consolidated returns was to make it liable for any taxes payable by respondent. All this demonstrates how indefensible it is to hold that an independent company has any duty to assume such a liability and such possible disadvantages simply to benefit another company which wants to use its loss.

Petitioner Was Not a Fiduciary for Respondent. The Reverse Was True.

To extend its rule of mandatory filing of consolidated returns to a situation where the parent-subsidiary relationship has been severed, the court below stated that a tax return is an historical document, that a fiduciary's duties with respect to matters arising during the fiduciary relationship continues through the period of winding up, and that the fiduciary who performs an act of winding up may not exact payment (R. 2234-5):[37]

But petitioner was not respondent's liquidating agent nor its fiduciary. On the contrary, as we have just seen, respondent was a fiduciary to petitioner (p. 79, supra). By controlling petitioner's president so as to file the tax returns, respondent assumed a "determining position over the rights" of petitioner and thereby "owed an obligation to it." Young v. The Higbee Co., 324 U.S. 204, 209, 210. What makes one a fiduciary for another are the elements of dominance and the exercise of control and management. Southern Pacific Company v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483 at 492; North American Co. v. S.E.C., 327 U.S. 686 at 693; 65 Harvard Law Review 1257.

[37]The authorities cited in the opinion are not pertinent. They are California Corporations Code, Sec. 15030; Uniform Partnership Act, Sec. 30; 3 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 344; 16 Fletcher, Corporations (Perm. ed.) Sec. 8174; Trice v. Comstock, 121 Fed. 620. The first two provide that, on dissolution, a partnership is not terminated but continues until winding up is complete. The third states that a trustee's duties and powers do not cease until the trust is wound up. Fletcher on Corporations notes that in many jurisdictions by statute corporate directors upon dissolution continue as trustees for liquidation. In Trice v. Comstock, it was held that an agent was accountable to his former principal for a profit made after the termination of the agency, in buying land as a result of information and advantages acquired because of his agency and while agent.

The majority opinion itself noted that after 1935 respondent "was no longer controlled by Corporation but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court" (R. 2223) and that after adoption of the Plan of Reorganization "affiliation no longer existed" (R. 2231). The plan cut off all possibility of a return of control, management, or financial interest. The loss arose from the plan. The prior association could not impose the duty on petitioner to make a free grant to respondent of the only asset which the reorganization left petitioner, i.e., the tax utility of its loss.

The Court of Appeals deduced a duty to join in consolidated returns and to give the benefit of its loss from a fiduciary relationship of petitioner to respondent. From what did it deduce that relationship? Merely from an assumed duty to join in consolidated returns. This is reasoning in a circle.

Common Officers May Not Sacrifice the Rights and Assets of One Corporation for the Benefit of the Other.

The court below justified its holding that petitioner was bound to join in consolidated returns for respondent's benefit by stating that "the dual officers owed fiduciary duties to both corporations to promote the interests of both and to obtain for each what it was entitled to under the tax laws" (R. 2232, 2233). No doubt common officers owe a duty to each corporation to protect its rights and further its interests. But it does not follow that in promoting the interests of one corporation, its officers may use the rights and assets of another of which they are also officers, without compensation.

If the common officers and attorneys were bound to inform respondent that it could save taxes if it could get petitioner to join in returns, they were equally bound to tell petitioner that its loss could be used to save respondent taxes and that petitioner was under no duty to join in a consolidated return to permit this to be done. They could not expropriate the utility of the loss.

Conflict with the Second and Fourth Circuits and Tax Court.

To justify its conclusion, the court below asserts the converse that, if the loss were respondent's and the income petitioner's, the latter could have compelled respondent to confer upon it the benefit of the loss by joining in consolidated returns (R. 2223). If sound, this would mean that petitioner could have gone into the bankruptcy court, which had jurisdiction over respondent, and obtained an order compelling the bankruptcy trustees to join in consolidated returns and to confer upon petitioner the benefit of the trustees' losses, without any compensation whatever. Had petitioner applied for such an order in such a situation, the trustees obviously would have insisted that the loss and the right not to join in the returns were assets upon which it was their duty to realize for the benefit of creditors, and the bankruptcy court would have inquired what compensation petitioner offered.

The assumption by the court below that respondent would have had to join with petitioner is in conflict with the Second and Fourth Circuits and the Board of Tax Appeals which have held that a corporation, including one in bankruptcy, is free to join or not to join in consolidated returns as it sees fit.

In George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F.2d 72 (2 Cir.) and Trinity Building Corporation of New York, 40

B.T.A. 1315, the Commissioner was upheld in refusing to accept consolidated returns filed by a parent and several subsidiaries, because the trustees of a bankrupt subsidiary had refused to join. Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F.2d 543 (4 Cir.), cer. den. 282 U.S. 903, reached the same conclusion as to such returns filed by two subsidiaries where the parent refused to join. The taxpayers were thus unable even to utilize the losses of those who did join.

No Duty Such as the Court of Appeals Postulates Can Be Extracted from the Rights of Respondent's Pre-Reorganization Creditors.

In support of the alleged duty of petitioner to give its tax rights away, respondent has argued, and the majority opinion below seems to accept the argument, that respondent's pre-reorganization creditors were not paid in full and that creditors have an absolute priority over stockholders. But the conclusion sought to be drawn is a sheer non sequitur. The creditors did receive absolute priority. Petitioner, the stockholder, did have its equity completely wiped out as well as its creditor's claim for $7,750,000 of advances. The old creditors became the owners of all of the bonds and all of the stock of the reorganized company.

By reason of swollen war time traffic, those former creditors received benefits, advantages and equities vastly beyond the expectations of the plan of reorganization (see pp. 53-55, supra).

Creditors of a reorganized company, after wholly supplanting the former shareholders, as they did here, no matter under what sanction of law, have no right to appropriate still other property of the former shareholders. The reorganized respondent certainly could not have with impunity seized $17 million cash of petitioner to pay its taxes, merely because the pre-reorganization creditors had not been paid in full.[38]

Respondent's argument is merely another facet of the contention that petitioner is seeking something in the nature of equity or value for its former stock ownership. As we have shown, the contention is unsound (p. 49, supra). Petitioner has accepted in full the consequences of the plan of reorganization. The plan wiped out the entire stock ownership of the old stockholder. But its consummation, having stripped petitioner of that ownership, left it with something in its place—its stock loss, which had a tax utility. It was then that respondent went beyond the plan and appropriated what petitioner had left.

The Alleged Duty Is Incontrovertibly Refuted by Considering the Situation of a Corporation Having Income.

If petitioner had earned $75 million in other enterprises in 1942, 1943 and 1944, its stock loss would have eliminated its tax on that income, and no one would have the temerity to suggest that it could have been compelled to give the benefit of its loss to respondent. If a prosperous corporation, e.g., Standard Oil Company, rather than petitioner had owned respondent's stock, no one would claim that it had to join in the consolidated returns and confer on respondent, gratis, the tax utility of its loss, since Standard could use the loss to discharge its own taxes. The very suggestion shows the absurdity of the contention that petitioner was under a duty to do so.

[38]Petitioner was controlled, prior to respondent's bankruptcy, by the James Interests who owned 61% of its common stock (but only 8.8% of its preferred stock) (Chart, P 1). These were the controlling human agents responsible for what occurred. As the result of respondent's reorganization, the James Interests became the controlling power in respondent. If petitioner's suit is defeated, the effect will be that the James Interests, the common stockholders in petitioner, will profit from the tax utility of petitioner's loss in preference to petitioner's preferred stockholders.

As Judge Fee stated in his dissenting opinion below (R. 2251):

> "An incontrovertible proof of the proposition that plaintiff had no duty to apply the loss for the benefit of defendant may be cited. If plaintiff had sold a gold mine for a profit of over $75,000,000.00, its loss on the stock of the subsidiary could have been applied to offset any taxes against plaintiff. In that event, the trustees in reorganization would have been required to pay taxes against the operating company. Once used, the power of applying the loss would be functus officii, and plaintiff would have received the entire benefit."

The fact is so self-evident that in its briefs below respondent felt obliged to say that "if during the critical years the plaintiff had * * * taxable income * * * plaintiff would have a different case."[39]

B. PETITIONER'S RIGHT RESTS ON BENEFITS CONFERRED AND IS NOT CONFINED TO DETRIMENT SUSTAINED. ONE'S PROPERTY OR RIGHTS CANNOT BE APPROPRIATED MERELY BECAUSE THE OWNER CANNOT USE THEM PROFITABLY HIMSELF.

Thus the argument has reduced itself to the contention that unless petitioner could have used its loss to its own advantage, it could be compelled to give it away. Respondent has urged that petitioner lost nothing because it had no use for its tax loss, that therefore it has no cause of action, or that if it has a cause of action, the recovery would be limited to the amount of petitioner's damage, which was nil.

[39]Petitioner owned 50% of the stock of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., which was wiped out by a plan of reorganization of that railroad at about the same time as its holdings in respondent were similarly treated (p. 7, supra). If petitioner's Denver & Rio Grande stock had not been wiped out, and instead it had income on that stock, it could have used its Western Pacific loss to save taxes thereon. Certainly no right sprang up in respondent to appropriate the tax utility of that loss because petitioner also sustained a loss of its Denver & Rio Grande stock.

The court below supported its position by this fallacious reasoning. It based its judgment on the fact that petitioner was so unfortunate as to be left destitute with no taxable income and therefore had lesser rights than if it were prosperous.

Referring to the fact that respondent dominated petitioner and directed its officers so as to appropriate its rights to respondent's advantage, the court asserted that respondent "did not abuse its supposed dominant position because the officers and directors common to both corporations did not sacrifice Corporation's [petitioner's] interests to those of its subsidiary" (R. 2232). The reason given for this assertion is that petitioner "had no income" and so "there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss," whereas "its affiliate [respondent] did have use for the loss" (R. 2232). "Under this state of facts these officers had the positive duty to make use of the loss as they did" (R. 2233), that is, to give it to the respondent, who used it to save the taxes it otherwise must pay.

No authority was cited for this conclusion; nor does any exist. It is merely an assertion that a corporation which dominates another may appropriate its tax credits without compensation simply because it can profitably use them while the dominated corporation cannot.

Many a person may have use for another's property or rights, but it has never heretofore been held that he may therefore appropriate such rights or property without compensation. A man's right to protection of his assets from seizure or trespass by another does not depend on what use or profit he himself could make of them. The contrary rule has reflected itself in a multitude of instances and in numerous branches of the law.

Suits for the Use of Land.

United States v. Bernard, 202 Fed. 728 (9 Cir.) declares the fact that land has not been injured and "that a plaintiff in an action for continued trespass would have made no use of the land which the defendant has wrongfully used to his advantage and profit will not prevent the plaintiff from recovering the actual value of that which has been so used and acquired by defendant" (p. 731).

In Unjust Enrichment Cases Recovery Is Measured by Benefit Received.

A plaintiff's rights in an unjust enrichment case are measured by the benefits conferred, received or taken — the "enrichment," not the detriment suffered. Restatement of Restitution, Section 1, and comment. In the comment it is said:

> "Ordinarily the benefit to the one and the loss to the other are co-extensive, and the result of the remedies given under the rules stated in the Restatement of this Subject is to compel the one to surrender the benefit which he has received and thereby to make restitution to the other for the loss which he has suffered. * * * [p. 13]
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> "In other situations, a benefit has been received by the defendant but the plaintiff has not suffered a corresponding loss or, in some cases, any loss, but nevertheless the enrichment of the defendant would be unjust. In such cases, the defendant may be under a duty to give to the plaintiff the amount by which he has been enriched." (p. 14)

In Reading v. The King [1949] 2 K.B. 232; Reading v. Attorney General [1951] Appeal Cases 507, discussed at pp. 83, 84, supra, the Crown was held entitled to bribes received by a soldier although it had sustained no loss and it could not itself have earned the sums involved. The Court of Appeals held that the Crown could recover "whether or not [it] had suffered any detriment in fact"; and that the defendant "cannot be heard to say that * * * the plaintiff suffered no loss. The plaintiff, whether actually harmed or scatheless, is conclusively presumed not only to have been damnified but to have been damnified to an extent measured by the amount" of defendant's enrichment. The House of Lords repeated that "the fact that the Crown * * * has lost no profits or suffered no damage is, of course, immaterial and the principle so well known that it is unnecessary to cite the cases illustrating and supporting it. It is the receipt and possession of the money that matters, not the loss or prejudice to the master" ([1951] A.C. at 516).

A striking application of these rules of unjust enrichment will be found in the Kentucky Cave case, Edwards v. Lee's Adm'r, 96 S.W.2d 1028, 265 Ky. 418 (1936). There Edwards had discovered a cave the entrance to which was on his land. By years of advertising and exploitation he spread the fame of the cave, improved it, built a hotel near its mouth, and eventually secured a stream of tourists whose entrance fees yielded him a good profit. Without his efforts the cave would have remained useless.

After the cave became profitable, a neighbor sued on the ground that approximately ⅓ of the length of the cave underlay his land and recovered judgment requiring an accounting of ⅓ of the net proceeds received from exhibiting the cave over a period of 7 years, plus interest.

The Supreme Court of Kentucky affirmed the judgment although it recognized (1) that plaintiff merely had a hole in the ground which he himself could not use because it was so far beneath the surface that it could not be entered except through the natural mouth on defendant's property; (2) that the cave was therefore of no practical use to the plaintiff; (3) that for the same reason there was no one in the world other than defendant himself upon whom the plaintiff might confer a right of beneficial use of the portion of the cafe under his property; (4) that consequently plaintiff's portion of the cave had no utility to him, it had no sales or rental value, and plaintiff had not been ousted of the physical occupation or use of his property because he could not and did not occupy it; (5) that the property had not in any way been injured by the use to which defendant had put it, and (6) that plaintiff had suffered no loss or detriment.

The court stated that, as the case was sui generis, it was left to fundamental principles and analogies. It reasoned (1) that plaintiff had something (a definite segment of the cave) and therefore was possessed of a right which it was the policy of the law to protect; (2) that the action was in equity for an accounting; and (3) that the "measure of recovery in this case must be the benefits, or net profits, received by the appellants from the use of the property of appellees," by way of analogy to the rule of Section 136 of the Restatement of Restitution.

Respondent has tried to distinguish this case as one of trespass. But the court refused to treat it so, for the reason that, had it done so, there could be no recovery for lack of "damage"; the property had not been injured, and there was no rental value since plaintiff had no access to the cave, could not use it, and there was no ouster of possession (96 S.W.2d 1028, 1030-1032).

Moreover, that case cannot be so distinguished because here respondent's use of petitioner's rights was not consensual. Long before petitioner's loss was allowed as a deduction by the government in 1947, respondent had been put on notice of petitioner's claims by the filing of the suit and by the letter of May 5, 1947 (p. 25, supra). Nevertheless, respondent persisted in using petitioner's loss in defiance of its claim.

Bearing in mind that respondent simply appropriated petitioner's tax credits without discussion and without any consideration of its rights, Section 136 of the Restatement, relating to benefits tortiously acquired, is also applicable. In the comment under that section, it is said:

> "In some cases, however, no harm is done and in these cases if the sole remedy were by an action of tort the wrongdoer would be allowed to profit at little or no expense. * * * The usual method of seeking restitution is by a bill in equity with a request for an accounting for any profits which have been received * * *." (p. 553)

Even where a defendant has not acted in a manner considered to be tortious he may have to account under the principles of quasi-contract. Restatement of Restitution,

Ch. 6. The law on the subject is not static or confined to ancient categories.[40]

Where a Fiduciary Profits from the Relationship.

Similarly, where a fiduciary gains a profit from the fiduciary relationship, it belongs to the beneficiary, regardless of whether the latter could have made it independently.[41]

It is elementary, as said in 3 C.J.S., Sec. 165, page 54, that the application of the fiduciary rules discussed at pages 85-89, supra,

> "is not affected by the fact that the principal did not suffer any injury by reason of the agent's dealings * * * ."

Or, as said in 3 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 502, page 2422:

> "It is immaterial that the profit was not made at the expense of the beneficiary or principal * * *."

To the same effect are 2 Scott, p. 1098 and 54 Am. Jur. 249.

In Young v. The Higbee Co., 324 U.S. 204 (discussed p. 86, supra), plaintiffs recovered defendants' gains, although plaintiffs had lost nothing and had not been damaged.

In Fleishhacker v. Blum, 109 F.2d 543 (9 Cir.), cer. den. 311 U.S. 665, it was held that the bank in whose behalf a stockholder's bill had been brought was entitled to re-

[40] As said in the Restatement, at page 493:

"The situations dealt with in this Chapter do not exhaust all those in which restitution can conceivably be granted for benefits lawfully acquired. They represent situations which have arisen, and indicate the type of situations in which restitution should be granted."

[41] Restatement of Restitution, at page 15, states:

"So also, where a person in a fiduciary relation to another makes a profit in connection with transactions conducted by him as fiduciary, he is ordinarily accountable to his beneficiary for the profit, although the beneficiary suffered no loss."

cover certain profits "even though the bank has suffered no damage."

The Shreveport Bank cases discussed at pages 58-60, supra, make clear that the fact that one has a tax credit or advantage which he cannot use does not give another the right to use it to his advantage without accounting for its benefit. There the Old Bank, not being engaged in business, would have had no tax to pay and therefore had no way to use its property. Yet, as there said: "The fact that the Old Bank suffered no loss * * * makes no difference." Leslie v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Shreveport, 28 F. Supp. 927 at 933. In the first appeal in that case the dissenting judge commented: "The transaction left the old bank no worse off. It was not injured in the least by the transaction * * *." 144 F.2d at 245. Yet, on the second appeal the same judge wrote the opinion of the court affirming the right of the old bank to recover such of the tax savings as were attributable to that class of property which it held belonged to the old bank.

S.E.C. Case.

In the Consolidated Electric-Islands case, discussed at page 70, supra, losses of Islands, one of the affiliates, resulted in a tax saving to the affiliated system. The S.E.C. recognized that "none of this saving can be realized directly by Islands since it does not have the taxable net income against which to offset such losses" (13 S.E.C. at 652). While it was noted that the use of the loss for tax purposes might, in a future contingency, result in a tax liability to Islands, it was also noted that "any tax liability resulting to Islands * * * will be considerably less than the tax savings to be presently effected." Nevertheless, it was held proper that the whole of the tax savings should be paid to Islands by the other affiliates which achieved the savings by use of Islands' loss in consolidated tax returns.

The Utility to Respondent Gave Value to Petitioner.

The law recognizes that there are cases where "the nature of the material * * * involved is such that no value attaches thereto aside from the use thereof, and that once such material is used the value therein is gone," Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal.2d 653, 667, 221 Pac.2d 73. The value to him who has consumed the material by using it then measures the recovery.

65 Harvard Law Review at 1257 comments:

> "[petitioner's] stock loss was an asset having value * * * even though [respondent] was the sole market and [petitioner] could utilize the stock loss in no other way."

In Truncale v. Universal Pictures Co., 76 F. Supp. 465, directors of a corporation held options to buy its shares at a fixed price. Under tax law and regulations, if such an option were exercised at a time when the market price exceeds the option price, the excess was taxable income, but the corporation might deduct the excess in computing its own tax. In order to secure a closing agreement from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the excess, in the event the options should thereafter be exercised, would not constitute taxable income to the directors, the latter caused the corporation to agree with the Commissioner that in computing its own income it would not deduct the excess. Closing agreements to this effect were executed, and the options were then exercised.

As a consequence, the corporation paid more taxes than it should have, and the tax liabilities of the directors were diminished. However, the losses suffered by the corporation were much less than the gains enjoyed by the directors, since each director had his own outside income and the amount of his tax savings was affected by his own tax bracket.

A stockholder's derivative action was brought against the directors to compel them to account to the corporation not merely for the amount of the losses suffered by it, but for the entire tax savings of the directors. Defendants moved for a summary judgment on the ground of the statute of limitations. This turned on whether recovery was limited to the loss suffered by the corporation or extended to the entire gain enjoyed by the defendant. The court (Rifkind, J.) held the latter. Remarking that the situation was unique, it said (p. 469):

> "* * * where a corporation has the freedom to do an act or to refrain, the doing of the act, enabling others to derive benefits in excess of the losses suffered by the corporation, has a 'sale' value of which the ceiling is the amount of such benefits; * * *."

Petitioner's rights here are far stronger than that of the corporation in Truncale's case. There the corporation had nothing to contribute, and possessed nothing, other than the power to refuse to enter into the closing agreement. Here petitioner possessed not only the power to decline to enter into consolidated returns, but by entering into such returns it contributed something that belonged to itself, to wit, its own loss.

Respondent has tried to distinguish the Truncale case as a mere example of the rule that corporate directors are not allowed to profit at the expense of their corporation. But the court stated that it had to decide the case on more fundamental principles, because it did not fall within the class of cases where a corporate officer has taken for himself what could have been a corporate advantage or opportunity (76 F. Supp. at 468, 469). The plaintiff was held entitled to all of defendant's gain because "the corporation has been deprived of its freedom of action" even though the corporation could not itself have obtained all of such gain (p. 469).

That Only One Person May Have a Use for Property Does Not Give Him the Right to Appropriate It.

Closely related to respondent's argument that petitioner was not damaged, is its argument that there was no general market for petitioner's loss, since it could be used to offset income of someone other than petitioner only in a consolidated return and therefore could be availed of only by respondent.

The fact that a particular asset or right has a limited utility or "market," or that only one person can use it, does not destroy its value or give that party the right to appropriate it.

Thus in the Shreveport Bank cases, supra, only the new bank was able to make use of the tax credit. In Truncale v. Universal Pictures Co., supra, no one but the directors were able to make use of their corporation's situation. In the absence of utilization by them the corporation could not have realized the benefits which they received. In the Ken- tucky Cave case, in all the world only the defendant could make use of plaintiff's part of the "hole in the ground" (see pp. 107-109, supra).

Cases of Eminent Domain.

For example, the government may be the only possible buyer of a given property and unless it sees fit to buy, the owner may have no way to utilize the property or to realize upon it. But that fact does not destroy its value. In James v. Campbell, 104 U.S. 356, 358, the court noted that "Many inventions relate to subjects which can only be properly used by the government, such as explosive shells, rams, and submarine batteries to be attached to armed vessels," but observed that the government could not use such patented inventions or the patents without paying just compensation.

In the field of eminent domain generally, the fact that property has no general market and that therefore there is no market value does not eliminate its value. As said in Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U.S. 403 at 408:

> "Property is not to be * * * regarded as valueless because he [the owner] is unable to put it to any use. Others may be able to use it * * * Its capability of being thus made available gives it a market value which can be readily estimated."

As said in San Diego Land etc. Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 68, 20 Pac. 372,

> "But it is certain that a corporation could not for that reason appropriate it for nothing."

In the Field of Patents and Literary Property.

In the patent field many an invention consists of an improvement or addition to a machine or process on which another owns the patents, and it has no utility except as part of that machine or process, so that no one except the owner of the machine or process can make economic use of it. Yet the latter cannot appropriate the new invention without paying for it. As said in Bigelow v. R.K.O. Radio Pictures, 327 U.S. 251, 265, if "a wrongdoer has incorporated the subject of a plaintiff's patent or trademark in a single product to which the defendant has contributed other elements of value or utility, and has derived profits from the sale of the product," not only must he pay but he may have to account for all his profits. Cf. Westinghouse Co. v. Wagner Mfg. Co., 225 U.S. 604.

"There are times when heed must be given to value for use, if reparation is to be adequate," Sinclair Refining Co. v. Jenkins, 289 U.S. 689, 699.

The same principles are applied to literary property. Universal Pictures Co. v. Harold Lloyd Corp., 162 F.2d 354, 368, et seq.; Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 35 Cal. 2d 653; 221 Pac. 2d 73.

C. RESPONDENT'S CLAIMS THAT IT COMMITTED NO WRONG AND THAT PETITIONER HAD NO PROPERTY RIGHT ARE NOT VALID.

Respondent has contended that a "loss" is a "negative" factor and is not "property" and therefore petitioner has no rights.

Petitioner not only had the loss, it had the right to make use of the loss for tax purposes and the right to permit or withhold consent to its use in consolidated returns. This loss was not a negative factor because the tax laws made it of positive value. The tax laws provided that this loss could be used in certain circumstances to pay taxes. Therefore this loss had a value. It acquired value in precisely the same way that anything acquires value, to wit, because it had a valuable use. (See quotation from Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U.S. 403, 408 at p. 115, supra). The loss was actually used in this case to discharge a tax liability of $17 million.

The realization of a loss has tax values. It gives rise, for example, to the right in certain circumstances to distribute tax-free dividends, to receive tax-free revenues in the future, and, with carryovers and carrybacks, it represents the right to earn a roughly equivalent amount tax-free income in the future and to recover taxes already paid. No one enjoys sustaining a loss, but no corporation which has sustained one would agree to be treated as if it had not. The tax laws attach new consequences to both income and loss: income becomes a source of liability to pay taxes, a loss furnishes the basis of obtaining a benefit and thus is a thing of value or an asset.

Respondent's Tax Saving Did Not Result Automatically from the Tax Law; It Required the Use of Petitioner's Loss in Consolidated Returns.

Respondent has argued, and the court below has asserted, that the saving of taxes arose from the fact that the taxpayer had a legal right to take the deductions allowed by law. But the savings did not arise automatically from the tax law. The only reason why the law did not require respondent to pay taxes was that it appropriated and used petitioner's loss and rights to satisfy its tax liability. Respondent could not have utilized those rights unless it could cause petitioner to file consolidated returns with it. The permission given by the tax statutes to file consolidated returns did not itself save taxes. It gave to petitioner's loss a valuable use, which petitioner was legally free not to donate to respondent. Petitioner could have refused to join in and file consolidated returns, but it was made to act under respondent's control and domination and at its direction.

Petitioner Had a "Property" Right.

Respondent has argued that petitioner's loss, its right of use, or its right to withhold consent to the use of a consolidated return whereby the loss could be utilized, cannot be denominated "property" and therefore petitioner has no right of recovery. But terminology, such as "property," is not the source of legal or equitable rights. The reverse is true: in the long history of Anglo-American law the recognition that a right exists and is entitled to legal protection has been the starting point of recognition of new kinds of property rights.

In United States v. Willow River Co., 324 U.S. 499, a plaintiff claimed a right to recover by denominating something as "property." The court said (at p. 502): "We cannot start the process of decision by calling such a claim as we have here a 'property right'; whether it is a property right is really the question to be answered."

As stated by Chief Justice Shaw (in Boston and Lowell Railroad Corporation v. Salem and Lowell Railroad Co., et al., 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 1, 35 (1854)), the term "property"

> "is nomen generalissimum, and extends to every species of valuable right and interest, and includes real and personal property, easements, franchises and incorporeal hereditaments."

As was said in Johnston v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corp., 82 C.A.2d 796, 817, 18 P.2d 474,

> "As society has developed there has been a corresponding evolution in the development of property rights. Matters considered as near revolutionary a few years ago are now accepted as facts. Legal history shows a continual recognition of new interests and a gradual willingness to protect interests in intangible things. (Warren & Brandeis, 4 Harv. L. Rev. 193; 4 Ford. L. Rev. 307; 45 Yale L. J. 520)."

The famous article of Mr. Louis Brandeis (later r. Justice Brandeis) and Mr. Samuel Warren just referred to, which first appeared in 4 Harvard Law Review in 1890, entitled "The Right to Privacy," contains a masterly discussion of the subject. (See particularly pp. 193 to 195, and p. 212.) In Matarese v. Moore-McCormack Lines, 158 F.2d 631 (2 Cir.), defendant made use of an idea of the plaintiff. The idea was not only an intangible, it was unpatentable. Thus plaintiff had, in a technical sense, no "property right." But defendant was compelled to account for the savings it achieved in the cost of doing longshore work resulting from the use of the idea.

Regardless of Terminology, Petitioner Should Recover.

Whatever it may be denominated or however it may be characterized, the loss here was petitioner's; it carried with it the right of use in certain situations to achieve tax savings, and that right belonged to petitioner. Respondent appropriated that right and thereby achieved a benefit for which it should now account.

The principles on which petitioner is entitled to recover are not novel; they are fundamental. All that is novel is the factual situation. But equity is not powerless to cope with unusual facts.

Respondent has argued that petitioner's claim cannot be subsumed under any of the traditional headings of common-law liability. Respondent divides the field into categories, such as contract, common-law tort, or common-law status such as guardian and ward, and argues that the claim does not meet the definition of any one of these categories and therefore cannot exist or be enforced.

This type of argument has been repeatedly and unsuccessfully made for centuries. Had it been successful the development of the law would have ceased long ago. No doubt when equity was first asked to enforce a trust, the claim was made that the cestui que trust had no property right, for the full title was in the trustee—an argument which was promptly met by the creation of a right in personam to obtain restitution from the trustee.

Likewise the mortgagee claimed that he had full title to the mortgaged property, as indeed he had, and the law recognized no "property right" in the mortgagor; but this did not prevent courts of chancery from enforcing an equity of redemption, in order that justice might be done.

So when relief was sought against unfair competition and other injuries to the good will of a business, it was said that "good will" was not a right referable to any specific property and was therefore not entitled to legal protection. In a narrow sense this was true, for judges could not define good will any more definitely than "the expectation that the old customers would come to the old shop." Neither trespass nor conversion would lie but relief was given against the appropriation of what equitably belonged to the claimant.

D. RESPONDENT MAY NOT RETAIN THE ENRICHMENT BY REFUSAL TO RECOGNIZE THE SEVERANCE OF THE ECONOMIC UNITY AND BY INVOKING ALLEGED "PAST PRACTICE."

The respondent has rested heavily on a so-called past practice of petitioner and respondent to file consolidated returns in earlier years. This indeed is a principal buttress of the majority opinion of the Court of Appeals. That practice is without significance for the following reasons:

First: The relationship of petitioner and respondent was completely changed by this Court's approval in 1943 of the I.C.C.'s Plan of Reorganization. Prior to that time petitioner was respondent's owner. Thereafter they were total strangers to each other. A practice once followed between husband and wife is not pertinent to what should be done between divorced spouses. As Judge Fee pointed out, dissenting (R. 2248):

> "It is said, although there are no findings, that the history of prior consolidated returns is controlling. Of course, it cannot probably [properly] be shown how plaintiff heretofore dealt with a consolidated return after there has been a divorce from a subsidiary."

The trial court itself had said (R. 1377):

> "I just don't see the point of what any affiliated company has done in the past as a matter of practice in these returns, because they have all been decisions that have been made by the parent company, and when the parent company decided that it was proper to file affiliated returns, it filed them * * *. What we have in this case is not concerned with that."

Respondent's own insistence that the "pre-reorganization The Western Pacific Railroad Company" and the "reorganized The Western Pacific Railroad Company" are different entities (see p. 33, supra) answers the argument about past practice. While respondent is the same corporate entity before and after reorganization, the capital stock was owned by different people after the reorganization than before (p. 34, supra).

So long as the economic unity between the parties continued, a decision to file consolidated returns was that of the parent; the profits, gains or benefits of the subsidiary, or its losses or detriments, flowed to petitioner's stockholders sooner or later, since it was the owner of the economic unity. It was a matter of indifference where the benefits or detriments happened to fall in the first instance or whether a subsidiary accounted to the parent for any tax savings resulting from the use of the parent's tax credits or, instead, those savings inured to the parent through its ownership.

This Court's decision and the order of confirmation severed the economic unity. After March 15, 1943, respondent was no longer in any real sense the same party which had filed consolidated returns with petitioner in the years prior to 1942. Consequently, "past practice" is irrelevant.

Second: "Past practice" is also irrelevant because there was no practice whatever in prior years that has any relation to the facts of this case. The loss used to produce the tax savings was the loss of the parent's stock in the subsidiary. Yet (1) it was not until the amendment to the tax law in October, 1942 that this kind of loss could be utilized at all in the premises (see p. 8, supra). And (2) use of that loss to eliminate the former subsidiary's tax was "paradoxical" (see p. 19, supra); although the loss was the result of the severing of the economic unity, the subsidiary was enabled to use it by reason of the tax concept of consolidated returns which has its rationale in the existence of that unity.

Since the tax law did not permit such a loss to offset operating income until October 1942, there could be no prior practice on use of such a loss.

Third: Petitioner's loss with its utility for tax-saving was its sole asset. There was no past practice about giving away a sole asset.

Fourth: In the years 1936-1941, inclusive, neither petitioner nor respondent had taxable income, both had losses, and on a separate return basis neither would have had to pay a tax (R. 2040; R. 2041). What happened in those years could have no bearing on the only practice that could conceivably be relevant—whether a subsidiary had in the past accounted to the parent for tax savings resulting from use of the parent's credit.

In the years 1930-1935, while the parent had some net income, the respondent had losses, so that the subsidiary was not saved from taxes by the parent's tax credits (R. 2040, 2041).

The years prior to 1930 are too remote. Prior to 1922 consolidated returns were mandatory under the tax laws, so that a different question would have been involved. From 1923 through 1929, in only two instances (1925 and 1928) did the parent's loss result in tax savings to defendant subsidiary and then for only slightly more than $20,000 (R. 2041), of which petitioner received the benefit as owner of the enterprise.

In still earlier years a subsidiary group did account to the parent for the savings. In the years 1918-1924 the Utah Fuel group was a subsidiary of petitioner. In 1923, for example, Utah Fuel's tax on a separate basis would have been $131,744.72. By use of the parent's loss in consolidated returns, the tax for the whole group was only $71,268. Utah Fuel paid this sum to the government, and $60,475 to petitioner. Thus it paid the full $131,744. There were similar occurrences in the other years. These facts are demonstrable from defendant's Exhibit 40, pp. 2, 3, 6, 13.

Fifth: The only respect in which past practice could conceivably be relevant would be in the construction of a contract entered into by parties with each other. But in this case there was no such contract. Respondent simply took over and carried through the tax matters without agreement. What was done prior to the critical event of the severance of the economic unity cannot evidence a contractual consent to what was thereafter done in circumstances utterly different, involving a kind of loss which never before could have been the subject of tax deductions. It cannot possibly be deemed an authorization from petitioner's board of directors to give away its sole asset to strangers.

E. RESPONDENT MAY NOT RETAIN THE ENRICHMENT ON THE THEORY THAT PETITIONER COULD NOT HAVE MADE AN AGREEMENT WITH IT ABOUT ALLOCATION OF THE TAX SAVINGS.

The respondent, the trial court, and the majority opinion of the Court of Appeals have each asserted that petitioner and respondent could not legally have made an agreement with each other for allocation of the tax savings. Each assigned a different reason.

Thus the trial court said: "In the final analysis, plaintiff's hope to succeed here depends upon whether it could have lawfully acquired these unpaid tax moneys by voluntary agreement between the directorates of the two companies. In my opinion, it could not" (R. 274). The reason then assigned for this conclusion was that such agreement would "nullify the reorganization plan." We have shown there is no merit in that reasoning (p. 49, supra). In denying the right to have made any agreement, the majority opinion of the Court of Appeals rests on the quite different ground that petitioner was under an absolute duty to confer the use of its loss on respondent, gratis. We have already answered that argument (p. 94, supra).[42]

Respondent's ground was still a third one—that it would be against the public policy of the tax laws. Thus in its brief in opposition to the petition for certiorari it deprecates "the sort of bargaining about tax losses which is demanded here." It would be, indeed, a convenient form of morality and public policy that would permit respondent to appropriate petitioner's tax credits but which simultaneously would prohibit it from accounting for the benefits.

In fact, petitioner's rights do not depend on whether an agreement could have been made prior to the realization of the tax saving. In quasi-contract the obligation does not arise from consent but, in the absence of consent, from natural equity. Matarese v. Moore-McCormack Lines, 158

[42]The court's opinion also repeatedly uses the word "tribute" to describe petitioner's desire to realize the value of its asset. But it is not duress or coercion for one to say that he will do what he has a right to do. Marshall v. Packard Bell Co., 106 C.A.2d 770, 774, 236 Pac.2d 201. Nor is it a case of demanding tribute for one to refuse to confer a benefit on another except for compensation where he has a right to refuse to confer it. Sekulow v. 11th & F St. Valet, 162 F.2d 19 (D.C. Cir.); 5 Williston on Contracts (Rev. ed.), Sec. 1606; French v. Shoemaker, 14 Wall. 314, 334.

F.2d 631 (2 Cir.). Story's Equity Jurisprudence (14th ed.) points out (vol. 3, p. 303) that the question is not whether money has been received by a party of which he could not have compelled the payment but whether he can now with a safe conscience retain it. In Reading v. The King [1949] 2 K.B. 232, aff'd Reading v. Attorney General [1951] Appeal Cas. 507, discussed pp. 83, 84, supra, no valid prior contract to share bribes would have been possible. In the Shreveport Bank cases, discussed pp. 58-60, supra, no valid contract would have been possible between the Old Bank and the New Bank to report the former's property as the latter's in order to save taxes. And a fiduciary must account to his beneficiary for his gains even though made in an illegal enterprise with respect to which no agreement would be permissible (see discussion, pp. 129, 130, infra). In Koppers Co., 8 Tax Court 886, it is noted that where one pays taxes which another ought to pay, "the right of contribution is not founded upon contract."

Moreover, an agreement between parties to a consolidated return concerning allocation of taxes or advantages is perfectly proper and not unusual. The propriety of such an agreement has always been recognized by the income tax law and regulations. Former revenue acts provided that the taxes under a consolidated return were to be assessed to the respective corporations in such proportions as they might agree upon and prescribed no other basis unless the parties failed to agree.[43] Under the present law the matter is left to Treasury regulations (Internal Revenue Code, Sec. 141, Subd. b). These regulations recognize such agreements so long as they do not lessen the liability of any affiliate to the Treasury, the whole tax being assessable against any one of the corporations joining in the return (Reg. 104, Sec. 23.15(a)). Sec. 23.15(d) recognizes an agreement even though it limits liability of any one corporation to the Treasury, if that affiliate is in bankruptcy.

The propriety of voluntary agreements between parties is further shown by Truncale v. Universal Pictures Co., 76 F. Supp. 465, discussed at pages 112-114, supra, by the two cases before the Securities and Exchange Commission involving the Consolidated Electric system, discussed at pages 68-70, supra, and by an order entered on July 29, 1947, in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri in railroad reorganization proceedings entitled "In the Matter of Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, Debtor," No. 6935 (unreported). There a parent railroad owned all the stock and bonds of a group of affiliated railroads, known as the "Gulf Coast Lines." It also owned all the stock of another company, the International. All of these companies were debtors in the same bankruptcy proceedings and were operated by the one trustee. Separate tax returns for 1946 would result in no tax for the International but in a liability of over $2,500,000 for the Gulf Lines, but under a consolidated return International's loss would reduce the tax liability of the others by over $2,000,000.

Since all the parties were operated by the same trustee, an agreement by him in his capacity of trustee for one of the group with himself as trustee for the others required approval of his court (because of duality). For that reason he applied to the court to approve an arrangement whereby a consolidated return would be filed and the Gulf Lines would pay to International about $1,860,000 of their resulting tax savings in consideration of International's joining with them in the return. The court approved the arrangement. The basis of the allocation in that case is not relevant, because it was reached by mutual agreement, but the case is relevant as showing the propriety of an agreement on the subject.

F. RESPONDENT MAY NOT RETAIN THE ENRICHMENT ON THE THEORY THAT THE TREASURY SHOULD NOT HAVE ALLOWED THE USE OF PETITIONER'S LOSS TO OFFSET RESPONDENT'S INCOME.

The theory stated in the caption was the major ground of the trial court's judgment. It was not advanced by respondent, for obvious reasons, and it was rejected by the Court of Appeals. We therefore discuss it but summarily.

Whether the tax savings should have been allowed by the Treasury was not an issue in this case. The case starts with the fact that there were tax savings. Their existence is part of the factual context of this litigation. The issue is: As between petitioner and respondent, who is entitled to them?

The tax question whether the loss was usable to reduce taxes had been determined by the proper administrative officials, and the tax settlement had become final before the judgment in the District Court (see p. 26, supra). The tax laws authorize the Commissioner to enter into compromises. And as said by the Attorney General (31 Op. Atty. Gen. 459), it is his power to do so "where, in his judgment, such compromises were for the interests of the United States." The Bureau of Internal Revenue was the instrumentality selected by Congress for the purpose. Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 259.

A determination by the instrumentality chosen by Congress is not lightly to be questioned, even in case of a direct attack. U. S. v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515, 535; In re Epstein, 4 F.2d 529, 530 (6 Cir.). Where an attack is collateral, arising merely because the results of the administrative determination are involved as one of the facts of the case, that determination is not to be questioned. Cf. In re Kaufman's Estate, 10 N.Y.S. 2d 616; In re Mayer's Estate, 22 N.Y.S. 2d 468. In the present case there was not even a collateral attack.

But even were the tax deduction improper, that could be no reason to deny relief to petitioner. To do so would permit the wrongdoer to profit from its own wrong, as Judge Fee pointed out below (see p. 37, supra).

If the trial court had in mind the principle that a court will not intervene between joint wrongdoers, that doctrine has no application. The tax matter was handled in its entirety by respondent and its counsel, and petitioner was not a participant in the handling of the tax returns and the settlement. During the settlement of the findings the trial court stated that "There is no question about that" (see p. 30, supra).

It is a settled rule of equity that if one person uses property or rights of another to make a profit, particularly if he is a fiduciary, the other person—owner or beneficiary—is entitled to the profits even though they have emanated from an illegal or improper enterprise in which the property or rights were embarked. The fiduciary cannot escape accounting on the plea of illegality of the enterprise. Thus in Barney v. Saunders, et al., 16 How. (U.S.) 534, this Court reversed a judgment that refused to compel trustees to account for usurious interest received. It said:

> "They cannot be allowed to aver that the profits ... made on the trust fund should be put in their own > pockets, because they were unlawful gains, for fear that the conscience of the cestui que trust should be defiled by participation in them. To indulge trustees in such an obliquity of conscience, would be holding out immunity for misconduct and an inducement to speculate with the trust funds, and put them in peril." (p. 543)

And see Daniel v. Daniel, 116 Wash. 82, 198 Pac. 728.

In the Shreveport Bank case, discussed at pages 58-60, supra, the new bank used as tax deductions for state tax purposes certain property belonging to the old bank. In achieving its tax deductions the new bank made false reports to the state, i.e., it reported that the property was its own. Its tax savings thus rested on a false statement of fact. Had the truth been reported, the state would not have allowed the deductions, as the district court stated (28 F. Supp. 927, 933). Nevertheless, the court upheld the old bank's right to recover.

In Reading v. The King [1949] 2 K.B. 232, Reading v. Attorney General, 1951 Appeals Cas. 507, discussed at pages 83, 84, 107, supra, the Crown was held entitled to moneys received by an army sergeant as bribes for assisting in violations of the law of Egypt. The profits resulted from an illegal enterprise, and the Crown itself could not have engaged in that enterprise. The court held that fact no bar to the Crown's rights, and no reason to let the wrongdoer keep the enrichment.

This is in accord with what Mr. Justice Story said in 3 Story's Equity Jurisprudence (14th Ed.) Sec. 1663, p. 303:

> "One of the most common cases in which a Court of Equity acts upon the ground of implied trusts in invitum is where a party has received money which he cannot conscientiously withhold from another party. * * * And therefore whenever any interest arises, the true question is, not whether money has been received by a party of which he could not have compelled the payment, but whether he can now, with a safe conscience, ex aequo et bono retain it."

G. PETITIONER IS NOT BARRED BY NON-PRESENTATION OF ITS CLAIMS TO THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

In its brief in opposition to the petition for certiorari, respondent contended that petitioner's claims were cut off, though valid, because not presented to the bankruptcy court in respondent's reorganization proceedings. This defense was strenuously urged in both courts below and it was adopted by neither, but it was pointed out by Judge Fee in his dissent in the Court of Appeals as without merit.

Petitioner's Claims Arose After the Revesting of the Railroad Properties in Respondent.

Liabilities and obligations arising from use of another's property or rights by a post-reorganization company may be enforced without impairment by reason of the reorganization proceedings. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Savannah Union Station Co., 181 F.2d 267 (5 Cir.).

As said in Texas and Pacific Railway Company v. Johnson, 151 U.S. 81 at 103:

"* * * we are aware of no principle which would justify us in holding that a court, under the circumstances which existed here, could part with its jurisdiction over property by the complete surrender thereof to its owner, and at the same time constructively retain jurisdiction over such property so as in that respect to bind those who would otherwise be unaffected by its orders."

Here the reorganization court did not even purport to reserve jurisdiction to supervise claims arising after the revesting.[44]

As said by Judge Fee below,

> "It is inconceivable that a decree of reorganization prevents the company, when released from tutelage, from entering into engagements and incurring liabilities. Otherwise, the reorganization would be perpetual. See In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F. Supp. 857, 873." (R. 2252, fn. 10)

Petitioner's claims arose after the reorganization. The properties revested in respondent on December 31, 1944, and the trustees then surrendered control of operations to it (R. 2215). The claim for refund of 1942 taxes, as well as the 1944 tax return, was filed thereafter (R. 2217). The trustees had nothing to do with either. Respondent argues that the income to which the returns pertained accrued while the railroad was being operated by the trustees. But respondent assumed the obligation to pay the taxes on that income by the "Assumption Agreement" required of it under the "revesting order" (see p. 52, supra). The liability thereafter remaining was respondent's, not the trustees'. It was the reorganized respondent, not the trustees, who then utilized petitioner's loss and rights to avoid paying taxes and to discharge that liability.

[44]Nor could it. As said in Reese v. Beacon Hotel Corporation, 149 F.2d 610 at 611: "* * * reservation of jurisdiction beyond what is requisite to effectuate a plan of reorganization is beyond the power of the reorganization court." Here the plan was formulated, approved and confirmed before anything was done that eventually led to the tax savings. Cf. Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132.

As respects the 1943 taxes, as well as those just mentioned, a claim for an accounting of the tax savings could not accrue before there were tax savings, i.e., before August, 1947, when the Treasury accepted the returns pursuant to a settlement wholly negotiated and effected by respondent after it emerged from the reorganization, as the District Court found (R. 262, 468). And it accrued when respondent refused to account. The failure to account was the wrongdoing.

Among the assets which the trustees turned over to respondent in December 1944 were $7,100,000 in government bonds, earmarked as a reserve for the payment of 1943 taxes. The tax savings resulted from the subsequent acts of the respondent in adopting the returns as filed, and in the name of petitioner prevailing upon the tax authorities to accept them. For example, respondent's Annual Report for 1944, issued in May, 1945 (5 months after it was out of reorganization), refers to the reserves as maintained to protect respondent in the event of a "ruling adverse to the company's contention that it was not liable for any Federal income or excess profits taxes for the calendar year 1943 and the first four months of 1944" (R. 514). Note that mention is here made of the respondent Company, not of the trustees.[45]

[45]The 1943 returns had been filed, not in the name of the trustees, but in the name of respondent as an affiliate of petitioner, and the returns were signed, not by the trustees but by Mr. Elsey as respondent's president. (See in P 4A the "Return of Information and Authorization and Consent of Subsidiary Corporation Included in a Consolidated Income Tax Return.")

The Plan of Reorganization itself contemplated that, vis-a-vis the creditors who were to become the stockholders of the reorganized Company, the income after January 1, 1939 was to be treated as if the reorganized Company had come into ownership and possession of the properties on January 1, 1939 (R. 2183, para. 7).

As respondent's witness, Mr. Polk, testified, "this was a doubtful item and it was not until the Bureau had finally allowed the settlement that I knew that we had the benefit of it" and "* * * any action [about tax savings] was premature until the liability to the government was determined. You cannot calculate any savings until you know * * * the liability under the returns as filed" (R. 1459, 1460).

The Bureau's field examiner concluded in May, 1946, that the deduction should be disallowed.[46] Tax counsel then took the matter up with the Internal Revenue Agent in Charge. In order to do this, he had to procure a power of attorney from petitioner, through Mr. Curry (R. 1424). Obtaining and utilizing the power of attorney was an act of the respondent, not of the trustees.

After an adverse decision by the Agent, the matter was taken to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in Washington and there settled in 1947 (R. 1426, et seq.). None of this involved any acts of the trustees.

In 1947 and before the tax settlement was made, respondent was advised in writing by petitioner that it expected an accounting of the tax savings, if respondent succeeded in having the government accept the returns as filed (p. 25, supra). Respondent had its choice then whether to seek to have those returns accepted or not. The tax savings were the result of its action at that time.

[46]The government's audit of the returns did not even become active until the latter part of 1945 (R. 1419), the field examiner did not complete his work of examining the returns until May 1946 (R. 1423), and the audit was not completed by April 1947 (R. 1788).

Respondent Assumed All Liability for Petitioner's Claims.

Even if it could be said that the liability was created in part when the trustees filed the consolidated returns for 1943, respondent assumed that liability by the Assumption Agreement. As Judge Fee said (R. 2253, fn. 18), "defendant cannot escape under any theory since it is under bond to pay all claims against the trustees."

The bankruptcy court decreed no bar of claims except such as may be found in the "revesting order" of November 27, 1944 (R. 36). Paragraph 11 of that order fixed the date of the consummation of the plan as December 29, 1944, and provided that "the said Railroad Company shall thereupon be forever released and discharged from all of its debts, obligations and liabilities, except as herein provided" (R. 51, 52).

This was no bar to the present claim, for two reasons. First, the bar relates to "its" debts, i.e., those of the railroad company existing at the time reorganization proceedings commenced in 1935, not to claims arising from the trustees' acts. Second, the revesting order expressly excepted from its bar certain obligations. In paragraph 8 it "authorized and directed" defendant "to execute and deliver

* * *

> "(a) agreement providing for the assumption of certain obligations, liabilities, contracts, agreements and leases of the debtor and the debtor's Trustees, substantially in the form attached to this order as 'Exhibit D', the form and provisions of which are hereby approved;". (R. 45, 46).

An Assumption Agreement was then executed by respondent in December, 1944. Therein defendant agreed to

"2. Assume any and all outstanding current liabilities and obligations incurred by said Trustees * * * and generally any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business, including liabilities and obligations hereafter arising up to midnight December 31, 1944." (R. 1711, 1713)

By order of May 21, 1945, approving the trustees' final report, the bankruptcy court found in paragraph 4 that by the Assumption Agreement the "Debtor Company assumed and agreed to perform all contracts, leases, agreements, liabilities and obligations of the Trustees remaining in effect on December 31, 1944" (R. 1987, 1988).

On November 15, 1948, Mr. Coulson submitted his bill to respondent for $300,000 for tax services rendered in part to the trustees in connection with the subject matter of this suit (R. 1749), and he was paid. No one asserted that that claim was barred by non-presentation to the bankruptcy court.

Moreover, claims arising from the trustees' acts could not be barred for failure of presentation without giving notice. Any attempt to do so would violate due process. In re Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 136 F.2d 633 (3 Cir.), cer. den. 320 U.S. 805; In re Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District, 62 F. Supp. 651 (N.D. Cal.). "Notice is a very essential feature of the Bankruptcy Act if the rights of creditors are to be limited or curtailed," Investment Building v. Finance Co. of America, 105 F.2d 345 at 347 (3 Cir.). And see Texas & Pacific Railway v. Johnson, 151 U.S. 81 at 103.

No notice was given to claimants to present any claims arising from the trustees' operations, as distinguished from claims existing against the debtor at the time proceedings were instituted in 1935. Nor did the court make any order directing that such notice be given. No such order was made because no bar was intended. The absence of such an order and of notice confirms that the Assumption Agreement was intended to be as broad and as complete as its language indicates.[47]

[47]The purpose of bankruptcy and reorganization proceedings is to discharge or readjust debts existing at the commencement of the proceedings, not to destroy claims arising from acts of the court's officers. Proceedings under the railroad reorganization provisions of the Bankruptcy Act (formerly Section 77, now 11 U.S.C., Sec. 205, 49 Stat. 911) are essentially enlarged receivership proceedings. 5 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th ed.) p. 467. The provisions of the act "carr[y] with [them] the application to railroad reorganizations of decisions and authorities applicable to receiverships." 5 Collier 493.

The practice in railroad receiverships was well settled when Section 77 was enacted. When the assets of the debtor were sold, the purchaser was required to assume all liabilities arising from the receiver's acts, although the receiver himself was personally discharged. Cf. Hanlon v. Smith, 175 Fed. 192; 1 Clark on Receivers (2d ed.) Sec. 494, at p. 677. When the assets were returned to the debtor, enriched or bettered by the receiver's acts or operations, the party receiving them was held liable for the claims arising out of the receiver's acts even though the claims were not presented to the receivership court within a time fixed by it. Cf. discussion in Bartlett v. Cicero Light, Heat & Power Co., 52 N.E. 339 at 341, 342; 177 Ill. 68; also 1 Clark on Receivers (2d ed.) p. 1008.

Leading cases are Texas & Pacific Railway Company v. Johnson, 151 U.S. 81, and Texas & Pacific Railway Company v. Bloom, 164 U.S. 636, where this Court emphasized that two purposes are to be served when a receivership is to be closed: (1) the receiver should be protected; but (2) all just claims arising from his conduct should be also protected. These purposes were there attained by construing a bar order as cutting off the receiver's personal liability and precluding subsequent recourse in the receivership proceedings but as not precluding recourse in any other competent Respondent May Not Retain the Enrichment by Denying That It Dominated and Controlled Petitioner's Officers. To the Extent That the Court of Appeals Proceeded on the Premise of Lack of Such Domination and Control, It Exceeded Its Appellate Office.

VI.

As we have seen, the majority opinion in the Court of Appeals held that petitioner may not recover although respondent appropriated its rights by dominating and controlling it. But concurrently the majority asserted that petitioner, not respondent, filed the tax returns and that respondent did not dominate and use petitioner's officers.

The trial court repeatedly found, both formally and informally, that respondent did dominate petitioner and used petitioner's name to avail itself of the tax credits. Its views were expressed more than once on this issue (see pages 27-forum against the party receiving the assets, despite lack of filing of the claims in the receivership court.

At the instant of time when any plan of railroad reorganization is being consummated there are four possible claims of liability that may be in existence, viz.: (1) liability of the debtor itself for its own debts and liabilities, i.e., the debts existing at the commencement of reorganization proceedings; (2) liability of the property and assets of the debtor in the hands of the trustees to pay claims of stockholders as such and to pay claims of creditors of the debtor existing at the onset to the bankruptcy; (3) personal liability of the trustees arising from their operations; and (4) liability of the property and assets to pay obligations arising from the trustees' operations.

11 U.S.C., Sec. 205(f) provides for discharge of the first three classes of liabilities on transfer by the trustees of the properties formerly held by them at consummation of the plan of reorganization. But, consistent with previous equity principles, no provision is made for freeing the property from liability created by the trustees' operations. Furthermore, the Act (11 U.S.C., Sec. 205(c)(7)) makes provision for requiring claims existing against the debtor to be presented in order to determine who may participate in any proposed plan of reorganization. But it has no reference to claims which may subsequently arise from operations of the trustees, particularly such as arise after the plan has not only been formulated and adopted but also put into effect, as here.

31, supra, where they are set out in some detail). And there can be no question that the record required these findings (see statement of facts at pp. 10-27, supra). We shall not repeat our statement of the facts other than to show that the assertion in the majority opinion of the Court of Appeals is not a statement of fact but a conclusion based on irrelevancies.

A. THE ASSERTION THAT THERE WAS NO DOMINATION AND CONTROL HAS NO SUPPORT IN THE RECORD; IT CANNOT BE SUBSTANTIATED AND IS SIMPLY A CONCLUSION BASED ON IRRELEVANCIES.

The assertion in the majority opinion is actually a conclusion based on the alleged past practice of filing consolidated returns and a statement that the returns were prepared under the supervision of petitioner's president and independent tax counsel, and that everyone acted in the open (R. 2226).

Thus the court asserted that what was done was "in accordance with past practice of the group and under the supervision of the Corporation's president, as in former years" (R. 2226). We have shown that "past practice" is irrelevant (pp. 121-124, supra). Premised on this alleged "past practice," the opinion states that petitioner's officers, by which it can only mean Curry, acted in conformity with petitioner's "policy and directions" (R. 2229). But the undisputed facts, and they were so found in the trial court, are as follows:

Curry signed the various papers without consulting petitioner's Board of Directors and without being advised that the corporation was free not to sign. The Board did not know that petitioner's loss was being used in consolidated returns to offset respondent's income. It did not even know that the loss could be used for tax purposes. (See pp. 14, 27, supra)

When the majority opinion states that the consolidated returns were filed by petitioner, it can mean no more than that petitioner's figurehead president, Curry, a clerk in respondent's employ, signed them in its name on the instruction of respondent's counsel, Polk, who prepared them. "Tax matters were wholly Greek to me" Curry testified (R. 808). Resting on the irrelevant past practice, the majority opinion further states that in prior years Curry had "supervised preparation of consolidated returns." But even then he had supervision only in the sense that he was office manager; he had no understanding of the returns (R. 807-809).

The majority opinion remarks (R. 2225) that Mr. Polk wrote a letter in May 1943 to Curry stating the possibility of using petitioner's loss. The letter was addressed to Curry as vice president of respondent, not as an officer of petitioner (R. 588, 589). Nor did it advise that the loss could be used. It merely "commented rather than suggested * * * since it is paradoxical" (R. 591). Not until December 1943 did respondent's tax counsel decide in his own mind that tax law would permit use of the loss (R. 1448, 1484). He did not then or ever advise petitioner. Instead he came to San Francisco to advise respondent, and the decision to use the loss by filing a consolidated return in petitioner's name was made by respondent's president, Elsey (R. 1448, 1268).

Respondent's counsel then wrote it an opinion concerning the use of the loss (R. 606). No copy went to petitioner or to Curry (R. 665). The various papers were then prepared under the direction of respondent's tax counsel, Polk. Curry had no part in their preparation. He signed on counsel's direction (R. 663, 667, 1418, 1442).

The majority opinion asserts that the use of the loss was not concealed, and that "everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed" (R. 2226).[48] While directors knew of the filing of consolidated returns, they did not know of the use of the loss (see p. 14, supra). That use was never revealed to petitioner's governing body, its board. The fact that a trespasser does not conceal his trespass does not absolve him. There must be consent by the party on whose property the trespass is made. Consent requires revelation, knowledge and agreement.

The majority opinion further bases its conclusion on the statement (R. 2226) that the filing of consolidated returns and the use of petitioner's loss "was under the guidance of independent tax experts" (R. 2226). The adjective "independent" has no meaning in the facts of this case. These experts were Mr. Polk and his partners in the law firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, who had long been and were the attorneys for the James Interests. They became the tax attorneys of respondent a week following this Court's decision approving the reorganization plan. They were compensated solely by respondent and were paid $300,000 for their services in advising and directing the filing of consolidated returns and the use of petitioner's loss. They were also reimbursed for the moneys they had paid Curry following the closing of the New York office when he and petitioner's files were removed to the office of Polk and Coulson. Polk's recognition of his status as attorney for [48] For this statement the court cites a remark of the trial court made about half way through the trial, not a finding.

respondent, working solely in its interests, is shown by his testimony why he had ignored petitioner in carrying on the settlement negotiations with the Treasury; Polk testified "My responsibility was to them [respondent] and not the corporation [petitioner]" (R. 1431). How his firm could be "independent" it is difficult to conceive.[49]

B. THE COURT BELOW MADE FINDINGS AB INITIO TO AFFIRM THE JUDGMENT UPON A LEGAL THEORY DIFFERENT FROM THAT ON WHICH THE TRIAL COURT ACTED, AND THESE FINDINGS WERE CONTRARY TO WHAT THE TRIAL COURT MADE CLEAR IT WOULD HAVE FOUND, HAD IT CONSIDERED THE ISSUES MATERIAL, AS WELL AS CONTRARY TO THOSE ACTUALLY MADE.

Two things are clear: (1) The trial court found that respondent dominated petitioner and used the latter's officers. (2) That is the only possible deduction from the facts found and from the record. Even if this were not true, then, as pointed out in 65 Harvard Law Review at 1258, commenting on this case, the moment "the issue of control [is] determinative of whether there could be recovery * * *, it would seem necessary for the court to have remanded to the district court for findings on that issue."

[49] For these facts, see pages 15-17, 21-26, supra. The majority opinion remarks further that the employment of the "independent tax experts" was upon the suggestion of petitioner's general counsel, Mr. Nicodemus. At that time Mr. Nicodemus was also an attorney for respondent (R. 1032), and his suggestion was that respondent employ tax counsel, not that petitioner do so (R. 544). Even if Mr. Nicodemus thereafter knew of the use of the loss, a corporation loses none of its properties or rights because it has an attorney who is also attorney for the party who appropriates them. In fact, Mr. Nicodemus testified that he did not know of the use of petitioner's loss until December 1945 or early 1946 (R. 1072-1073), long after the last return. If the issue of his knowledge were relevant, a finding thereon can only be made by the trial court. Without having heard the witness, an appellate court cannot find against his testimony. The trial court stated that the issue was "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial." (R. 1076).

This is not a case where an appellate court has reversed a judgment because it believes the findings to be "clearly erroneous." What occurred here is, so far as we can find, unprecedented. Here an appellate court, sweeping aside a trial court's legal theories as unsound, has affirmed on a theory presupporting a set of facts contrary to what that court has found either formally or informally by stating that it would have so found had it deemed them material, after hearing the witnesses and presiding over a living trial.

Nor is this a case where an appellate court, in affirming a judgment on a legal theory different from that of the lower tribunal, does so on the basis of facts found below. Here the legal theory is new and rests on facts found ab initio by the the appellate court.

The majority opinion says (R. 2235):

> "The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of any duty owed to Corporation. As the trial court stated, 'The so-called "duality of control" much discussed and emphasized, is not important.'"

A casual reading of this extraordinary statement would suggest that the trial court had found absence of domination. But what the trial court said in its opinion, which it adopted as its findings, was this (R. 272):

> "Whether there was, or was not, 'duality of control' respecting the directorates of the two companies, appears to me to be not too important. True, there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control.'"

And by "duality of control" it said that it meant

> "that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant." (R. 264)

The trial court declined to make a formal finding on any facts not material to the two legal theories on which it based its decision.[50] It concluded that "there is little factual dispute pertinent to the issue decided," i.e., pertinent to its legal theories (R. 276), and that "The so-called 'duality of control,' much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue," i.e., the issue deemed by it to be important (R. 274).

But, while declining to amplify its findings formally, the trial court, after hearing all the witnesses and performing the function which the law assigns to a trial court, made clear that, had it believed the issue material, it would formally find in accordance with petitioner's claim, i.e., that respondent controlled petitioner and by means of that control caused it to file the consolidated returns for respondent's benefit. On the settlement of the findings it said that "there is no question about that" (see p. 30, supra). The importance which this Court attaches to a trial court's ability to see the witnesses face to face is shown by United States v. Oregon Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 339 (April 28, 1952).

[50] Contrary to an assertion in the majority opinion below, the trial court gave permission to counsel to submit findings only if they were limited to the issues relevant to its theories (R. 276).

The Court of Appeals held that the trial court erred in what it considered the "essential equitable considerations" and in its two legal theories, and therefore that its findings did not support its judgment.

Judge Fee's dissenting opinion clearly states the situation presented by that holding (R. 2241):

> "Thus the two grounds advanced [by the Trial Court] to sustain the judgment fail. The cause should be reversed for failure to state adequate findings to support the judgment. Findings must be made in the Trial Court. Appellate courts have no such right or function. The majority opinion attempts to accomplish justification of the result below by drawing inferences, deductions and conclusions from evidence which they claim to find in the record. It would be possible for other judges to set up a diametrically opposite set of facts from which a judgment in favor of plaintiff might be based. The very reason that Rule 52 requires findings of fact is illustrated by the majority opinion. For the technical difficulties of finding a basis of fact for this judgment are many. Indeed, such difficulties are insurmountable."

Earlier Judge Fee had said (R. 2239):

> "There are no findings of fact [by the Trial Court] which support the judgment of the Trial Court or the affirmance thereof by a majority of this Court. The cause should be remanded for this reason alone."

Thus Judge Fee has made it clear (1) that on the record it would be impossible to make a finding that would support a judgment for respondent and (2) that the Court of Appeals had no power to do so, that therefore it could not affirm the judgment, but at most could only remand for findings.

C. THE FUNCTION TO FIND FACTS IS IN THE TRIAL COURT, NOT THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Where a trial court fails to find on essential issues, the cause must be remanded.

R.C.P. Rule 52(a) provides that the trial judge "shall find the facts." That rule "was advisedly made mandatory * * *." 5 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.), p. 2657, fn. 21.

Where a finding has been made in the trial court, a Court of Appeals may set it aside where it is "clearly erroneous" and may reverse the judgment in consequence. But when a Court of Appeals does not have the benefit of an initial finding on a material fact by the trial court, it may not itself supply it.

"It is not the function of [an appellate court] to search the record and analyze the evidence in order to supply findings which the trial court failed to make." Kelley v. Everglades Dist., 319 U.S. 415, 421; Securities & Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 88. A reversal should follow failure to find at all on an issue held to be material. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 304 U.S. 55.

The Courts of Appeals have repeatedly so stated the law.[51]

[51] E.g., Waialua Agricultural Co. v. Maneja, 178 F.2d 603, 607, 608 (9 Cir.): "It is not the function of an appellate court to make findings on its own account." "The absence of findings * * * leaves no pediment on which a judgment can stand"; Jacuzzi Bros. Inc. v. Berkeley Pump Co., 191 F.2d 632, 638 (9 Cir.): ". . . the law does not commit that function to us, but solely the power to reverse if his findings be clearly erroneous"; Helbush v. Finkle, 170 F.2d 41, 42 (9 Cir.): Where a determination "would necessitate findings on questions on which the District Court has made no findings * * * such findings should be made by the District Court, not by this Court"; Paramount Pest Control Service v. Brewer,

There is an essential difference in the function of an appellate court and a trial court. As stated in oft-cited Saginaw Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Commission, 96 F.2d 554, 559 (D.C. Cir.), an appellate court's function is to compare (1) rulings with the law and (2) findings with the record, not to extract findings from the record itself. When it has no specific finding before it, it has nothing to compare against the record and should reverse. So also Commissioner v. Kolb, 100 F.2d 920 (9 Cir.).

The vice of exploring the record to find facts ab initio is not only that it involves the appellate court in a new kind of task, but that it deprives the litigant of an opportunity to be heard. No proper machinery exists in an appellate court to settle findings in the first instance.

The Majority Opinion Sets Up a Novel and False Principle Concerning the Power of an Appellate Court.

The majority opinion disposes of the lack of findings to support its theory by saying that "Findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal," and that an appellate court "may waive the defect on the ground that the error is not substantial in the particular case," if it feels able to find the facts itself (R. 2236). It supports this assertion by citing three cases, Mayo v. Lakeland Highlands Canning Co., 309 U.S. 310; Goodacre v. Panagopoulos,

---

170 F.2d 553, 554 (9 Cir.): "This Court of Appeals has no power ab initio to consider" issues on which no findings were made.

So also Jones v. Waterman SS Corporation, 155 F.2d 992, 997 (3 Cir.); Kistler v. Gingels, 171 F.2d 912 (8 Cir.); Campbell v. Campbell, 170 F.2d 809 (D.C. Cir.); McClure v. O. Henry Tent & Awning Co., 184 F.2d 636, 639 (7 Cir.); L. Hand, J. in Petterson Lighterage & Towing Corp. v. New York Central R. Co., 126 F.2d 992 (2 Cir.); Girard Trust Co. v. Windt, 178 F.2d 359 (2 Cir.); United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F.2d 416, 433 (2 Cir.); United States v. Forness, 125 F.2d 928, 942 (2 Cir.); Ginsberg v. Royal Ins. Co., 179 F.2d 152, 154 (5 Cir.).

110 F.2d 716 (D.C. Cir.), and Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, 136 F.2d 796 (D.C. Cir.). This Court nowhere stated in the Mayo case that when a case comes up without findings on issues which the appellate court deems material, it may make them ab initio. Its opinion contained a statement that findings are intended to benefit appellate courts. That statement is converted by the court below into a declaration that if the appellate court decides to find the facts itself it may dispense with findings by the trial court.

In Goodacre v. Panagopoulos and in Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, there was no lack of supporting findings but merely informality or irregularity in the mode of expressing them.

VII.

The Court of Appeals Erred in Denying Petitioner the Right to Petition for a Rehearing In Banc

After decision below, petitioner filed a petition for rehearing in banc under 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c). Two of the three judges constituting the panel which heard the appeal struck the petition as "being without authority in law" (R. 2259-2260). Judge Fee, dissenting, suggested a "rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges" (R. 2262). Petitioner then filed a petition asking leave to reinstate the petition for consideration by the entire court (R. 2263-2282). This the court, in banc, denied, declaring that it "declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings" (R. 2295). Chief Judge Denman dissented (R. 2296 and 2313).

The main ground of the ruling is that once a case has been assigned to a panel of three judges, it is in their jurisdiction, and the remainder of the court has no power to participate unless two of the three should vote to relinquish the case to the whole court. The other judges, the court said, "may not intrude themselves"; any petition for rehearing "must necessarily be treated as addressed to" the panel and "solely for [its] disposition," and if a majority of the panel denies the petition "that ends the matter" (R. 2294).

This decision, and the practice which it decrees, places the Ninth Circuit in conflict with the statute, with the holdings of this Court, and with the practice of the District of Columbia and Third Circuits.

CONFLICT WITH THE STATUTE.

While recognizing that a Court of Appeals has power to direct a hearing in banc initially, the court below held that the power is lost by an assignment to a panel so that there is no power to grant a *re*hearing in banc. The statute, 28 U.S.C., Sec. 46(c), draws no such distinction. It provides:

> "Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service."

CONFLICT WITH THE HOLDING OF THIS COURT.

The statute was occasioned by a conflict between the Ninth Circuit, which held that the court could not sit in banc and the Third, which held that it could (Lang's Estate v. Commissioner, 97 F.2d 867 (9 Cir. 1938); Commissioner v. Textile Mills Corporation, 117 F.2d 62 (3 Cir., 1940)). Upholding the Third, and rejecting the view of the Ninth, this Court held that hearings could be had in banc, Textile Mills Corporation v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326.

S. 1053 was then introduced in the 77th Congress to give more explicit expression to the procedure approved by this Court. The hearing on the bill shows that it was contemplated that litigants could petition for hearings in banc.[52] While not then enacted, the bill was adopted in substance as Section 46(c) upon revision of the Judicial Code in 1948. It "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case." (Reviser's note.)

Citing that case, this Court in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649 (1942), on certiorari to the Ninth Circuit, remanded the case "for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc." Thereby it necessarily construed the statute as giving to the litigant "authority in law" to file a petition for rehearing in banc and to the court power to grant it.

The Ninth Circuit had held in the Lang case that a court may not be composed of all the circuit judges of the circuit in active service, when there are more than three, because

"Senator Danaher: * * * On whose motion would the court assemble en banc? * * * Who is going to make a motion that the whole court sit on this case? The counsel in the case?

* * * * * * * *

"Mr. Chandler: The counsel can make a suggestion of course." (p. 16)

Again:

"Senator Danaher: Judge Groner, do you gentlemen of the bench have any thought to give us as to how we are going to let a majority of the circuit judges decide * * * when they are going to convene the court en banc?

"Judge Groner: * * * My own thought in the administration of my own court would be that it would not be done unless counsel requested it, or unless the court of its own motion * * * deemed it advisable * * *." (p. 40) that view of the law would "lead to grave difficulties of administration," since "then each judge may well have the right and the duty to demand his place in the hearing on each appeal" (97 F.2d at 870).

Since this Court thereafter held, and Congress thereafter declared, that there is power to sit in banc, it would follow that the other judges do have a right, and in a proper case the duty, to sit.

Despite this Court's decision in the Textile Mills case in 1941 and in the Robinson case in 1942, the Ninth Circuit has remained fixed in its view that a case becomes the exclusive jurisdiction of a particular panel of three judges once it has been assigned to them. While the form of its practice has varied, the substance has remained the same.[53]

[53] In 1943, in Crutchfield v. United States, 142 F.2d 170, the senior circuit judge "refuse[d] to convene the court en banc even to consider the question of the jurisdiction of the court en banc to take over a case pending before three judges * * * either on the petition of the litigant or * * * a dissenting judge of the three-judge panel." The language and the italics are that of Judge Denman, the dissenting judge. The ground of the refusal was

> "that once the three judges so assigned by the whole court to consider the case have rendered judgment * * * only the setting aside of the judgment by two or more of the three judges participating in the decision permits a petition for a rehearing en banc." (p. 180)

In 1945, in Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 175 F.2d 983, two judges in a panel of three denied a petition for rehearing in banc over Chief Judge Denman's dissent that two judges had no power "to act on a petition addressed to seven judges." In 1950, in Kronberg v. Halé, 181 F.2d 767, and in three later cases where the panel consisted of but one circuit judge and two district judges (Freuhauf Trailer Co. v. Myers, 181 F.2d 1008; Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Milwaukee v. Gilbert, 182 F.2d 256, and the order of January 30, 1952 in the present case), the panel struck a petition for rehearing in banc as "being without authority in law." And now, by the most recent decision herein, the court has announced a return to the practice of treating a petition for rehearing in banc as addressed to the panel alone.

CONFLICT WITH OTHER CIRCUITS.

Both the District of Columbia and the Third Circuits entertain and grant petitions for rehearing in banc. The practice of the District of Columbia Circuit is shown by a letter of Chief Judge Stephens, and citations therein, quoted in Chief Judge Denman's dissenting opinion (R. 2313), and by this Court's records in Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce v. Dollar, No. 247, October term 1951, pp. 52, 61, 62 therein.

THE RIGHT TO PETITION FOR A REHEARING IN BANC COMPORTS WITH REASON AND PRINCIPLE.

Commenting on Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury (supra, footnote 53), 63 Harvard Law Review 1449 said that > "since the three judges here could not under § 46 have ordered a rehearing, their action in considering the petition seems singular" (p. 1451)

and

> "* * * fuller development of the rules governing the procedure by which the hearings are granted or denied seems both necessary and practicable. * * * perhaps formal petition of counsel, as in the instant case, is the most suitable method for initiating a hearing en banc in a particular case. * * * The petition should, it seems, be entitled to such consideration that denial of the petition results only when a majority of the individual judges are unwilling to grant it." (p. 1450)

After the decision below, Circuit Judge Pope expressed the view, similar to that of Chief Judge Denman's but contrary to that of the rest of the court, that the full court has power to grant a rehearing in banc but, contrary to

Chief Judge Denman, that a litigant is not entitled to petition for such action.[54]

A litigant must have the right to request a court to exercise a power which it possesses and to grant the kind of relief which the law empowers it to grant. Since hearings in banc can be ordered by a majority of the active circuit judges and only by them, a litigant must be entitled to have his request presented to them all for consideration and action. Two judges ought not to have the power to prevent the other five from even being apprised of the request. If two district judges are on a panel, they ought not to be able to prevent the circuit judges, alone qualified to pass on the question, from acting. The question is not, as stated below, whether a court may "be compelled on the petition of a losing party" to sit in banc (R. 2294), but whether the litigant may request the judges to do so, if they think it warranted in the particular cause.

THE RIGHT TO PETITION COMPORTS WITH FAIR AND EFFICIENT JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION.

The court below also held that to entertain petitions for rehearing in banc would burden the court with overwork and thus nullify the object of the statute in permitting three judge panels (R. 2295). This same reasoning was stated by the same court in 1938 in the Lang case (97 F.2d at 870).

Without depreciating the apprehension of overwork, we submit that it should not lead to a total denial of the right of petition.[55] In many cases no petitions for rehearing are

---

[54] Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, 198 F.2d 790 (9 Cir. Aug. 27, 1952). This was stated to be Judge Pope's interpretation of what the court had held in the present case. We submit that it misconstrues that holding.

[55] Neither the District of Columbia nor the Third Circuit finds that recognition of the litigant's right produces an intolerable burden.

filed, and in still fewer are requests made for a rehearing in banc. Such a petition was here filed only because of the unusual combination of factors noted by Judge Fee in requesting the court to grant a rehearing in banc (R. 2262). Overwork may be a proper factor to consider in deciding whether to grant a petition in a particular cause. But the law, whose art is discrimination, should be able to discriminate between the few cases where such a rehearing is warranted and the many where it is not.

The device of having an appellate court sit in divisions is but the equivalent of having a number of coordinate intermediate appellate courts answerable to another superior to them. The propriety and necessity of permitting a petition to the whole court, where it sits in divisions, or to the higher court, is obvious, and the practice is widespread.

Unless petitions for rehearing in banc are recognized, most circuits will contain not one but a multiplicity of Courts of Appeals with almost an infinity of opportunity for conflict between the views of the different panels. Seven judges can be constituted into 35 different panels of three. With District Judges sitting on the court, as here, there is the possibility of even more panels. If there is to be an opportunity to review their decisions, there must be a right to petition for rehearing in banc unless the burden is to fall on this Court in its certiorari jurisdiction.[56]

[56]It has been argued that a judge should not be required to read long records in cases in which he has not sat in the original hearing. But a reading of a whole record should not ordinarily be necessary to pass on a petition for rehearing in banc, any more than to pass on a petition for certiorari, since the question presented is not the final decision but merely the desirability of consideration by the court, which should turn on the kind of issues presented, not the evidence.

A more extensive discussion of the error of the court below in denying petitioner the right to petition for rehearing in banc, and of the authorities bearing thereon, may be found in our petition for certiorari (at pages 7, 8, 27-30) and in our "Reply Brief in Support of Petition for Certiorari" (at pages 1, 2 and 14-23).

VIII.

Judgment Should Be Directed for Petitioner for the Full Amount of the Tax Savings

For the reasons stated in the preceding pages, we submit, the decision of the Court of Appeals should be reversed. And there is no reason why the cause should be remanded to the District Court for further trial or findings. On the undisputed facts and the findings already made by the District Court, overwhelmingly supported—indeed required—by the record, the cause should be remanded with directions to enter judgment for the petitioner for the amount of the unjust enrichment which the courts below found to be $17,201,739 (p. 4, supra).

Petitioner is entitled to the full amount of the unjust enrichment and not merely part thereof, for two reasons:

First: As shown in Part III of this brief, the purpose and rationale of the tax laws in permitting consolidated returns so require. Recovery by petitioner of the entire amount would be only an amelioration of the loss that made the savings possible, while retention by respondent of any part would be a sheer windfall.

Second: The principles discussed in Part IV also establish petitioner's rights to the entire enrichment. In view of respondent's seizure and appropriation of petitioner's rights, its stubborn refusal to recognize that it was a fiduciary for petitioner, its callous disregard of petitioner's equities and the rights of petitioner's shareholders, a court of equity should not be called upon now to determine how the parties might have allocated the tax savings if respondent had respected petitioner's rights, had advised it of what was proposed to be done and of the legal and economic consequences,[57] and had given petitioner the opportunity to make a bargain. The opportunity was denied, and "the price of denial" should be that respondent now account for all the benefits. Meinhard v. Salmon, 164 N.E. 545, 547, 249 N.Y. 458 (Cardozo, C. J.).

CONCLUSION

We respectfully submit that the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be reversed with direction to remand to the District Court for entry of judgment in favor of petitioners and against respondents.

for tax purposes the net result of its sales department, the net profit or loss on its manufacturing activities, the net profit or loss on its investments, or the net profit or loss on each and every one of its agencies. Such a requirement would be so absurd as to appear on its face ridiculous, and it is only necessary to state the case of a single corporation to demonstrate its absurdity. It is no more absurd, however, when applied to the different departments of a single corporation than it is when applied to the subsidiary corporation of a single unit. For instance, if a single corporation has a manufacturing department and a sales department, and we regard it as absurd to separate them for tax-accounting purposes, it is equally absurd when dealing with two subsidiary corporations, one of which does the manufacturing and the other one of which does the selling, to claim that theoretically they are two separate entities, when as a matter of fact, they are both engaged in a common, inseparable enterprise."

APPENDIX ONE

STATUTES INVOLVED

1. Internal Revenue Code, Section 141.

"(a) Privilege to file consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns. An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of consolidated returns shall be upon the condition that the affiliated group shall make both a consolidated income-tax return and a consolidated excess-profits-tax return for the taxable year, and that all corporations which at any time during the taxable year have been members of the affiliated group making a consolidated income-tax return consent to all the consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax regulations prescribed under subsection (b) prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. The making of a consolidated income-tax return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year, the consolidated returns shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group. * * *

"(b) Regulations. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making consolidated income- and excess-profits tax returns and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the income- and excess-profits-tax liability and the various factors necessary for the determination of such liability, and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability. * * *

"(c) Computation and payment of tax. In any case in which consolidated income-tax and excess-profits-tax returns are made or are required to be made, the taxes shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such returns; except that the tax imposed under section 15 or section 204 shall be increased by 2 per centum of the consolidated corporation surtax net income of the affiliated group of includible corporations. * * *

"(d) Definition of 'affiliated group'. As used in this section, an 'affiliated group' means one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is an includible corporation if—

"(1) Stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

"(2) The common parent corporation owns directly stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

"As used in this subsection, the term 'stock' does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

2. Internal Revenue Code, Section 730.

Relating to excess-profits tax, this is similar to Section 141.

3. Internal Revenue Code, Section 23.

"Deductions from gross income. In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

"(g)(2) Securities becoming worthless. If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) become worthless during the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

* * * * * * *

"(4) Stock in affiliated corporations. For the purposes of paragraph (2) stock in a corporation affiliated with the taxpayer shall not be deemed a capital asset. For the purposes of this paragraph a corporation shall be deemed to be affiliated with the taxpayer only if:

"(A) At least 95 per centum of each class of its stock is owned directly by the taxpayer; and * * *"

4. Internal Revenue Code, Section 52.

"* * * In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control."

5. Title 28 U.S.C., Section 46(c).

"Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."

"In all actions tried upon the facts without a jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon and direct the entry of the appropriate judgment; * * *"

7. Treasury Regulation 104.

"Sec. 23.1. Privilege of Making Consolidated Returns.

"(a) Sections 141 and 152, as amended, give to the corporations of an affiliated group the privilege of making a consolidated return for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. This privilege is given, however, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1941, upon the condition that all corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year for which the return is made consent to these regulations, and any amendments thereof duly prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of the return; and the making of the consolidated return is considered as such consent. * * *"

Sec. 23.15(b): Liability of a Corporation in Bankruptcy or Receivership.

"If, at the time of filing a consolidated return, one or more, but not all, of the members of the affiliated group are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United States or in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, then the liability under paragraph (a) of each such member of the group with respect to the period covered by such return shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability for such period as the several corporations included in the consolidated return may, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, agree upon, or, in the absence of such an agreement, an amount equal to its liability for such year computed as if a separate return had been filed."

Sec. 23.16(a): Scope of Agency of Common Parent Corporation.

"Except as provided in paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section—

"The common parent corporation shall be for all purposes, in respect of the tax for the taxable year for which a consolidated return is made or is required, the sole agent, duly authorized to act in its own name in all matters relating to such tax, for each corporation which during any part of such year was a member of the affiliated group. The corporations, other than the common parent, shall not have authority to act for or to represent themselves in any such matter. * * *"

8. Treasury Regulation 110.

Relating to excess profits tax, this is similar to T. R. 104.

APPENDIX TWO

In the Report of the Senate Finance Committee (70th Congress, 1st Session, Senate Report 960), the following appears (p. 8):

"* * * The permission to file consolidated returns by affiliated corporations merely recognizes the business entity as distinguished from the legal corporate entity of the business enterprise. Unless the affiliated group as a whole in the conduct of its business enterprise shows net profits, the individuals conducting the business have realized no gain. The failure to recognize the entire business enterprise means drawing technical legal distinctions, as contrasted with the recognition of actual facts. The mere fact that by legal fiction several corporations owned by the same stockholders are separate entities should not obscure the fact that they are in reality one and the same business owned by the same individuals and operated as a unit. To refuse to recognize this situation and to require for tax purposes the breaking up of a single business into its constituent parts is just as unreasonable as to require a single corporation to report separately for tax purposes the gains from its sales department, from its manufacturing activities, from its investments, and from each and every one of its agencies. It would be just as unreasonable to demand that an individual engaged in two or more businesses treat each business separately for tax purposes. Much of the misapprehension about consolidated returns will be removed when it is realized that it is only when the corporations are really but one corporation that the permission to file consolidated returns is given, and that no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results. The present law permits the filing of consolidated returns only where one corporation owning at least 95 per cent of the stock of both corporations is owned by the same interest. The provision embodies the business man's conception of a practical state of facts."

Vol. 69, Congressional Record, p. 653, contains the following discussion:

"Mr. Tilson. * * * Let us remember that the provisions of the bill are applicable only where corporations are, in effect, but one corporation, 95 per cent ownership being required. In most cases there is an ownership of 100 per cent. The interests are the same.

"The ability to pay must be governed by the net income of the entire group. Computing the income of each separate corporation is but the basing of an income tax upon paper profits. Our income tax law should be based as nearly as possible upon income actually realized.

"Group organization of corporations, all owned ultimately by the same stockholders, has been developed by modern business for perfectly legitimate reasons, among them being separate accounting for the various parts of an enterprise and the desirability and frequently the necessity, of creating an independent corporation for the purpose of carrying on a particular part of the business, both at home and abroad. The mere fact that by a legal fiction these are separate entities should not obscure the fact that they are in reality one and the same business, owned by the same individuals, and run as a unit. To refuse to recognize this fact and to compel for tax purposes the breaking up of a single business into its constituent parts is just as unreasonable as to require a single corporation to report

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION and ALEXIS I. DuP. BAYARD, RECEIVER, Petitioners,

vs.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, SACRAMENTO NORTHERN RAILWAY, TIDEWATER SOUTHERN RAILWAY, DEEP CREEK RAILROAD COMPANY, THE WESTERN REALTY COMPANY, THE STANDARD REALTY AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY AND DELTA FINANCE CO., LTD.,

Respondents

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF

Respondent presents several affirmative arguments why, even though petitioner's claim be good on the merits, respondent may nevertheless defeat it. Before answering these arguments, we first point out the fallacies of respondents' contentions on the merits.

I

PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER ON THE MERITS

Respondent's case may be summarized in two contentions:

1. There is a "general rule", applicable here, that where consolidated returns are filed, a "loss" company is not entitled to any consideration or compensation from the "gain" companies whose taxes are reduced by the offset of the loss (Br. 42).

2. Petitioner was under a duty to join in consolidated returns and give its loss to respondent (Br. 65).

No court decision supporting either contention is cited.

While respondent also argues that it was not a fiduciary of petitioner and did not cause petitioner's officers to file the consolidated returns (notwithstanding the trial court's finding to the contrary), it asserts that these facts are irrelevant; and it bluntly stands on the proposition that, even though it was a fiduciary, it is under no duty to account, for "petitioners have no claim, whatever the conduct of the parties may have been" (Br. 24).

A. Respondent Ignores the Basic and Unique Fact of This Case, the Severance of the Economic Unity

Respondent's arguments, particularly those about a "general rule", are permeated by its refusal to recognize the unique fact of this case, namely, that this Court's affirmance of the I.C.C. plan severed the economic unity, and that when the returns were filed petitioner had no economic interest whatever in respondent.[1]

This case does not fall in the customary pattern of corporate affiliation. Here the loss which respondent used

[The symbol "O.B." refers to petitioner's opening brief. "Br." refers to respondent's brief.]

[1] Respondent's answer to the unique fact of the case is no more than a denial that there was a severance of the economic unity, plus a mere assertion that the fact is without significance (Br. 59-62). It contends that confirmation of the Plan "severed nothing" (Br. 59) because the "affiliation" continued to April 1944. But that continued "affiliation" was technical only. As for its argument that "'economic unity' in matters of consolidated returns is a false factor" (Br. 60), we refer to O. B. 75 where we anticipated it.

to satisfy its tax liability was its former parent's loss of ownership of the respondent itself.

The "paradox" was recognized by respondent's tax counsel, who were the first to describe it, in their letter which first suggested the possibility of using the loss, where they said, "This is commented on rather than suggested as of certain value, since it is paradoxical to compute a loss upon the operating company's stock which, through the medium of consolidated return reporting, could be used to nullify the very income of the affiliate whose stock had become worthless." (R. 591; O.B. 19). The unique situation was recognized by the trial court, which was moved in its opinion to characterize the tax savings as "amazing and undeserved" (R. 276). How could there be a duty to give respondent an "amazing and undeserved" benefit?

This failure to recognize the severance of the economic unity and the paradoxical nature of the result vitiates respondent's argument based on "past practice" of the parties. It also vitiates its argument founded on alleged practice of "the business community" (Br. 41). If such a practice exists, it relates to a continuing economic unity where the parent benefits by whatever benefits any affiliate. The argument was repeatedly advanced at the trial, but the elaborate evidence offered by respondent to support it was excluded by the trial court, which said (R. 1379):

> "The question would never arise under the general business practice, because I do not think you would ever have any litigation. Absent the kind of situation that you have here between companies that were free agents to agree with one another to file this type of return. Here you have a situation where a third party, a new party, is getting the benefit of this tax situation. * * * the problem that is presented by it is entirely different from what might happen in the ordinary business relationship of parent and subsidiary companies, where you have not the interposition of reorganization proceedings and all that they entail."[2]

This case involves no general question of how losses and savings should be shared between affiliated corporations. It involves the loss to the parent of its ownership in its subsidiary, thus bringing about a severance of the economic unity then and there so that the parent can no longer achieve the benefits of the tax savings through its continued ownership, and where, in the words of Judge Fee, there must be another method of applying the tax remission to the loss that gives rise to it (R. 2248).

Respondent's same basic fallacy vitiates its assertions about the alleged "precedents" (Br. 43-49), including its references to an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission in the late 1920's of utility holding companies, the enactment 8 years later of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, and Rule U-45 issued thereunder by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In our opening brief we anticipated respondent's discussion of Rule U-45 of the S.E.C. and of the S.E.C. accounting release. There is a significant lesson to be drawn from the action of the S.E.C. under its rule, but it is the reverse of what respondent contends. When an affiliate's tax savings resulting from the use of another affiliate's loss could not or might not reach the party suffering the loss through ordinary channels, as by way of dividends or increase of its equity, the S.E.C. has considered it equitable that the benefit of the tax savings be passed directly to the party who suffered the loss. (See discussion in O.B., pp. 68-71)

The Federal Trade Commission investigation related to gas and electric holding companies and practices prevail-

[2] This is not the only instance where respondent's brief makes assertions on the basis of evidence offered by it but excluded by the trial court. Other instances appear at Br. 19, 88 and 89.

ing within groups in which there was a continuing economic entity. What concerned the F.T.C., so far as anything here involved is concerned, was the abuse of accounting practices as the result of which amounts paid as or in lieu of federal taxes were added to operating expenses to increase rates which then redounded to the benefit of the continuing parent.[3]

Respondent asserts that Treasury rulings "assume and provide" for a pro rata allocation of the tax "without tax saving payments" (Br. 46). Nothing could be farther from the fact, and the provisions of the various revenue acts which it cites are the very ones we referred to as recognizing the propriety of agreements between affiliates respecting apportionment (O.B. 126). For instance, Treasury Regulation 104, Sec. 23.15(b), which covers the liability of a corporation in bankruptcy, provides that "the liability * * * of each such member of the group * * * shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability for such period as the several corporations included in the consolidated return may, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, agree upon * * *".

For the protection of the Treasury the regulations list certain circumstances wherein intra-group agreements are not recognized for certain purposes.[4] The very specifica-

[3] The Commission felt that the "amounts paid as federal income tax should be deducted from the net income on which the tax was calculated" and not treated as an expense of operation (Br., App., p. 8, 3rd paragraph), and it condemned certain accounting procedures because they resulted in "an inaccurate recording of the true cost of operations of the electric and gas operating companies" (Br., App., p. 7, end of 1st paragraph). All this is irrelevant to the present case.

[4] For certain purposes it is necessary to determine earnings and profits available for dividends, and to this end taxes chargeable to each affiliate must be determined. For this calculation the Treasury requires the consolidated tax to be apportioned in a certain manner.

Respondent refers to the regulation that, if a parent has reduced its own tax by use of a subsidiary's loss, the base at which the parent holds tion of these instances and purposes shows that for all other purposes the relations of the parties are left to be adjusted by agreement or, in the absence of an agreement, by appropriate principles of equity.

Nowhere does respondent show any practice or cite any case where the loss was that of the parent's stock interest in the subsidiary. The reason is obvious: in the first place, the use of such a loss was first authorized in October 1942; in the second place, this case is "paradoxical".[5]

B. There Is No Support for Respondent's Assertion That Petitioner Was Under a Duty to Join in Consolidated Returns and Give Its Loss to Respondent Gratis

The tax law, the statute and the regulations, impose no such duty, and all the decided cases make clear that a parent corporation is free to join or not to join in consolidated returns as its own interests dictate (O.B. 94-96). Duke Power Co. v. Comm., 44 Fed. 2d 543, cer. den. 282 U.S. 903; George A. Fuller Co. v. Comm., 92 Fed. 2d 72 (2 Cir.); Trinity Building Corporation of New York, 40 B.T.A. 1315; 65 Harvard Law Review 1257:

On what basis, then, does respondent rest the alleged duty? It lists five supposed reasons (Br. 65). Every one would be present if the parent had also gone into bankruptcy or receivership in another court, as in fact it later did, in 1949, in the Delaware Chancery Court (O. B. 4). Yet its the subsidiary's stock for determining capital gains or losses must be reduced accordingly. This recognizes the obvious fact that the parent has reduced its investment in the subsidiary by taking advantage of the loss. There is no provision for reduction of the base where a subsidiary takes advantage of a parent's loss, which is the present case. The regulation shows the Treasury's view of the rationale of consolidated returns to be exactly as we contend, namely, that the parent is the ultimate economic owner of the enterprise and the ultimate beneficiary of tax savings.

[5] Respondent, referring to the Interstate Commerce Commission, admits that the I.C.C. has never ruled on the treatment of consolidated returns, but asserts that it has "rejected tax savings claims" (Br. 48). The two cases cited are not remotely in point. Neither involved the use of one person's losses or tax credits to reduce taxes of another.

receiver could not have been compelled to join in the returns. The Fuller and Trinity cases are directly in point. We proceed to consider each of the five reasons:

1. That in the past the parties have joined in consolidated returns. This argument about "past practice" is vitiated by the fallacy that pervades respondent's whole case, failure to recognize that when the returns were filed petitioner and respondent were economic strangers and respondent had new owners (See O. B, p. 121-124).

2. That in prior years there had accumulated credits and carry-overs resulting from the trustees' operations, which would be lost to it unless consolidated returns should be filed. But such alleged credits and carry-overs were not in fact used in the consolidated returns when filed, and petitioner's loss was the sole offset to respondent's income. In any event, the argument has no bearing on the alleged duty of petitioner to give its loss to respondent or on the duty of respondent to pay for the benefits arising from its use of petitioner's loss.

3. That petitioner "had no income and no use for its loss". We have shown that this argument is without merit. One cannot take another's rights or property, merely because the latter cannot use them himself (O.B. 104-116). Moreover, by joining in consolidated returns, one assumes large burdens, including personal liability for all taxes of the group (see O.B. 98). Here, respondent's tax counsel himself felt doubtful that there would be no tax liability until the settlement in 1947 (R. 1459-60). Yet, entertaining this doubt, respondent imposed a potentially large liability on petitioner. These facts negative any duty to join in returns irrespective of whether one has income or not.

4. That petitioner "as parent was under fiduciary duties to its insolvent subsidiary's creditors". Respondent summarizes this argument by saying that there was "an obligation on the Corporation as parent to exercise its management powers in the best interest of the group" (Br. 32). But petitioner had no management powers; it had none since the onset of the bankruptcy in 1935; there was no longer a "group"; petitioner was not a fiduciary to respondent. The argument ignores the unique and distinguishing fact of this case. Respondent's old creditors, having taken ownership from petitioner, had no right also to take its last remaining asset. We answered this argument in our opening brief (O.B. 99-101, 102-103).[6]

5. That as "sole stockholder [petitioner] was required by the Bankruptcy Act so to act as to preserve the estate." This is but a rephrasing of the fourth reason. Petitioner had no such duty because it had no control or management, and "preservation" of the bankrupt estate does not require gifts of property to the bankrupt. Respondent asserts that the reorganization court would have required petitioner to sign the returns and give away its loss gratis. The sole reason assigned for this contention is that a bankruptcy court has the powers of a court of equity (Br. 65). But no basis for the duty which equity would be called on to enforce is stated. Moreover, a bankruptcy court has the powers of a court of equity only within the limits of its bankruptcy jurisdiction. It had no jurisdiction to enter the supposed order (O.B. 96-97). It is ungenerous to the bankruptcy court to suggest that if it had such power, it would exercise it to deprive petitioner of its property without compensation. On the contrary the presumption must be that the bankruptcy court would insist on just treatment for petitioner.

[6] Respondent argues (Br. p. 88) that under the plan of reorganization the old creditors were not paid in full. This would be irrelevant, even if true (O.B. 102). But the assertion is dubious in fact. Other than the petitioner itself and one wholly-owned subsidiary, both of whom were completely wiped out, the only creditor who did not receive a 100% equivalent was the A. C. James Co. Respondent argues that the new stock issued to the old creditors has not been worth the values assigned by the Plan, namely, $100 for the preferred and $57 and $62 for the common. Evidence of stock quotations offered by respondent in the trial court was excluded (R. 1579-1583). Respondent asks this court to take judicial notice of the quotations. Were such notice permissible, even were the fact relevant, the fact is that the stock has been above the assigned values. As this brief is being written, the common stock is quoted at $64.

As Judge Fee said below (R. 2241):

> "The reorganization court had power to deny plaintiff participation in the assets of its subsidiary, and, as a result, all but nominal values in the shares in the subsidiary were lost. But plaintiff was not in reorganization itself * * * The reorganization court had no jurisdiction of plaintiff or of these property rights."

He added in a footnote (R. 2252):

> "Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132. The error in this proceeding, therefore, was the failure to reorganize plaintiff also. An illustrative case, where the parent was in reorganization, is reported in a series of opinions as In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F. Supp. 857-921. There a consolidated return was filed during the proceedings and the benefits appropriately distributed."[7]

[7] The controlling case on jurisdiction is Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132.

Of this case respondent merely says (Br. 66) that it involved the power of the reorganization court over a stranger to the proceedings, and that petitioner here was a party. But petitioner appeared only to present its views in opposition to the Plan of Reorganization. It thereby submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court only to assert its claims, as stockholder or creditor for cash advances against the debtor, not to give the court jurisdiction over demands which the debtor might

Respondent argues (Br. 70) that petitioner had no right "to bargain" for the use of its loss because the bargaining power would be employed against the reorganization court and that a refusal to make a gift of the use of its loss would be a threat to the court's jurisdiction. But this overlooks the patent distinction just noted. [8]

Repeatedly respondent argues that, if one group member could bargain, all could do so (e. g. Br. 56, 70). But, save for petitioner, the others were still subsidiaries of respondent or of those who desired to use the loss for respondent's benefit. As to them there was still an economic unity. As subsidiaries of respondent they are presumed to act harmoniously with it and for its interests as parent. That is precisely the assumption the law makes in allowing consolidated returns. Duke Power Co. v. Comm., 44 F. 2d 543, cer. den. 282 U. S. 903; Estate of John B. Lewis, 10 T. C. 1080. But, as regards petitioner, the situation was radically different: the economic unity was severed. Thus once again respondent's arguments are vitiated by its same basic fallacy. Furthermore, petitioner was giving more than consent to the filing of consolidated returns. It gave the loss, which saved the taxes (See footnote 8 below). Respondent's subsidiaries did not.

assert against it. In the Callaway case the litigant, South Western, had appeared in the reorganization proceedings to ask that its lease be adopted by the reorganized debtor (see 336 U. S. 132 at 134 and 135), and it was also a creditor in the proceedings (p. 146). Yet the Court of Appeals said that those facts gave no jurisdiction to the reorganization court to compel it to convey rights to the debtor. Benton v. Callaway, 165 F. 2d 877, 882. This court agreed. 336 U. S. at 146.

[8] Respondent also misdescribes the subject-matter of a bargain, by referring to it as mere consent to consolidated returns. But it would be more. The tax savings resulted from the conjunction of two elements, (1) joinder by petitioner in consolidated returns, and (2) the use therein of something belonging to petitioner, to-wit, the loss.

C. Respondent Refuses To Recognize That It Assumed a Fiduciary Relationship to Petitioner and Appropriated Its Loss; That the Benefits Were Not Conferred by Petitioner Either as a Gratuity or by Any Voluntary Act But Were Taken

Respondent contends that retention of the benefits would not be unjust for lack of "some recognized basis—fraud, mistake, duress, undue influence, illegality—for revoking the transfer" to it of petitioner's rights (Br.74). This is not supportable.

Fraud, mistake, and the like are concepts applicable to a voluntary or affirmative act of transfer. Petitioner did not knowingly transfer anything to respondent. The latter simply appropriated a thing of value belonging to petitioner and used it for its own enrichment. The analogies are trespass, conversion and the appropriation by a fiduciary of its cestui's property.

Respondent asserts that "in every windfall situation", wherever one party acquires a windfall, no one else can recover from him (Br. 74). Of course, where A receives an advantage which is unrelated to B, the latter has no right to share in it. There was here no "windfall" in any such sense, for what respondent gained, it gained not as the result of a fortuitous event, but as the direct result of its appropriation of petitioner's rights.[9]

---

[9] The cases cited on this point by respondent (Br. 74) do not support it. In Straube v. Bowling Green Gas Co., 227 S.W. 2d 666, 360 Mo. 132, plaintiff had paid defendant for gas at the rates fixed by a Public Service Commission and sued for a refund merely because defendant acquired the gas from its own supplier at a legal reduction in the latter's rates. In Houck v. Hubbard Milling Co., 167 N. W. 1038, 140 Minn. 186, plaintiff bought wheat from defendant at contract prices and later sued for a refund because defendant had obtained deductions in its own freight rates. The case turned on the construction of the purchase contract. As the court construed that contract, the price at which plaintiff bought wheat was unconnected with defendant's freight rates. Greek Catholic Congregation v. Plummer, 32 A. 2d 299, 347 Pa. 351, is a case where one

Conclusion	25

The failure to distinguish between a case where a plaintiff voluntarily confers benefits and one where the defendant appropriates them is revealed by the argument that a recovery for unjust enrichment may not exceed plaintiff's loss (Br. 75). Respondent invokes the analogy of the discharge of a debt by a surety, who has become such of his own volition, or other purely voluntary discharge by one of another's debt.[10]

The Restatement of Restitution affirms (Section 153, p. 607) that where A by conduct improper toward B has discharged his debt to a third party by the use of B's property or services, B is entitled to restitution, at his election, either of the value of the property or services so used or of the amount of the debt discharged. The rule is the same where A's conduct as respects B is at fault, although not tortious. Restatement, Section 155.

As we have shown (O.B. 77, 104, et seq.), the controlling principle is that "one is entitled to recover for benefit conferred unless he intended to make a gift or acted officiously."

Respondent denies that there was an appropriation of petitioner's rights and asserts that what was done was "routine" (e.g., Br. 14). It could not be routine in view party quitclaims to another whatever interest he might have in a parcel of land and a third party, the owner, sues for the consideration. He then sought to recover the payments received by the main contractor from the owner. In Vanderbilt University v. Williams, 280 S. W. 689, 152 Tenn. 264, neither plaintiff nor defendant had a right to receive rent from a third party, but the third party paid rent to the defendant and plaintiff sought a share.

[10] If the debt is discharged by money payment of less than the face amount, the person discharging it recovers what he paid, and if the debt is discharged with property instead of money he is entitled to its value. These illustrations cast no light on how to determine the value of what is paid. If what is paid is cash, its value is simple to ascertain. If it is not cash, another question arises. Petitioner's loss had a value equal to the benefit conferred, the full amount of the tax savings.

of the basic fact of the severance of the economic unity, the paradoxical nature of what was sought, the fact that it was a newly enacted statute that made it possible and that the right or property taken had a use value of $17 million and was the sole asset of petitioner. "Routine" did not justify respondent's failure to discuss the matter openly with independent representatives of petitioner or advise it of its rights.

It may be that respondent and its officers and attorneys were conscious of no wrong-doing, because they believed, as its brief insists, that petitioner had no rights and was under a duty to join in the returns and to give the use of the loss to respondent gratis. But it was not for respondent to decide these rights or duties unilaterally. It argues that equity does not countenance hard bargains, but taking advantage of its relationship to petitioner and its control of petitioner's president respondent gave petitioner no opportunity to "bargain" at all. It simply elected unilaterally to take everything for itself.

However convinced respondent may have been that it was acting within its rights, it acted at its peril when it made its unilateral decision in its own favor. It was in error as to its rights, and it therefore must account for the full benefit obtained. Cf. Mosser v. Darrow, 341 U. S. 267.

Respondent's Statement of Facts Ignores the Trial Court's Findings

On the manner in which the tax returns were handled, respondent's statement of facts ignores the findings in major respects. For example, it is asserted that the effective decisions to file consolidated returns, using petitioner's loss, were made by petitioner "when it filed the returns" (Br. pp. 17, 22).

But tax counsel, Mr. Polk, testified that "The decisions to file the returns were, of course, made by the company [respondent]" (R. 1450).[11] And, as we have shown (O.B. 28-30) the trial court found that respondent's tax attorneys conceived the idea, decided that they would file the returns, caused them to be filed, and made the settlement with the government (R. 261, 262, 265, 266). The court stated that "there is no question" but that the matter was "conducted by the defendant and its tax counsel, not by the plaintiff" (R. 468), and that "there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of plaintiff's contention" (R. 264, 272) that:

> defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled * * * plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant"[12]

Respondent's discussion treats petitioner's president, Mr. Curry, as if he were petitioner, or as if his capacity were only that of an officer of petitioner, when in fact he received no compensation at all from it, was in respondent's employ, in its pay, and his principal work was for it.[13]

---

[11] So also:

"Q. Who made the decision?

"A. Mr. Elsey, Mr. De Graff [respondent's president and auditor]" (R. 1448).

[12] The court was following the language of the Supplemental Complaint. Respondent asserts (Br. 116) that petitioner "has no standing to exploit the domination theory in view of its express denials of all the interveners' allegations of domination and control." This is without any justification. Subsequent to its answer to the intervener's complaint, petitioner filed a supplemental bill of complaint (R. 208) in which it alleged such domination and control for respondent's benefit and in entire disregard of petitioner's rights. This position was maintained throughout the trial and afterwards. The trial court quoted this allegation and said that it was sustained by a preponderance of the evidence. In the light of this record, respondent's assertion is not only without merit; it is inexplicable.

[13] He was its vice president, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer until April 30, 1945 (P. Ex. 2-A, chart), was in the retainer of its tax counsel until late in 1948, and at all times received a pension from it

The notion is sought to be conveyed that Mr. Curry managed and controlled tax matters for petitioner, when in fact he acted in a clerical capacity, as office manager, and as a "signing" officer who "signed whatever documents they told you to sign" (R. 642). The admitted competence with which he performed these limited functions did not make him into a directing figure, for in all other respects he was a "figurehead" (R. 646-7). During all the years of his connection with tax matters, they were put before him for signing after they were prepared by others over whom he had "supervision" only in the sense that he was office manager, and he had no real understanding of them (R. 807-9).

The truth is disclosed by memoranda passing between Mr. Coulson and Mr. Polk, respondent's tax attorneys. Mr. Coulson wrote:

> "Actually, I happen to know that the only person over at the Corporation office here in New York who has any knowledge of taxes is a girl who is primarily Schumacher's secretary" (R. 539).

Polk replied that "only the lady referred to had any part in the preparation of the return * * * Mr. Curry says they are too impoverished to hire accounting help." (R. 540; and see R. 823, 1403).

Nor is the competence of other officers or directors, much discussed by respondent, relevant. Mr. Schumacher was one of respondent's trustees. Mr. Nicodemus and Mr. Campbell, while holding the title of General Counsel for petitioner were at the same time attorneys for respondent and the trustees and received compensation from them but no compensation from petitioner (P. Ex. 2-A, chart). Judge Sloss had been petitioner's attorney on a specific assignment, to oppose the plan of reorganization. He had no other function, was interested in nothing else, knew nothing about the tax matter (R. 1603-5, 1611-14). Messrs. Wood and Osborn never knew until 1946 that petitioner's stock loss was being used in consolidated returns or were aware that it could be so used (O.B. 14). Mr. Nicodemus testified that he had no knowledge of the use of the loss (O.B. 142), but whatever his knowledge may have been it cannot affect petitioner's rights. He was only an attorney for it, and he was also an attorney for respondent. Even if petitioner's officers and directors had known of the use of its loss, had realized the legal and economic consequences, and with that knowledge had attempted to give away its rights, they could not bind it, because it was not represented by independent officers, and because any attempt to give away its rights without the consent of its stockholders would be beyond their powers.

(O.B. 15, 22). Respondent would have it appear that its tax counsel retained Curry as an act of philanthropy to a retired man. Were it so, still the fact that the retainer had its roots in benevolence would not justify taking advantage of the relationship so as to use Curry as a tool to forward respondent's interests at petitioner's expense. Actually Curry was so retained, as respondent's counsel wrote, because "it seems to us essential that we have Mr. Curry available" for tax purposes, to be at tax counsel's "disposal in connection with the consolidated returns", and as soon as the statute of limitations had run against the government's reopening the tax settlement, Curry was given orders to vacate (O.B. 22, 23).

For the same reason respondent's discussion of a casual conversation of Mr. Nicodemus with some attorneys who represented no parties in this case is pointless (Br. 27). The trial court dismissed the subject as irrelevant (R. 1075).[14] In fact, in that conversation Mr. Nicodemus did not have in mind the use of the stock loss (R. 1071).

[14] It said (R. 1075-6):

"I do not see that when this witness learned about any of these things has any relationship to the question that you are presenting here. * * * I would much rather hear your arguments and all the arguments on the important and vital issues of this case than all this stuff about what conversations this witness had with some lawyer on a train going to Washington."

II

THERE IS NO MERIT TO THE TECHNICAL ARGUMENTS BY WHICH RESPONDENT WOULD DEFEAT PETITIONER'S CLAIM THOUGH WHOLLY JUST.

A. The Reorganization Proceedings Did Not Bar Petitioner's Claim.

Respondent asserts that "in the course of [the reorganization] proceedings the court effectually adjudicated that petitioner's claim was invalid and barred its assertion against the reorganized company" (Br. 93) and that it was "disallowed" (Br. 100). These unfortunate statements must have been made inadvertently. There was no adjudication and no disallowance. The claim was not even involved in those proceedings and was never brought to the court's attention.

The tax savings arose from acts occurring in their entirety after the plan of reorganiaztion was approved, consented to, confirmed and consummated. As Judge Fee said below (R. 2251):

> "Since the tax settlement between the Government and the corporation occurred after the decree in reorganization, there could be no res judicata."

Respondent also asserts that the trial court not only held that petitioner's claim was without merit but also that it "was in any event foreclosed by the failure to present it to the bankruptcy court" (Br. 19, 21). This is not so. One of the two reasons why the trial court held against petitioner's claim was its conclusion that it was a "circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership, rejected in the reorganization plan" (R. 272), a line of reasoning we have shown to be fallacious (O.B. 49-56). But the trial court did not hold that the claim was barred for failure to present it. That argument, strenuously urged by respondent in both courts below, was adopted by neither.

We have shown (O.B. 131-133) that the contention is not valid for two separate reasons:

1. The claim arose after the revesting of the properties in respondent.

2. Respondent expressly assumed "all liabilities and obligations * * * arising out of the possession, use, or operation of the debtor's properties by said trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business * * *" (R. 1711, 1713), and the court exempted from its bar order claims so assumed. This was pursuant to the principle that the purpose of reorganization proceedings is to discharge or readjust debts existing at their commencement, and that claims arising from acts of the court's officers are to be protected when proceedings are closed, consistently with discharge of personal liability of the court's officers.

Since the tax returns for 1944 and the claim for refund of 1942 taxes were prepared and filed after the revesting, respondent's arguments have no possible pertinence to them and are probably addressed to the saving of 1943 taxes.

To circumvent the fact that the claim arose after the revesting, respondent argues that "contingent" claims may be presented (Br. 102), and that the reorganization court must "consider and act upon all possible claims which might be asserted against the reorganized company" (Br. 90). But the kind of "contingent" claims that may be presented are such as arise out of contracts of the debtor in existence, or out of its acts occurring, at or before the time the bankruptcy commenced, certainly not claims which arise by reason of an enrichment of the party to whom the assets have been returned, occurring after the bankruptcy, merely because the enrichment may in some way have its roots in acts of the trustees. What petitioner had, prior to the tax settlement of 1947, was not a contingent claim but merely a right to seek declaratory relief with respect to what would be the rights of the parties in the event that tax savings should arise in the future. Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 23 Cal. 2d 719 at 734, 146 Pac. 2d 673. [15]

To escape the consequences of its express assumption of the trustees' liabilities and obligations, respondent argues that the trustees could not incur a liability except by express prior authorization of the Bankruptcy Court. But respondent's citations refer, at best, only to the enforcement of express contracts. [16] Whoever voluntarily chooses to enter into a contract with court officers may be bound to ascertain the scope of their authority, on the principle pertaining generally to agents. That principle does not apply to noncontractual obligations. Where a receiver is authorized to operate a railroad, the receivership

[15] A suit for declaratory relief against a trustee may be maintained outside the Bankruptcy Court. Gutensohn v. Kansas City Southern Railway Co., 140 F. 2d 950 (8 Cir.). A fortiori, if a cause of action for coercive relief subsequently arises, a party is not barred from presenting it to a federal court in equity merely because he had not presented a request for declaratory relief to the Bankruptcy Court at a time when he yet had no claim for coercive relief.

Respondent asserts (Br. 90) that reorganization must end all claims, but the cases cited relate to claims existing prior to the reorganization proceedings (e.g. Dunyee v. Erie R. Co., 175 F. 2d 58), or where express notice was given to present claims arising from the trustees' acts and there was no provision for assumption.

[16] The principal one, Chicago Deposit Vault Co. v. McNulta, 153 U. S. 554, does not even go that far. The question was as to the binding effect of an unauthorized long term lease for the portion of the term extending beyond the receivership. The Court commented (p. 563) that the lessor had been fully paid under the lease for the time "that its premises were occupied for the benefit of the trust" and recognized the right in equity of a party supplying something of value to the receiver to be compensated although there had been neither previous approval nor subsequent ratification.

does not escape liability for personal injuries resulting from negligence because the court did not authorize the receiver to commit the tort. It is equally unfounded to argue that a receiver may unilaterally take another's money, property, rights or other thing of value to the enrichment of the estate and yet not subject the enriched estate to liability unless the court had authorized the receiver to incur the liability.

Court officers are held peculiarly bound by obligations arising on principles of unjust enrichment, Mosser v. Darrow, 341 U. S. 267. No prior approval or authorization by the court to incur the liability is necessary: In Re Hunter, 151 Fed. 904; Thompson v. Texas Mexican R. Co., 328 U. S. 134.

If a trust estate is enriched by the unauthorized acts of the trustee, the estate must account (Restatement of Trusts, Sec. 262; 2 Scott on Trusts, Sec. 269 to 269.3). If a trustee, not empowered to borrow money for the trust, nevertheless does so to pay taxes on trust property and so applies the funds, the estate is liable in equity to the lender (Restatement, Sec. 269, Comment a, Illustration 1). A leading case is Judge Cardozo's decision in Whiting v. Hudson Trust Co., 138 N. E. 33, 234 N. Y. 394. Also Central Trust Co. of New York v. Ohio Central R. Co., 23 Fed. 306.

While an unauthorized express contract may not bind the receivership, it will create a personal liability of the receiver, which courts strictly enforce. Haines v. Buckeye Wheel Co., 224 Fed. 289, 297 (6 Cir.); In re Erie Lumber Co., 150 Fed. 817; 1 Clark on Receivers, (2d ed), p. 527. Hence it is of no moment whether the liability was that of the trust or of the trustee personally, because by the Assumption Agreement respondent assumed all liabilities and obligations of the trustees in order that they might personally be exonerated.

The Filing of the Return Using the Loss Was Authorized by the Bankruptcy Court

But in fact the trustees were authorized to do the acts from which the obligation to the petitioner arose. The authority to manage and conduct the business of the railroad (R. 1098) carried with it authority under Internal Revenue Code, Sec. 52, to file income tax returns in respondent's name. Before filing the 1943 return the trustees petitioned the court for authority to create the reserve fund (R. 1772), and on the hearing trustees' counsel explained their intention to file consolidated returns and to use petitioner's stock loss therein (R. 2023). The court then granted the petition (R. 616). Respondent argues that the "court considered the potential tax reduction was for the trustee's advantage" (Br. 104). This is gratuitous but also irrelevant. Being authorized to do what they did, the trustees were authorized to incur the legal and equitable consequences, whatever they were, and the resulting liability was assumed by respondent when it executed the assumption agreement.

There is no limitation in the Assumption Agreement

Respondent further attempts to escape the express provisions of the Assumption Agreement by arguing that it did not thereby assume all obligations of the trustees but only some, that it did not assume "costs and expenses of administration", and that liability to the petitioner is such an expense. But the Assumption Agreement specifically provided that respondent assumed > "generally any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business * * * ." (R. 1711, 1713).

Not only is this language comprehensive, it was so construed by the court by later order which found that respondent did assume "all" obligations of the trustees (R. 1988, quoted O. B. 136).

It would be difficult to draw an agreement which would more clearly include claims of the kind here advanced. No question appears to have been raised by respondent as to scope, when Messrs. Coulson and Polk on November 15, 1948 rendered their bill and were paid $300,000 "covering professional services in the tax disputes as to the taxable period January 1, 1942 through April 30, 1944", services which commenced in March 1943 during the reorganization. (R. 1749).

Respondent urges that petitioner's claim, based on tax savings, is to be treated like the taxes (Br. 9). Yet both the Plan and the revesting order dealt with taxes in different paragraphs than they did expenses of administration. They provided for assumption of liability for taxes "whether or not proof thereof was made in said proceeding and without prejudice by reason of such proof not having been made" (233 I.C.C. at 455 and par. 9, Revesting Order, R. 49).

Respondent's Fiduciary Relation to Petitioner Prevents a Destruction of the Claim

Petitioner's tax affairs were managed by agents of the respondents and the trustees. Not until mid-1946 did any of petitioner's officers or directors know of the use of its stock for its except Mr. Schumacher, a trustee himself, and such as were acting for the trustees. Coulson and Polk, who nominally acted as petitioner's counsel and held its power of attorney were employed and directed by the trustees and respondent and received their entire compensation from it. If claims had to be presented to protect petitioner's rights, it was their duty and that of the trustees and respondent to present them. Respondent became petitioner's fiduciary and may not take advantage of its own delinquency to retain what does not equitably belong to it.

There is no "sacro-sanctity to bar orders", Wheeling Valley Coal Co. v. Brady, 159 F. 2d 155 at 159 (4 Cir.), and "even where an order of this sort is made, it does not follow that its binding effect is greater than needs dictate" (ibid, 157, quoting Glenn on Liquidation, p. 429).

B. Statute of Limitations, Estoppel, Laches

Not only are the contentions that the petitioner's claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations, laches and estoppel not supportable in law, but respondent, because of its fiduciary relation, is also precluded from raising them as defences.

The defence of the Statute of Limitations is addressed only to the 1943 tax savings (Br. 107). The cause of action arose, not when the returns were filed, but when, by the settlement with the Treasury in 1947, the tax savings were effected (O.B. 132). This suit had already been filed in October 1946, and at that time was for declaratory relief preceding the accrual of the cause of action. Maguire v. Hibernia Savings and Loan Association, 23 Cal. 2d 719, 734, 146 Pac. 2d 673. Even if, as respondent contends, the claim arose while the trustees were in possession, respondent assumed it by the written Assumption Agreement, and the applicable statute is Cal. Code of Civil Procedure, Section 337(1), prescribing 4 years. Sherwood & Sherwood v. Gill & Lutz, 36 Cal. App. 707, 173 Pac. 171; Anderson v. Calaveras Cent. Min. Co., 13 C.A. 2d 338, 342, 57 P. 2d 560.[17]

[17] Even apart from the written assumption, the period would be 4 years under C.C.P., Sec. 343, generally applied to suits in equity (Sherman v. S.K.D. Oil Co., 185 Cal. 534, 545, 197 Pac. 799), particularly fo

Respondent asserted no laches below. There can be no laches, for petitioner sued (1) within four months of its Board of Directors' learning of the use of its loss, and (2) before the tax settlement. Thus respondent could not possibly have been misled to its prejudice, and no one had relied on the Plan of Reorganization as giving the tax benefits to respondent (O.B. 49-56).

The claim of estoppel is based on the irrelevant past practice of filing consolidated returns. The cases cited (Br. 108) are cases where a party sought to place a new interpretation on a contract. There was no contract here between petitioner and respondent (See discussion at O.B. 124).

III

THE AMOUNT OF THE TAX SAVINGS

Arguing at length about the amount of the tax savings, respondent asserts that the courts below never decided the amount (Br. 109-115).

But they did. Respondent presented a quantity of evidence on this phase of the case, and the question was extensively briefed. Thereafter, in its opinion the trial court stated:

> "Operations of the debtor * * * were increasingly profitable and, except for the offset of the capital stock loss of the plaintiff itself, would have called for the payment of some $17,000,000 in income taxes" (R. 262) and the "net savings" or 'escape' [was] $17,201,739" (R. 267).

The opinion concluded that it might serve as the findings but gave permission to counsel to propose findings (R. 276).

an accounting (Moss v. Moss, 20 Cal. 2d 640, 644, 128 P. 2d 526; McArthur v. Blaisdell, 159 Cal. 604, 115 Pac. 52; Austin v. Harry E. Jones, 30 C.A. 2d 362, 368, 86 P. 2d 379), which lies to settle the rights and liabilities between all persons standing in fiduciary relations to each other (1 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed.) Sec. 186-(a), pp. 267-8).

Respondent took no exception to the above statements. The court then adopted its opinion as its findings (R. 319).

In its brief in the Court of Appeals, respondent asserted that the savings were less than $17 million, but that court in its opinion declared:

> "Except for the offset of the capital stock loss of the Corporation [petitioner] the taxes would have been some $17,000,000." (R. 2217-8).

Under the "two court rule" the finding concludes the issue. Comstock v. Group of Institutional Investors, 335 U. S. 211, 213, 214.

CONCLUSION

We respectfully submit that the judgment should be reversed, with direction to remand to the District Court for entry of judgment for petitioner.

ON PETITIONS FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Brief for Respondents in Opposition

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinion of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division (R. 258), is reported at 85 F. Supp. 868. The opinions in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit (R. 2214, 2239) have not yet been reported. On July 9, 1952 the Court of Appeals rendered an opinion in banc in this case, one Judge dissenting, respecting its practice on rehearings in banc. The opinion and dissent are printed in the Appendix hereto.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). The order of that Court denying the petitions for rehearing and striking them, in so far as they sought rehearing in banc, was entered January 30, 1952 (R. 2259). The petitions for a writ of certiorari were filed on June 23 and June 26, 1952, the time having been extended by order of Mr. Justice Douglas. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Does a holding company, whose stock interest in an operating railroad company has been lost by judicial decree confirming a plan for reorganizing the railroad company, have a right in equity to be paid, at the expense of unpaid secured creditors of such subsidiary, for the reduction of the taxes of the reorganization trustees of the railroad company resulting from the entry of the holding company's loss as a deduction in consolidated federal income tax returns, in repudiation of the holding company's own practice in tax dealings with its former subsidiary, and notwithstanding that the holding company suffered no loss or damage through the entry of its loss in the tax returns?

2. Has such claim of the holding company been lost through failure to present it to the bankruptcy court in the course of the reorganization proceeding?

3. Has a Court of Appeals acted within its powers by denying a petition for rehearing and ordering that the petition, in so far as it sought rehearing in banc, be stricken as "being without authority in law or in the rules or practices of this court"?

STATUTES INVOLVED

1. The consolidated returns were filed under Section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code. The stock loss deduction is authorized in Section 23(g)(4) of the Code, enacted in October, 1942.

2. Section 46 of the Judicial Code contains provision for hearings and rehearings in banc in the Courts of Appeal.

STATEMENT

The petitioner, The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation," owned from 1916 until April 30, 1944, all of the stock of the pre-reorganization The Western Pacific Railroad Company, predecessor of the respondent herein, the reorganized The Western Pacific Railroad Company. In 1935 the Corporation directed its railroad subsidiary to file a debtor's petition for reorganization (230 I.C.C. 61). The railroad properties were transferred by the bankruptcy court to reorganization trustees who held title to the properties and operated them from 1935 to December 31, 1944, a period exceeding nine years.

The Interstate Commerce Commission announced its plan of reorganization in 1939 (230 I.C.C. 61, 233 I.C.C. 409). The plan limited the first mortgage bonds of the reorganized company to $10,000,000 to be exchanged for trustees' certificates (Par. O, 233 I.C.C. 451) and it required the old first mortgage bondholders to exchange their securities for income bonds, preferred and common stock. Junior secured interests were not paid in full by at least $3,495,900, plus interest (R. 1222, 2021) and the new securities given to the old bondholders and to other secured creditors were inferior in grade and have not had the values assigned to them by the plan (Appendix, p. 19). The plan declared that the stock interest in and unsecured claims against the debtor were totally valueless and not entitled to participate in the plan (Par. P. (5), 233 I.C.C. 452). On March 15, 1943, the Commission plan was approved by this Court in Ecker v. Western Pacific R. Corp., 318 U.S. 448, affirming In re Western Pacific R. Co., 34 F. Supp. 493. In October, 1943, the plan was confirmed by the District Court (R. 496, 1674), on December 31, 1944 the railroad properties were turned over to the reorganized company, the respondent here (R. 499, 1711; R. 36-108), and the reorganization proceeding was closed by a final order dated March 28, 1946 (R. 1219, 2013).

In each year beginning with 1918 the Corporation prepared, signed and filed in New York consolidated tax returns for itself and all group members (R. 1258-9; R. 843-44). In each year the tax owing under the returns was allocated among the group members according to the formula universally accepted, that is: the consolidated return tax was distributed pro rata to those members of the group having taxable incomes in direct proportion to their several taxable incomes, without allocating any tax to a "loss company" or paying such company for the tax "saved" by another member through the entry of the loss in the returns.[1] During the years 1924 to 1935 the Corporation

[1]On the record now in this Court the proof is clear (R. 1262). Petitioner interveners challenge the corresponding statement of the Court of Appeals (their petition, pp. 21-22) and base their challenge on a Price Waterhouse report which respondent introduced in evidence as part of the proof of the facts as we have just stated them (R. 1504, 1510-1516, 1517). We believe the report benefited in this way by tax reductions exceeding $500,000 (R. 1552, 2040).

This practice was continued during the reorganization. No taxable income was reported from 1935 through 1941 and no tax was paid (R. 1552, 2040). In 1942 and subsequent years the trustees had substantial income which could be offset by loss carry-overs and carry-backs, but only through the filing of consolidated returns (R. 591, 921, 1759). The consolidated returns for 1942 reported a tax of $4,201,821.54 (R. 172). With insignificant exceptions the tax resulted from the trustees' earnings and was paid by the trustees from the funds of the bankruptcy estate (R. 169, 824, 826, 1306-7).

The order confirming the plan of reorganization (R. 496, 1674) became final in November, 1943. The Corporation's stock loss was realized, for tax purposes, when the order became final (R. 606, 1409-10) and the loss was reported in the consolidated returns for 1943. Since the loss greatly exceeded the trustees' income the returns reported a large net operating loss and no tax was paid (R. 172). In recognition of the uncertainties in the 1943 tax situation, and upon the authority of an order of the reorganization court, the trustees set aside out of their 1943 income a reserve fund of $7,100,000 to meet contingent tax liability of the trustees to the United States (R. 619, 1772; R. 1270-74; R. 1272, 2023; R. 1087, 1895).

supports our statement and refutes what the petitioners say. The report is a trial exhibit. Pursuant to an order of the Court of Appeals it was not printed in the record on appeal, and petitioners have not yet sent it up to this Court. It seems improper for petitioners to challenge a statement by the Court of Appeals on the basis of a trial exhibit which is not presently in the record in this Court.

In March, 1945 the Corporation, as agent for the affiliated group (Regs. 104, Sec. 23.12) filed a claim for refund of the taxes paid for 1942, based on a carry-back of a part of the unused balance of the Corporation's net loss for 1943 (R. 492, 1654). This was a claim for taxes which had been paid by the trustees.

The affiliation ended when on April 30, 1944, the Corporation surrendered its stock in the debtor company, i.e., the pre-reorganization The Western Pacific Railroad Company, and this stock was later cancelled as required by the reorganization plan (R. 260, 493). In the returns for 1944, filed in June, 1945 (R. 491), a further part of the unused balance of the net operating loss for 1943 was carried forward to the first four months of 1944 (R. 172). No tax upon trustee income for that period was reported or paid (R. 172). In order to meet contingent tax liability to the United States for this period the reorganized railroad company set up a reserve fund in the amount of $3,000,000. Thus the reserve fund set up to meet the contingent tax liability of the trustees aggregated $10,100,000.

In August, 1947 the taxes for these years were settled with the Treasury on the basis of denial of the refund claim and acceptance of the returns as filed (R. 168-173). This meant in substance that the tax liability of the trustees for the tax years in question was settled at $4,201,821.54, the amount paid by them for 1942. Although the settlement was effected in form by a total rejection of the refund claim, the $4,201,821.54 payment for 1942 was intended to be a settlement payment not for 1942 alone but for the entire period of two years and four months.

From first to last these tax transactions were handled in the ordinary course of business. The returns related to a period of trusteeship during which affiliation continued—indeed, they were possible only because affiliation continued—and they were prepared, signed and filed and the allocation of intra-group liabilities was made in strict accordance with twenty years of prior practice.

The recital on page 5 of the Corporation's petition that the tax savings were "accomplished by respondent's taking over and managing petitioner's affairs for its own benefit" is far from correct. The fact is that the tax proceedings continued to be handled just as they had been handled in the past. The fact is, also, that the complaint of the petitioners is improperly addressed to the respondent. It was the reorganization court and its trustees who were concerned and who took action with regard to the entry of the deduction of the corporation's stock loss in consolidated returns. This was done during the trusteeship and before the plan was consummated, and respondent, the reorganized company, had no part in the action then taken. Respondent's participation consisted of taking its part in subsequent tax proceedings following reorganization in conformity with the conclusions reached by the court and its trustees.

The returns for 1942 and 1943 were prepared in the New York office, maintained jointly by the Corporation and its subsidiary, latterly the subsidiary's trustees, and by the same personnel who had prepared and filed prior returns (R. 1258-9; R. 843-44). There was no change in the established practice respecting preparation and filing, unless it be a change that, upon the recommendation of counsel for the Corporation, an experienced tax counsel was retained to advise the trustees regarding tax returns. Tax counsel recommended that the filing of consolidated returns be continued, this being in the interest of the taxpayers. He advised entry of the Corporation's loss in the returns for 1943, as authorized by a 1942 amendment to the statute.

This advice was followed, but only after the matter had been presented by the reorganization trustees to the bankruptcy court. Tax counsel had advised that the Government might question the loss deduction, and for this reason the trustees presented the matter to the court and recommended that a reserve fund for contingent tax liability be created. On the hearing, if was explained to the court that through filing consolidated returns the Corporation's loss could be offset against trustee income and the court made its order for a reserve fund for contingent tax liability because of uncertainty as to whether the Government would litigate the matter (R. 1272-1273, 116).

Thus it appears that petitioners' complaint on the score that its tax affairs were taken over and managed is in fact addressed to the action of the court and its trustees.[2]

[2]Petitioners use the term "respondent" as descriptive of three distinct entities: first, the pre-reorganization railroad company, which was the Corporation's subsidiary and the debtor in reorganization; second, the reorganization trustees who were the court's agents in operating the railroad; and third, the reorganized railroad company, which was the defendant below and is the respondent here. The indiscriminate use of the term "respondent" by petitioners can serve only to mislead and confuse. For example, at page 6 of the petition of the Corporation it is said that when petitioner was so impoverished that it could no longer pay its officers' salaries, "respondent took them over as its own 'full time employees' before the tax returns were filed." The fact is that this action was taken by the trustees in June, 1943, and that respondent had, and could have had, no part in it (R. 1230). Misuse of the word "respondent," frequently in designation of the trustees and at times in designation of the debtor company, occurs repeatedly throughout both petitions.

Respondent, the reorganized company, had nothing to do with these transactions. Respondent commenced its operations on January 1, 1945. Subsequently it did participate in the tax transactions, by way of setting up an additional reserve, and of consenting to the returns for the period January to April, 1944, which, while they related to the trustees' income and taxes, were filed in 1945. In these returns a part of the net operating loss reported in the returns for 1943 was carried forward in the manner provided by the revenue acts.

In all this there was no "taking over and managing petitioners' affairs," nor any departure from practice which the Corporation itself had inaugurated and followed.

Neither was any wrong done to the Corporation in the tax transactions. The Corporation's loss was of no use to it, and could be used only in the consolidated returns. The Corporation paid no taxes under the consolidated returns and would have paid none under separate returns.

Petitioners have no complaint about the tax returns. They agree that the returns were properly prepared, properly signed and properly filed, that the Corporation's loss was properly entered in the returns for 1943 and that the work of the tax counsel, whose duty was to obtain a favorable tax result for the group, discharged that duty in a completely satisfactory fashion (R. 1007, 1103, 1422).

The Corporation's claim was never presented to the bankruptcy court. This suit was filed on October 10, 1946, more than a year and nine months after the consummation of reorganization and more than six months after the reorganization proceedings had been closed by the entry of the final order of the bankruptcy court (R. 1219, 2013).

This is a claim upon trustee income. By its bill of complaint the Corporation "claims to be the beneficial owner" of the claim for refund of taxes paid by the reorganization trustees for the calendar year 1942 (R. 8), and also "claims to be the beneficial owner" of the reserves which had been set up out of trustee income in order to meet contingent tax liability of the trustees for the calendar year 1943 and the first four months of 1944 (R. 9).

THE HOLDING OF THE DISTRICT COURT

The District Court concluded that there was no equity in the Corporation's claim and ordered judgment for defendants. The court felt that there had been an "escape" from taxes which should have been paid to the United States, but was "compelled to rest decision upon the fundamental issue of the justice and equity of plaintiff's right, if any, to be paid for that which was escaped" (R. 272). The conclusion was reached that the Corporation had no such right."[3]

The District Court recognized the true nature of the Corporation's claim:

> "What plaintiff really seeks is not all or a share of the so-called tax saving. Rather it is a circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership, rejected in the reorganization plan. Or put differently, it is an effort to share in the earnings of the debtor during the reorganization period." (R. 272)

---

[3]Petitioners inadvertently err in stating that the trial court's judgment was founded on the conclusion that there had been a tax escape. As to that, the trial court said: "That is not true. I think I also placed the decision on the ground that I couldn't see any reason why the plaintiff would be entitled to it anyhow" (R. 429).

The court also held:

> "Not only that, but the philosophy underlying Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act stands as a barrier against the equitable validity of plaintiff's claim in this cause." (R. 273)

THE DECISION OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

By its decision herein the Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment below. The findings and conclusions of the District Court were sustained, it being said, "we agree with the principal holding of the trial court * * *" (R. 2227).

The Court of Appeals could find no equity in the Corporation's claim.

ARGUMENT

I.

PETITIONERS HAVE FAILED TO PRESENT A CASE CALLING FOR THE EXERCISE OF THE POWER OF SUPERVISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The case tendered by the petitioners does not satisfy any of the criteria customarily recognized in the granting of a writ of certiorari. No question of federal law has been presented or decided in this litigation. The Corporation's bill of complaint expressly recites that "there is no statutory rule or regulation" which can be invoked; the claim advanced has been rested solely and explicitly upon the "established principles of equity" (Bill of complaint, R. 8). Its petition herein recites: "Fundamentally, petitioner is entitled to recover on the principles of unjust enrichment" (p. 10).

Neither has the court below announced "a new principle of law." In holding that there is no equity in the Corporation's claim upon the income of the reorganization trustees of its former rail subsidiary, by reason of consolidated tax returns which were properly filed and resulted in no loss or damage to the Corporation, the court has observed principles which are as old as equity.

This is a private controversy, it is of importance to these litigants only, and the issue turns upon general principles of equity.

A. There Is No Conflict Between the Decision Below and Decisions in Other Circuits.

Petitioners represent that the decision below is in conflict with the decisions in George A. Fuller Co. v. Commis- sioner, 92 F.2d 72 (C.C.A. 2, 1937) and Trinity Buildings Corporation of New York v. Commissioner, 40 B.T.A. 1315 (1939). The asserted conflict does not exist.

In each of the cited cases the Commissioner of Internal Revenue declined to accept a consolidated return, and was sustained in his refusal, for the reason that the return failed to meet the statutory condition that "all the corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year" consent to and join in the filing. In short, the technical requirements of the statute as to joinder by all the affiliates had not been met.

These rulings present no conflict with the ruling in the instant case wherein there was no refusal on the part of any member of the Western Pacific group to join in the consolidated returns. According to its own pleading, the Corporation "consented" to the filing of the consolidated returns (R. 221). The court below, in expressing the view that it was the duty of the Corporation to join in the returns, thereby permitting the reorganization trustees to reduce their tax liability and without loss or damage to the Corporation, rested its conclusion on the special equities of this case, including the established practice of the Corporation and the obligations owing from a holding corporation to the unpaid creditors of its bankrupt subsidiary. This was a ruling upon the equities, it did not involve construction of any statutory provisions, and is not in conflict with the holding in the cited cases.

The decision of the Fifth Circuit in the Shreveport Bank Cases[1] is equally wide of the mark. Those cases decided a question of local law, namely that the agreement between the old bank and the new bank made the new bank a trustee for the old bank and accountable as such for the profits of its trust.

B. The Decision of the Court of Appeals and the Decision of the District Court Rest Upon Identical Grounds. The Trial Court Made Adequate Findings, Petitioners Made No Complaint Respecting Findings Upon Their Appeal, and the Court of Appeals Made No Findings of Its Own.

Both of the petitions for certiorari are in error in representing that the decision of the Court of Appeals has been made upon different grounds, or upon different legal theories, from those upon which the decision of the District Court was made. The District Court found against the equitable validity of plaintiff's claim. The Court of Appeals sustained, saying—"we agree with the principal holding of the trial court" (Opinion, footnote 12, R. 2227). The Court of Appeals disapproved only what it recognized as "dictum" in the trial court's opinion, pointing out that the trial court had itself recognized that its criticisms of the tax returns and the compromise tax settlement were nothing other than "dictum."

Neither has the Court of Appeals made any findings of its own, nor has it disapproved findings of the trial court. In point of fact there was no problem as to findings since, as the petitioning Corporation expressly stated in its opening brief on appeal (pp. 30-31), "while the facts are unusual they are not in dispute." Moreover, in their specifications of error upon appeal (R. 2168, 2173) the petitioners failed to assign any error respecting findings or failure to make findings on the part of the trial court. No ground exists for returning the case to the trial court for additional or amended findings which were not sought upon appeal, nor would any purpose be served by requiring findings as to matters wholly irrelevant to the holdings below.

C. The Court Below Has Not Decided a Question of Federal Law.

1. The Corporation argues that the Court of Appeals stated a general rule that whenever consolidated returns may be filed with a resulting tax reduction to anyone, they must be filed (pet. 13-14). It is plain that the opinion does not state any such rule. The Court was ruling on the equities of the case before it. What the Court of Appeals held, and all that it held, respecting joinder in consolidated returns, was that in the circumstances of this case the Corporation was obliged in equity to join. The circumstances of this case include (1) the Corporation's own consistent practice of many years' standing, under which it had received and retained tax benefits from its affiliates' losses in prior years, (2) the fact that in filing the returns it surrendered nothing because it had no income or taxes nor any use for its loss, (3) the need to preserve the loss carry-overs and excess profits credits of the reorganization trustees, which (because the prior returns had been consolidated) could be preserved only through consolidated returns, (4) the obligation to its insolvent subsidiary and the unpaid creditors of its subsidiary resting upon the Corporation as parent company, and (5) the duties imposed by the bankruptcy act upon the stockholders of a corporate bankrupt to take action appropriate to the preservation of the bankrupt estate. Under these circumstances and under settled rules the holding of the Court of Appeals was plainly right. Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. Du Bois, 312 U.S. 510, 522; Bankruptcy Act, Sec. 77(l), Sec. 7b; Securities Comm'n v. U. S. Realty Co., 310 U.S. 434, 455. This holding rests upon the application of equitable principles to the particular facts of this case and does not involve or state a general rule concerning consolidated returns.

2. The intervener-petitioners' chief argument appears to be that "consolidated returns were designed and intended for the benefit of the parent" (pet. pp. 13-14) and that the court below, in holding to the contrary, misconstrued the federal tax laws. This argument has neither substance nor merit. There is not a line in the revenue acts which lends support to this contention nor do the cited cases so rule.

Petitioners are mistaken in appealing to the tax laws as the source of any right in the Corporation. The function and operation of the tax laws were exhausted when the amount of the tax was determined and the tax was paid. Revenue acts do not create private rights and the provisions of the Code do not purport to do so. Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U.S. 472, 513; United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 61. This Court has made it clear that private controversies as to the allocation of taxes are to be determined by the principles of equity. Phillips-Jones Corp. v. Parmley, 302 U.S. 233.

There is nothing either in the cases cited or the material quoted by petitioners, or in the history of consolidated returns, to indicate that Congress intended to confer a special benefit on holding companies. The true purposes of may not benefit indirectly from the tax advantages of their affiliates. Subsidiary companies usually derive no benefit, direct or indirect, from the tax advantages which their affiliates receive from subsidiary losses. Nevertheless, no loss affiliate, whether parent or subsidiary, receives payment for the tax advantage of its loss.

Petitioners argue that the Corporation's case is exceptional and they appeal to equity for a different rule in this case. The contention is, in brief, that because the Corporation had no use for its loss nor benefit therefrom, direct or indirect, it was entitled to a cash payment from the trustees' earnings at the expense of the unpaid creditors of its former subsidiary, the debtor company, and in repudiation of the practice which it consistently followed in tax dealings with its subsidiary. If this be an exceptional case the facts call strongly for adherence to the rule rather than for deviation from it. Furthermore, a claim for special treatment upon the special facts of a case does not present "a question of general importance" suggesting review by certiorari.

E. The Corporation Has No Right Qua Parent to "Tax Savings" Realized by the Reorganization Trustees, Nor Has It Any Right to Such Tax Savings by Reason of the Loss of Its "Economic Interest" in Its Former Subsidiary Through Consummation of the Reorganization Plan.

The petitioners argue that in this case the Corporation has been deprived of the indirect benefit which, as stockholder of the subsidiary, a parent company may receive from the tax advantage to its subsidiary and assign this as a reason why the Corporation should be paid.

In so far as this is an argument that as ex parent the Corporation has better rights than it would have as parent, the argument defeats itself. The Corporation as ex parent has lost, not improved, whatever rights it had when it was the parent company.

Moreover, there is no principle which could sanction a demand such as that of the Corporation in this case upon the income of trustees of its former subsidiary, whether that income be denominated "tax savings" or otherwise. The Corporation's loss of economic interest was effective upon the filing of the petition for reorganization under Section 77, as made clear by the decision of this Court in Helvering v. Cement Investors, 316 U.S. 527, in which it was said (p. 532):

> "In case of reorganizations of insolvent corporations, the creditors have the right to exclude the stockholders entirely from the reorganization plan. When the stockholders are excluded and the creditors of the old company become the stockholders of the new, 'it conforms to realities to date their equity ownership' from the time when the processes of the law were invoked 'to enforce their rights of full priority.' Helvering v. Alabama Asphaltic Limestone Co., 315 U.S. 179. Under that approach, the ownership of the equity in these debtor companies effectively passed to these creditors at least when Sec. 77B proceedings were instituted."

The Corporation has expressly pleaded, by its supplemental bill of complaint, that its claim is rested upon "an obligation incurred by the trustees in their operation of the debtor's estate * * *." (R. 224) But in equity its ownership had passed to the unpaid creditors of its subsidiary consolidated returns are well understood. They are, first, to facilitate the administration of the tax laws by relieving the Treasury of the burden of reallocating income and deductions on transactions between affiliated companies[5] and, second, to do tax justice between businesses organized as subsidiaries on one hand and business organized as departments on the other.[6] There is nothing here to suggest that Congress has any particular regard for holding companies.

The argument that the consolidated return system is intended to benefit holding companies is directly in contradiction to the conclusions of the Federal Trade Commission. In its investigation of utility holding companies the Commission reviewed in detail the use of consolidated returns, and concluded that "the subsidiary companies in a holding company group are entitled to the benefit of any savings in the group due to filing a consolidated return."[7]

Congress, in so far as it has indicated an intention as to who should receive the benefit of "tax savings" from consolidated returns, has indicated they should go to the operating companies of the group. Congressional Committees have been sharply critical of the practice which petitioners now advocate, that is, a practice whereby the parent company takes to itself the benefit of group "tax savings."[8]

Nothing need be added to make it clear that the petitioners cannot find in the revenue acts any foundation for the claim of the Corporation upon the "tax savings" of the reorganization trustees.

D. The Corporation's Claim Is Contrary to the Policy and Objectives of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act and Would Frustrate the Western Pacific Reorganization.

We would again emphasize that the Corporation is here seeking to enforce its claim against a reorganized railroad company as successor to the reorganization trustees of the Corporation's former rail subsidiary. Both of the opposing petitions persistently ignore the distinction between (1) the debtor company, which was a subsidiary of the corporation, (2) the reorganization trustees, and (3) the reorganized company, respondent herein, in which the Corporation has at no time had any interest. These distinctions are important and are not to be disregarded. The tax

[8]Senator Wheeler, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, in speaking of this practice said of the holding companies: "So that, as a matter of fact, they took that $9,000,000, which should have gone either to the Government, or, if it was not necessary to pay it to the Government, then it should have gone back to the operating company." Hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., on S. 1725, p. 255. Similar comments appear in Hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., on H.R. 5423, pp. 153, 849, 992, 1061, 1522; Hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, United States Senate, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. on S. 1725, pp. 83, 122, 255, 557.

returns with which we are here concerned are tax returns for periods within the trusteeship, the taxes were paid by the trustees out of their income, and the tax savings are tax savings of the trustees. The Corporation's claim is necessarily a claim against the trustees, and the Corporation has so pleaded.

But the Corporation's claim, even if it had substance, cannot be asserted against respondent, the reorganized railroad company. The claim here asserted never acquired validity against the reorganization trustees, not having been presented to and approved by the reorganization court, which alone had jurisdiction to entertain it. Had the claim been there presented, approved and paid, its payment would have been an expense of administration within the express control of the reorganization court under the statute. In no forum, other than the reorganization court, could the Corporation's claim be advanced or entertained.

As pertinently observed in the opinion of the District Court, the Corporation's claim represents "an effort to share in the earnings of the debtor during the reorganization period" (R. 272). It is to take precedence over the claims of secured creditors, now stockholders in the reorganized company. It was clear to the District Court that the philosophy underlying Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act "stands as a barrier against the equitable validity of plaintiff's claim in this cause" (R. 273). The policy and objectives of Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act would be set at naught and the Western Pacific reorganization would be frustrated if the Corporation were allowed recovery against the reorganized railroad company on the basis of a claim related to the period of reorganization and which was neither advanced nor considered in that proceeding.[9]

It remains only to observe that this is a private controversy, it is of importance to these litigants only, and the issue turns solely upon general principles of equity. The District Court found no equity in the Corporation's claim upon the "tax savings" realized by the reorganization trustees of the Corporation's former rail subsidiary, and the Court of Appeals affirmed that holding.

II.

THERE IS NO EQUITY IN THE CORPORATION'S CLAIM TO THE "TAX SAVINGS" OF THE REORGANIZATION TRUSTEES

Although a ruling upon the equities does not involve a question of federal law it can readily be demonstrated that the Corporation's claim is without the pale of equity.

A. The Corporation Has Suffered No Wrong and Sustained No Damage, and Has No Unjust Enrichment Claim.

The reorganization court confirmed the Commission's plan of reorganization and thereby adjudicated the Corporation's stock loss. Under the authority of the Revenue Act the loss was entered as a deduction from income in the consolidated returns. Nothing in this process constituted a wrong to the Corporation. No tort was committed; no

---

[9]The Corporation's failure to present its claim in the bankruptcy proceeding bars the claim under the orders of the Court in that proceeding and under the principles of res judicata. The claim is also barred by the California statutes of limitation. These defenses were presented below and respondents rely upon them but the courts below found it unnecessary to consider them, having ruled that the claim was without equity.

property was taken; no contract was breached; no statutory right was infringed. The Corporation, therefore, has no cause of action.

The Corporation was not damaged. It paid no tax under the consolidated returns just as it would have paid no tax under separate returns. The failure of the reorganization trustees to pay additional taxes was not, in contemplation of law, an enrichment. Even if it were, the enrichment was not unjust to the Corporation, and without proof of injustice to the Corporation it cannot recover. The entry of the loss in the returns cost the Corporation nothing. The Corporation had no income, it could not have used the loss itself and could not have sold it. J. D. and A. B. Spreckels Co. v. Commissioner, 41 B.T.A. 370 (1940).

These are the facts which brought about the "tax savings" of the reorganization trustees, and there is in them no element of contribution or unjust enrichment, or of any other cause of action known to the law. "Wrong without damage or damage without wrong does not constitute a cause of private action * * *." Clark Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 148 F.2d 580, 582 (C.C.A. 8, 1945), cert. den. 326 U.S. 734. Compare Connecticut Ry. Co. v. Palmer, 305 U.S. 493, 504.

B. The Corporation Has No Claim Arising from Fiduciary Obligations.

The income and the tax savings under discussion are for a period in the trusteeship prior to May 1, 1944, a period when the Corporation was the sole stockholder of the old company. As parent, the Corporation had fiduciary responsibilities to its subsidiary and particularly to the sub-sidiary's creditors. "A holding company, as well as others in dominating or controlling positions (Pepper v. Litton, 308 U.S. 295), has fiduciary duties to security holders of its system which will be strictly enforced. See Taylor v. Standard Gas Co., 306 U.S. 307." Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. Du Bois, 312 U.S. 510, 522.

The fact that the returns for 1943 and 1944 were physically filed after the Corporation had surrendered its stock to the reorganization committee does not affect the Corporation's obligations. The returns related to the period of affiliation and to the period of trusteeship, and the obligations of the parties with respect to them were therefore the obligations of those periods. The Corporation was not entitled to prefer its own interest over the interest of the unpaid creditors of its former rail subsidiary by demanding a "tax savings" payment out of income of the trustees on account of an entry in the tax returns which cost the Corporation nothing.

C. It Was the Duty of the Corporation to Join in Filing Consolidated Returns and It Could Not Bargain as a Condition to Such Joinder.

The Court of Appeals addressed itself directly to the contentions of petitioners, particularly interveners, that the Corporation could have exacted a "bargain" from the reorganization trustees in consideration of continued joinder in the tax returns. The Court of Appeals pointed out that, while the Corporation suffered a severe loss through the decision of this Court upholding the plan of reorganization, nevertheless "there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss. But its affiliate did have use for the loss and the group was entitled, under the tax law, to make use of that means of tax savings" (R. 2232). There was a duty to make use of the loss to offset the income of members of the affiliated group. Such had been the practice of the group in previous years of affiliation and "Corporation had effected substantial tax savings (Def. Ex. 46) by reason of filing consolidated returns." The Court observed that "The officers would have been derelict in their duty to the subsidiary had they failed to file consolidated returns," and added that "After the transaction Corporation was in exactly the same position that it was in before the subsidiary had effected the tax saving allowed by the tax laws" (R. 2233).

Not only was there no duty on the part of the Corporation to exact such tribute but it was the affirmative duty of the Corporation to refrain therefrom. In this aspect of the case the conclusions of the Court of Appeals were as follows:

> "If Corporation had required tribute as a condition of its cooperation, then it would have been acting with less than the required standard of fairness to the subsidiary's creditors. Equity will not permit a recovery as a substitute for a bargain which would have been unfair." (R. 2235)

The suggested "bargain" to have been "exacted" by the Corporation would necessarily have been so exacted from the reorganization trustees who could not have yielded without the approval of the reorganization court. But would that court have yielded? This Court has said respecting such strategic efforts:

> "In these proceedings there is no occasion for the court to yield to such pressures."
> Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Co., 308 U.S. 106, 129.

As sole stockholder of the old company the Corporation had general fiduciary duties to its subsidiary, particularly in the interest of the latter's creditors (Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U.S. 510, 522) and special duties arising out of the bankruptcy proceeding to conserve the assets for the benefit of creditors (3 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th Ed.) Par. 62.30, page 1573). It was the legal duty of the Corporation, and alike its moral duty, to join in these returns for the protection of the creditors of its former subsidiary, and no loss or disadvantage to the Corporation itself could result from such joinder.

D. Petitioners Do Not Escape the Application of the Accepted Rule Against "Tax Saving" Payments in Consolidated Return Tax Allocations by Claiming That Their Case Is Exceptional.

There is a formula for the allocation of consolidated return taxes among the members of an affiliated group under which the tax is borne ratably by the members of the group having incomes, but no payment is made to a loss company for the tax advantage which its loss brings to other members of the group. This formula has been approved by the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Treasury Department.[10] The semi-official National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners has reached similar conclusions.[11]

This formula has been accepted by the business community for many years[12] and it is the formula which the Corporation has used since 1918 when it commenced filing consolidated returns for the Western Pacific group (R. 1262).

One reason for the formula is to protect the public which is served by operating subsidiaries, as well as the security holders of subsidiaries, from upstream payments or credits to the parent company. The formula is also needed to prevent the sort of bargaining about tax losses that is demanded here. Other reasons for the formula are indicated in the studies of the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission.[13] The Treasury Department by I.T. 4085 issued in June, 1952, recently reaffirmed its prior use of the formula for tax purposes.

The formula operates without regard to whether loss companies derive benefit from its application. Depending on the facts of the particular case parent companies may or

The Commission says of the business custom in note 36, p. 222, that "In assigning to each constituent its fair share of the consolidated tax paid by the group it is usual to divide the actual tax among the companies who would have had to pay a tax on an individual basis. If one of the included companies operated at a loss, the consolidated tax is of course reduced, but no part of the 'saving' is ordinarily paid over to the loss company by the other members of the group. Instead, only those contributing income to the consolidated return share directly in the benefit of the current reduction. This principle is incorporated in our Rule U-45 under The Public Utility Holding Company Act."

when the subsidiary filed its petition for reorganization under Section 77. Thereafter the earnings of the subsidiary or, more correctly, the earnings of the subsidiary's reorganization trustees, belonged in equity to the creditors and could not be claimed by the Corporation at the creditors' expense.

F. The Corporation Has No Claim on Account of Duality or Domination.

Petitioners rely upon so-called "dual relations" to implement the Corporation's claim upon the tax savings of the reorganization trustees. This reliance is misplaced.

Quite naturally, and indeed properly, the Corporation and its wholly owned rail subsidiary had certain officers in common upon the inception of the reorganization proceedings. These dual relations continued in some measure throughout the reorganization period. Thus one of the trustees, appointed at the instance of the Corporation itself, was an officer of both the Corporation and its rail subsidiary. The remaining "dualities" were all attributable to the Corporation which brought them into being and sponsored their retention. Moreover, they had statutory sanction (Bankruptcy Act, Section 708(c)(1)) as well as the approval of the reorganization court (R. 1187, 1916, par. 2, at 1920-21; R. 1192, 1923), and were not a mask for undisclosed transactions of any character.

Duality itself is not wrongful. It does not give rise to a cause of action, nor can it implement a cause of action, unless wrong or unfairness issues therefrom.

Here there was no wrong or unfairness to the Corporation by virtue of the asserted dualities, however critically they may be examined. The two trustees discharged their duties under the direction of the reorganization court and with full knowledge and to the satisfaction of all parties. The recitation of dualities in which the petitioner-interveners have indulged is barren of any evidence of wrongdoing. It was not wrongful on the part of the trustees to join in the consolidated tax returns for 1943, nor was it wrongful to enter the Corporation's stock loss therein as a deduction from the trustees' income. It was not wrongful for the special tax counsel retained by the trustees to advise the entry of the Corporation's stock loss as a deduction from income. After reorganization had been consummated and the trustees had been discharged it was not wrongful on the part of the Corporation's president to sign and file the returns for 1944 and the claim for refund of taxes paid by the trustees for 1942. These were the natural and proper consequences of what had taken place during the trusteeship. Accordingly, this is not a case in which "duality" cloaked wrongful conduct or unfairness or has significance for any purpose. Thus an essential ingredient of a cause of action, viz., wrong or unfairness, is lacking.

The District Court recognized the fact of dual relations but concluded that "The so-called 'duality of control' much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue" (R. 274). The Court of Appeals expressly approved (R. 2235). Both courts found that no injustice or unfairness to the Corporation had issued from the duality. The claim of domination is equally devoid of substance. The Corporation has no standing to exploit the domination theory in view of its express denials of all allegations of "domination and control" by its answer to the Complaint in Intervention in this cause. These denials are in the following terms:

"The plaintiff denies on its own behalf and on behalf of its officers and directors all allegations of the Complaint in Intervention of domination and control of the plaintiff, its officers and directors, by the James Foundation of New York, Inc., and The Western Pacific Railroad Company, or any one or more of the subsidiaries or affiliates of either; * * *." (R. 156) (Cf. Opinion of Court of Appeals, R. 2224, footnote 7)

These denials are unqualified.

The opinion of the Court of Appeals deals explicitly and realistically with the asserted duality in conjunction with the claim of domination. The Court of Appeals concluded:

"The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of any duty owed to Corporation." (R. 2235)

Upon the assumption, however, "that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through control of the dual officers," the Court of Appeals nevertheless found that "it did not abuse its supposed dominant position because the officers and directors common to both corporations did not sacrifice Corporation's interests to those of the subsidiary" (R. 2232). The Court said that the dual officers owed fiduciary duties to both corporations to promote the interests of both and to obtain for each what it was entitled to under the tax laws. These duties were properly discharged. Finally the court said:

"The officers would have been derelict in their duty to the subsidiary had they failed to file consolidated returns. Their duty to Corporation required only that they not sacrifice its interests and did not require them to exact tribute for following the practice of the past twenty-five years." (R. 2233)

All of the transactions in relation to the tax returns were "open and above board." The District Court so found and the Court of Appeals approved that finding (R. 2234). Neither court could find injustice or unfairness in the tax transactions.

Such being the case, the petitioners' arguments directed to "duality" and "domination" are without a semblance of vitality.

III.

IN DISPOSING OF THE PETITIONS FOR REHEARING THE COURT HAS NOT DEPARTED FROM THE ACCEPTED AND USUAL COURSE OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

The petitions for rehearing were denied and in so far as they sought rehearing in banc they were stricken as being without authority in law or in the rules of practice of the court (R. 2259).

On July 9, 1952, after the petitions for certiorari were filed herein, the court below rendered its opinion and decision in banc, denying the petition of the Corporation for leave to file a "motion to vacate order striking appellants' petition for rehearing en banc and reinstating such petition." The petition is in the record at R. 2267.

The full Court, with one dissent, reviewed its procedures for considering rehearings in banc and said, in the concluding paragraphs of its opinion:

> "On these considerations and in harmony with its understanding of the statutory scheme, the court has consistently retained to itself as a matter of administrative and intramural concern only the problem whether or not any given case should be heard or reheard in banc. Accordingly, in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion the court has declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings. The position it takes is that, apart from the possible disqualification of a judge, the composition of the court to which a case may be assigned for determination is a matter wholly outside the province of the parties.

It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts. The hazard, we think, may easily be overestimated. It is minimized by the alertness of counsel and by informal and unofficial interchanges among the judges. Where conflicts occur they are capable of remedy by in-banc action without wholesale duplication of effort, as our own practice and experience have demonstrated.

The petition for rehearing in this cause has already been authoritatively denied by the division to which the cause was assigned. The petition for leave to file, addressed to the court in banc, is denied.

From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing."

Copies of the opinion of the court and of the dissenting judge are attached as an appendix to this brief.

Under Section 46(c) of the Judicial Code the full court has power to grant a rehearing in banc, but it does not follow, as contended in the Corporation's petition (p. 30), that "a litigant must be entitled to have his request presented to all those judges for consideration and action." It has never been so ruled. If such were the rule it would mean that every disappointed litigant could insist upon a review by the full court. This would impose impossible burdens. The ruling of the court below was clearly right.

No litigant is entitled to complain about the treatment of a petition for rehearing. Rehearings are matters of discretion and no appeal lies from the denial or other disposition of petitions for them. Wayne Gas Co. v. Owens-Illinois Co., 300 U.S. 131, 137-8; Pfister v. Finance Corp., 317 U.S. 144, 149-50.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that the petitions for a writ of certiorari should be denied.

OPINION AND DISSENTING OPINION OF JULY 9, 1952, IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION and ALEXIS I. DUP. BAYARD, Receiver, Appellants, vs. WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, SACRAMENTO NORTHERN RAILWAY, TIDEWATER SOUTHERN RAILWAY, DEEP CREEK RAILROAD COMPANY, THE WESTERN REALTY COMPANY, THE STANDARD REALTY AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY and DELTA FINANCE CO., LTD., Appellees.	No. 12,506 Jul, 9, 1952

IN RE PETITION OF WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A MOTION DENOMINATED "MOTION TO VACATE ORDER STRIKING APPELLANT'S PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC AND REINSTATING SUCH PETITION."

BEFORE: DENMAN, MATHEWS, STEPHENS, HEALY, BONE, ORR, and POPE, Circuit Judges

HEALY, Circuit Judge

Case No. 12,506, supra, upon its coming at issue in this court, was regularly assigned for hearing and determination to a court or division of three judges comprising Circuit Judge Healy and District Judges Fee and Byrne. Subsequent to argument and submission of the case the court handed down an opinion and order affirming the judgment of the district court, Judge Fee dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Thereafter the appellants petitioned for "rehearing and rehearing en banc," and the court on January 30, 1952, denied the petition, Judge Fee again dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Insofar as the petition sought a rehearing in banc it was ordered stricken as unauthorized by law or practice.

On March 10, 1952, the Western Pacific Corporation presented the petition for leave described in the caption. In its supporting brief it asserts that it is its right under the law to have its petition for rehearing considered and acted upon by all the circuit judges. On order of a majority of the circuit judges, the court has been assembled in banc for the purpose of announcing the principles of law and practice it deems applicable in respect of in banc hearings. This course is thought appropriate in order that litigants and the bar may be advised not only of the position taken by the court but of the reasons for it.[1]

[1]In recent years it has become the custom of counsel almost as a matter of course to petition the full membership of the court for a rehearing in banc, upon suffering an adverse decision at the hands of a court of three judges. This hopeful concept of the right of litigants appears to stem from declarations in the dissenting opinion in Independence Lead Mines v. Kingsbury (1949), 9 Cir., 175 F. 2d 983, at p. 992, cert. den. 338 U. S. 900, to the effect that two judges in a court or division of three are without authority to pass upon or deny a petition for rehearing addressed to all the circuit judges.

The numerous petitions of this nature have been disposed of by the court or division concerned either (1) by ignoring the application for in banc action and treating the petitions simply as ordinary petitions for rehearing, or (2) by striking them insofar as they sought in banc action. The treatment has not in the least served to discourage losing counsel or to stem the growing tide of such petitions.

The governing statutory provision, 28 USCA §46(c), reads:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."[2]

The obvious intendment of this statute is to perpetuate the United States Courts of Appeals as courts of three judges in all cases save those in which an in banc hearing is ordered by all or a majority of the circuit judges. No doubt Congress was fully alive to the fact that these courts, despite the increase in their membership, would be unable to keep abreast of the constantly growing volume of judicial business unless they continued in all normal circumstances to function as courts of three.

---

[2]The section was enacted as part of the 1948 Judicial Code revision. In its entirety it reads as follows:

"§46. Assignment of judges; divisions; hearings; quorum

(a) Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs.

(b) In each circuit the court may authorize the hearing and determination of cases and controversies by separate divisions, each consisting of three judges. Such divisions shall sit at the times and places and hear the cases and controversies assigned as the court directs.

(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit.

(d) A majority of the number of judges authorized to constitute a court or division thereof, as provided in paragraph (c), shall constitute a quorum."

Important light will be shed on the problem under inquiry if we examine the method pursued in the assignment of cases, as prescribed by our Rule 4.[3] In practice the calendars for the court are tentatively made up by the chief judge in collaboration with the clerk. On these calendars each case is assigned for hearing and determination to a court or division of three named judges, unless it has been otherwise ordered. The proposed calendar is circulated among all the judges, and any designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority. When the calendar is approved by the judges their action is uniformly manifested by their initialing the same, as is done in the case of court orders generally. Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative determination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc. In the instances in which at the time of assignment it is agreed by all or a majority of the judges that a particular case should be heard and determined in banc, it is calendared as such.[4] It sometimes occurs, too,

[3]Rule 4, subdivisions 1 and 2, reads:

"ASSIGNING OF CAUSES FOR HEARING

"1. The calendars of the court shall be made up by the Clerk under the direction of the Chief Judge subject to the approval of the majority of the judges.

2. The Chief Judge after conference with the Circuit Judges shall designate and assign the judges who are to hear the causes placed upon the calendars of the court; such designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority of the judges."

[4]Since the decision in Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U. S. 326 (1941) approximately thirty cases in all have been heard in banc in this circuit. Nineteen of these, or about two-thirds of the whole, were assigned to the court in banc at the time they were originally calendared. Perhaps more than half of the nineteen were cases of that examination of a case preliminary to hearing, or consideration of it after argument, leads the judges to whom it was assigned to conclude that it is an appropriate cause for in banc consideration, and they so indicate to the remaining judges. If the latter or a majority of all agree, the case is then reassigned for hearing by all the judges.[5]

If we examine the status of Case No. 12,506 in the light of this practice, it becomes apparent that it was calendared and heard by court order as one in which in banc consideration was not deemed requisite. There remains to inquire whether the losing party in the cause is at this juncture entitled as of right to have its petition for rehearing considered and ruled upon by a court composed of all the circuit judges.

The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a "court or division of three judges" the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, great public consequence, such, for example, as those growing out of the suspension during the war of the writ of habeas corpus and the institution of martial law in Hawaii, or cases involving the forcible removal of the Japanese from the Pacific Coast states. Others were contempt matters involving claimed violations of the constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination.

There are no definite criteria that we know of by which to determine what cases are suitable for in banc consideration. However, causes of extraordinary public importance or those involving constitutional questions probably belong in the category.

[5]McCoy v. United States, 9 Cir., 169 F. 2d 776; Samuel v. United States, 9 Cir., 169 F. 2d 787; Tee Hit Ton Tribe v. Olson, 9 Cir., 160 F. 2d 525; Los Angeles Building & Construction Trades Council v. LeBaron, 9 Cir., 185 F. 2d 405; Price v. Johnston, 9 Cir., 159 F. 2d 234, 161 F. 2d 705.

subject to review only as prescribed by 28 USCA §1254. Circuit judges other than those designated to sit on such court or division are not members of it, and officially they play, and are entitled to play, no part in its deliberations at any stage. That this is so is made clear by subdivision (a) of §46 (see Note 2 above) providing that "Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs." If regard be had for this mandate circuit judges may not intrude themselves, or be compelled on petition of a losing party to intrude, upon a court or division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit.

A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all or a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration.[6]

[6]This was the course followed in Hopper v. United States, 9 Cir., 142 F. 2d 181; Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 9 Cir., 180 F. 2d 295, 186 F. 2d 926; Evaporated Milk Ass'n v. Roche, 130 F. 2d 843; and Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. SEC, 139 F. 2d 298. In the Hopper case, supra, and to a lesser degree in Southern Pacific v. Guthrie, intracircuit conflicts were resolved. The other two cases cited in this note were nondescript matters.

Adoption of the view currently being urged would render merely tentative or provisional the decisions of the court in 98 per cent or more of the cases that come before it. On petition of a dissatisfied party its decisions would automatically be subject to a species of horizontal appeal which would completely nullify the prime statutory objective of effecting a division of the court's work. The judges other than those to whom the cases had been assigned would perforce be required to acquaint themselves with the issues and problems involved in the same painstaking manner as did their associates who had heard and determined the causes initially, and this without the latter's advantage of having heard oral argument. Obviously, unless he is prepared to stultify himself, no judge would undertake to rule upon petitions for rehearing without adequate and full study and investigation of the merits.

On these considerations and in harmony with its understanding of the statutory scheme, the court has consistently retained to itself as a matter of administrative and intramural concern only the problem whether or not any given case should be heard or reheard in banc. Accordingly, in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion the court has declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings. The position it takes is that, apart from the possible disqualification of a judge, the composition of the court to which a case may be assigned for determination is a matter wholly outside the province of the parties.

It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts. The hazard, we think, may easily be overestimated. It is minimized by the alertness of counsel and by informal and unofficial interchanges among the judges. Where conflicts occur they are capable of remedy by in banc action without wholesale duplication of effort, as our own practice and experience have demonstrated.

The petition for rehearing in this cause has already been authoritatively denied by the division to which the cause was assigned. The petition for leave to file, addressed to the court in banc, is denied.

From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing.

DENMAN, Chief Judge, dissenting from the court's holding that the circuit judges not participating in a division, here six of the seven judges, (a) are without power to consider a litigant's petition for a rehearing en banc, and (b) where a rehearing or rehearing en banc has been denied by a division, are without power to vote to grant a rehearing en banc, if two of the division's judges, here with but one circuit judge, do not desire such a rehearing. This appears from the following language of the opinion:

> "A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily[1] be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all or a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration."

* * * *

"The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a 'court or division of three judges' the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, subject to review ONLY as prescribed by 28 U.S.C. §1254." Thus squarely is denied the power of the court en banc to review a division's decision in a "rehearing en banc . . . ordered by a majority of the circuit judges." See 28 U.S.C. 46 (c).

* * * *

"From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing."

In this case the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, hereafter the Corporation, petitions the Court en banc for leave to file a petition for a rehearing en banc. The latter seeks to establish, inter alia, that the judgment of the division which heard the case decided the main issue therein contrary to the decision of a prior division of this court.

The division in the instant case, consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges, has ordered "stricken" a petition addressed to the seven judges constituting the court en banc. This order follows a precedent of similar strikings of petitions for rehearings en banc in the cases of Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F.2d 767 (Cir. 9), Fruehauf Trailer v. Myers, 181 F.2d 1008 (Cir. 9), Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 182 F.2d 256 (Cir. 9).

Since Kronberg v. Hale, the Clerk has distributed no petitions for rehearings en banc to the non-participating circuit judges. From a casual remark of counsel in a social contact, I learned of the Corporation's instant petition and instructed the Clerk to distribute it to the six circuit judges not sitting in the division. But for this casual discovery and my suggestion that the stature and determination of the Corporation's counsel made it likely they would seek mandamus in the Supreme Court, the petition would have had the "striking" treatment of the above cases.

The court's opinion came after a conference originally called for the consideration of the adoption of the rule considered last in this dissent, which would have made the burden of such petitions one we easily could bear.

A. The court's decision violates (as well as ignores) the Supreme Court's decision in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, 650, a decision aimed to settle differences in the circuit's divisions.

The case of Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, held that notwithstanding the three-judge provision of section 212 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., a court of appeals might lawfully consist of a greater number of judges, and that the five active circuit judges of the third circuit might sit in banc for the determination of an appeal.

The Third Circuit in C.I.R. v. Textile Mills Corp., 117 F. 2d 62 at page 70, in holding that its five circuit judges could sit en banc, states that otherwise they would not have the power to correct differing views of the judges in the divisions of the court such as the Supreme Court describes as occurring in the Fifth Circuit in John Hancock Ins. Co. v. Bartels, 308 U.S. 180, 181.[2]

The Supreme Court in its Textile Mills case at page 334 in affirming the Third Circuit and overruling our decision in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F.2d 867, 869, where we held we could not sit en banc where two divisions of the court differed as to the law controlling, states of rehearings en banc[3] that:

> . . . "Certainly, the result reached makes for more effective judicial administration. Conflicts within a circuit will be avoided. Finality of decision in the circuit courts of appeal will be promoted. Those consid-

[2]Following this the Textile Mills case states at page 71:

. . . "Where, however, there is a difference in view among the judges upon a question of fundamental importance, and especially in a case where two of the three judges sitting in a case may have a view contrary to that of the other three judges of the court, it is advisable that the whole court have the opportunity, if it thinks it necessary, to hear and decide the question . . ."

[3]What is said of the need of rehearings en banc for the then Third Circuit applies a fortiori today to the Ninth Circuit. The Third Circuit in the 1941 fiscal year had but five judges and 285 docketings. The Ninth Circuit has had an increase in population of six million in twelve years. In the fiscal year 1952 it had 446 docketings. On the national average of docketings for circuit judges the Ninth Circuit should have ten judges. It has seven judges but the Senate has passed a bill increasing the judgeships to nine and the House Judiciary Committee has agreed they are needed. No doubt within a year we will have nine judges with three divisions sitting simultaneously. That is to say, we have 56% more docketings and will have almost half again the number of divisions in which exist the hazard of conflicting decision referred to in the Textle Mills decisions.

erations are especially important in view of the fact that in our federal judicial system these courts are the courts of last resort in the run of ordinary cases . . ."

In enacting 28 U.S.C. § 46(c) Congress codified the Textile Mills decision, the Reviser's Notes stating that that section "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case."

Prior to this codification of the Textile Mills decision, there was decided by one division of this circuit the case of Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, and later in a division of three other judges, the case of Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547. The two divisions differed on the controlling law. Certiorari was sought in the Robinson case before the Crockett case was decided and it was denied. A petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court was denied. The Crockett case was then called to the attention of the court in a second petition for rehearing which was granted. The order denying the petition for certiorari was set aside and the writ of certiorari granted. Certainly this action of the Supreme Court was purposeful and deliberate.

In granting certiorari the Supreme Court in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, held it was the duty of this court en banc to entertain a petition for leave to file a petition for rehearing en banc, for it vacated our judgment and remanded the case to us, stating:

". . . In view of the conflict of views which has arisen among the judges of the Ninth Circuit with respect to the decision in this case (see Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, 1001, and Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547, 548, 549), and in view of this Court's decision in Waley v. Johnston, ante, p. 101, reversing 124 F.2d 587, the judgment is vacated, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court of Appeals for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc. See Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326 . . ."

The Corporation strongly urges the above contentions in its denied petition, all of which is ignored in this court's opinion. Instead it is said of the seeking of the leave to file the petition, that consideration of such action by any of the circuit judges not in the division (here six) would be "to intrude upon a . . . division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit."

How absurd it was, one must conclude, for the Supreme Court to order such an intrusion in Robinson v. Johnston!

B. The Cavalier Refusal of the Court to Consider the Contentions of the Corporation's Petition.

The shabby treatment of the litigant and his counsel in refusing to consider their contentions and authorities comes after the court's claim that its opinion gives consideration to *"the principles of law * * * which it deems applicable to en banc hearings."*

No self respecting federal judge sleeps comfortably if he is conscious of having rendered an opinion deciding a case in which he has purposely failed to consider a substantial contention supported by authorities submitted to him and by such evasion has based his decision on a ground directly opposed to the evaded contention.

A possible explanation for the silent treatment of the litigant's contention and authorities in this case is that Robinson v. Johnston was deemed irrelevant because decided before the codification of the Textile Mills case in 28 U.S.C. § 46(c). That seems absurd, however, for the Supreme Court's construction of a law before its exact codification, as here, is applicable after codification. Otherwise, why in 28 United States Code Annotated are there the thousands of citations in sections of the Judicial Code, enacted in 1948, which codifies the then law and statutes?

C. The Opinion's Absurd Misstatements Respecting the Assignment of Cases to the Court's Divisions.

The opinion states:

> "... Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative predetermination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc ..."

The Supreme Court in the Textile Mills case has established a definite criterion for the rehearings en banc provided for in 28 U.S.C. § 46(c). It is the only one there stated, though there are others. It is that conflicts of law between the decisions of two of the court's divisions are cause for rehearing en banc. By clearing the law en banc, the circuit does so for the 96.3% of litigation in which this court's decisions are final.

Such en banc action prevents the burden on the Supreme Court, such as in the certification of the question of such differing divisions in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F.2d 867, 869, a burden the Supreme Court later refused to assume in its return of Robinson v. Johnston for our en banc consideration of our divisions' divergencies.

It is almost a rude question to ask, "How, in heaven's name, are the seven judges en banc to know tentatively or otherwise that the division to which they assign the case will thereafter decide it without conflict with a prior decision of a different division"? The phrase, "How, in heaven's name," is used advisedly, for our tentative decision would require divine omniscience.

The opinion states that another criterion is whether the case to be assigned to a division is "one involving constitutional questions."

The slightest reflection shows that the court en banc could make its tentative assignment of a case to a division because not involving a constitutional question only by examination of all the briefs in all the cases to be assigned to determine whether such a constitutional contention is at issue.

Were this truly what we have done, it would have involved a volume of judicial effort comparable to that the court's opinion seeks to avoid with petitions for rehearings en banc.

In the eleven years since the Textile Mills case, the Clerk advises, we have assigned to division over two thousand two hundred cases. In but nineteen cases, less than one per cent, have they been assigned to the court en banc. These were cases whose extraordinary importance had wide newspaper notoriety. In none of the remaining two thousand two hundred cases has the court en banc assigned them to division after an examination of the briefs for that purpose.

D. Further to avoid considering the corporation's contention and authorities, the opinion misstates the source of the contention that rehearings en banc are needed to cure the divergence of divisions.

On the source of this contention the court's opinion states, "It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts."

"Some commentators"! To what extent will the court go in order to avoid mentioning that this hazard was stated first by the Third Circuit in the Textile Mills case and on its appeal by the Supreme Court, and later implicitly by the Supreme Court in returning Robinson v. Johnston to this court because of the difference in viewpoint of our divisions. That is to say, in such holdings on the criterion of divergence, the Third Circuit and the Supreme Court are no more than mere commentators.

The opinion seeks to minimize the likelihood of a division overruling sub silentio a prior division's holding and this with the certainty of nine judges and three divisions in the near future.[4] The idea is that the judges in the division so acting, "by *in*formal and unofficial interchanges" with the non-participatig judges, will advise the latter that the decision is at variance with that of a prior division. In my seventeen years on the bench I have had no associate so confess his mistaken act.

An examination of the three cases cited, supra, the Kronberg, Fruehauf Trailer and Northwestern Mutual cases, in which the petitions for rehearing en banc were stricken, shows that two of them were founded on such conflict of divisions and the third on conflicts in district court decisions on important matters. Also in the seven cases of Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, 12684; Acheson v. United States, 12772; Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 11959; Tanimura v. United States, 13014; California v. United States, 12184; Sunbeam Lighting Co. v. Sunbeam Corp., 12357, and Zamlock v. United States, 12753, the division judges refused consideration of the petition addressed to the seven and thus prevented the court en banc from considering the contention in each that the division's decision conflicted with the decision of a prior division.

[4]See footnote 3, supra.

E. The court's confessed fear of the burden of an overwhelming volume of such petitions may be avoided by an amendment of its rules.

Against a flood of such petitions we can protect ourselves, as has the Supreme Court, by amending our Rule 25 as follows:

"Rule 25.
REHEARING

"A petition for rehearing of a decision by a division of the court may be presented within 30 days after judgment. It must be printed, and briefly and distinctly state its grounds, and be supported by certificate of counsel that in his judgment it is well founded and that it is not interposed for delay. Twenty printed copies must be filed with the clerk of this court.

"Where there has been a denial of a rehearing of a decision by a division, a petition for a rehearing in bank may be filed within fifteen days. The petition shall be in the form above described and with the same certificate of counsel. No petition will be entertained, unless one of the judges participating in that decision shall join in seeking such rehearing."

The Supreme Court has similarly protected itself on its petitions for rehearing by a provision in its Rule 33, of which the pertinent portion is:

> "Such a petition . . . will not be granted unless a justice who concurred in the judgment desires it and a majority of the Court so determines."

In the last seven years there have been but 75 dissents, an average of less than 11 per year. Probably less than 11 judges per year would join in petitioning for a rehearing en banc.

In view of our prospective three divisions and the likely need for such rehearings en banc, an average of eleven such petitions would not be an intolerable burden, less than 4% of our submitted cases. It would substantially reduce the likelihood of conflict between the divisions.

By requiring first a rehearing by the division, the district judges would not be barred from the reconsideration of a decision.

The motion to file should have been considered on its merits and granted.

(Endorsed:) Opinion and Dissenting Opinion. Filed Jul. 9, 1952. Paul P. O'Brien, Clerk.

The Securities and Exchange Commission Rule Does Not Permit "Tax Saving" Payments for Losses in Consolidated Returns	43
The Treasury Department Employs the General Rule	46
The Federal Trade Commission Investigated and Condemned "Tax Saving" Payments to Holding Companies for Taxes Saved by Consolidated Returns	47
The Interstate Commerce Commission Has Disapproved "Tax Saving" Claims	48

Committees of Congress Have Investigated and Condemned "Tax Saving" Payments to Holding Companies for Taxes Saved by Consolidated Returns 52

The Rule Is in Accordance with Sound Policy 54

The Rule Is Fair and Equitable 55

The Rule Has Been Followed from the Beginning by the Western Pacific Group 57

B. Nothing in the Circumstances of This Case Takes It Out of the General Rule or Gives to the Holding Company a "Tax Saving" Claim 58

The Alleged Severance of "Economic Unity" Affords No Reason for Taking the Case Out of the Rule or for a "Tax Saving" Payment to the Holding Company 59

There Is Nothing Special in the Holding Company's Position as Parent or as Loss Company 63

As "Former Parent" the Holding Company Can Neither Escape the General Rule Nor Claim an Equity 63

C. The Fallacies in Petitioners' Argument That the Holding Company Was Free to Make a Choice of Returns: (1) The Holding Company Was Bound to File Consolidated Returns, and (2) It Could Derive No Equity from a Supposed Power to Withhold Its Consent 64

The Holding Company Was Obliged to File Consolidated Returns 65

The Corporation's Obligation to File the Returns Survived the Termination of Affiliation 68

The Power to Choose Between Returns Is Not the Source of Any Equity and the General Rule Makes No Allowance for Such a Power .. 69

II. The Bar of Reorganization 89

A. The Claim Is a Claim Against the Trustees in Reorganization, and Is Invalid Because It Has Never Been Approved by the Reorganization Court 91

B. Unallowed Claims for Expenses of Administration Were Barred and Extinguished in the Western Pacific Reorganization 93

OCTOBER TERM 1952

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION and ALEXIS I. DUP. BAYARD, Receiver, Petitioners, vs. THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, et al., Respondents.	No. 150
MEREDITH H. METZGER, HENRY OFFERMAN and J. S. FARLEE & CO., INC., Petitioners, vs. THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, et al., Respondents.	No. 160

Brief for Respondents

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court (R. 258), is reported at 85 F. Supp. 868. The Court of Appeals opinions on the merits (R. 2214, 2239) are reported at 197 F.2d 994; the opinions concerning rehearing procedures (R. 2260, 2261, 2288, 2296, 2313) are reported at 197 F.2d 1012. The supplement to the dissenting opinion of Chief Judge Denman (R. 2313) has not yet been reported.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). The order of that court denying the petitions for rehearing and striking them, in so far as they sought rehearing in banc, was entered January 30, 1952 (R. 2259). On July 9, 1952, six of the seven judges of the Court of Appeals concurred in denying a motion to reinstate the petitions for rehearing, Chief Judge Denman dissenting. The petitions for a writ of certiorari were filed on June 23 and June 26, 1952, and granted October 13, 1952. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS INVOLVED

1. A holding company owned the stock of its subsidiary, an operating railroad company. That stock was determined to be valueless in a reorganization proceeding in which the holding company participated. Thereafter, in accordance with 25 years of prior practice, consolidated income tax returns were filed by the holding company for the members of the railroad group, including the trustees of the bankruptcy court. As a consequence of those returns income earned by the trustees was offset in large part by the loss of the holding company, thereby reducing the taxes otherwise payable by the trustees. Does the holding company have a claim for the taxes thus "saved"?

2. Does the failure of the holding company, a party to the reorganization proceeding, to present its "tax saving" claim to the bankruptcy court bar that claim even though it were otherwise valid?

3. Is the claim, even though otherwise valid, barred by limitations, estoppel and res judicata?

4. If the claim were valid and enforceable, what is the amount of the "tax saving" to which it relates and how would the claim for a "tax saving" payment be measured?

5. Did the Court of Appeals, having denied the petition for rehearing, err in striking the petition for rehearing in banc as "being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of this court"?

STATUTES INVOLVED

1. The consolidated returns were filed under Section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C. Sec. 141) and the provisions of Treasury Regulations 104 and 110. The stock loss deduction is authorized by Section 23(g)(4) of the Code, enacted in October, 1942.

2. The reorganization proceeding was conducted under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U.S.C. Sec. 205).

3. Section 46 of the Judicial Code (28 U.S.C. Sec. 46) contains provisions for hearings and rehearings in banc in the Courts of Appeals.

STATEMENT

This case brings here a claim rejected as invalid by both courts below and which, even if it were valid, could not now be allowed without nullifying the finality of a reorganization proceeding and disrupting the control of the bankruptcy court over the expense of that proceeding. The position of petitioners is without support in the precedents; it has never been approved by any disinterested person; it is radically at odds with the uniform practice of the Western Pacific group and the business community; and it is contrary to the conclusions of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the agencies of government most directly concerned with the regulation of holding company systems.

The circumstances of the case are related below and in greater detail than would ordinarily be appropriate for a brief here. The reason is that petitioners have briefed a case quite remote, in many fundamentals, from the case in the record. To correct, point by point, the inaccuracies and distortions appearing in petitioners' briefs would be a lengthy process of little assistance to the Court. Respondents believe that the Court can better be served by an accurate description of what the record reveals.

The facts, demonstrating that these were honest transactions honestly and openly conducted, are these:

The petitioner Corporation, a holding company, acquired all the stock of the operating railroad company in 1916, following the first Western Pacific bankruptcy (R. 493). The Corporation, as sole owner of the operating company, took charge of that company's affairs and managed the railroad from the Corporation's New York office (R. 737). That office was the head office of the system (R. 737) where policy was established and all significant decisions were made (R. 740-2). The expense of the office was divided between the Corporation and the operating company (R. 643-4).

In the fashion customary for holding company systems, the Corporation arranged for its officers to become officers of the operating concern: Thomas M. Schumacher, president of the Corporation, became the chief executive of the operating company (Ex. P. 34B,[1] R. 531, 519, 1719, 522, 1724); Michael J. Curry, the Corporation's Secretary and Treasurer, became a vice-president of the operating company (R. 519, 1719, 522, 1724, 640); and somewhat later Pierce & Greer, counsel for the Corporation in this litigation, became, on Mr. Schumacher's recommendation (R. 793), general counsel for the Corporation and counsel for the operating railroad (R. 793, 1031). Petitioners now criticize these "dualities". It must be plain, however, that the "dualities" were created by the Corporation itself for its own management purposes and, moreover, that what was done here is the accepted practice in holding company systems. Petitioners also attack the James interests. The record reveals, however, no more than this: that in 1925 Arthur Curtiss James acquired, directly or indirectly, approximately 61% of the common and 8.8% of the preferred stock of the Corporation (R. 501) and that until February, 1942, the James interests had a representative on the Corporation's Board (R. 1480, 520, 1720). Since then the James interests have had no special Board representation and nothing has been discovered to suggest that Mr. James and his associates failed in loyalty to the Corporation. Indeed, the James interests continued to support the Corporation by loaning it money long after it became apparent that in all probability the loans would never be repaid (R. 776, 1854-8).

[1]Trial exhibit numbers cited herein refer to exhibits which, with leave of Court, have not been printed.

The Corporation managed its subsidiary, the operating company, for nearly twenty years (R. 737, 740-2). In 1935 the company became unable to pay the interest on its large bonded indebtedness to the public and a second reorganization proceeding was begun (230 I.C.C. 61, 64). In October of that year trustees were appointed by the bankruptcy court to take charge of the railroad properties (R. 1184-9, 1916, 1923). Those trustees were Sidney M. Ehrman, a San Francisco lawyer (R. 1223-4), and Thomas M. Schumacher, president of the Corporation, who became a trustee upon its recommendation (R. 1627). Charles Elsey, later to become president of the reorganized company, was managing agent for the trustees (R. 1224, 1251). The trustees operated the railroad for over nine years. The properties were returned to the reorganized company on December 31, 1944 (R. 36-108, 1711). This case relates to income received by the trustees during the period of their operation and to taxes on that income.

Under the reorganization plan formulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission (230 I.C.C. 61, 233 I.C.C. 409) and approved by this Court (Ecker v. Western Pacific R. R. Corp., 318 U.S. 448) the new bonds of the reorganized company, in the total amount of $10,000,000, were issued to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (Par. O, 233 I.C.C. 451), which had loaned money to the reorganization trustees for the purpose of rehabilitating the railroad properties. The public, holding the old first mortgage bonds, had to exchange those bonds for income bonds, preferred and common stock (Par. P(2), 233 I.C.C. 451). The stock of the old company, owned by the Corporation, was declared valueless and ordered cancelled (Par. P(7), 233 I.C.C. 452). The plan assigned certain values to the securities of the new company: par for the bonds and preferred stock and $57 to $62 per share for the common (233 I.C.C. 417). On this valuation the junior secured creditors of the old company were unpaid by $3,495,900 plus interest (R. 1220-2, 2021). With trivial exceptions, moreover, the new company securities have never had, by a wide margin, the value the plan ascribed to them (Appendix D). Thus, whatever may be the situation in other cases, the reorganization plan in this instance was obviously no more drastic to the junior interests than circumstances required.

The Corporation, like most holding companies, depended for revenue on interest and dividends from its subsidiaries, in this instance the operating company and (to the extent of a half interest) the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Company (R. 748). When both the Western Pacific and the Rio Grande properties were placed in reorganization the Corporation had little income (R. 774, 1854) and its financial situation grew critical. For a time it succeeded in paying its share of the New York office expense by borrowing from its secured creditors, including the James interests (R. 771-2, 776, 1854). When these advances stopped, the Corporation renewed its earlier suggestion (R. 771, 1839, 1845, 1852-3) that the trustees of the bankruptcy court assume a larger share of the office expense. The trustees, after consultation with the bankruptcy court (R. 1230-1) and to the knowledge and with the approval of the Corporation directors (R. 1002-3) agreed to assume and beginning June 1, 1943 did assume all the expense, including salary expense, of maintaining the New York office (R. 527, 1738). This arrangement had no relation to tax problems of the trustees (R. 1245, 1257). It was suggested by the Corporation itself and accepted by the trustees only because Mr. Schumacher, the New York trustee, needed a New York office (R. 1244-5, 1257) and because the Corporation, with no income, was desirous to stay active at least until the final result of both reorganizations was known. As a further economy measure, Mr.

Schumacher resigned as president of the Corporation (R. 743) and Mr. Curry, theretofore secretary and treasurer of the Corporation (R. 519, 1719), was selected by the Board as his successor (R. 644, 1016). Upon the resignation of Mr. Schumacher the officers of the Corporation became Mr. Curry and two office employees, Mary Valouch and J. F. Wienken (R. 519, 1719) and its directors, in addition to Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Curry, were A. Perry Osborn, Willis D. Wood, H. Brua Campbell and four employees of the New York office appointed to fill vacancies occurring during the reorganization period (R. 520, 1720).

The Corporation now complains about the character and competence of its officers and directors. It is hardly the part of respondents to defend Corporation personnel against an attack by Corporation counsel, but in the interest of fairness it should be said that there is no justification for counsel's criticism. Mr. Schumacher was a thoroughly experienced railroad executive (R. 637, 1231), characterized by petitioners themselves as a man "of great ability and great honesty of character" (R. 993). Mr. Curry, Mr. Schumacher's successor as president of the Corporation, had been for many years Mr. Schumacher's principal assistant in managing Corporation affairs (R. 736, 1135) and, according to the District Judge who heard him testify, he was "a perfectly competent man, intelligent, and probably a pretty good railroad man" (R. 785). Mr. Osborn was an experienced New York lawyer who, until his death, was of counsel for the Corporation in this case and who came to its Board at the suggestion of the Chase National Bank (R. 990). Mr. Wood was a broker (R. 1121), past governor of the New York Stock Exchange (R. 1122) and a director of many well-known companies (R. 1122-23). Mr. Campbell was a member of the firm of Pierce & Greer, counsel for the Corporation here. For its lawyers the Corporation had in the reorganization proceeding Judge M. C. Sloss of San Francisco, a former Justice of the Supreme Court of California, a man whose competence and integrity are beyond question (R. 1600, 1603), and, as general counsel, Messrs. Pierce & Greer, who for thirty years have represented large railroad organizations (R. 1030) and who, during the period in question, were vigorously looking after the Corporation's welfare by prosecuting various claims on its behalf, including another suit against respondents (R. 1048-52). Mr. Nicodemus, the senior partner of Pierce & Greer, is sufficiently experienced in litigation to be on the Corporation's brief in this Court and he had had sufficient tax experience to be the 1943 chairman of a special tax committee organized by the railroads (R. 1034-35). The officers and directors of the Corporation and each of its lawyers all testified that they did their best on behalf of the Corporation in an independent fashion and free of any influence or control by anyone (Curry, R. 744, 747-8; Osborn, R. 1011-12, 1014-15; Wood, R. 1126; Hatton, R. 1136; Sheehan, R. 1143; Nicodemus, R. 1040, 1046; Sloss, R. 1610-11). There is not a word in the record to support a contrary conclusion.

Railroads and other large enterprises customarily file consolidated tax returns, one effect of which is that losses of one member in the holding company system offset the income of other group members. The return thus reflects the true income of the enterprise and the tax is measured accordingly. Under a consolidated return a single tax is calculated and paid for the parent and all its subsidiaries.

That tax must thereafter be allocated among the group members and the accepted and approved practice is to allocate the tax to those members of the group having taxable incomes and in proportion to those incomes. Payments such as those demanded by petitioners, that is, payment from one group member to another on account of taxes "saved" by filing a consolidated return, are not made.

Each year beginning in 1918 the petitioner Corporation filed consolidated returns for the Western Pacific group and under its direction the tax was allocated to and paid by the group members in the customary fashion and with no tax saving payments (R. 1258-9, 1262, Ex. D. 40, R. 1516-17). Each year the consolidated returns were prepared in the New York office, signed there and filed with the New York Collector of Internal Revenue (R. 1258-9, 843-4, Ex. D. 40). For fifteen years, from 1927 forward, the returns were prepared under the supervision of Mr. Curry, the Corporation treasurer (R. 844-6). Never at any time were the returns submitted to the directors for approval or discussion at Board meetings (R. 846). This identical practice continued during the period of trustee operation of the railroad properties (R. 1263). During part of that period, and particularly during the war years, the income of the trustees was large and in the absence of consolidated returns the trustees would have been required to pay a substantial tax to the United States. For reasons about to be explained, consolidated returns reduced those taxes. The first year of so-called tax saving is 1942.

The 1942 Western Pacific returns were prepared in tentative form early in 1943 in the New York office under the supervision of Mr. Curry, who signed and filed them on March 15, 1943 (R. 821). They were consolidated returns and the 1942 losses of the Corporation were used to offset in part the income of other group members (R. 823-5, 1881-83). Shortly after these tentative returns were filed Mr. Nicodemus, counsel for the Corporation in this case, who had discussed the tentative returns with Mr. Curry (R. 697-8), suggested to Mr. Schumacher, one of the trustees, that in view of the large income received by the trustees from the railroad properties the trustees would do well to obtain expert tax advice and he suggested for that service the New York law firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz (Ex. P. 39B, R. 544-5, 1079). James K. Polk of that firm had worked with consolidated returns for many years, both in and out of the Bureau of Internal Revenue (R. 1396-8). Mr. Schumacher consulted Mr. Ehrman, his co-trustee, and they decided to employ the Whitman firm (R. 543, 547, 1746, 1233).

Mr. Polk approached his task in exactly the fashion to be expected of any competent tax lawyer. His obvious responsibility was to obtain for the Western Pacific group the lowest tax consistent with the Revenue Acts. Accordingly he reviewed the tax history of the group (R. 1400), arranged for an independent tax accountant to assist in the preparation of the returns (R. 1402), computed the tax on a variety of assumptions (R. 1404, 1444-5) and recommended consolidated returns as final returns for 1942 (R. 1444). One important reason for consolidated returns was to make available the operating loss carry-overs and excess profits credits, amounting to several million dollars, accumulated by the trustees in prior years (R. 922). These carry-overs and credits could operate to reduce trustee taxes for 1942 only if consolidated returns were filed (Treas. Regs. 110, Section 33.31(e) and (f)). The 1942 returns, prepared as always in the New York office (R. 830), and signed and filed by Mr. Curry, president of the Corporation, on May 15, 1943 (R. 831, 837), reported a consolidated tax of $4,201,821.54 (Ex. P. 3 A/B, R. 490-1). With insignificant exceptions this tax resulted from the earnings of the bankruptcy court trustees (Ex. D. 40, R. 1516-17) and accordingly funds were provided from the bankruptcy estate to pay the tax (R. 824, 1306-07). The trustees allocated to the subsidiaries of the operating company, in accordance with the traditional formula, the small amount of tax owing from them (Ex. D. 40, R. 1516-17). The Corporation having no taxable income, paid no tax (R. 1552, 2040).

Shortly after the 1942 returns were filed Mr. Polk orally reviewed the tax situation with Mr. Curry, the Corporation president, and Mr. Nicodemus, Corporation counsel (R. 839, 1079-80) and immediately thereafter prepared a detailed written report dated May 20, 1943, which was addressed to Mr. Curry (R. 591, 1757) and circulated to Mr. Schumacher (R. 862) and Mr. Nicodemus (R. 862, 1884), who reviewed it together (R. 864). A copy of the report was provided to Mr. Elsey in San Francisco (R. 1266). The report suggested, among other things, that it was possible that under a then recent amendment to Section 23(g) of the Internal Revenue Code the loss of the Corporation, upon a determination that its stock in the operating company was worthless, would constitute a consolidated return offset to income of other group members (R. 591, 1757).

During the fall of 1943 the courts approved the reorganization plan and thus there was a final determination that the Corporation's stock in the operating company was worthless. The loss of the Corporation's investment in the operating company, calculated for tax purposes at $73,478,023.04, greatly exceeded group income for 1943 (Exs. P. 4A/B, R. 491, Ex. D. 40, R. 1517). As an economic matter that loss had occurred over the years as the operating company became increasingly insolvent. As a tax matter, however, the loss was realized when the order confirming the reorganization plan became final in November 1943 (Ex. P. 54, R. 605-10, 1409-10). It was therefore a 1943 loss.

Consolidated returns for 1943 reporting the loss of the Corporation as an offset to group income were prepared as in all prior years in the Corporation's New York office (R. 1414), signed by Mr. Curry (R. 664) and filed by him on July 15, 1944 (Exs. P. 4A/B, R. 491). Mr. Curry had been consulted from time to time in connection with the preparation of the returns (R. 1415) and he knew that the Corporation's loss was taken as a deduction (R. 682, 702-4). The returns reported no tax owing (Exs. P. 4A/B, R. 491).

Some months earlier the reorganization trustees, recognizing the uncertainties in the 1943 tax situation, had asked the bankruptcy court for leave to establish a reserve for taxes (R. 619, 1772). A hearing was held (R. 1270-4); the tax situation was reviewed (R. 1267, 2023, 1270-4); and an order was entered approving a reserve of $7,100,000 for tax purposes (R. 1086, 1895). Judge Sloss and Mr. Nicodemus, attorneys for the Corporation, received notice of the hearing and copies of the order of the court (R. 1991, 1217).

Under the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code (Sec. 122(b)) the 1943 loss of the Corporation could be carried backward and forward to offset group income for earlier and later periods. Accordingly, a claim for refund of the 1942 taxes paid by the trustees was prepared by Mr. Polk as a routine matter (R. 1450), signed by Mr. Curry (R. 667), and filed in ordinary course on March 9, 1945 (R. 492, 1654). The 1944 returns reporting no tax owing (Exs. P. 5A/B, R. 492) were signed and filed by Mr. Curry (R. 666) on June 15, 1945 (Exs. P. 5A/B, R. 492). The effect, however, of the Corporation's loss on group taxes did not extend beyond the first four months of 1944. For on May 1st of that year, with the approval of the bankruptcy court (R. 1192, 1930), the stock of the operating company owned by the Corporation was transferred to the reorganization committee for cancellation (R. 493). This terminated the affiliation between the Corporation and the other group members and thus the possibility of filing consolidated returns for a subsequent period was eliminated.

After the returns for 1942 and 1943 and the 1942 refund claim had been filed but before the 1944 returns were completed, the New York office of the Corporation was closed (R. 650A, 891). This left Mr. Curry, who had been with the Western Pacific group for more than twenty years, without a satisfactory source of income (R. 1017, 1110, 1496). Conversations on his behalf were held by Mr. Nicodemus and Mr. Osborn with Mr. Coulson of the Whitman firm (R. 1017, 1110) and arrangements were eventually made to provide Mr. Curry with quarters in the Whitman offices in New York (R. 651). Mr. Curry also received a small retainer to stand by to assist in tax matters if, upon the audit of the returns, his services were required (Ex. P. 33, R. 529). The Corporation directors were familiar with this arrangement (R. 899, 901-3, 1017) and Mr. Curry's testimony made it clear that during the period his office and files were in the Whitman suite he was quite free to take any action he though advisable in the Corporation's interest (R. 904).

In view of the large amounts involved, it was inevitable that the Bureau would carefully audit the Western Pacific returns. That audit took place during 1946 and 1947 and Mr. Polk, holding powers of attorney from all group members, including both the Corporation and the company (R. 626, 1784, R. 1441), represented the group in that connection. Correspondence (R. 626, 1779) and conferences between Mr. Polk and Bureau representatives (R. 1418-20, 1423-31) culminated in a proposal that the United States accept the returns as filed and deny the refund claim designed to recover the 1942 tax (R. 2142). This meant, in effect, that the tax liability for the entire period of two years and four months would be discharged by the payment of $4,201,821.54. Mr. Polk, with the approval of the reorganized company (R. 683, 1801) which was responsible for the taxes of the trustees (R. 499, 1711), submitted this proposal to the Bureau on February 11, 1947 (R. 2142). On April 2, 1947, he advised the Corporation in detail (R. 669, 1788). In the meantime and on October 16, 1946 this litigation had begun (R. 5). After a good deal of negotiating and following a stipulation in this proceeding recognizing that the tax moneys received by the United States were intended to apply pro rata over the entire period involved (R. 493, 1658), the directors of the Corporation by formal action approved the settlement proposal (R. 1103, 1644-5). On August 13, 1947 the proposed settlement was accepted by the Bureau (R. 492, 1664-5).

Petitioners complain that the Corporation was uninformed as to these tax transactions. The record contains overwhelming evidence to the contrary. The consolidated returns were prepared in the Corporation's office (R. 829-30, 844-6, 1258-9, 1414) as long as the office was open (R. 891, 1287) and were signed and filed by its president (R. 663-66, 831, 837). The Corporation had, therefore, an immediate and unimpeachable source of information as to the nature and content of those returns. In addition, the Corporation had, among other things, Mr. Polk's oral report on tax matters to Mr. Curry and Mr. Nicodemus on May 18, 1943 (R. 839, 1079-80), Mr. Polk's letter of May 20, 1943 (R. 588, 1757) reviewing the tax situation in detail, the annual reports of the trustees which discussed tax problems (Exs. P. 20-B, 20-C, R. 511-14, 1279) and the order of the bankruptcy court establishing a tax reserve (R. 1216, 1991, 703, 1085). Mr. Curry, the Corporation president, had handled tax matters for the Western Pacific group for many years (R. 841-45). He fully appreciated the difference between consolidated and separate returns (R. 1637, 2087-90) and he thoroughly understood the effect of these particular returns, as evidenced by the fact that he wrote to Mr. Nicodemus explaining them (R. 705, 2125). Mr. Schumacher was familiar with the tax transactions throughout (R. 876-77); Mr. Osborn, another director, knew that consolidated returns resulting in substantial benefits to the trustees were being filed (R. 1019-22); Mr. Wood did not doubt that consolidated returns would be used (R. 1132-3). Since the Corporation would pay no tax in any event (R. 1551, 2040), it had no financial interest in tax matters but, nevertheless, the returns could not be filed except as they were signed and filed by the Corporation (Treas. Regs. 104, Sec. 23.16). The trustees, who would have had to pay any tax the Government collected, quite naturally hired and paid tax counsel (R. 543, 1746, 1233). But Mr. Polk only gave advice (R. 1403, 1414, 1415, 1417). He did not make decisions. The effective decisions were necessarily made by the Corporation itself when it filed the returns and when by formal action of its Board and after this litigation was under way it approved the settlement.

Nor did the Corporation suffer from a lack of resourceful legal representation. The possibility of a "tax saving" claim on behalf of the Corporation occurred to Mr. Nicodemus, its counsel, and he discussed that possibility with three prominent tax lawyers: Thomas Tarleau, then recently legislative counsel for the Treasury (R. 1059), Leslie Rapp, formerly minority clerk of the House Ways and Means Committee (R. 1059-60) and Claude Dudley, who was associated with Mr. Nicodemus in his efforts to obtain favorable tax legislation from Congress (R. 1063). Mr. Dudley, like Mr. Polk (R. 1433), Mr. Elsey (R. 1285), Mr. Ehrman (R. 1240-42) and the prominent tax specialists who offered to testify on the call of respondents (R. 1586-95), had never heard of any such claim (R. 1063). Mr. Tarleau and Mr. Rapp thought the idea had no merit (R. 1062-63). On this advice and until this litigation Mr. Nicodemus did not pursue the suggestion further. But obviously the Corporation did not suffer from lack of information or ingenuity.

On December 31, 1944 the railroad properties were returned, by order of the bankruptcy court, to the reorganized company (R. 36, 498, 1711). At that time all duality ceased. Those of the Corporation's directors and officers who had

It has ruled that for the purpose of determining earnings and profits available for dividends a company which joins in a consolidated return is to be charged only with its pro rata of the tax and without tax saving payments. Moreover, a holding company which offsets its income by a subsidiary's loss must reduce the basis upon which it holds the stock of the subsidiary by an equal amount, a manifest injustice if it were contemplated that the holding company would pay for the tax saving.

The reasons for this unanimous disapproval of petitioner's position are not far to seek. Consolidated returns are authorized by Congress because, as an administrative matter, they free the government from the necessity of allocating and reallocating profit and loss among the group members and because, as a matter of fairness, they permit a business organized by subsidiaries to pay no more tax than a business organized by departments where the losses of one department freely offset the profits of another. The taxpayers under the consolidated returns remain, nevertheless, the individual companies and the effect of the return, concisely stated, is only that the tax of each is calculated to some extent by the financial transactions of all the others. No one has been able to see why on that account the companies joining in the return have claims against each other.

The argument for compensation for the "use of the loss" proves on examination to be based entirely on loose definition and inexact analysis. The loss, since it has tax consequence, is said to be "property," an "asset" of the loss company. This is casuistry. A loss is not an asset but the lack of assets, not property but no-property. In a consolidated return the loss has tax consequence—but is still a loss and nothing more. And even this is not precisely accurate. Fundamentally the tax law operates on business transactions, events in the world of affairs. A company operates its plant and sells its product at a net loss in the taxable year of $100,000. This fact entered in a separate return means that it pays no tax. Entered in a consolidated return this fact may mean that neither the company itself nor its affiliate pays a tax. But the first company on that account has no claim on the second. It has manufactured its product as best it knew how and sold that product at the best price it could obtain. This activity, undertaken purely on its own account and for its own purposes, has as a side effect, so to speak, tax consequences for the second concern. But this incidental effect does not create a claim. The loss company has done nothing for its affiliate — provided no property or service, taken no action of any kind. The most that can be said is that its misfortune has resulted, because Congress has said so, in another's gain. But this is not enough for a cause of action.

Nor can a cause of action be predicated on an assumed power to bargain. A consolidated return can be filed only if all the members of the group join in the return. Hence, if one can bargain, all can bargain; and the net result of bargaining would be only to reward the most obstinate. Affiliated companies, as this Court has so often said, must deal decently with each other. Their claims inter se are measured by justice and the law—not by power and hard trading. A loss company in an affiliated group provides no asset and no service in bringing about the tax saving. It has, therefore, no claim. And every disinterested person has said so.

There are other reasons why no one agrees with petitioners. To accept their position would be to engraft upon an already elaborate tax system an equally elaborate system of tax saving payments. Husbands and wives sign joint returns; businessmen arrange their affairs with an eye to the tax consequence; a lawyer sends a bill to make a deduction available to his client in the current accounting period. Thus far no one has supposed that the consequence is a right to compensation. If, however, the ideas of petitioners are to be accepted, there must in all such cases be agreement on a tax saving payment or a suit such as this one. And all for nothing. Whatever the immediate gain to these petitioners, the net benefit from any such practice to any particular person, over the years, is speculative indeed. What is certain is confusion and needless complexity.

Petitioners argue that the tax law intends that the parent company shall have the saving from consolidated returns. But the Revenue Acts, as everyone knows, create no private rights and even if they did there is not a word in the Code to indicate that Congress, generally hostile to holding companies, had any such intent as petitioners ascribe to it.

2. The merits of the claim: the circumstances of this case. There is no reason why the general rule should not apply in this case. The decision of this Court in March, 1943, approving the reorganization plan, is said to have "severed the economic unity" between the Corporation and the other group members, thereby creating a special situation. To describe the action of this Court as a "severance of economic unity" is dramatic, perhaps, but misleading. In sober truth the decision did this and no more: it made it clear that at an indefinite date not far in the future the Corporation would be required to surrender its stock in the operating company for cancellation, which in turn made it unlikely that the Corporation would receive any benefit from the tax saving from the consolidated returns. Or, to say it shortly, it became plain that the group affiliation was about to end. But is this a reason to compel respondent to make a $17,000,000 tax-saving payment to the Corporation? For 25 years the Western Pacific group under Corporation management had filed consolidated returns, often to the Corporation's advantage, with no tax saving payments. Why, because the end of the affiliation comes in sight, is the Corporation justified in reversing its settled practice by demanding a payment the like of which had never before been made?

The fact that otherwise the Corporation would receive no benefit from the tax saving is not an argument for petitioners. The Corporation is not and was not entitled to a benefit. Aside from the formality of preparing and signing the consolidated returns it did nothing to bring about the tax saving to the trustees. That saving resulted directly from the decision of this Court and the bankruptcy court declaring worthless the Corporation's stock in the operating company. In acquiring that stock nearly 30 years earlier the Corporation was plainly acting for its own purposes and with no thought of providing a tax advantage to the trustees. In declaring the stock worthless this Court and the court below were equally unconcerned with trustee taxes. Moreover, the Corporation vigorously opposed the declaration of worthlessness. In a very real sense, therefore, the tax saving came about not because of but in spite of the Corporation.

been on the debtor's Board of Directors withdrew (R. 2109). The New York office was shortly thereafter closed (R. 1287) and thenceforth none of the Corporation's directors or officers held any position with the reorganized company (R. 1719-20, 1724, 2109, 519-21). The majority of the Board of the reorganized company were western men of affairs, who had not theretofore been directors, and who have never held any office in the Corporation (R. 1720, 2109, 519). Charles Elsey, who became president of the reorganized company, had never held a Corporation office (R. 1251). Prior to revestment Mr. Elsey arranged with Mr. Nicodemus for the termination of the latter's relations as counsel, except for some small traffic matters (R. 1047-8).

In April, 1945 the trustees filed their final account (R. 1203, 1944) and on May 21, 1945 received their discharge (R. 1203, 1986). The reorganization proceeding was closed by a final decree dated March 28, 1946 (R. 1219, 2013).

Beginning on December 11, 1939, and at all times thereafter, the petitioner Corporation was a party to the reorganization proceeding (R. 1217, 1994, 1600-3). The Corporation did not suggest, however, that it had a claim against the trustees on account of tax savings—and this even though the last of the tax returns was filed July 15, 1945 (Ex. P. 5A/B, R. 492), nine months before the reorganization proceeding closed on March 28, 1946 (R. 1219, 2013). An important reason, expressly stated, why the reorganization proceeding remained open after the properties were returned to the reorganized company was to permit the bankruptcy court to hear and consider claims against its trustees (R. 62). Nevertheless the tax saving claim was never asserted either by the petitioner Corporation or by the petitioner stockholders who acquired their interest in the Corporation from two to four years before the proceeding was closed (Int. Brief, p. 3).

The complaint in this action was placed on file October 10, 1946 (R. 5, 11), five months after the final decree of the bankruptcy court. As a practical matter, however, the litigation began when the petitioner stockholders acquired a small portion of the preferred stock of the Corporation at a nominal cost[2] and in June, 1946, brought a stockholders' suit in New York against the officers of the Corporation (R. 147) charging, among other things, failure to protect the interests of the Corporation in connection with the consolidated returns. Three months later this action was filed (R. 5) and in due course the stockholders intervened (R. 121-55).

The District Court, following elaborate discovery proceedings and an extensive trial, gave judgment for respondents (R. 258, 320). The District Judge believed that the tax result was unjustified (R. 260-270) but concluded that the failure, if any, to pay taxes owing to the United States could not be corrected by awarding the tax moneys to the Corporation (R. 270-1), that the Corporation's claim as a substantive matter was without merit (R. 271-2, 274) and that it was in any event foreclosed by the failure to present it to the bankruptcy court (R. 272-5). On appeal the judgment for respondents was affirmed (R. 2214). The Court of Appeals reviewed the history of the transaction (R. 2214-18,

[2]Respondents offered to prove that the intervenors bought their $100 par value preferred stock in the Corporation in 1942 and thereafter at a total cost of $37,007.39 or an average of $1.00 per share (Exs. D. 18 id., 19 id., 59 id., R. 1146, 1642-3, 1905-07, 2102). The evidence was excluded as irrelevant (R. 1175, 1643).

2224-6), joined in the conclusion of the District Court that from first to last the tax transactions were conducted in the ordinary course of business without fraud, suppression or wrongdoing (R. 2219, 2226, 2234, 2235), noted that under the circumstances a failure by the common officers of the Corporation and its subsidiaries to file consolidated returns, thereby incurring unnecessary taxes, would have been unjustified (R. 2232-4), and determined that the Corporation, with fiduciary duties to the unpaid creditors of its subsidiary (R. 2234-5), had no claim to all or any part of moneys which in the absence of the consolidated returns would have been paid to the United States. The Honorable James Alger Fee, the United States District Judge for Oregon, sitting on special assignment in the Court of Appeals, dissented. The dissenting opinion argues that the opinion below, adopted by the District Court as its findings, was inadequate for that purpose (R. 2239). To the extent that the dissent considers the merits of the case, it tends to assume rather than argue the point at issue by assuming that the Corporation "had a property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns" for the surrender of which it might have a claim (R. 2242).

Petitions for rehearing and for rehearing in banc were filed with the Court of Appeals. The application for rehearing was denied (R. 2259-60). The petition for rehearing in banc was stricken as being unauthorized by law or by the rules of court (R. 2260). A petition to file a motion to reinstate the petition for rehearing in banc (R. 2267) was denied by six of the seven Circuit Judges, Judge Denman dissenting (R. 2288, 2313). Application was made to this Court for certiorari and on October 13, 1952 the certiorari petitions were granted.[3]

This detailed account of the circumstances of the case must surely demonstrate the validity of the conclusion of the courts below: that these tax transactions were in every respect open, candid and honest, free from any taint of subterfuge, improper purpose or wrongdoing (R. 970, 2219, 2226, 2234, 2235). It must demonstrate, too, that the charges which the petitioners fling so freely into this case are untrue. Petitioners would have the Court believe that the trustees of the bankruptcy court, or their representatives, seized upon the crippled Corporation, craftily kept it alive, and then by devious dealing suppressed its claims and manipulated its affairs to their own advantage. Nothing could be further from the truth. No witness so testified; no document was produced to support any such claim. The record from beginning to end is a record of honest and capable men conducting their affairs openly and in the ordinary course of business. The dualities now found invidious were in fact created by the Corporation itself for its own purposes (R. 735, 992, 1627), the same purposes of management which result in the same dualities in every holding company system. The arrangement by which the operating company paid part of the expense of the Corporation's New York office, now alleged to be a device for controlling the Corporation and its affairs, was as old as the affiliation itself (R. 644); and when the trustees undertook to pay all the New York expense, they did so only because the Corporation, finding itself without funds (R. 789-90, 1243-4), repeatedly requested that this arrangement be made (R. 790, 1244, 1257). The alleged capture of the Corporation's president by the Whitman firm proves to have been an arrangement made with the approval of the Corporation's directors (R. 899-903, 1017, 1495) and motivated by an attempt to provide financial security during a difficult period for a man who had rendered twenty years of exemplary service to the Western Pacific group (R. 1017, 1496). The consolidated tax returns, said to be the end product of a dark plan deviously executed, were in fact prepared in the Corporation's own offices in the identical fashion and by the same personnel who had been preparing similar consolidated returns for the Western Pacific group for many years (R. 841, 843-7). They were signed and filed by the Corporation's president (R. 846-7), a man now said to be incompetent in tax matters, but who had managed Western Pacific taxes for nearly twenty years (R. 845) and who wrote a letter about these very returns to Corporation counsel, describing them with a ludicity which would have done credit to anyone (R. 705, 2125). Mr. Polk, the tax lawyer, is harshly criticized, but on inquiry from the court petitioners found themselves obliged to concede that the tax returns were in fact properly prepared (R. 834-5), properly filed (R. 834-5), and that Mr. Polk handled tax matters for the group to the complete satisfaction of everyone (R. 1422-3). Finally, in spite of all the intimations of suppression of the Corporation and its rights, the record shows without contradiction that counsel for the Corporation considered the possibility of a tax saving claim (R. 1060), took advice of those best qualified to advise him and decided against it (R. 1059-64). Small wonder that on this record not one of the judges below has been willing to give a moment of credence to the charges which petitioners now bring to this Court. If it is true, as petitioners apparently believe it to be true, that they can succeed only by proving that the Corporation was somehow manipulated and managed, its rights suppressed and its people beguiled and abused, consideration of this case can stop now. For both courts below in explicit fashion and on an overwhelming record have found against these contentions. The Court of Appeals, quoting the trial court, said:

[3]The courts below, both believing that as a matter of substance the Corporation's claim was without merit, had no occasion to consider all the problems presented by the litigation. The District Court accepted respondents' argument that the reorganization put an end to the claim but the majority judges of the Court of Appeals did not reach this issue. Neither court reached the defenses offered by respondents of limitations, estoppel and res judicata. Neither court had occasion, moreover, to determine the amount of the tax saving, a difficult question on which the testimony is conflicting, and neither court, of course, made any effort to define the amount of the Corporation's claim, assuming it had one, a point upon which petitioners themselves are in disagreement.

> "It hardly seems conceivable that Corporation could complain because consolidated returns were filed. Not only was it in accordance with past practice of the group and under the supervision of Corporation's president, as in former years, but it was done under the guidance of the independent tax experts employed upon the suggestion of the General Counsel for Corporation, who represents appellants in the present proceeding. As the trial court stated '* * * when everybody was, as they were in this case, acting completely in the open in the matter, nobody was concealing anything from anyone else, the element of fraud or deception, of the kind that you refer to, is absent * * * Everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed * * * Everybody knew that these attorneys were being employed to file this consolidated return. It was all done right out in the open.' " (R. 2226)

But this failure to prove wrongdoing is only half the difficulty with petitioners' case. Beneath the problem of the conduct of the parties are more fundamental problems. Does the use of a loss in a consolidated return create a right to compensation? If it does not, petitioners have no claim, whatever the conduct of the parties may have been. Did the Corporation under the circumstances have a right to bargain against the trustees? If it did not, the identity of the Corporation representatives is immaterial. It is to these fundamental questions that the balance of this brief is devoted and respondents believe that the answers are plain. The Corporation does not now have and it never had any basis for a claim to compensation because of the tax transactions. The Corporation does not now have and it never had a position from which it could bargain against the trustees.

Petitioners seek to obscure their failure to establish a claim by arguing that the court trustees had fiduciary obligations to the Corporation which they failed to discharge. But a cestui, even the cestui of an express trust, cannot sue his trustee unless there has been a violation of the cestui's rights. Here, the Corporation has no claim on account of the tax transactions and it does not acquire one by proclaiming itself a cestui and the court trustees, trustees on its behalf.

The fact is, moreover, that neither the respondent nor the trustees had trust obligations to the Corporation. Prior to January 1, 1945, the respondent, the reorganized company, did not exist and the old company with its assets in the hands of the court was completely inactive.[1] The duties of the trustees of the bankruptcy court are defined by bankruptcy law and they do not include special and overriding obligations to the Corporation. Furthermore, the foundation of the Corporation's claim to a special position, the contention that it was dominated and controlled by the trustees, is completely unproved. Neither court below could be persuaded to counsel's position and the Corporation itself in answering the complaint in intervention categorically denied all charges of domination or control (R. 156). The truth is plain enough: the consolidated returns were filed not because the trustees took charge of the Corporation and its affairs but because for twenty years the Western Pacific group had filed such returns and because everyone, including the Corporation and its representatives, could see that consolidated returns produced the best tax result. The consolidated returns were the product of good sense, not the product of trustee domination of the Corporation or suppression of its rights.

But even if the trustees had controlled the tax transactions, nothing for which the Corporation contends would follow. Counsel for the Corporation have agreed that the returns were properly prepared (R. 834-5) and properly filed (R. 834-5, 1422-3). It must be obvious, moreover, that if consolidated returns had not been filed this case could not exist. Under these circumstances, with proper returns properly filed and this claim dependent upon them, what difference can it make who had charge of the work? To which was the Corporation's subsidiary and the debtor in reorganization; second, the reorganization trustees who were the court's agents in operating the railroad; and third, the reorganized railroad company, which was the defendant below and is the respondent here. The indiscriminate use of the term "respondent" by petitioners can serve only to mislead and confuse.

succeed here the Corporation must show that by reason of the consolidated returns it has a valid claim to the taxes saved. The Corporation has in fact no such claim and it was never in a position to bargain for a payment to which it was not entitled. It makes no difference, therefore, who had charge of the tax transactions.

The petitioner stockholders also argue that the trustees had fiduciary obligations to the Corporation. But, unlike the Corporation, they impose those duties not because of control but because of dualities; they measure them not by the rules appropriate to express trusts but by an alleged obligation to deal fairly; and, as a consequence of the alleged breach of these fiduciary obligations, they claim not $17,000,000 but some amount they are unwilling to name. The arguments of the petitioner stockholders, like those of the petitioner Corporation, fail, however, to reach the question for decision. It is suggested that in consolidated return matters the arrangement between the group members must be such as would commend itself to independent boards of directors. This suggestion is not helpful, first, because by definition consolidated returns can exist only in the presence of affiliation, and, second, because this test or the test of "fairness" is largely meaningless, as petitioners themselves demonstrate by their inability to translate it into dollars. Fairness, it seems obvious, requires a payment only if the law recognizes a claim. Again, therefore, the problem returns: did the Corporation on account of these tax returns have a claim to compensation? The answer is "no."

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

1. The merits of the claim: the general rule. This case has to do with consolidated tax returns and the narrow question of the rights among themselves of taxpayers who file them. The problem reaches this Court after thousands of such returns have been filed over a period of 30 years and after the issue presented here has long since been considered settled. Only once before has there been a challenge to the accepted procedure whereby the consolidated tax is allocated pro rata among the income members of the group without tax saving payments to the loss members. Insull and Hopson and a few others once adopted a practice similar to that now advocated by petitioners. They compelled subsidiaries of the holding company system to pay the parent company "taxes" calculated as though the subsidiaries were to file a separate return, whereupon the holding company filed a consolidated return and took to itself the saving. The Federal Trade Commission, studying holding companies and their procedures, noted and condemned this practice; the Committees of Congress, formulating the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, echoed this condemnation; and the Securities and Exchange Commission by its Rule U-45(b)(6) has put a stop to it in the utility field. The Interstate Commerce Commission, which is also concerned with the regulation of holding company systems, has had no occasion to issue a formal order, but on more than one occasion it has refused to recognize tax saving claims and, as respondents offered to prove, the uniform practice of the railroads under Commission supervision is in accordance with the general practice and with what was done here. The Treasury plans its tax procedures on the same basis.

profits taxes of the individual companies based upon separate returns. * * *"[7] (Emphasis supplied.)

Petitioners cite and rely upon three instances in which the Commission is said to have permitted deviations from this formula. In Release No. 4444, 13 S.E.C. 649, dated July 28, 1943, "In the Matter of Consolidated Electric Gas Company, The Islands Gas & Electric Company," Islands, a subsidiary in the Consolidated group, had large war losses in Manila, which were available as tax deductions for the group. If, however, Islands reacquired its properties it would be required to pay the tax which the deductions had eliminated (I.R.C. Sec. 127(c)). The group members proposed a special arrangement to protect Islands against this tax if it were later assessed. The Commission agreed. The purpose of the arrangement was to make certain that Islands did not pay more tax by joining in the consolidated return than it would have paid on a separate return basis. This principle is of no value to petitioners. The Corporation paid no tax under the consolidated returns and would have paid no tax on a separate return basis (R. 824, 826, 1306-07).

This same purpose to protect a subsidiary from an actual loss through paying extra taxes on account of a consolidated return underlies the ruling of the Commission in Release No. 5535, 17 S.E.C. 839, dated January 3, 1945, "In the Matter of Cities Service Company." There a subsidiary was amortizing the cost of a plant at a special war-time rate which would result in complete amortization in five years. This provided the subsidiary with large deductions from taxable income which were useful to the group in consolidated returns. It also meant that after the five-year period the subsidiary would have no amortization deduction. The group members accordingly agreed to compensate the subsidiary for the disadvantage to it arising from the tax procedures adopted.

[7]For a detailed discussion as to the effect of the Rule by the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, see Appendix B, p. 17.

The basis for decision in Release No. 4806, 15 S.E.C. 161, 164, dated January 3, 1944, "In the Matter of Consolidated Electric & Gas Company" is stated by the Commission as follows:

> "Inasmuch as Consolidated owns 100% of the common stock equity of each of its subsidiaries affected by the proposal, and there do not appear to be impairments in the earned surplus accounts of such subsidiaries, it is, apart from the accounting consequences of the transaction, immaterial whether the proposed payments are made in the manner proposed or the books of the subsidiaries are permitted to reflect the taxes as reduced by the subject savings and corresponding amounts paid to Consolidated by way of dividends."

Since the parent who received the payment was entitled to the money in any event, the Commission saw this case only as an accounting problem and agreed to the proposed arrangement for that reason.[8]

In none of these releases did the Commission recognize the existence of a right to a "tax saving" payment. Indeed,

[8]Subsequent to the releases upon which petitioners rely the Commission issued its Accounting Release No. 53, wherein it gave further attention to "Charges in Lieu of Taxes." criticizing petitioners' position from the point of view of sound accounting. See Appendix B, p. 10.

Petitioners make much of an alleged power of choice residing in the Corporation, saying that the Corporation was free to file separate returns and that it therefore must be paid for its decision to file the consolidated returns, the formality which was requisite in order that the loss from the worthlessness of the stock might offset trustee income. But the Corporation had in fact no freedom of choice. It is true that the consolidated returns for 1943 and 1944 were filed after the group affiliation had terminated. But, for at least two reasons, this did not put the Corporation in a position to bargain for a payment to which it was not otherwise entitled. First, the returns related to the period of affiliation and were possible only because of that affiliation. With respect to those returns, therefore, the group members were all bound by the obligations appropriate to the affiliation period, including an obligation on the Corporation as parent to exercise its management powers in the best interest of the group and in that connection to file tax returns resulting in the minimum permissible tax payment. Payment of unnecessary taxes is no more compatible with sound management than any other waste of corporate assets. During the affiliation period, the Corporation plainly could not have bargained against its subsidiaries by threatening, in breach of its good management duty, to compel them to pay avoidable taxes. With respect to tax returns relating to the affiliation period the situation was not changed in one degree by the termination of affiliation. For it is well settled that fiduciary obligations, including the obligation of a holding company to its subsidiaries and their creditors, extend without interruption to all matters necessary to wind up the affairs of the fiduciary period.

The bankruptcy proceeding provides a second reason why the Corporation could not bargain with the group as a stranger. The operating company, unable to meet its obligations to its creditors, filed its reorganization petition at the command of the Corporation and the Corporation became a party to the proceeding, asserting there its claims against the estate. Under these circumstances the Corporation was plainly obligated to cooperate in such formalities, including the filing of tax returns, as would best protect the assets of the estate by minimizing tax payments by the trustees. This required consolidated returns not only because in such returns group losses would offset trustee income but also because only through consolidated returns would the operating loss carry-overs and unused excess profits tax credits accumulated by the trustees in earlier years operate to reduce trustee taxes. Consolidated returns could not in any conceivable fashion disadvantage the Corporation; and since the advantage of such returns to the estate was plain, the Corporation was obligated to file them, and having that obligation it could not set a price on cooperation. For in a reorganization proceeding, as this Court has been emphatic to say, the stockholders of the debtor have no strategic position, no power to bargain. "Threats by stockholders of the kind here in question are merely threats to the jurisdiction of the court, which jurisdiction these selfsame stockholders invoked for their benefit when they caused the debtor's petition to be filed. Consequently, these claims of the stockholders are, as we have said, entitled to no more dignity than any claim based upon sheer nuisance value." Case v. Los Angeles Products Co., 308 U.S. 106, 130-1. The Corporation, as parent of the group and stockholder of the debtor, could not assert a strategic position and by threatening to file separate returns drive a bargain for a payment to which it was not otherwise entitled. It was entitled to no payment on account of the tax saving because it had done nothing to bring that saving about. The tax saving resulted from a decision of the courts approving the reorganization plan—not from any property or service provided by the Corporation to the trustees.

Petitioners invoke many rules of law but make a case under none of them. Indeed, the bare fundamentals of any cause of action, proof of wrong and proof of damage, are not made out. The reference in the consolidated returns to the Corporation's loss did not wrong the Corporation and the Corporation on that account has suffered no damage. It paid no taxes under the consolidated returns as it would have paid none under separate returns. The Corporation has no unjust enrichment claim. It has been deprived of nothing; there is nothing to restore to it; and there is no ground of fraud, mistake or duress to justify an order of restitution.

The Corporation has no claim on quantum meruit. It did nothing to bring about the tax result except sign the returns, a service which, if it be one, it was plainly obligated to perform for reasons of good management and to conserve the bankruptcy estate. It transferred no property to the trustees; it never in a single particular shifted the course of its affairs to advantage the trustees. It has nothing, therefore, on which to base a claim. Discussion of dualities and fiduciary duties does not assist petitioners. This is not a case of corporate officers working for several companies and being neglectful of the rights of one of them. The Corporation received nothing here; not because of divided loyalties, but because it was entitled to nothing.

Finally, the Corporation's position is truly without equity. The junior secured creditors of the operating company went unpaid in the reorganization proceeding by several million dollars and all the creditors, junior and senior alike, received their new securities on a valuation which the market has consistently refused to confirm. To these creditors of its subsidiary, the present stockholders of the reorganized company, the Corporation owed fiduciary duties. It now proposes to violate that fiduciary obligation by depleting the assets of the reorganized company by $17,000,000 and to that extent increasing the distance by which they go unpaid. That position has not commended itself to the courts below and it will not commend itself to this Court.

3. The bar of the reorganization. During 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, the period in which taxes were saved, the railroad properties were operated by trustees of the bankruptcy court. If taxes were owing or saved for those years they were owing or saved by the trustees; and the taxes themselves or any valid claim on account of tax saving would have been an expense of administration. The Corporation, a party to the reorganization proceeding, failed to present its tax saving claim in that proceeding even though the bankruptcy court carefully retained jurisdiction until March 28, 1946, well after the returns were filed, to hear all such claims. This means that even if the claim were valid it could not now be allowed. There are two reasons. A claim against trustees administering properties on behalf of a court is in effect a claim against the estate and to have validity it must receive, one way or another, the approval of the court in charge of the estate. This claim received no such approval; the estate no longer exists; the proceeding which gave rise to the estate is closed. The claim is dead.

The Corporation's claim is barred, moreover, by the finality which attaches to a reorganization proceeding. The principal purpose of such a proceeding is to so define and limit the obligations of the reorganized company that its financial position will be secure. All claims not allowed are foreclosed. This rule applies as forcibly to claims arising during the period of administration as to claims of an earlier date. The reorganization of the Western Pacific plainly fails if, with the bonded indebtedness of the reorganized company carefully limited to $10,000,000, the Corporation, a party to that reorganization, can now enforce an undisclosed claim for $17,000,000.

The assumption agreement requiring the reorganized company to discharge certain obligations of the trustees does not provide the Corporation with an escape from the bar of the reorganization. It is the practice in reorganizations to return the properties to the reorganized company before the proceeding is closed and while the court retains jurisdiction to hear claims against its trustees. After revestment, however, the court has no assets from which to pay such claims. Accordingly, it is customary to require the reorganized company to discharge them. The claims to be discharged, however, are those and only those which could be asserted effectively against the trustees, that is, claims presented to and allowed by the bankruptcy court. No one has ever supposed that this conventional method of providing credit to the court can be read to nullify the control of the bankruptcy court over the expense of the reorganization proceeding. Nor is there any force in the suggestion that the Corporation's claim arose subsequent to the reorganization and is therefore outside the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. Petitioners base their demands on events which took place during the period of trusteeship, an alleged appropriation of the Corporation's loss in a return filed July 15, 1944, and on dualities which terminated December 31, 1944. Inevitably therefore petitioners relate their claim to the period of trustee operation and bring it within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.

A reorganization proceeding is a judicial proceeding and a reorganization decree is a judgment. The Corporation had every opportunity to litigate its claim in the reorganization court. Having failed to do so the claim is foreclosed by principles of res judicata.

4. Limitaiions, laches and estoppel. Petitioners assert their claim in terms of unjust enrichment. Under California law the applicable period of limitations is two years. This case began more than two years after the 1943 returns were filed and the claim insofar as it relates to 1943 taxes or depends upon the 1943 stock loss is therefore barred. The claim is also barred by laches and estoppel.

5. The amount of the tax saving. Neither court below believed the Corporation had a claim and neither court, therefore, had occasion to compute the amount of the tax saving. The calculations of that saving in the record are conflicting, producing results varying from one to seventeen million dollars, depending, first, upon what returns for what years are to be imagined in place of the returns actually filed and, second, upon the treatment to be given under the assumed returns to such items as loss carry-overs, unused excess profits credits, inter-company interest accruals, accelerated amortization deductions, refund claims, reparation claims and the partial worthlessness of a large debt owing to the reorganization trustees by one of the subsidiaries of the operating company. The calculation of taxes under a consolidated return is always difficult. To calculate taxes under imaginary returns, consolidated or separate, is to invite a nightmare of supposition and counter-supposition from which, thus far at least, the business community has happily been spared. Moreover, the calculation of the tax saving is only half the problem. Then comes the equally difficult question of the amount of the reward to be paid for the tax saving, a question on which petitioners themselves are unable to agree.

Petitioners have only their own interest before them and they are not to be criticized, perhaps, if they refuse to look beyond this case. This Court, however, cannot reckon so narrowly. To accept petitioners' argument would upset thousands of consolidated return transactions now considered closed; it would invalidate by indirection Rule U-45 (b)(6) of the Securities and Exchange Commission; it would require the railroads to revise procedures long accepted as settled; and, most important of all, it would invite tax saving claims nation-wide between husbands and wives, in holding company systems and whenever taxpayers cooperate to achieve a favorable tax result. Petitioners present nothing to justify a revision so radical in accepted procedures.

6. Rehearing in banc. Petitioners, relying on Section 46 of the Judicial Code, ask the Court to order all seven judges of the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to consider their application for a rehearing by that court in banc. Section 46 provides in part:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."

The obvious and controlling purpose of this provision is to permit a panel of three judges to dispose of the case, a result which can be accomplished only if the panel can rule effectively on all matters incident to the decision, including applications for rehearing. There would be little sense to a statute designed to permit a court of seven judges to function by panels of three if every litigant by applying for hearing or rehearing in banc can compel all seven to act. Moreover, any such result is contrary to the statute itself. The statute says that action in banc shall be taken only if a majority of the full court so orders. Petitioners claim they are entitled to compel in banc action upon their application for rehearing. They seek to take to themselves, therefore, a power which under the statute rests exclusively with a majority of the court.

Traditionally, the question of hearing by division or in banc is a question for the court with which the litigants are not concerned and upon which their views are not consulted. A litigant disappointed in the District Court files an appeal. The court, if it likes, can order the case heard in banc even though no request for such hearing is made and even though both parties oppose it. In similar fashion a litigant loses its appeal and asks rehearing. Again the court, if it likes, can order the rehearing and again it is for the court and not for counsel to say whether the rehearing shall be by division or in banc. When the litigant has applied for rehearing he has done all he can. The problem of whether that rehearing, if granted, shall be by division or in banc is a problem for the court alone, a problem not unlike the problem of determining who among the available judges shall hear the case in the first instance.

Section 46 is immediately responsive to the decision of this Court in Textile Mills S. Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, where, with some difficulty, it was held that a Court of Appeals had power to sit in banc in spite of the provision of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 212 (now Sec. 46(c)) for decisions by divisions. The sole purpose of the section was and is to make it clear that Courts of Appeal have power to conduct in banc proceedings. To grant power to the court to act in banc is one thing; to say, as petitioners say, that the court must act in banc in considering applications for rehearing is quite another. This Court made no such suggestion in the Textile Mills case and there is nothing to indicate that Section 46 had any such purpose.

ARGUMENT

I. Petitioners Have No Claim

During the reorganization, consolidated returns were filed in order that income and excess profits taxes should be kept to the least amount permitted by the revenue act. The reorganization trustees received tax advantages through the returns. Now petitioners seek, by a retrospective examination of the tax proceedings, to make out a claim to the trustees' tax advantage in favor of the holding company. As the trial judge said:

> "Everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed. Everybody knew who the directors were. Everyone knew that these attorneys were being employed to file this consolidated return. It was all done right out in the open. The question that you have to present in this case is, now, can we go back and under principles of equity, redetermine the transaction on the basis that a legal or equitable wrong was done by what was done." (R. 970-1.)

Petitioners would have the Court belatedly redetermine the transaction in equity and thereby transfer to the holding company the tax advantages of the reorganization trustees, advantages which the reorganization court, and everyone else, knew were being sought for the taxpayer, i.e., for the trustees.

The District Court gave judgment for respondents on the merits. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Both courts have rightly held that there is no equity in petitioners' claim.

A. THE GENERAL RULE. THE CLAIM OF THE HOLDING COMPANY IS CONTRARY TO THE APPLICABLE RULE, UNDER WHICH NO PAYMENT IS MADE FOR "TAX SAVINGS" RESULTING FROM THE USE OF CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.

Since 1918 it has been regular practice for the business community to file consolidated tax returns. From 1928 to 1944, for example, 54,685 such returns, involving more than 176,000 companies, were placed on file.[5] In each of these [5] See for 1928-1941, Statistics of Income for 1941, Part 2, p. 293; for 1942, Treasury Press Release No. 44-54, December 31, 1944, p. 16, and No. V-229, February 25, 1946, p. 6; for 1943, Treasury Press Release No. V-229, February 25, 1946, pp. 6 and 10; for 1944, Statistics of Income for 1944, Part 2, Preliminary, pp. 10-11.

50,000 cases the problem of adjusting intra-group rights and liabilities was necessarily presented. The formula which has always been used distributes the actual tax under the consolidated return to the group members in proportion to their respective taxable incomes without "tax savings" payments. No payment in lieu of taxes is made to a parent company or to a loss member of the group for the advantage of the loss in the return.

The Western Pacific group has followed this practice from the beginning (this brief, p. 57).

The Securities and Exchange Commission has noted the customary use of the formula:

> "We note the customary solution of a somewhat similar problem that arises when a group of companies files a consolidated tax return. In assigning to each constituent its fair share of the consolidated tax paid by the group it is usual to divide the actual tax among the companies who would have had to pay a tax on an individual basis. If one of the included companies operated at a loss, the consolidated tax is of course reduced, but no part of the 'saving' is ordinarily paid over to the loss company by the other members of the group."[6]

Respondents offered at the trial to support this statement by detailed proof of the business practice as revealed by a special survey of the railroads, the utility systems and representative industrial companies. The proof, excluded as irrelevant (R. 1383), would have demonstrated that business systematically does what respondents say should be done and what was done in this case (R. 1387-93).

[6]Release No. 53, Accounting Series, November 16, 1945, 3 C.C.H. Fed. Sec. Law Serv. 2d ed., Par. 72,071; 61 P.U.R. (NS) 193, 222, n. 36. Excerpts from the Release are in Appendix B of this brief.

The precedents come mainly from those tribunals and departments of government which are most intimately concerned with holding company systems: the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Treasury Department, and the Federal Trade Commission. Without exception the practice which has been recommended is the practice which was followed in this case. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the semi-official National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners have reached comparable conclusions. There is no contrary view.

The Securities and Exchange Commission Rule Does Not Permit "Tax Saving" Payments for Losses in Consolidated Returns.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has ruled that the proper practice is to allocate pro rata the consolidated tax without "tax saving" payments. Rule U-45(b)(6), adopted for the regulation of public utility systems, forbids intragroup extensions of credit without S.E.C. approval except in certain cases, one of which is:

> "(6) A loan or extension of credit or an agreement of indemnity arising out of a consolidated tax return filed by a holding company (or other parent company) and its subsidiaries: Provided, That the top company in the group assumes primary responsibility for the payment of any tax liability involved, subject to the right to contribution from the several members of the group in an amount not exceeding as to any company that percentage of the sum of the normal tax, surtax and excess profits tax on a consolidated basis which the sum of the normal tax, surtax and an excess profits tax of such company if paid on a separate return basis is of the aggregate amount of normal, surtax and excess of reorganization which held worthless the Corporation's interest in the old company. It then became probable, but not certain (see Insurance Group v. D. & R. G. W. R. Co., 329 U.S. 607, 611), that the reorganization plan would thereafter be confirmed by the District Court, that mechanics would be provided for putting it into operation and that at some undetermined date in the future the old stock would be cancelled and affiliation would cease to exist. Nothing else then occurred. The stock of the old company remained in the hands of the Corporation. The affiliation continued. The final "severance" took place May 1, 1944, when affiliation terminated with the surrender of the stock to the Reorganization Committee.

Second. The "economic unity" in the Western Pacific group which, according to petitioners, was severed on March 15, 1943, had never existed. From the outset the majority of the first mortgage bonds of the old company were with the public (34 F. Supp. 493, 497). As the financial condition of the old company became more critical, the value of the stock interest disappeared and the company belonged in truth and in equity to its bondholders. Helvering v. Cement Investors, 316 U. S. 527, 532; United States v. Butterworth-Judson Corp., 269 U. S. 504, 513. There was no "economic unity." It could not, therefore, have been severed on March 15, 1943.

Third. "Economic unity" in matters related to consolidated returns is a false factor demonstrably of no significance. Rarely, if ever, does "economic unity" exist in holding company systems. Only in the exceptional case does the parent company completely own the subsidiaries. More often the parent, by voting control, controls properties which in reality belong to the public through the purchase of senior securities.[28] The revenue acts recognize this diverse economic interest in the ordinary holding company system and they make no requirement of economic unity as a condition for filing consolidated returns. They require only that there be "affiliation," i.e. that 95% of the equity and voting stock be held within the group (I.R.C. Sec. 141).[29] Thus in emphasizing economic unity petitioners would have the Court accept the rare situation as the ordinary situation

> "On the other hand, the long-term debt of the operating companies consists mostly of bonds which are secured by the mortgage on their physical properties. The long-term debt together with preferred stock usually represent the capital obtained from the investing public. The common stock of the operating companies is usually the voting stock and is owned by the holding companies for control purposes."

Dewing reports that in seven large holding companies, a total of 52% of the bonds, 32% of the preferred stock and 16% of the common stock was publicly held (p. 1051).

[29]Since 1918 the Revenue Acts have progressed steadily away from any theory of economic unity or common ownership as far as consolidated returns are concerned. The 1918 statute defined affiliation in general terms of ownership or control (Section 240b). By progressive steps through the Revenue Act of 1924 and the Revenue Act of 1928 the theoretical approach has been abandoned in favor of a technical requirement—ownership of 95% of the voting stock. See 8 Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation (1942) Sec. 46.13, p. 426.

The cases talk from time to time of a single business enterprise, but whenever it is important they have recognized that the test is what the statute requires and nothing more. See United States v. Donaldson Realty Co., 106 F.2d 509, 517; Commissioner v. General Gas & Electric Corp., 72 F.2d 364; Erie Lighting Co. v. Commissioner, 93 F.2d 883. The basic theory of consolidated returns is of course that the returns serve only as a method of computing the tax owing by the individual group members who are and remain the taxpayers. See Helvering v. Morgan's, Inc., 293 U.S. 121, 127.

if the law requires such payments, Rule U-45(b)(6), which in effect forbids them would be invalid.

The Treasury Department Employs the General Rule.

The rulings of the Treasury Department assume and provide for a pro rata allocation of the consolidated tax without tax saving payments. The formula appeared in the Revenue Acts of 1921, 1924 and 1926.[9] In 1928 Congress made all members of an affiliated group (except for a few special occasions) responsible for the full amount of the tax[10] and no allocation formula has since appeared in the statute. For special occasions, however, such as allocating consolidated excess profits tax, to provide deductions from normal tax net income, the Treasury has designated the customary formula[11] and the Bureau of Internal Revenue has ruled that it is to be used to determine earnings and profits available for dividends.[12]

[9]Section 240(b) of the Revenue Act of 1921 provided:

> "(b) In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income properly assignable to each."

An identical provision appeared in the Revenue Acts of 1924 and 1926.

Regs. 104, cited by the Corporation (its brief, p. 66), did not define the tax liability of bankruptcy trustees who joined in consolidated returns, but operated to limit the liability of such trustees.

The Federal Trade Commission Investigated and Condemned "Tax Saving" Payments to Holding Companies for Taxes Saved by Consolidated Returns.

The Federal Trade Commission has approved the formula which respondents defend and condemned the formula which petitioners propose. The Corporation, as parent, proposes that it should receive from the group members a "tax saving" payment equal to the tax which each group member would have paid had it filed a separate return. This practice, as adopted in the 1920's by a few of the more notorious utility systems, was one reason why the Securities and Exchange Commission was created. The Federal Trade Commission conducted an extensive investigation of the utilities prior to the enactment of the Public Utility Holding Company Act and condemned the practice which petitioners ask this Court to establish as law, saying:

> "Holding companies are not justified in recording as income the savings from this procedure of handling Federal income-tax payments. The subsidiary com- pp. 20, 25, 26. The consolidated return regulations (Treas. Regs. 104 and 110) assume that the tax allocation will be in accordance with the accepted formula. There are no specific provisions since before now it has never been suggested that consolidated returns required any "tax saving" payment. The regulations contain, however, provisions which are plainly inconsistent with petitioners' proposal. They require, for example (Treas. Regs. 104, Sec. 23.34 (c)), that whenever income of a parent company is offset in a consolidated return by the loss of a subsidiary (which could not have been availed of by the subsidiary in a separate return), the tax basis upon which the parent holds the stock of the subsidiary must be reduced in an amount equal to the loss. Then upon liquidation or sale of the stock of the subsidiary the amount of gain on which the parent must pay tax is increased. This rule was first developed in the decisions. See Jordahl & Co., 35 B.T.A. 1136, 1139. Plainly neither the courts in adopting this rule nor the Commissioner in formalizing it in the regulations intended that the one-group member should pay another for the tax benefit of its loss. This would require a double payment for the tax benefit: once to the loss company and once to the Government in increased taxes through reduction in the tax basis of the stock.

panies in a holding-company group are entitled to the benefit of any savings to the group due to filing a consolidated income-tax return. Only the amount of Federal income tax paid by a holding company on the basis of a consolidated return should be borne, in proportion to the taxable income, by those companies having taxable income, for which companies a consolidated return was filed. Stated differently, each company in a holding-company group should pay only its pro-rata share of the tax paid for the group." (Emphasis supplied.)[13]

Petitioners are asking the Court to adopt a practice which Congress intended that the Securities and Exchange Commission should eliminate in the utility field and which has been eliminated.

The Interstate Commerce Commission Has Disapproved "Tax Saving" Claims.

There is no formal ruling by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the proper allocation of taxes under consolidated returns, perhaps because, as respondents offered to prove (R. 1387-93), the railroads universally employ the traditional formula. The Commission has considered occasional "tax saving" claims and has rejected them.[14]

Doubtless the Commission would disallow a "tax saving" payment to a parent company as an expense. All that could be charged as an expense would be a proper allocation to

The National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, of which the Interstate Commerce Commission is a member, has disapproved the treatment of a "tax saving" as an expense.[15] Petitioners, whose claim here is asserted as an expense of the reorganization trustees,[16] are asking the Court for a ruling that will invite the Commission to revise its views.

No Court Has Approved a Claim for Taxes Saved by Consolidated Returns.

The absence of judicial decisions is further proof of the general acceptance of the rule. In the few cases which have been concerned with intergroup relationships, a "tax saving" claim has never been approved.[17]

[16]Petitioners insist that theirs is a claim for expense incurred by the reorganization trustees (Corp. brief, p. 49, Interveners' brief, p. 90). They are not asking for dividends.

[17]In Koppers Co., 8 T.C. 886, 11 T.C. 894, the intra-group settlement was in conformity with the usual practice. This was true though there was no "economic unity" within the group. See Moody's Industrial Manual, 1941, p. 2598. Bankers Trust Co. v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., 92 F.2d 450, also suggests approval of the general rule for tax allocation. Moreover, the case is direct authority for the proposition that any refund on account of the 1942 taxes would belong not to the petitioners but to the trustees. Beneficial Corp. v. Commissioner, 18 T.C. ....., No. 47 (May 23, 1952), disallows a claim for treatment of a "tax saving" from consolidated returns as an expense. There a holding company, contrary to the general rule, had collected "tax savings" from its subsidiary. The court held the amounts so paid to the holding company by its subsidiary were in fact dividends and treated them as such

These are the rulings now available on the specific question before the Court. They reach a single and unanimous conclusion: that consolidated returns do not create claims for "tax saving" payments.

There Is Nothing in the Revenue Acts to Require a Departure from the Rule.

The argument that Congress in enacting the revenue acts had some purpose to benefit parent companies in holding company systems is without foundation. There are a number of reasons.

The revenue acts create no private rights. They collect revenue to pay the expense of government. Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U.S. 472, 513. Indeed, if a tax law requires the payment of money from one private person to another, it becomes unconstitutional. United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 61.

There is nothing either in the material quoted by petitioners or elsewhere in the extensive history of consolidated returns[18] to indicate that Congress intended to confer a special benefit on holding companies. The true purposes of consolidated returns are well understood. They are, first, to facilitate the administration of the tax laws by relieving the Treasury of the burden of reallocating income and deduc-for tax purposes. In the unreported decision In re Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., Docket No. 6935 (E.D. Mo. 1947), a subsidiary by joining in consolidated returns was faced with an actual cash loss in increased taxes. The group paid the subsidiary not the amount by which the loss benefited the group but rather the amount of actual damage to the subsidiary from the returns. In fact, the order was in strict conformity to Rule U-45(b)(6) of the S.E.C. See the text of the order, Appendix C, p. 34.

tions on transactions between affiliated companies[19] and, second, to do tax justice between businesses organized as subsidiaries on one hand and businesses organized by departments on the other.[20] In a business organized by departments the losses of one department offset the income of another. If the same business were organized by subsidiaries this offsetting, without consolidated returns, would not take place. Consolidated returns collect an equal tax

[19]The House Ways and Means Committee reported as follows on the Revenue Act of 1934:

> "Your committee considered at length the question of abolishing the consolidated return. Our subcommittee originally recommended this action. The Treasury believed this policy undesirable. The Treasury pointed out that the one way to secure a correct statement of income from affiliated corporations is to require a consolidated return, with all intercompany transactions eliminated. Otherwise, profits and losses may be shifted from one wholly owned subsidiary to another, and their separate statements of income do not present an accurate picture of the earnings of the group as a whole. * * * The administration of the income tax law is simpler with the consolidated return since it conforms to ordinary business practice; enables the Treasury to deal with a single taxpayer instead of many subsidiaries; and eliminates the necessity of examining the bona fides of thousands of intercompany transactions." See, also, S. Rep. No. 960, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 1, 13, 29; Hearings of House Ways and Means Committee on Revenue Revision, 1934, pp. 86, 99; Report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation on the Revenue Act of 1926, p. 63.

[20]See Memorandum of the Finance Committee of the Senate on the 1918 Act:

> "Where a corporation does business through subsidiary corporations, such subsidiaries represent in effect merely different departments of one business. It is just as illogical to tax these subsidiaries separately as it would be to levy a separate tax upon the profits earned by different departments of a single corporation." (p. 9.)

See, also, Report of Senate Finance Committee on the Revenue Bill of 1928 as quoted in the Hearings before the Senate Finance Committee on the Revenue Act of 1932, p. 24; S. Rep. No. 665, 72d Cong., 1st Sess., p. 9.

from both enterprises. There is nothing here to suggest that Congress has any particular regard for holding companies.

Petitioners' argument is founded upon a singularly unsophisticated view of holding company systems. Petitioners would have the Court believe that the holding company systems which file consolidated returns are single ownerships. Nothing could be further from the truth. Consolidated returns can be filed if and whenever 95 per cent of the equity and voting stock is within the system. (I.R.C. Sec. 141(d)).[21] This says nothing about minority holdings, nor about preferred stock and senior securities such as notes and bonds. Those securities are normally in the hands of the public, North American Co. v. S.E.C., 327 U.S. 686, 701. No one knows this better than Congress and it is hardly likely that Congress which has in general been hostile to holding companies would intend by consolidated returns to confer an advantage on those holding companies at the expense of their subsidiaries, the operating companies owned in truth by the public.

Committees of Congress Have Investigated and Condemned "Tax Saving" Payments to Holding Companies for Taxes Saved by Consolidated Returns.

In considering the bill which eventually became the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, the Congressional Committees were sharply critical of the practice which petitioners now advocate, that is, a practice whereby the parent company takes to itself the benefit of group "tax savings." For example, Senator Wheeler, chairman of the [21] It does not have to be held directly by the parent company. Subsidiaries can hold stock of the parent and of other subsidiaries (I.R.C. Sec. 141(d), Appendix A, p. 2). Petitioners who claim a special privilege for the top parent ignore these situations.

Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, in speaking of this practice said of the holding companies:

> "The Chairman. What they did, according to the testimony here, was this. They went out and collected money from the operating companies as income taxes, in the amount that the local company would have to pay. It was paid into the holding company, and then the holding company, as a matter of fact, under the consolidated returns that they had made, and under the arrangements which they could make, made large profits in their income tax. In other words, they charged up to A, B, and C companies a certain amount of income tax that they said they would have to pay to the Government, and then they took that money. They acted as tax collectors, but they paid in only a portion of it, a half of it, or perhaps a third.
>
> Mr. DeVane. It was $11,000,000 that they collected, and they paid $2,000,000.
> The Chairman. So that, as a matter of fact, they took that $9,000,000, which should have gone either to the Government, or, if it was not necessary to pay it to the Government, then it should have gone back to the operating company."[22]

References to similar comments on petitioners' position are noted in the margin.[23] Thus to the extent that Congress has indicated a preference as to who should receive the benefits of "tax savings" from consolidated returns it has taken a position precisely contrary to that for which petitioners argue.

The Rule Is in Accordance with Sound Policy.

The rule against payments for "tax savings" is supported by sound policy. The reasons include:

First. The fact that the Revenue Acts do not create private rights. A tax is an impost levied by the Government to obtain revenues to maintain its existence. Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U.S. 472, 513-14. It creates no private rights. United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 61.

Second. The fact that "tax saving" payments, if allowed, would contravene the policy against merchandising tax advantages. Transactions which have only a tax purpose are not recognized by the tax law. Gregory v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 465; I.R.C. Sec. 129. "Tax saving" payments, if approved, would offer new opportunities for tax avoidance and provide a new motive for distorting business transactions with relation to the tax law.[24]

Third. The fact that "tax saving" payments, if required, would create great uncertainties in the law. Husbands and wives file joint returns (I.R.C. Sec. 51(b)); stockholders to save taxes sell the stock of a business rather than its assets, a lawyer sends a December bill to make a deduction available to his client in the current tax year. Do these ordinary transactions create claims for taxes "saved"?

Fourth. The fact that a requirement of "tax saving" payments would unnecessarily complicate the tax system. Taxation "can never be made simple but we can try to avoid making it needlessly complex." Dobson v. Commissioner, 320 U.S. 489, 495. To impose upon an already complex tax system a complementary system of "tax saving" payments would unnecessarily multiply the complexities of tax administration.

The settled practice against "tax saving" payments should not be disturbed.

The Rule Is Fair and Equitable.

The rule applies in cases where there are diverse interests—to affiliations in which creditors and stockholders of the several companies in the chain, as well as the public served by operating members of the group, have rights and interests distinct from the rights and interests of the parent company. In fact the rule is called into being for such cases, to supply a formula that protects against upstream payments of "charges in lieu of taxes" at the expense of operating subsidiaries and the holders of their securities.

In all such cases, the revenue act grants the privilege of filing the consolidated return to the group. The parent company files the return and each of the other members consents to it, I.R.C. Sec. 141. According to petitioners, this means that every loss parent is entitled to a price for its joinder.[25]

The law requires no such unhappy result. There is nothing about the tax advantage of a loss in a consolidated tax return to create a claim for compensation. The only service provided by the loss company is the nominal one of indicating its acquiescence in the return. Nothing else is taken from or provided by the loss company. The other group members benefit from the loss because the revenue act computes the tax by offsetting it against their earnings. But the loss company has no claim on that account because it does nothing to bring the benefit about—it contributes no service, no effort, no property or asset of any kind.

For obvious reasons, the rule gives nothing for an assumed power to bargain. If one group member can bargain all can bargain and the net result would be to reward the most recalcitrant. Affiliated companies must deal decently with each other. Their claims inter se are measured by justice and the law, not by a supposed power to impose unnecessary taxes.

The rule is fair. It applies equally to all group members all the time. It leaves with each the possibility of tax reduction from the coincidence of loss and gain, and protects each against claims in lieu of taxes arising out of such coincidences. No one, looking forward, can say whether a system of tax saving payments would leave him richer or poorer. Is a group member entitled to speculate on ameliorating its losses by collections from its affiliates? Equity demands no such uncertainty and confusion. Its demands are satisfied by equality, by a rule that applies equally to each member of the group and leaves to each what the revenue act leaves to it, namely, its earnings net after taxes.

The rule conforms to Phillips-Jones Corp. v. Parmley, 302 U. S. 233, which says that the applicable law is the equitable rule of contribution. Under that rule each taxpayer pays his share of the tax, and no more. It conforms to the principles laid down in Southern Pacific v. Bogert, 250 U. S. 483, and in Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., 306 U. S. 307. Within the scope of the principles applied in those cases is the old-fashioned idea that management must act with reasonably good judgment and cannot charge a price for preferring a good course of action over a bad one.[26] When the desirable choice between returns is as plain as it was in the circumstances of this case, consolidated returns are filed because good management requires that course. This neither justifies nor permits a charge for the "service."

One final point should be made as to the law arguments which petitioners advance. Those arguments are founded upon doctrines of unjust enrichment and duality which have been in the law for many years. Never, however, have these arguments, or an assumed purpose of Congress in connection with consolidated returns, led to the conclusion which petitioners argue. On the contrary, every tribunal, every informed person who has considered the problem, has reached the opposite conclusion.

The Rule Has Been Followed from the Beginning by the Western Pacific Group.

Since 1918 the Western Pacific group has filed consolidated tax returns (Ex. D. 40, R. 1504). At the direction of the Corporation the tax under the consolidated return has been allocated to the group members in proportion to net income (R. 1262). There has never been a "tax saving" payment (Ex. D. 40, R. 1504, 1262).[27] On many occasions this practice [26] Cf. Smith v. Illinois Bell Tel. Co., 282 U.S. 133, 157, referring to an allocation of the charges for the parent company's services based on the cost of the service to the parent company.

[27] Ex. D. 40, a printed Price Waterhouse & Co. report, shows that interveners (Int. brief, p. 70) are mistaken in referring to payments by Utah Fuel as made for "tax savings." Actually, a net payment was made by the Corporation under agreements whereby the Corporation undertook to absorb certain Utah Fuel taxes in connection with transactions in which the Corporation received a large dividend from Utah Fuel and made an agreement with the Missouri Pacific respecting the reorganization of the D. & R. G. W. R. Co. See pp. 1-2, 3-15, of the report, particularly note 2, pp. 5-6.

resulted in tax reductions for the Corporation. In each year from 1924 to 1935 the Corporation received a "tax saving" because the loss of another group member was included in consolidated returns (Ex. D. 40, R. 1504, 1552, 2040). The tax thus "saved" totaled $593,976.33 (R. 1552, 2040). No payment was made for that saving (R. 1262, Ex. D. 40).

The established rule was followed for each of the years in question. Only long after the event, after the returns were on file, after the reorganization trustees were discharged, after the reorganization proceeding was closed, after it was no longer possible for the trustees to file separate returns and take advantage of deductions unavailable under consolidated returns was this claim asserted. It is, as the court below pointed out, "an afterthought" (R. 274), a tribute to a lawyer's ingenuity. It has no substance. But if petitioners should be successful they will impose upon respondents a total burden of taxes and "tax saving" payments far in excess of the original tax obligation to the Government.

B. NOTHING IN THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THIS CASE TAKES IT OUT OF THE GENERAL RULE OR GIVES TO THE HOLDING COMPANY A "TAX SAVING" CLAIM.

According to the general rule there is no right to payment for a "tax saving." Petitioners cannot succeed unless they show some special reason why they should be relieved from the rule. This they fail to do.

After the order of October 11, 1943, confirming the plan, it was theoretically possible, Insurance Group v. D. & R. G. W. R. Co., 329 U.S. 607, 611, 618-9, that the Corporation might be readmitted to participation, but for practical purposes it was clear that at some date not far in the future the Corporation would be required to surrender its stock in the debtor company.

This meant that the Corporation could not expect to derive indirect benefit from the trustees' "tax savings."

There is nothing in this to take the case out of the rule. The rule was not made exclusively for prosperous parent companies. It denies to subsidiaries the right to "tax saving" payments although they normally receive no benefit, direct or indirect, from the tax advantage of their losses. The rule was made for loss parents, too. There is nothing to suggest that its application depends on the financial condition of the group members, or upon the fact or degree of indirect benefit to the loss member.

The consummation of the plan excluded the holding company from participation. This proves that it is not entitled to a benefit. It affords no reason for repudiating the holding company's own practice of 25 years or for making a preferential payment to the parent company in violation of the established rule.

Thus it is clear that the special circumstances of the case provide no reason for a departure from the established rule.

The Alleged Severance of "Economic Unity" Affords No Reason for Taking the Case Out of the Rule or for a "Tax Saving" Payment to the Holding Company.

Petitioners argue that this Court's decision of March 15, 1943 (318 U. S. 448) approving the reorganization plan "severed the economic unity" of the group and thereby created circumstances requiring a special conclusion. This argument has no substance.

First. The decision "severed" nothing. On that date the Court approved the Interstate Commerce Commission's plan and give significance to a factor to which Congress has attached no significance.

Fourth. The accepted formula for the settlement of intragroup liabilities in connection with consolidated returns makes nothing turn on economic unity. The Securities and Exchange Commission, the Treasury Department and the Federal Trade Commission are all intimately concerned with holding company groups. The officials of those tribunals are thoroughly familiar with the fact that ordinarily there is no economic unity within the group. They have nevertheless ruled that the intragroup settlement should be made without "tax saving" payments. No exceptions are stated in terms of "economic unity."

Fifth. The assumption by petitioners that a holding company in ordinary course receives the benefit of all "tax savings" to its subsidiaries is contrary to fact. Petitioners suggest that every benefit to a subsidiary is a benefit to the parent. This Court has reached a contrary conclusion. "So various are the possible permutations and combinations of the economic factors that equivalence of surplus or deficit in the accounts of the subsidiary with the gain or loss to the parent would be mere coincidence." Commissioner v. Phipps, 336 U.S. 410, 421, n. 15. The Treasury Department agrees: "Moreover, there is no reason for the assumption that the entire earnings of a subsidiary would become dividends to the parent" (Treasury Department release of June 9, 1948, "Consolidated Returns and Intercorporate Dividends," p. 12). If, to take some obvious examples, bonds are in default, debenture interest unpaid, preferred stock in arrears or general creditors unsatisfied, the benefit of any tax reduction on account of consolidated returns never reaches the parent.

There Is Nothing Special in the Holding Company's Position as Parent or as Loss Company.

In the final analysis the Corporation's position in this case has two elements: that of a parent company and that of a group member whose loss was claimed as a deduction in a consolidated return. The Corporation as parent has no right to take to itself the "tax savings" realized by its subsidiaries through the consolidated returns. That abuse of the holding company position has been condemned.

As a loss company receiving no benefit from the loss the position of the Corporation is not improved. The entry of a loss in a consolidated return produces no right to compensation in the loss company. This can be demonstrated by the general business practice, the past practice of the Western Pacific group and all the relevant rulings. Subsidiaries usually receive no benefit from the "tax savings" to the group through their losses. Nevertheless, the subsidiaries never receive "tax saving" payments. If the entry of a loss in a consolidated return entitles the loss company to compensation because it otherwise has no benefit, virtually every intragroup settlement in the past thirty years has been improper and public investors in subsidiary companies have been unlawfully deprived for thirty years of an asset to which they were entitled.

As "Former Parent" the Holding Company Can Neither Escape the General Rule nor Claim an Equity.

Petitioners' claim to a special equity comes to this: that the Corporation's position is different from that of the normal parent company. What is the difference? It is not that the Corporation had a loss that went into the returns. It is not that the tax law and regulations permitted separate or consolidated returns. These things are characteristic of all the cases to which the general rule applies. In most cases the parent company may have an indirect benefit from the tax saving. Petitioners say their case is different because here that chance did not exist. Theirs is not the only case; it is usually true that subsidiaries cannot reach the assets of their affiliates, and no doubt the same is true at times of other parent companies. The rule is not qualified in favor of holding companies who are in financial difficulty.

Furthermore, the difference is not an equity. It is a statement that the parent's equity has been lost. We have seen that as parent the Corporation has no claim. As former parent, it can have no better right.

Petitioners are not helped by describing an ex-parent as a "stranger." As a stranger, the Corporation no longer has an equity but claims a supposed freedom to impose additional taxes on the trustees by choosing to file separate returns. That argument is fallacious.

C. THE FALLACIES IN PETITIONERS' ARGUMENT THAT THE HOLDING COMPANY WAS FREE TO MAKE A CHOICE OF RETURNS: (1) THE HOLDING COMPANY WAS BOUND TO FILE CONSOLIDATED RETURNS, AND (2) IT COULD DERIVE NO EQUITY FROM A SUPPOSED POWER TO WITHHOLD ITS CONSENT.

Petitioners insist that the Corporation was free to impose $17,201,739 additional taxes on the trustees by filing separate returns. They seem to think that the major premise of their claim is this supposed freedom of the holding company. It is this, they say, which gave it a right to bargain, or as the Corporation puts it, gave rise to a claim for the tax value of its loss. It is this, they say, which gives significance to the dualities upon which they so heavily rely.

There are two fallacies in the argument: first, the Corporation had no choice, and second, if it had been free to choose, that would have given it no right in the tax savings.

The Holding Company Was Obliged to File Consolidated Returns.

Under the circumstances of this case the Corporation was specially obliged to co-operate to reduce the trustees' taxes. It was not a stranger. Its obligation arose from the circumstances (1) that for upwards of twenty years it had used the accepted formula, and had received and retained the benefit of "tax savings" from its affiliates' losses (this brief, p. 57), (2) that in prior years there had accumulated credits and carry-overs resulting from the trustees' operations, which, because the returns for those years were consolidated, would be lost unless the returns for the years here in question should be consolidated,[30] (3) that the Corporation had no income and no use for its loss, (4) that the Corporation as parent was under fiduciary duties to its insolvent subsidiary's creditors, and (5) that as sole stockholder it was required by the Bankruptcy Act so to act as to preserve the estate.

The reorganization court would have required the Corporation to sign the returns without a "tax saving" payment. The reorganization court had power to compel the Corporation to sign the returns, had it proved recalcitrant. A bankruptcy court has the powers of a court of equity, Young v. Higbee Co., 324 U. S. 204, 214; S. E. C. v. United States Realty Co., 310 U. S. 434, 455. As such, it has full power in a reorganization proceeding to protect the assets of the estate.

[30] $5,773,937 of the claimed $17,201,739 tax saving represents the tax advantage of the trustees' carry-overs and credits as calculated by the petitioners (this brief, p. 113).

"The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in Chapter X proceedings to protect and preserve the property of the bankrupt estate was not in question and could not be questioned." Duda v. Sterling Mfg. Co., 178 F.2d 428, 434. In the exercise of that jurisdiction the reorganization court would have compelled the Corporation, a party to the reorganization proceeding,[31] to join in the returns and thus to conserve the assets of the bankruptcy estate. As sole stockholder of the old company, and initiator of the reorganization proceeding, the Corporation had general fiduciary duties to its subsidiaries, particularly in the interest of the latter's creditors. Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522, 524, Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295, as well as special duties arising out of the bankruptcy proceeding to conserve the assets for the benefit of creditors.[32] Under such circum-

This duty is not specifically mentioned in the statute, but has been recognized by the courts." See, also, In re Hines, 69 F.2d 52; *Sellers v. Sec. 77(l) provides in part: "In proceedings under this section * * * the duties * * * of all persons with respect to the debtor and its property, shall be the same as if a voluntary petition for adjudication had been filed * * *." And Sec. 7b of the Act provides in part: "Where the bankrupt is a corporation, * * * its stockholders or members, or such of them as may be designated by the court, shall perform the duties imposed upon the bankrupt by this Act." stances the reorganization court would never have allowed the Corporation to deplete these assets by demanding payment for signing a paper.[33]

The Court of Appeals was right in holding that the Corporation "was under a duty to deal fairly with the subsidiary having full regard for the interests of the creditors and holders of other securities" and that "It owed a duty not to require its subsidiary to forego a legitimate tax saving and could not bargain to perform its duty" (R. 2234). In so holding the Court of Appeals followed the rulings of this Court, among them Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U.S. 510, 522, where it is said:

Moreover, if appellants had exacted a price for a signature to the consolidated returns they would have been forced to return the exaction thus collected. Cf. Young v. Higbee Co., 324 U.S. 204, 214. It is not common practice to require payment for the service of signing a paper and the cases are not numerous. They agree, however, in requiring repayment of the price exacted. See Kelley v. Caplice, 23 Kan. 337, aff'd on rehearing, 27 Kan. 359; *Guetzkov Bros. Co. v. The contention, moreover, that a hard bargain should have been made with the trustees has no merit in an equity court. The Corporation's Obligation to File the Returns Survived the Termination of Affiliation.

The fact that the returns for 1943 and 1944 were physically filed after the Corporation surrendered its stock does not affect the Corporation's obligations. As required by the statute, the returns related to the period of affiliation, and the obligations of the parties with respect to them were therefore the obligations of the affiliation period. The obligations of a fiduciary upon termination of the relationship continue unimpaired with respect to all past transactions and the incidents of winding up. The rule applies to all fiduciary relationships: partnerships, agencies, trusts and corporate affairs.[34]

[34] To Partnerships: "On dissolution the partnership is not terminated, but continues until the winding up of partnership affairs is completed." Uniform Partnership Act, 7 U.L.A. Sec. 30; Cal. Corp. Code Sec. 15030.

To Agencies: "The duty of an attorney to be true to his client, or of an agent to be faithful to his principal, does not cease when the employment ends, and it cannot be renounced at will by the termination of the relation. It is as sacred and inviolable after as before the expiration of its term." Trice v. Comstock, 121 Fed. 620, 625.

To Trusts: "When the time for termination of the trust has arrived, the duties and powers of the trustee do not immediately cease, but until the trust is actually wound up, he has such duties and powers as are appropriate for the winding up of the trust." 3 Scott on Trusts (1939) Sec. 344.

To Corporations: "* * * by statute in most jurisdictions it is now provided that upon the dissolution of any corporation in any

The Corporation had, therefore, fiduciary obligations with respect to the tax transactions which were entirely unaffected by the date the returns happened to be filed. Those fiduciary duties required that the Corporation co-operate in mimimizing the trustees' taxes. As fiduciary, the Corporation was not entitled to prefer its own interest over the interest of the unpaid creditors by demanding a "tax saving" payment on account of an entry in the tax returns which cost it nothing. The fiduciary obligations which the law recognizes for the circumstances of this case deprived the Corporation of any choice about the kind of return to file.

The Power to Choose Between Returns Is Not the Source of Any Equity and the General Rule Makes No Allowance for Such a Power.

It is not significant under the general rule that the revenue act frequently affords a choice between separate and consolidated returns.[35] The rule provides a formula to determine the obligations of the group members between each other whenever consolidated returns are filed. It does not distinguish between the cases in which there is a choice and cases in which there is none.

The claim of parent company's privilege or freedom of choice is the very thing that was denounced in the Congressional hearings (this brief, p. 53). All the reasons for the manner, or upon the expiration of its period of corporate existence, the directors at the time of the dissolution shall be the trustees of the creditors and stockholders of the corporation * * *." 16 Fletcher, Corporations (Perm. Ed.), Sec. 8174.

[35] I.R.C. Sec. 141 permits a change to consolidated returns at any time. The choice of consolidated returns, once made, is a commitment to continue with them, unless because of material amendments to the regulations, or for other reasons, the choice is reopened (Sec. 141(b); Regs. 110, Sec. 33.11; Regs. 104, Sec. 23.11).

general rule are opposed to a claim predicated on the supposition that a choice under the revenue act gives to any party to the returns a right to demand a price for his consent or to exact a payment in lieu of taxes.[36]

This is especially true where, as here, the supposed bargaining power is to be employed against the reorganization court and its trustees. The Corporation caused its subsidiary to petition for reorganization, and

> "As a result of the filing of the petition in this case, the court, not the stockholders, acquired exclusive dominion and control over the estate. Hence, any strategic position occupied by the stockholders prior to these proceedings vanished once the court invoked its jurisdiction. Threats by stockholders of the kind here in question are merely threats to the jurisdiction of the court, which jurisdiction these selfsame stockholders invoked for their benefit when they caused the debtor's petition to be filed. Consequently, these claims of the stockholders are, as we have said, entitled to no more dignity than any claim based on their nuisance value."

This means that in the circumstances of this case the holding company could not secure from the reorganization court a price for its signature. Petitioners' insistence on the supposed freedom of the holding company to file separate returns serves only to expose the fallacy on which their claim is based.

---

[36] A contrary ruling would produce the absurd result of every group member claiming a price for his consent, a contest in which the member least concerned would hold the highest cards.

D. PETITIONERS HAVE NO CASE UNDER THE RULES OF LAW THEY INVOKE.

There is nothing to support petitioners' claim in the elementary principles which they invoke.

The claim fails because nothing belonging to the Corporation was taken or used. The Corporation did not contribute the returns; all it did was sign them as under the law it was bound to do. In so doing it incurred no expense and gave up nothing. It did not forbear from separate returns: that choice was not available to it, either under the general rule, or under the circumstances of this case. The corporation was not the owner of a strategic position.

The petitioners do not accept this. All their arguments are based on the assumption that the power to determine the amount of the trustees' taxes was merchandise belonging to the Corporation and that its exercise in favor of lower taxes was a service which it furnished to the trustees. This mistaken assumption invalidates their appeal to the elementary principles they invoke.

Petitioners Have Suffered No Wrong and Proved No Damage.

Petitioners do not prove a cause of action. They have no title claim. The funds they seek came from shippers in exchange for transportation service. They have never belonged to petitioners. With no title to assert petitioners, as other litigants, must prove that they have been wronged and damaged. They prove neither. In 1943 the courts gave formal recognition to the financial truth that over the years the interest of the Corporation in the old company had become worthless. Congress authorized a tax calculation wherein the amount of the Corporation's loss was deducted from the income figures appearing in the returns. Returns thus prepared were filed and audited and the group liability was compromised and satisfied. Nothing in this process constituted a wrong to petitioners. They suffered no tort; no contract was breached; no statutory right was infringed. Petitioners have, therefore, no standing in court. "The only injury of which plaintiffs may complain in a judicial tribunal is the invasion of some legal or equitable right." Tilney v. City of Chicago, 134 F.2d 682, cert. den. 320 U.S. 759.

Nor have petitioners been damaged. The Corporation paid no tax under the consolidated returns (Ex. P. 3A/B, 4A/B, 5A/B, R. 491, 492) just at it would have paid no tax under separate returns (R. 1552, 2040). The reference in the returns to the fact of its loss cost the Corporation nothing. The Corporation had no income (Ex. D. 40, R. 1504, 1552, 2040). It could not have used the loss itself[37] and it could not have sold it.[38] The Corporation has thus proved no damage and without proof of damage no litigant can recover. "The damages recovered by an injured party have always been limited to his 'actual damages'." Connecticut Ry. Co. v. Palmer, 305 U.S. 493, 504. "Wrong without damage or damage without wrong does not constitute a cause [37]The consolidated returns and the refund claim applied only a portion of the stock loss against income of the reorganization trustees. From the balance of the loss amounting to more than $42,000,000 (Exs. D. 40, D. 52A), petitioners have not been able to derive any gain whatever—proof positive that no damage has been suffered.

[38]In J. D. and A. B. Spreckels Co. v. Commissioner, 41 B.T.A. 370, the taxpayer had acquired the stock of a subsidiary in order to take advantage of a tax loss which the subsidiary was about to realize. The loss was taken and the taxpayer sought to claim the loss as a deduction in a consolidated return. It was held that since the acquisition of the stock had no business purpose the loss could not be allowed.

of private action * * *." Clark Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 148 F.2d 580, 582, cert. den. 326 U.S. 734.

Petitioners Have No Unjust Enrichment Claim.

The failure of the reorganization trustees to pay additional taxes was not, in contemplation of law, an enrichment. Even if it were, the enrichment was not unjust to petitioners and without proof of injustice to them petitioners cannot recover. Finally, where, as here, the defendant is not a wrongdoer unjust enrichment recovery can never exceed the actual loss to the plaintiff—in this case, nothing.

Respondents Were Not "Enriched."

If separate returns had been filed for the years in question, or if the statute had not given a deduction for the loss in consolidated returns, the trustees would have paid additional taxes. The difference is not an "enrichment." Congress passed a statute authorizing the consolidated returns and prescribed that the loss should be entered as a deduction. The resulting benefits, if they are to be so termed, came from the statute. Congress expects that the deductions provided for by the Revenue Acts will be taken. "The legal right of a taxpayer to decrease the amount of what otherwise would be his taxes, or altogether avoid them, by means which the law permits, cannot be doubted." Gregory v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 465, 469.[39]

Assuming an Enrichment, It Was Not Unjust to Petitioners.

Even assuming that a lawful calculation of taxes could be called an "enrichment," petitioners still have no claim.

[39]For a criticism by the Securities and Exchange Commission of the entire concept of a "tax saving" see Appendix B, p. 10.

"The mere fact that a person benefits another is not of itself sufficient to require the other to make restitution therefor." Restatement of Restitution, Sec. 1, p. 13. "But, in order to establish unjust enrichment it is not enough merely to show one's retention of the benefit. The retention must also be unjust." Bailis v. R.F.C., 128 F.2d 857, 859. To succeed, a plaintiff must prove injustice to him. The doctrine is a doctrine of restitution. The plaintiff must show that something was taken from him and that there is some recognized basis—fraud, mistake, duress, undue influence, illegality—for revoking the transfer.

One consequence is that in every windfall situation, such as petitioners claim this to be, the defendant prevails. In Straube v. Bowling Green Gas Co., 360 Mo. 132, 227 S.W. 2d 666, plaintiffs paid for gas at rates based upon charges made to the gas company by its suppliers. During litigation over the validity of an order reducing the rates of the supplier the difference between the new and the old rates was impounded and later paid to the gas company. Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment argument failed. "Since the facts alleged show no 'unjust privation' of appellants and no legal or equitable rights in appellants as to either fund, there could be no 'unjust enrichment' of respondent at the expense and loss of appellants." (227 S.W.2d 671). Other rulings to this effect are noted in the margin.[40]

[40]In Houck v. Hubbard Milling Co., 140 Minn. 186, 167 N.W. 1038, the defendant received refunds resulting from revision of freight rates. Plaintiff, who had made sales to defendant on the assumption the existing rates were to apply, attempted to claim the refunds. "The refunds amount to a find for the defendant. * * * No legal equity puts a right of recovery in the plaintiff." (167 N.W. 1039). In Consolidated Cut Stone Co. v. Seidenbach, 189 Okla. 128, 114 P.2d 480, subcontractors gave the owner certain credits on account of defaults of the general contractor. A surety

The cases make it clear that a windfall to respondents vests no claim in petitioners unless they can demonstrate injustice to them by an invasion of rights which the law recognizes. The rights of petitioners have not been invaded.

Petitioners' Unjust Enrichment Recovery Could Not in Any Event Exceed the Actual Loss to Them.

The law of unjust enrichment recognizes three situations: (a) that in which the defendant is free from fault; (b) that in which the conduct of defendant is tortious; and (c) that in which the defendant is a conscious wrongdoer. If the defendant is free from fault, the judgment, assuming a case is made out, is limited to the loss to the plaintiff or the benefit to defendant, whichever is lower. "If the [defendant] was no more at fault than the claimant, he is not required to pay for losses in excess of benefits received by him and he is per- later compensated the owner for the same defaults. The subcontractors, arguing unjust enrichment, attempted without success to obtain judgment in the amount of the credits. "Unless these appellants had rights existing prior to or at the time payment was made * * * which were violated or altered by the payment, the mere fact of excess payment can give them no right." (114 P.2d 484). In Greek Catholic Congregation of Borough of Olyphant v. Plummer, et al., 347 Pa. 351, 32 A.2d 299, plaintiffs failed to recover from defendant royalties which defendants had received on coal which belonged to plaintiffs. "In every case of 'unjust enrichment' the courts have been able to point out some wrong done by the party enriched. By 'wrong' is meant, of course, the violation of another's legal right." (32 A.2d 300). In Russo v. Hosmer, Inc., 312 Mass. 231, 44 N.E.2d 641, Hosmer was paid by Massachusetts for work he had illegally contracted to Russo who sought relief in quantum meruit. Russo's claim was denied. "He [Russo] was not damaged nor affected by the failure to observe the provisions in Hosmer's contract with the Commonwealth governing the subletting of the work." (44 N.E.2d 644). In Vanderbilt University v. Williams, 152 Tenn. 264, 280 S.W. 689, defendant received rent for land over which he and plaintiff had identical easements which entitled neither to rent payments. Plaintiff's claim for half of the rent was denied: "Equity may not be invoked to supply a remedy until a right, legal or equitable, exists." (280 S.W. 692).

mitted to retain gains which result from his dealing with the property." (Restatement of Restitution, p. 596 and see the illustrations, pp. 356 and 618.)

The cases agree. A surety, for example, who pays an obligation of his principal at a cost to the surety less than the obligation discharged can recover only his outlay. If, for instance, he pays the principal's debt in depreciated currency, he recovers only the cost of the currency to him.[41]

If, therefore, petitioners' case rests upon unjust enrichment, they cannot recover because they suffered no loss. Plainly there was nothing wrongful in the handling of the tax transaction. The Internal Revenue Code provides for consolidated returns; the stock loss deduction is within the plain language of Section 23(g)(4); liabilities within the group were determined in accordance with the formula universally recommended and which the parties had followed for twenty years. Taxpayers who follow twenty years of past practice and the unanimous precedents are not conscious wrongdoers or tort feasors. Unjust enrichment recovery could not, therefore, exceed in any event the gain to respondents or the loss to petitioners, whichever is lower.

Petitioners Have No Claim Arising from Fiduciary Obligations.

Petitioners attempt to support their position by contending that fiduciary obligations were operating in favor of the Corporation in connection with the tax transactions. The [41] See, for example; Bonney v. Seely, 2 Wend. 481 (N.Y.): "If the plaintiff had paid the defendants' debt by paying half the amount, can he recover the whole from the defendants? I think not. He is entitled to recover the amount paid, not the amount extinguished by that payment." See also Kendrick v. Forney, 22 Gratt. 748 (Va.); Butler v. Butler's Administrator, 8 W. Va. 674; Succession of Dinkgrave, 31 La. Ann. 703; Hall v. Creswell, 12 Gill & Johnson 26 (Md.).

argument is unsound. In those transactions the Corporation was itself charged with fiduciary duties and its position was in no respect that of a cestui que trust.

The Corporation was charged with fiduciary obligations, Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522, 524, and was obliged to cooperate to reduce the trustees' taxes (this brief, pp. 65-9).

The Position of the Corporation Was Not That of a Cestui Que Trust.

Petitioners seek to reverse the fiduciary obligations imposed by law and place the Corporation in the position of a cestui que trust by an attack upon the Corporation personnel who handled the tax transactions.

This attack fails because the record does not support it. The Corporation's officers and directors were active in looking after its interests and were competent and informed (this brief, pp. 8-9, 16-17).

Petitioners attack the tax attorney's work but they have no criticism of the returns or of his conduct of the transaction vis á vis the Bureau. His work was devoted to bringing about the least taxes required by law. They commend this work unreservedly (R. 1422-3). Their only complaint is that he did not tell the Corporation it had a strategic position. As to this, they say he did not advise them of their "right" to file separate returns. Actually, he did point out that this alternative existed under the statute and recommended against it because it would result in higher taxes (this brief, p. 11). They also complain that he informed them belatedly of the 1947 settlement proposal, but he gave them full information about it several months before the settlement was effected, and they had adequate time to act (this brief, p. 15).

These criticisms are reflections on the Corporation, not on the attorney. They reflect the true character of the petitioners' claim, and show again that it is a claim of power to force a payment as the price of "co-operation." This is strikingly exposed by the testimony that the Corporation's directors in 1947 would have used their "strategic" position to force a release from the bar of reorganization (R. 1007-8). In this they were unsuccessful (R. 168-70).

Furthermore, neither incompetence nor control of Corporation personnel would either relieve the Corporation of its fiduciary obligations or impose fiduciary duties on others in the Corporation's favor. A fiduciary cannot avoid his responsibilities by lack of capacity. Nor can he, by complaining of his disability, impose those responsibilities on others. The Corporation as holding company, as a member of the affiliated group, and as petitioner for the reorganization of its subsidiary, had fiduciary duties in the tax transactions. Those duties bound the Corporation whoever its officers and directors might be. They were binding, moreover, on anyone who took charge of or participated in the tax transactions. Even if it were the fact, which it is not, that the trustees or their lawyers took charge of tax matters, the consequence would be only that the trustees and their lawyers, to the extent they acted for the Corporation, would be obligated to honor the fiduciary duties of the Corporation.

Those fiduciary duties, moreover, are not defined, as petitioners seem to believe, by the rules which apply to formal trusts. Fiduciary obligations in connection with corporate affairs are those which are appropriate for that purpose. They are not those which relate to express trusts. Manu- facturers Trust Co. v. Becker, 338 U.S. 304, 311.[42] As far as consolidated returns are concerned they are best defined by the past practice of the group and all the precedents, all of which are in accordance with what was done and opposed to what petitioners claim should have been done.

Nothing which occurred in connection with taxes relieved the Corporation of its normal fiduciary duties to its subsidiaries and their creditors. Nothing imposed fiduciary duties on those subsidiaries in favor of the Corporation. The position of the Corporation was in no sense the position of cestui que trust. There was no trust, no trust res, and no trust obligation running to the Corporation. A discussion of fiduciary duties in this case serves only to support the judgment below.

Petitioners Have No Claim on Account of Duality.

The petitioners emphasize that the Corporation officers who handled the tax transaction were also employed by the trustees.[43] This duality is of no assistance to petitioners. Where significant duality exists, courts will examine a transaction in which the properties or interests of the complainant were taken or used. The examination is made to find out if the complainant received fair value for its properties or interests. Here nothing belonging to the Corporation was taken or used. There is, therefore, nothing to consider or evaluate.

---

[42]Compare Securities and Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 85: "But to say that a man is a fiduciary only begins analysis; it gives direction to further inquiry. To whom is he a fiduciary? What obligations does he owe as a fiduciary? In what respect has he failed to discharge these obligations? And what are the consequences of his deviation from duty?"

[43]The petitioners insist on a species of misrepresentation by ascribing the dualities to respondent, the reorganized company. The fact is the dualities ended with revestment, this brief, pp. 17-18).

Duality as such proves nothing. It creates no right. Its existence does not constitute a wrong. "It is not mere existence of an opportunity to do wrong that brings the rule into play; it is the unconscionable use of the opportunity * * *." Comstock v. Group of Institutional Investors, 335 U.S. 211, 229; Leavenworth County Commissioners v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry. Co., 134 U.S. 688, 705. Petitioners do not prove a claim by an appeal to a general doctrine of "fairness" unsupported by proof that any asset belonging to them was taken or used.

In the cases on which petitioners rely the courts received proofs of the value of the properties. There was in the record evidence of the market value, Geddes v. Anaconda Mining Co., 254 U.S. 590, 600-02, or some other established guide to fairness, Espach v. Nassau & Suffolk Lighting Co., 177 Misc. 521, 31 N.Y.S.2d 259, 264-5, aff'd sub nom. Chelrob, Inc. v. Barrett, 293 N.Y. 442, 57 N.E.2d 825, to which the court could turn. Petitioners offer nothing. This is understandable; the "property" they claim, the strategic position, was not theirs to deal with as an asset or a service.

Moreover, the duality doctrine is particularly inapplicable here, for several reasons:

First: The Corporation cannot complain of a duality which it created for its own purposes. Myers v. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co., 7 F. Supp. 97, 99; Rosaly v. Gonzales, 106 F.2d 169, 172.

Second. Duality between the Corporation and the officers of the reorganization court is of no significance. The pay from the reorganization trustees did not impose an obligation on the officers of the Corporation inconsistent with their obligations to their company. The trustees had no personal interest in the reorganization. In re Ducker, 134 Fed. 43. Their only purpose was to see that all approved claims were paid. There was, therefore, none of the conflict of interest upon which the duality rule depends. "Here we are dealing with officers of the court and directors appointed by them, men of standing, ability and integrity. There is here no room for any reaction of prejudice or bias, conscious or otherwise, to the frailties of human nature * * *" J. C. F. Holding Corp. v. General Gas & Electric Corp., 181 Misc. 283, 46 N.Y.S.2d 605, 611. Moreover, the Bankruptcy Rules themselves demonstrate that duality in connection with a reorganization proceeding is not a significant circumstance. Section 77 (11 U.S.C. Sec. 205) authorizes it and General Order 44 contains a special provision authorizing the court in a railroad reorganization proceeding to employ attorneys associated with the debtor. Duality does not affect the course or finality of a reorganization proceeding. Duryee v. Erie R. Co., 175 F.2d 58, cert. den. 338 U.S. 861.

Third. The duality cases do not criticize a transaction conducted in accordance with what prudent and independent persons would have done under the circumstances, Hellier v. Baush Machine Tool Co., 21 F.2d 705, 707; International Radio Telegraph Co. v. Atlantic Communication Co., 290 Fed. 698, 702, without benefit of hindsight. Blaustein v. Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., 293 N.Y. 281, 56 N.E.2d 705, 715; Crawford v. Mexican Petroleum Co. of Delaware, 130 F.2d 359, 362. The tax transaction was handled in strict accordance with twenty years of past practice of the group, with the general practice of the business community and with all the relevant precedents. Presumably, therefore, any prudent person would have done precisely what was done. The courts will not interfere. Hellier v. Baush Machine Tool Co., supra; International Radio Telegraph Co. v. Atlantic Communication Co., supra.

Petitioners Have No Claim Based on a Hypothetical Bargain.

Interveners argue in effect that this Court should make a retrospective bargain between the reorganization trustees and the Corporation and enforce it against respondents. This asks the impossible.

First. This Court has no power to exercise bankruptcy jurisdiction to make a bargain for petitioners. The reorganization trustees are not parties to this proceeding and cannot be made parties. The Court can hardly bargain for them in their absence. Moreover, jurisdiction over those trustees is vested not in this Court but in the bankruptcy court and the jurisdiction is exclusive. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bray, 225 U.S. 205, 217; Isaacs v. Hobbs Tie & T. Co., 282 U. S. 734, 739.

Second. The reorganization court would have required the Corporation to sign the returns without a bargain for its "strategic position," Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Co., 308 U. S. 106, 130-1. The Corporation was obliged to co-operate and could not bargain for the performance of its duty (this brief, pp. 64-9).

Third. Nothing turns on the supposed freedom to choose to file a separate return. The accepted rule against "tax saving" payments applies alike to cases in which there is a choice and to cases in which there is none (this brief, pp. 69-70).

There Has Been No Unfairness to Petitioners.

The duality doctrine, even if it has application here, goes no further than to say that the tax transactions should be fairly conducted. By every available standard there has been no unfairness to petitioners. What was done was in strict accordance with the past practice of the Western Pacific group, with the generally accepted business practice and with the uniform conclusion of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Treasury Department, the Federal Trade Commission and all persons who have considered the problem. What better test could there be of "fairness"?

Indeed, if "fairness" is the test, it is petitioners who must fail. There is no "fairness" in the effort of the Corporation to repudiate for its selfish purposes the established practice of the group; nor in the demand of the Corporation for a payment from a transaction in which it was neither wronged nor damaged; nor in the attempt of the Corporation to substitute itself as tax collector; nor in the effort of the Corporation to deprive the group of the benefit of a tax deduction allowed by Congress; nor in permitting the Corporation to recover a $17,000,000 judgment against a reorganized company owned by the unpaid creditors of its subsidiary (and their successors in interest) to whom the Corporation owed fiduciary obligations; nor in allowing the Corporation, a party to the reorganization proceeding, to repudiate that proceeding retroactively and assert a claim relating to the reorganization period which was never presented to the reorganization court and which, if allowed, would frustrate the purpose of the reorganization; nor in permitting the Corporation to undermine the financial position of the reorganized company on the basis of an afterthought claim presented too late and in the wrong forum. Fairness is opposed to a claim which, in final analysis, rests on the assertion of a right to payment for refraining from the use of a separate return. "Fairness" in this case is with the judgment below.

Petitioners' Authorities

The case on which petitioners chiefly rely, Commercial Nat. Bank in Shreveport v. Parsons, 144 F.2d 231,[44] demonstrates the distance by which they fail to support their claim.

The Old Bank, virtually insolvent, conveyed all its assets to the New Bank, which assumed the Old Bank's liabilities to creditors. The contract between the banks (which proved highly profitable to the New Bank) authorized the New Bank to administer Old Bank assets and collect from them an amount sufficient to indemnify it for the liabilities assumed. The remaining assets were to be reconveyed to the Old Bank or liquidated for the Old Bank's account. The litigation was a suit by the Old Bank for an accounting.

The assets conveyed to the New Bank included certain parcels of real property. The Louisiana statute taxing the capital stock of banks provided that the assessed value of the stock might be reduced by the assessed value of all real property owned by the bank. The new Bank reduced the tax on its capital stock by the value of the Old Bank's real property. The court held that in the accounting the Old Bank was entitled to a credit for the tax advantage which came to the New Bank in this fashion.

The basis of decision was the relation between the parties established by the express agreement of liquidation. The court held that the New Bank was not entitled to deduct from the assessed value of its own capital stock the value of the real estate of the Old Bank which it held as liquidator because it was not the owner thereof. The court said, 144 F.2d 231 at p. 236:

> "The credit thus obtained by the New Bank was a profit derived from the trust property as effectively as if it had been paid that much in cash." (Emphasis added.)

This case has nothing in common with the Shreveport case. The reorganization trustees received no assets from the Corporation for purposes of liquidation; they had no express liquidating agreement with the Corporation; they held no trust estate with a duty to account to the Corporation for the proceeds of the trust.

A case more closely in point is Hopkins v. Detrick, 97 C.A.2d 50, 217 P.2d 78, in which a husband claimed a portion of tax refunds payable to the wife on the theory, apparently, that by joining in community property returns he "saved" taxes for the wife. The claim was rejected. See also, Cooper v. Central Alloy Steel Corporation, 43 Ohio App. 455, 183 N.E. 439, 444, in which a stockholder's complaint about a "tax saving" arising from a merger was rejected because the complainants "were not interested or concerned" since they were "deprived * * * of not one penny."

The cases cited by petitioners which deal with consolidated returns are either plainly irrelevant (see Woolford Realty Co. v. Rose, 286 U. S. 319, holding that losses suffered by a subsidiary in years prior to affiliation cannot be deducted in a consolidated return, and Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F.2d 543, holding that a return filed by subsidiaries in which the parent did not join was not acceptable), or they support the traditional formula for intragroup settlements without "tax saving" payments. For instance, in Helvering v. Morgan's, Inc., 293 U. S. 121, the court recognized the propriety of the early statutory formula apportioning the consolidated tax in accordance with net taxable incomes of the group members. No tax saving payment was made or suggested. In Koppers Co., 8 T.C. 886, 11 T.C. 894 the intragroup settlement was again according to the established formula and again there was no intimation that tax saving payments were required—and this even though in the Koppers situation there was no "economic unity" within the group. See Moody's Industrial Manual 1941, p. 2598. Bankers Trust Co. v. Florida East Coast Car Ferry Co., 92 F.2d 450, is no different. Certain subsidiaries there agreed that a cash refund owing to them for overpayment of taxes should be applied to pay the tax deficiency of another group member. The court recognized that this use of the refund otherwise payable in cash created a right in the contributing subsidiaries to a compensatory payment from the subsidiary whose taxes had been thus paid. Here the Corporation made no tax payment to the Government (R. 1306-07) and it was entitled to no refund. All taxes which were paid were paid by the trustees (R. 824, 826, 1306-07). In the unreported decision In re Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., Docket No. 6935 (E.D. Mo. 1947)[45] a subsidiary by joining in the consolidated returns was faced with an actual cash loss in increased taxes. The group paid the subsidiary not the amount by which the loss benefited the group but rather the amount of actual damage to the subsidiary from the returns. The Corporation in this case had no actual damage and on the theory of this decision it has no claim.

Truncale v. Universal Pictures Co., 76 F. Supp. 465 merely illustrates the familiar rule that corporate directors are not allowed to profit at the expense of their corporation. The directors reduced their personal taxes by causing the corporation to forego certain tax deductions. This increased the tax of the corporation. The District Court denied a motion for summary judgment on the ground that the corporation might possibly recover the full amount of the profit to the directors since "Directors and other officers of a private corporation cannot either directly or indirectly * * * in any * * * transaction in which they are under a duty to guard the interests of the corporation make any profit for themselves or acquire any other personal benefit or advantage, * * *" (76 F. Supp. at 468). Edwards v. Lee's Administrator, 265 Ky. 418, 96 S.W.2d 1028, the Kentucky cave case, involves nothing more than a distribution of profits where the defendants "were guilty of repeated trespasses upon" plaintiff's cave property. "The proof likewise clearly indicates that the trespasses were wilful and not innocent." (96 S.W.2d at 1030).

Chelrob, Inc. v. Barrett, 293 N. Y. 442, 57 N.E.2d 825 says only this: that the courts, otherwise reluctant to review business transactions, will, when significant duality appears, make certain that the transactions were fair. The fairness referred to is the fairness which the law requires: a recognition of the rights of the parties. In most cases the extent of those rights requires no discussion. On a sale of property, for example, no one denies that the seller is entitled to a fair price. The problem, as in the Chelrob case, is only to determine whether the price was fair.

[45]The opinion and order are set out in Appendix C of this brief.

The decisions cited by petitioners in no way support their claims.

E. THE CORPORATION CANNOT IN EQUITY DEPLETE THE ASSETS OF ITS FORMER SUBSIDIARY AT THE EXPENSE OF CREDITORS WHO WERE NOT PAID IN FULL.

This is a demand for $17,201,739 presented against a reorganized railroad by the former parent company. That company directed its former subsidiary to sell securities to the public. The purchasers of those securities are the stockholders (and their successors in interest) of the reorganized company. To these stockholders, as creditors of the old subsidiary, the petitioner Corporation owes fiduciary obligations. Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U.S. 510, 522.

By the plan of reorganization the old bondholders became the present stockholders. The exchange of securities was made on the assumption that the preferred stock of the reorganized company would be worth $100 per share and the common stock $57 and $62 per share. Western Pac. R. Co. Reorganization, 233 I.C.C. 409, 417. Even on this basis the secured creditors of the old company were not paid in full. The securities issued to the A. C. James Company, the creditor holding the junior secured position, fell short of paying that company's claim by $3,495,900 (R. 1222, 2021). With interest, that unpaid claim now amounts to more than $5,000,000.

This $5,000,000 does not measure, however, the amount by which the secured creditors were not paid. These creditors, now stockholders of the reorganized company, not only surrendered their first mortgage bonds for securities of an inferior grade (income bonds, preferred stock and common stock) but those inferior securities have not had the value which the plan assumed they would have. This Court is entitled to take judicial notice of the market values. Insurance Group v. D. & R. G. W. R. Co., 329 U.S. 607, 617, n. 6. The range of market values is shown in Appendix D; rarely have they reached the values assumed by the plan. Petitioners now propose to further reduce the assets of these creditors, now stockholders, by $17,201,739. Nothing could be more inequitable. Nothing could be more inconsistent with the fiduciary obligation owing from the Corporation to those creditors. Nothing could more plainly violate the settled principle that creditors have an absolute priority over stockholders. Northern Pacific Ry. v. Boyd, 228 U.S. 482, 504; Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Co., 308 U.S. 106, 129. Nothing could be more radically at odds with this Court's doctrine that the claim of a holding company in the reorganization of its subsidiary must, whatever its technical status, yield to the necessity of doing justice to the creditors of that subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas Co., 306 U.S. 307.

II. The Bar of Reorganization

Petitioners failed to present their claim to the reorganization court while it was open for the purpose and as a result it is barred by the reorganization.

If a proceeding under Section 77 (11 U.S.C. Sec. 205) is to be effective in rehabilitating the debtor two things are required.

First, the reorganization court must consider and act upon all possible claims which might be asserted against the reorganized company. Chunks of the problem are not left to other tribunals, Gardner v. New Jersey, 329 U.S. 565, 577. To accomplish this purpose Congress has provided that claims which are not provable in an ordinary bankruptcy can be presented in a reorganization, Sec. 77(b); Gardner v. New Jersey, 329 U.S. 565, 572; Foust v. Munson SS Lines, 299 U.S. 77, 82.

Second, the reorganization must put an end to all claims, so that the reorganized company shall not be hampered or perhaps overwhelmed with holdover obligations that defeat the prime object of the proceeding, and so that all persons dealing with it or in its securities may act in reliance upon the reorganization as definitive and settled.[46]

Petitioners propose to flout these settled purposes of a reorganization. They ask the Court to declare that the reorganized company did not emerge from the reorganization proceeding with its liabilities defined; that on the contrary and in spite of efforts extending over a period of eleven years by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the courts, the Company emerged from reorganization with an undefined and undisclosed liability of $17,201,739, a liability, Maier Brewing Co.*, 134 F.2d 385, cert. den. 320 U.S. 737; Black v. Richfield Oil Corp., 146 F.2d 801, cert. den. 325 U.S. 867; In re Colorado & S. R. Co., 84 F. moreover to be paid in cash by a reorganized company whose first mortgage bond issue was limited to $10,000,000 and which was permitted to have no other fixed interest charge. This suggestion, if accepted, would render ridiculous the efforts in the reorganization to define the liabilities of the new company.

A. THE CLAIM IS A CLAIM AGAINST THE TRUSTEES IN REORGANIZATION, AND IS INVALID BECAUSE IT HAS NEVER BEEN APPROVED BY THE REORGANIZATION COURT.

During 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, the trustees earned large incomes from the railroad properties. The tax liability on these incomes was a liability of the trustees, Reinecke v. Gardner, 277 U.S. 239, and the tax, if any, was a cost or expense of administration, Michigan v. Michigan Trust Co., 286 U.S. 334, 344. Petitioners' claim, based upon an alleged saving of these taxes, would, if paid, also have been a liability of the trustees and an expense of administration.[47]

As such, it was the concern of the bankruptcy court and was within its jurisdiction, Sec. 77(e); Brown v. Gerdes, 321 U.S. 178, 183-4.

The reorganization trustees, as court officers, had no power to incur any liability to the holding company for a "tax saving" payment or otherwise except by express authorization of the reorganization court. This is settled.

> "The receiver being an officer of the court, and acting under the court's direction and instructions, his powers are derived from and defined by the court

[47] Cf. the Corporation's supplemental complaint (R. 208), alleging that the obligation to account for the tax savings and pay them to the holding company "was an obligation incurred by the Trustees in their operation of the debtor's estate" (R. 224).

under which he acts. He is not such a general agent as to have any implied power, and his authority to make expenditures and incur liabilities—like the one in question—must be either found in the order of his appointment, or be approved by the court, before they acquire validity, and have any binding force upon the trust." (Chicago Deposit Vault Co. v. McNulta, 153 U.S. 554, 561.)[48]

This principle requiring court sanction to create a liability of the estate was approved by Congress for railroad reorganizations. Section 77(e) says that the reorganization plan must provide "for the payment of all costs of administration and all other allowances made or to be made by the judge." And it was expressly recognized in the Western Pacific proceeding. The reorganization court authorized the debtor to continue its railroad business and provided:

"The authority given by the foregoing shall not include authority to incur expense, other than such as is necessary in the course of the usual and ordinary maintenance and operation of the debtor's property. Any extraordinary expense and expense incident to reorganization of the debtor shall be subject to the prior approval of the Court." (R. 1910) (Emphasis supplied.)

---

[48]The rule is strictly applied. In Northern Finance Corp. v. Burns, 5 F.2d 11, a receiver without prior authority borrowed funds to pay taxes due from the estate. The claim of the lender for the amount of the loan was denied. In Byrnes v. Missouri National Bank, 7 F.2d 978, a receiver, authorized to borrow $150,000, borrowed an additional $2,000. A claim for the $2,000 was disallowed. In In re Erie Lumber Co., 150 Fed. 817, merchants furnished goods to a receiver who had no court authority to buy. They were denied compensation. In Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland R. Co., 117 U.S. 434, this Court invalidated claims for $54,000 and $32,000 created by a receiver without prior court approval.

This provision was affirmed in the order appointing the reorganization trustees and transferring the railroad properties to them (R. 1187, 1923).

An unprecedented liability of $17,201,739 would certainly be an "extraordinary expense." As such, it could not be incurred without "the prior approval of the Court." No such approval was sought or obtained. Accordingly, petitioners' claim never became a valid obligation of the trustees or the estate. To obtain strict judicial supervision of all expenses connected with a reorganization was one reason for substituting Section 77 for the traditional equity receivership. Leiman v. Guttman, 336 U. S. 1. The policy is extremely rigid—so much so that it has been extended to fees and allowances which are not to be paid from the assets of the estate. Leiman v. Guttman, supra. Petitioners ask the Court to repudiate this firm policy.

B. UNALLOWED CLAIMS FOR EXPENSES OF ADMINISTRATION WERE BARRED AND EXTINGUISHED IN THE WESTERN PACIFIC REORGANIZATION.

After the plan of reorganization had been confirmed, the bankruptcy court vested the property in the reorganized company, discharged the trustees, and made a final order terminating the proceedings and ending the reorganization. In all this the court followed the mandate of Section 77 and its orders have long since become final.

In the course of these proceedings the court effectually adjudicated that petitioners' claim was invalid and barred its assertion against the reorganized company. Such adjudication and bar are none the less effective because the claim is rejected in toto, Gardner v. New Jersey, 329 U.S. 565, 574, or is denied recognition because of the failure to present it, New York v. Irving Trust Co., 288 U. S. 329.

The adjudication and bar were perfected by the revestment order and the final order terminating the Western Pacific reorganization.

Long before March 15, 1944, the Corporation could have presented its claim to the bankruptcy court.[49] The revestment order was made November 27, 1944. Under its terms the reorganized company was required to assume only such unpaid expenses of administration as the bankruptcy court had theretofore approved or should thereafter approve[50] (R. 50).

In its order the court reserved jurisdiction to approve costs and expenses of administration after revestment. Thus the holding company had further time after revestment within which to present its claim.

Some fifteen months after revestment, the Court made its final order terminating the proceeding. This order operated as a termination of its reserved jurisdiction to approve expenses of administration and effectively closed the proceeding against the subsequent presentation of such claims.

The text of the orders leaves no room for doubt that the statutory mandate was executed.

The revestment order (R. 36, 498, 1711) vested the properties in the reorganized company

> "free and clear of all rights, claims, liens and interests of said Trustees, the former stockholders and creditors

---

[49]March 15, 1944, was the date on which tentative consolidated returns for 1943 were filed. On petitioners' theory that the tax savings are referable to separate return tax computations beginning with the 1942 returns (this brief, p. 114), the date would have been December 31, 1942.

[50]Except tax liability to the United States for which court approval was not required; cf. Sec. 77(f) (11 U.S.C. Sec. 205(f)).

of the debtor; and of all other persons, firms and corporations whatsoever, except as otherwise provided in this order, * * *" (R. 51-2) (Emphasis supplied.)

This was a judgment in rem against the world pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43, 54; Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U. S. 234, 241; and is res judicata against the holding company, which was a party to the proceeding, Stoll v. Gottlieb, 305 U. S. 165; Chicot County District v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U. S. 371.

The revestment order specified the obligations to be undertaken by the reorganized company. As respects costs and expenses of administration, paragraph 20 of the order provided that "this Court expressly reserves jurisdiction to determine all costs and expenses of administration"[51] (R. 62).

The effect of the revestment order is clear. It barred all claims against the reorganized company on account of costs and expenses of administration, other than those which had theretofore been approved or might thereafter be approved by the court under the jurisdiction reserved for the purpose.

The reorganization proceeding was not closed until March 28, 1946 (R. 1219, 2013), long after the last of the tax returns in issue here had been filed. Petitioners never took advantage of the opportunity to present their claim. Accordingly and in due course the court by its final order terminated the reorganization and permanently enjoined the as-the judgment must be presented for proof and allowance. Thompson v. Texas Mexican R. Co., 328 U.S. 134, 144. When on March 28, 1946, that court barred all administration claims not theretofore allowed, the time for proof and allowance was gone.

[51] Paragraph 20 is not limited to claims perfected before revestment. It contains no reference to any date. Petitioners are inadvertently mistaken in saying that the court did not reserve jurisdiction "to supervise claims arising after the revesting." (Corp. brief, p. 132).

8. Petitioners refer to Callaway v. Benton, 336 U.S. 132, and argue that the reorganization court was without power to order the holding company to join in the returns. We have shown that it had the power, and that Callaway v. Benton is not a holding contra (this brief, p. 66). In any event, the mooted want of power has no bearing on the finality of the orders in the reorganization proceeding.

9. Petitioners have not argued that duality takes their claim out of the bar, nor could they. A final judgment can be attacked collaterally only for want of judgment in the court that pronounced it, or upon a showing that the party attacking it was prevented by some fraud practised directly upon him from presenting his case to the court that pronounced the judgment, United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61; Stoll v. Gottlieb, 305 U.S. 165. Nothing of the sort occurred here.

The holding company was a party to the proceeding, represented by Judge Sloss, formerly a Justice of the highest California court (R. 1599). No one questions his independence. The dualities could have been severed any time at the will of the holding company. They ended with revestment, fifteen months before the final order (this brief, p. 17). The Corporation's general counsel thought of the claim in 1944, but concluded after consulting expert tax lawyers that it had no value then, and spoke to no one about it (R. 1060-7). The dualities existing during trustee operations were permitted by the statute (Sec. 77(c)(1)), the general orders (Order 44) and the court's order (R. 1187-91, 1923). If dualities thus authorized open the finality of railroad reorganizations to attack by holding companies which created the dualities, the purpose of the statute will be subverted.

E. THE REORGANIZATION BAR HAS SPECIAL MERIT AGAINST PETITIONERS.

The defense is meritorious, as applied to everyone, even those who have had no actual notice, whose claims are plain and just, and who have not presented them because of excusable ignorance or blameless misfortune.

Here the defense has special and overwhelming merit. The Corporation had complete notice, and was assiduous and persistent in pursuing its claims (R. 1051-2, 1056-64). Here it is not the notice of approaching bar and judgment that was lacking. The thing that was missing was presentation of the claim. General counsel for the holding company considered the claim and for reasons satisfactory to himself abandoned it (R. 1060-7). The actors in the transaction, namely, the court, the trustees, and the officers who filed the returns, acted in the belief that the tax reduction was the trustees' concern.

We submit that Section 77 does not sanction but forbids the survival of such a claim.

III. The Defenses of Limitations, Laches and Estoppel

The claim for 1943 is barred by the statute of limitations. The 1943 returns took advantage of the loss of the Corporation (Exs. P. 4A/B, R. 491, D. 40, R. 1517). They were filed July 15, 1944 (Ex. P. 4A/B). This action was filed more than two years thereafter (R. 5). California law desertion by petitioners or anyone else of any such claim as here presented (R. 1219, 2017-18).

The final order terminated the proceedings. It operated as a termination of reservations of jurisdiction[52] and ended the reorganization. No appeal having been taken, it is now conclusive and operates as a bar and as res judicata upon petitioners' claim.

The Assumption Agreement Does Not Provide for Payment of the Holding Company's Claim.

At this point we stop to examine petitioners' contention that by the assumption agreement the reorganized company assumed the liability of the trustees for their "tax savings."

The assumption agreement is an exhibit to the revestment order, and is one of the instruments which, by that order, the reorganized company was directed to execute. Its text appears at R. 76-81.

The particular clause on which petitioners rely reads as follows:

> "2. Assume * * * any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business, * * *". (R. 78)

Since all assets of the estate were to be transferred to the new company, some provision had to be made to find funds for the actual payment of the approved and outstanding obligations of the trustees. Under such circumstances it is conventional for the new company to provide the funds required to pay the trustees' recognized debts and the reorganization court directed the execution of an agreement so providing. The language was broad in order to give the trustees full protection against personal liabilities after they had completed their duties and received their discharge. Petitioners contended in the courts below that the obligation to make "tax savings" payments was "an obligation incurred by the Trustees in their operation of the debtor's estate and was an obligation assumed by the defendant * * *" (Supp. Compl. par. Eleventh, R. 224). They argued in their trial briefs that the assumption agreement relieved them of the necessity of presenting their claim to the reorganization court. The suggestion is not repeated. In any event, it has no validity. There are many reasons.

First. The purpose of the assumption agreement was to provide money for the discharge of recognized debts and to provide the trustees with personal protection. It was not to undo all the work of the reorganization by giving validity to an undisclosed claim for $17,201,739.

Second. The reorganization court, in directing the execution of the assumption agreement, did not eliminate the necessity that expenses of administration be approved by the court. On the contrary it expressly reaffirmed that requirement in Paragraphs 10 and 20 of the revestment order (R. 50-1, 61-2). It is incredible that the court, which from the beginning had forbidden its trustees to incur any extraordinary expense without its approval (this brief, p. 92), should have intended to saddle any such unapproved expense on the new company.

Third. Petitioners' argument is, in effect, that the reorganized company agreed to assume and discharge all obligations of the trustees. The reorganization court made it clear, however, that the assumption agreement should not be so understood. In directing the execution of the agreement the Court described it as follows:

> "(a) agreement providing for the assumption of certain obligations, liabilities, contracts, agreements and leases of the debtor and the debtor's Trustees, * * *" (R. 46).

and went on to say:

> "* * * and said Railroad Company shall assume only the valid and outstanding obligations and liabilities of the debtor or the debtor's trustees * * *" (R. 50).

The references in the order to "certain obligations" of the trustees and to "the valid and outstanding obligations" of the trustees make it clear that it was never intended that the assumption agreement should obligate the reorganized company to pay all obligations of the trustees.

Fourth. Assumption presupposes an obligation to be assumed. Since the result of petitioners' failure to obtain court approval of their claim is that the claim never became an obligation of the trustees (this brief, pp. 91-3), petitioners could not recover even if the assumption agreement were construed to refer to all trustee obligations.

Fifth. The reorganization court had no power and it did not intend by the assumption agreement to eliminate the requirement of Section 77(e) that costs of administration be approved by the court.

An assumption agreement in a reorganization proceeding has a limited and well understood purpose. It operates within and not beyond the framework of the reorganization.

It does not give validity to claims otherwise invalid or give vitality to claims which have been barred.

We return to our argument.

C. THE REORGANIZATION BAR IS FINAL AND CAN NEITHER BE OPENED NOR AVOIDED.

The reorganization is a complete and insurmountable bar to any recovery by petitioners in this action. It is a bar because the survival of claims that have not been brought to the reorganization court's notice is contrary to Section 77. It is a bar because of the settled rule that a claim for payment of an expense of administration which is not allowed by the court in charge of the estate has no validity. It is a bar because the reorganization court by specific decree has vested the property in the reorganized company free and clear of unallowed claims and has enjoined the assertion of any such claim.

Petitioners' failure to present their "tax saving" claim in the reorganization proceedings also bars the claim, under principles of res judicata. The order vesting the property in the reorganized company free and clear of all administration claims not allowed by the court, i.e., free and clear of petitioners' claim, is a judgment that extinguished the petitioners' claim when the final order was made.[53] A litigant who asserts claims against an estate in the hands of a court must in the first proceeding assert all of his claims or be forever foreclosed. United States v. California & Ore. Land Co., 192 U. S. 355; Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. Slaght, 205 U. S. 122; Montezuma Canal v. Smithville Canal, 218 [53] By virtue of its terms the revestment order barring unallowed claims did not operate to bar claims thereafter allowed under the reserved jurisdiction.

U.S. 371; Estate of Bell, 153 Cal. 331, 95 Pac. 372; Krier v. Krier, 28 C.2d 841, 172 P.2d 681.

D. REPLY TO PETITIONERS' CONTENTIONS.

We turn to the arguments by which petitioners seek to open or to avoid the bar, beginning with those which were considered in the dissenting opinion in the Court of Appeals.

1. In its supplemental complaint the holding company applies for a modification of the final order (R. 229-30). The law is settled against this suggestion. This is a suit in equity. It is not a proceeding in the bankruptcy court. Naylor v. Cantley, 96 F.2d 761, 763. The court sitting in equity cannot modify a bankruptcy order. In re Watts and Sachs, 190 U. S. 1, 27; Isaacs v. Hobbs Tie & T. Co., 282 U. S. 734, 739. The petitioners' application for modification must be denied for want of jurisdiction to entertain it. The courts below and this Court are bound to accord to the bankruptcy orders the force of final bars and judgments.

2. Petitioners suggest that they have an independent claim against the new company as to the tax savings for 1942 and the first four months of 1944. But no matter how it is stated, the claim is based upon an alleged contribution to the reduction of the trustees' taxes, and that claim has been disallowed.[54] The final order in reorganization was an effective disallowance and is binding upon the Corporation and upon the reorganized railroad company.

Moreover, petitioners predicate their claim on events which took place during trustee operations, an appropriation of the holding company's loss in the returns filed July [54] Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Savannah Union Station Co., 181 F.2d 267, cited by the Corporation (its brief, p. 131), did not involve a claim for an expense of administration.

15, 1944, and on dualities which terminated with the end of trustee operations. Petitioners thus relate their claim to the period of trustee operation.

In support of their argument petitioners refer to the fact that the returns for the first four months of 1944 were not filed until March 15, 1945,[55] that is to say, after revestment, and that the holding company filed the claim for refund of 1942 taxes on March 9, 1945. They contend that these were acts done to assist the new company, not the trustees. The distinction has no substance. The acts were performed to reduce the trustees' taxes, and the claim for compensation was, of course, a claim to a cost of administration. Under the mandate of the statute and the orders of the reorganization court, the claim could not have validity nor become a charge against the new company, without the approval of the reorganization court.

Petitioners, and the dissenting judge, also suggest that a new claim arose after the final order in reorganization was made. In the dissenting opinion it is said that the holding company

> "at the request of defendant long after the reorganization had been closed, entered into a settlement with the United States, whereby its losses were used to obtain a benefit of $17,000,000 for defendant." (R. 2247)

The opinion suggests that this was co-operation which gave rise to a new quantum meruit claim against the new company. This action was then pending, so that the "co-operation" could hardly be more than a joint act by which, without either adversary giving aid or comfort to his opponent in the controversy between them, the subject matter in controversy was realized.[56] Moreover, an express agreement on the subject of the settlement was made between the Corporation and the new railroad company. This was the stipulation (R. 492, 1658) wherein it was agreed that the settlement should not prejudice the claims or defenses of the opposing parties,[57] except to the extent that it operated to reduce the amount of the tax savings in controversy. The stipulation was, of course, voluntary. No quantum meruit claim can be predicated on co-operative acts performed under an express agreement, Restatement of Restitution, Sec. 107; Ullman v. May, 147 Ohio 468, 72 N.E. 2d 63.

[55]The date the tentative returns were filed; final returns were filed June 15, 1945. The consents to the returns so filed, though executed in the name of the reorganized company, were the trustees' consents, I.R.C. Sec. 52, Treas. Regs. 104, Sec. 23.15(b), G.C.M. 12208, Cum. Bull. XII-2, p. 87; 415 South Taylor Building Corp., 2 T.C. 184.

Petitioners also suggest that their claim did not mature until 1947, but this, if correct, did not prevent its presentation in the reorganization while it was contingent, City Bank v. Irving Trust Co., 299 U.S. 433; Brown v. Gerdes, 321 U.S. 178, 181. The dissenting opinion characterizes the right claimed by petitioners, namely, the alleged right to file returns of its own choice, as a right appurtenant to the stock, which accrued before the returns were filed. A [56]The Corporation understood this. Its directors considered rejection of the settlement unless respondents would waive their defenses of the reorganization bar and the statute of limitations (R. 1007-8).

[57]The acceptance of the settlement with the Government "shall be without prejudice to the interests, claims or defenses asserted by the parties," and "none of the parties waives any of its interests, claims or defenses" and nothing in the stipulation is "a recognition or admission * * * of the validity, merit or equity of the claims," or a waiver of defenses "in any manner or to any extent" (R. 1659-60).

claim of this right and for compensation on account of its exercise was presentable to the reorganization court before the returns were filed. The holding company had the necessary information as early as May, 1943, nearly three years before the final order was made (R. 591, 1757).

3. Petitioners contend, and the dissent seems to agree, that Section 77 proceedings bar only claims against the debtor, i.e., claims existing at the time the petition is filed. They suggest that administration claims remain at large, so that a field day of litigation over unpresented claims is permitted in all the courts after the reorganization is completed. We have answered this (this brief, pp. 91-6). In support of this contention they refer to Texas and Pacific Railway Co. v. Johnson, 151 U.S. 81, and Texas and Pacific Railway Co. v. Bloom, 164 U.S. 636. These cases arose out of a single railroad receivership in which it was held that the railroad company was responsible for the receiver's debts. The decisions are readily explained by the fact that the proceeding was a friendly one and the properties were returned to the company without any reorganization taking place.

Petitioners suggest some further arguments which are not mentioned in the dissenting opinion.

4. It is argued that a recovery by petitioners would not impair the plan of reorganization, and that the plan did not contemplate the increase in the estate which resulted from the trustees' tax savings (Corp. brief, pp. 49-56, Int. brief, pp. 90-2). The argument is incorrect in this, that the plan intended the secured creditors to have the chance of gain as well as the risk of loss attendant upon the enforced reduction of their secured claims to junior securities. D. & R. G. W. Co. v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, 328 U.S. 495, 517, 522. It is immaterial to the bar of reorganization whether or not the plan would be frustrated (as plainly it would in fact) if the Corporation should obtain a $17,201,739 judgment. Unallowed administration claims were barred and extinguished. This was prescribed by Section 77, and nothing in the plan requires, or could require, a different conclusion.

5. It was suggested on brief below that by its order approving the reserve fund for contingent tax liability, the Court imposed on its trustees an obligation to account to the holding company for the use of the loss. Obviously the Court had no such intention; its purpose was to approve the reserve fund for contingent tax liability to the United States Government, and manifestly the court considered the potential tax reduction was for the trustees' advantage, not the corporation's (R. 1270-4, 2023). The argument is, in effect, that the Court's implied approval of the returns as beneficial to the bankruptcy estate was an order approving the holding company's claim to the benefit though the Court intended otherwise. The statute and the Court's orders required that administration claims be approved by the Court. The requirement is not satisfied by an order that was made without notice of the claim and that displayed a purpose inconsistent with it.

6. Petitioners say they were not given notice to present their claim. But they had notice: the holding company was a party to the proceeding; the statute and the revestment order gave notice of the necessity for Court approval; and fifteen months after revestment, and three years after the claim was presentable, was adequate time to present the claim. Moreover, as a party to the proceeding, the Corporation did receive notice of the petition for the final order and also received notice that it had been made (R. 109, 1218, 2011). The statute required no further notice and authorized the final order upon the notice that was given. Cf. Hanover National Bank v. Moyses, 186 U.S. 181, 182; Mohonk Realty Corp. v. Wise Shoe Stores, 111 F.2d 287, 290.

7. Petitioners suggested on briefs below that the holding company might have sued the trustees in another court under the authority of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 959, and Thompson v. Texas Mexican R. Co., 328 U.S. 134, was cited. The statute (formerly Judicial Code Sec. 66) authorizes suits against court trustees without leave of the court that has appointed them. The suggestion does not reach the bar nor affect the finality of the judgment in reorganization. The trustees were discharged seventeen months before this suit was filed, and are not parties, so that this is not a suit under the statute and no suit could have been maintained under the statute after they were discharged. But the reorganization court was open to hear the claim for ten months after the discharge of the trustees. Moreover, since in this suit the petitioners seek modification of the final order (R. 229-30)[58] and the claim is founded upon complaints concerning conduct and dualities in the administration of the estate, it is apparent that it is not a case which the statute permits to be brought outside the bankruptcy court. Cf. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Bray, 225 U.S. 205, 217. Finally all cases under the statute lead to the reorganization court, to which [58]Even in the bankruptcy court, the order could not be modified without being preceded by an order reopening the reorganization. Mohonk Realty Corp. v. Wise Shoe Stores, 111 F.2d 287; In re Peyton Realty Co., 148 F.2d 771.

visional the decisions of the court in 98 per cent or more of the cases that come before it. On petition of a dissatisfied party its decisions would automatically be subject to a species of horizontal appeal which would completely nullify the prime statutory objective of effecting a division of the court's work." (R. 2295)

Judge Pope states that this was his reason for joining in the opinion below:

> "As I understand the majority opinion, it went no further than to hold that a disappointed litigant in the position of the appellant in that case, could not, by filing a petition for rehearing in banc, require all the judges of the court to consider and pass upon that petition. I concurred in that opinion because in my mind a contrary holding would mean that the court would, as a practical matter, lose the opportunity which it now has to expedite its disposition of cases through the hearing of matters before divisions."
> (Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, 198 F.2d 790, 791, n. 2.)

So the established practice in the Ninth Circuit is that, in the absence of an order by a majority of the acting circuit judges for a rehearing in banc,[64] the original order assigning the appeal to a division stands and, that being so, the petition for a rehearing is in law addressed to it and will be passed upon by it. What the opinion makes clear is [64]The majority clearly were not holding that they were without power to order a rehearing in banc, for they expressly ruled that the composition of the court in any particular case is an administrative and intramural matter for the court alone to determine (R. 2295). They further held, in passing upon and denying petitioners' motion for leave to file a motion to vacate the order striking their petition for a rehearing in banc, that in this instance they did not want to take the case out of the hands of the division to which, by prior order, it was regularly assigned. Clearly, they had the right to decide that they would not interfere with the original assignment. This being so, petitioners were not aggrieved by the striking of their petition for a rehearing in banc.

---

that the Ninth Circuit has no rule or practice giving a party who has lost its appeal the right to petition the rest of the court for a rehearing.[65] Certainly the court is entitled to protect itself against having to re-do the work of its divisions at the behest of each disappointed litigant.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that the judgment below should be affirmed with costs to the respondents.

[65]Petitioners suggest (Corp. brief, pp. 152-4) that because a majority of the active circuit judges have the power to order a rehearing in banc a dissatisfied litigant has the right to petition for a rehearing in banc, including the right to have at least a majority of the active circuit judges entertain and pass upon such a petition. This, as we have shown, is not so. If the Ninth Circuit were to adopt a formal rule that petitions for rehearing in banc will not be entertained or granted unless a majority of the division that originally heard the appeal so request and a majority of the active circuit judges concur, such a rule would clearly be valid. (Cf: Rule 33 of this Court.) This, in effect, is the practice in the Ninth Circuit, as is made clear by the opinion of six of the seven active circuit judges (R. 2288) and if a rule would be valid the equivalent practice is equally valid. This practice is none the less valid because a different practice prevails in the Third Circuit and in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

cides the applicable period of limitation, Guaranty Trust Co. v. York, 326 U.S. 99; and since this is an unjust enrichment claim the two-year statute, Sec. 339, Subd. 1, California Code of Civil Procedure, is applicable. Richter v. Henningsan, 110 Cal. 530, 537, 42 Pac. 1077, 1079; Bray v. Cohn, 7 Cal. App. 124, 93 Pac. 893; Trower v. San Francisco, 157 Cal. 762, 767, 769, 109 Pac. 617, 619, 620; Jacobson v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 150 Cal. 624, 89 Pac. 599; Bell v. Bank of California, 153 Cal. 234, 94 Pac. 889.

The petitioners have been guilty of gross laches, barring their claim. In re Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 168 F.2d 587, 592, cert. den. 335 U.S. 855; McColgan v. Maier Brewing Co., 134 F.2d 385, 388, cert. den. 320 U.S. 737; Piedmont Ice & Coal Co. v. American Service Co., 130 F.2d 78. In some of these cases the late suitor had not been a party to the reorganization. Here the Corporation was a party, whose general counsel had considered the claim while the reorganization was open and had dismissed it as having no practical value (this brief, p. 17). Meanwhile the world relied upon the consummation of the plan and the finality of the reorganization proceedings.

The petitioners are estopped to present their claim. For upwards of twenty years the holding company settled consolidated return obligations with its subsidiaries by the accepted formula. One who participates in an established course of conduct may not, after the event, attach new consequences to customary activity. See, for example, Railroad Company v. United States, 103 U.S. 703, where the railroad sought a revision of the customary formula for allocating payments for mail carriage; Stagg v. Insurance Company, 10 Wall. 589; County of Los Angeles v. Cline, 185 Cal. 299, 197 Pac. 67. In each case the claim was denied because it was a departure from the customary practice.

IV. The Amount of the Tax Saving

At the trial expert witnesses for both sides testified and presented exhibits with respect to various methods of computing the amount by which the income taxes of the trustees for the calendar years 1942 and 1943 and the first four months of 1944 were reduced by the returns which were filed. Plaintiff's witness was Robert Buchanan (R. 911-55) who presented three alternative computations in one exhibit (Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 80, R. 919, 1825-9). Defendants' witness was James L. Cockburn, Jr. (R. 1501-85), who presented four alternative computations embodied in Defendants' Exhibits Nos. 41, 43, 44 and 45 (R. 1536, 1541, 1548-9; 2032-9).

Each of these seven computations was based upon different assumptions and arrived at different conclusions as to the amount of the so-called "tax saving" of the trustees during this period. The wide disparity in the views of these expert witnesses, and in the effect of the divergent assumptions adopted by them, is shown by the fact that their computations produced seven different results ranging in amounts from a minimum of $1,034,446 shown by Defendants' Exhibit No. 45 (R. 2038) to a maximum of $17,201,739 indicated by Basis One of Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 80 (R. 1825). The great uncertainty of these computations is demonstrated even more strikingly by the fact that there was a difference of almost $7,000,000 between the highest (Basis One) and the lowest (Basis Three) of the results obtained by plaintiff's own expert witness (Ex. P. 80, R. 1825, 1829).

While this evidence was being offered the District Court recognized that it was of significance if, but only if, the Corporation should be held entitled to recover (R. 1544). Since the District Court concluded that there should be no recovery, it had no occasion to determine the amount of the tax saving. The opinion of the District Court (R. 257-76) contains no discussion of this subject and no reference to the numerous problems involved in making a computation of the amount of the tax saving. In its recital of the facts of the case, the Court referred to the tax saving in terms of the highest of all of the amounts appearing in the seven alternative computations presented in the exhibits prepared by the expert witnesses, namely, $17,201,739 (R. 262, 264, 267). Similar statements appear in the opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 2218), which likewise had no occasion to determine the amount of the tax saving. In other words, both courts used this maximum amount as a convenient means of describing the Corporation's claim, without defining it.

Obviously, if either court had decided that the Corporation was entitled to some portion of the tax saving then it would have been necessary to determine the amount of tax which was saved. Such a determination would require that the $4,144,828 tax actually paid by the trustees for this period (R. 266-7) be compared with some imaginary tax which they would have been required to pay under other circumstances and under different tax returns.[59] This process would require decisions as to what imaginary or hypothetical circumstances should be assumed, what type of returns should be considered as having been filed in lieu of those actually filed, and what answers should be given to the numerous questions involved in the computation of such imaginary taxes. For example, it would be necessary to determine whether the imaginary tax should be computed on a consolidated return basis, with the Corporation's stock loss eliminated as a deduction, or upon a separate return basis. The Corporation's own expert witness presented computations on both bases, differing in result by almost $7,000,000 (R. 1825-9).

This is not the only question involved, however, nor is it the most difficult. If the separate return basis were to be used, it would be necessary to decide what treatment should be given to the operating loss carry-overs and unused excess profits tax credits which the trustees had accumulated in prior years, and what disposition should be made of inter-company interest accruals and other inter-company transactions which were of no consequence in consolidated returns. Separate return computations would also require a consideration of the possible tax effect of the partial worthlessness of a large debt owed to the trustees by one of the operating company's subsidiaries, the Sacramento Northern Railway, which was the subject of testimony of not only Mr. Cockburn (R. 1531) but also Mr.

[59] Compare Securities and Exchange Commission Release No. 53, Accounting Series, In the Matter of "Charges in Lieu of Taxes," Note 23, "* * * The facts are, of course, that there has not been a static or standard or 'normal' tax law or tax status * * *." Excerpts from Release No. 53 are in Appendix B, at p. 10.

Charles Elsey, the president of the operating company and the agent of the trustees during reorganization (R. 1322). In addition there were problems affecting both separate and consolidated return computations, such as the questions arising out of the large claims of the Government for adjustment of freight charges upon war-time traffic, all of which would affect the gross and net income of the trustees during the war years, including the period in question (R. 1289-1306; 1529-31; 1614-25). Of like character are questions as to the proper treatment of accelerated amortization allowances, a subject upon which there was much confusion during the trial (R. 936-9; 1523-7). Finally, it would be necessary to consider the extent to which the trustees might properly have utilized other tax saving methods which were legally available to them and might have been used if the Corporation's huge loss had not been available (R. 934-5).

Each of these is a most difficult and complex problem which would have to be solved before it would be possible to compute the amount of the imaginary or hypothetical tax which would then have to be compared with the tax actually paid in order to determine the amount of the tax saving. Just one of these items alone, the effect of the treatment of the trustees' operating loss carry-overs and unused excess profits credits, would make a difference of nearly $6,000,000 in the amount of the tax saving, as is readily apparent from a brief comparison of Basis One with Basis Two in Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 80 (R. 1825-29). As Mr. Buchanan, the Corporation's expert witness, himself testified (R. 920-4, 933, 951-3) the only difference between these two computations is that in Basis

One the trustees were deprived of the use of their own carry-overs and credits, whereas in Basis Two the trustees were given the benefit of these items. The resulting difference in the trustees' taxes, according to Mr. Buchanan, is $5,773,937.

These carry-overs and credits were not attributable in any way to the operations, activities or status of the Corporation. They were attributable solely to the operations of the trustees in the years prior to 1942. They had nothing whatever to do with the Corporation's stock loss. Mr. Buchanan testified (R. 922) that the reason for the Basis One computation, depriving the trustees of their own carry-overs and credits, was that the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue (Regs. 110, Sec. 33.31(e) and (f)) then in effect provided that the carry-overs and credits attributable to the members of an affiliated group during a consolidated return period would all inure to the benefit of the parent upon any change from consolidated to separate return tax reporting.[60] These particular carry-overs and credits were accumulated by the trustees in 1940 and 1941 when consolidated returns were filed, so in computing the imaginary tax of the trustees on a separate return basis for 1942 and later years Mr. Buchanan made his two separate computations, one depriving the trustees of their pre-1942 carry-overs and credits and the other giving them the benefit of them.

[60]On March 13, 1943, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue repealed this obviously unfair rule and replaced it with the proper rule (applicable, however, to only those carry-overs and credits arising after December 31, 1941) that upon a change to separate returns the carry-overs and credits go with the members who created them (T.D. 5244 and T.D. 5245, 1943 Cum. Bull. 439, 801). The latter rule has prevailed ever since and is presently found in Sections 24.31(d) and (e) of Regulations 129.

This entire sum of $5,773,937 is included in the $17,201,739 "tax saving" figure so often mentioned in the briefs of the petitioners. In other words, more than one-third of the amount by which they claim the income taxes of the trustees were reduced through use of the Corporation's loss had nothing to do with that loss, but is instead the amount by which the taxes of the trustees would have been increased through forfeiture of their own operating loss carry-overs and unused excess profits tax credits if the Corporation had refused to join in consolidated returns after 1941. In seeking to collect this $5,773,937 the petitioners are not seeking to recover a "tax saving" at all. They are trying instead to collect retroactively the amount of additional taxes which the Corporation could have forced the trustees to pay the United States by refusing to continue to file consolidated returns during the period in question. This is a potential "tax loss"—not a tax saving. Yet the $17,201,739 figure so frequently and erroneously described in petitioners' briefs as the saving realized by the trustees through use of the Corporation's loss (e.g., in the "Summary Recapitulation of Basic and Incontrovertible Facts" at page 36 of Petitioner's brief in No. 150) includes this very same $5,773,937 as part of the so-called "tax saving." The fact that it does include this item, which is nothing more than the amount of damage the trustees would have suffered if they had not been able to use their own carry-overs and credits after December 31, 1941, clearly shows the extreme character of the claims of petitioners. It also shows that neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals could possibly have considered that this amount of $17,201,739 really represented a true measure of the tax saving attributable to the Corporation's stock loss deduction.

The courts below never considered or decided the questions involved in computing the amount of the tax saving. We respectfully submit that those questions need not be decided even now, because petitioners are not entitled to any portion of the tax saving, whatever its amount may be.

V. The Decisions Below Rest Upon Undisputed Facts and on Identical Grounds. There Has Been No Error in Findings or in the Failure to Make Them and the Court of Appeals Made No Findings.

The petitioners said in their brief in the trial court: "The essential facts are not only relatively few and simple, but they are wholly undisputed. Indeed, there appears to be no conflict whatever in the record, and in major part the facts appear from documentary evidence." (Corp. opening brief, p. 1. Interveners joined in this brief.)

Where the facts are undisputed, findings are unnecessary, Fontes v. Porter, 156 F.2d 956; Douds v. Local 1250, Retail etc. Union, 170 F.2d 695, 699.

The trial court reviewed the facts in its opinion and adopted its opinion as its findings (R. 319). This was proper, F.R.C.P. 52(a). The Court of Appeals made no findings.

The Corporation now argues that the trial court agreed with a proposed finding that there was domination (Corp. brief, pp. 29-31) but the record shows that (1) the proposed finding is not included in the record on appeal (R. 277-9), (2) the Corporation applied for such a finding (R. 465, 469-70), (3) respondents opposed it as contrary to the fact (R. 471-4, 485-6), and (4) the trial court refused it (R. 319).

The trial court held, properly, that "the so-called 'duality of control' " is immaterial (R. 274).[61] The Court of Appeals agreed (R. 2235). Both courts held that the Corporation could not have lawfully acquired the "tax saving" by agreement (R. 274, 2234).

In their specifications of error on appeal (R. 2168, 2173) the petitioners failed to assign any error respecting findings or the failure to make them. Again it was said (Corp. opening brief (on appeal), pp. 30-31) "while the facts are unusual, they are not in dispute."

The trial court found against the equitable validity of petitioners' claim. The Court of Appeals sustained, saying "we agree with the principal holding of the trial court" (footnote 12, R. 2227). The Court of Appeals disapproved only what it recognized as a "dictum" in the trial court's opinion, pointing out that the trial court had itself recognized that its criticisms of the returns and the settlement were nothing other than "dictum."[62]

The Corporation has no standing to exploit the domination theory in view of its express denials of all the interveners' allegations of domination and control (R. 156).

The trial court observed, and no one disagreed, that "everybody was * * * acting completely in the open in the [61] Petitioners by reiteration would create the impression that the trial court found domination, e.g., Corp. brief, pp. 48-9; Int. brief, pp. 38-40. It made no such finding. It said "there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control' " (R. 272) and that "The so-called 'duality of control,' much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue" (R. 274). As noted above, when a finding of domination was applied for it was refused.

---

[62] The Corporation now says, contrary to what it said in the trial court (R. 466-7), that the trial court denied recovery "because respondent defrauded the government." Corp. brief, p. 47. The trial court explicitly stated the contrary—"I am not passing on whether the Bureau * * * were deceived or misled or not." (R. 467.)

matter, nobody was concealing anything from anyone else, the element of fraud or deception, of the kind you refer to, is absent * * * Everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed * * * Everybody knew that these attorneys were being employed to file this consolidated return. It was done right out in the open * * * So that the defendant railroad company wouldn't have to pay any income tax * * *" (R. 970, 971).

The Court of Appeals approved (R. 2226):

Where two courts below have made concurrent findings, this Court will not again review the facts. Comstock v. Group of Institutional Investors, 335 U.S. 211, 213-4.

The Court of Appeals stated (R. 2235) that "the record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of duty owed to the Corporation."

The record, a record of undisputed facts, fully supports this statement (this brief, pp. 4-18, 21-3). But the Court of Appeals did not rest its decision on that state of facts. On the contrary, it held:

> "Assuming, as we have, that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through control of the dual officers, * * *" (R. 2232).

nevertheless the Corporation's claim was without merit.

Where the factual basis of the decision is clear, additional findings are unnecessary. Bowles v. Cudahy, 154 F.2d 891, 894; R. 2236-7.

Findings on rejected contentions are not required. Schilling v. Schwitzer-Cummins Co., 142 F.2d 82; Oedekerk v. Muncie Gear Works, Inc., 179 F.2d 821, 823.

A Court of Appeals may properly decide a case on grounds on which the trial court made no findings where the record is clear and no genuine issue of fact is presented. Muncie Gear Co. v. Outboard Co., 315 U.S. 759; Hazeltine Research, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 170 F.2d 6, cert. den. 336 U.S. 938; Burman v. Lenkin Construction Company, 149 F.2d 827.

VI. In Disposing of the Petitions for Rehearing the Court of Appeals Has Not Departed from the Accepted and Usual Course of Judicial Proceedings.

The appeal to the Court of Appeals was assigned to and heard by a panel of three judges consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges sitting by special assignment. Petitioners did not object to the composition of the panel and, when the appeal was heard, made no request or suggestion that it should be heard in banc. It is not contended nor could it be contended that there was any error here.

When petitioners' appeal failed they asked for a rehearing and that the rehearing be before the Court of Appeals in banc. In accordance with the established practice of that Court these petitions were referred to the panel that heard the appeal and the petitions for rehearing were denied and, insofar as they sought a rehearing in banc, they were ordered stricken as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the Court of Appeals (R. 2259, 2260), Judge Fee dissenting (R. 2261) as he had on the original appeal (R. 2239). Thereafter petitioners petitioned for leave to file "Motion to vacate order striking appellant's petition for rehearing en banc and reinstating such petition" (R. 2267), which petition was considered by the full court of seven circuit judges and was denied in an opinion by Judge Healy concurred in by five other circuit judges (R. 2288), Chief Judge Denman dissenting (R. 2296).

There is no contention that the panel that heard the appeal could not deny a petition for a rehearing insofar as it was an ordinary petition for rehearing. Petitioners contend, however, that they were entitled as of right to have their request for a rehearing in banc considered and acted upon by all seven of the active circuit judges. The question here is not whether a majority of the active circuit judges may order a rehearing in banc without the request of a majority of the judges who heard the appeal in division, but whether a losing party may compel all of the active judges to entertain and pass upon its petition for a rehearing in banc. Six of the seven active judges of the court below have held that they cannot be compelled to entertain such a petition, their ruling being that whether a rehearing in banc shall be granted is a matter of administrative and intramural concern and that the composition of the court that is to determine an appeal, either on original hearing or on rehearing, is outside the province of the parties. It is submitted that this position is entirely sound.

Petitioners read the opinion of Judge Healy (R. 2288) as holding that a majority of the active circuit judges have no power to order a rehearing in banc unless a majority of the three-judge division which originally heard the appeal approves (Corp. brief, pp. 148-52). This, we submit, is a misconception of what the majority decided.

Under Section 46(c) of Title 28 U.S.C. a majority of the active circuit judges may, in their discretion, order a rehearing in banc and this either with or without concurrence of the division that originally heard the appeal.[63] Inasmuch as no such rehearing had been ordered by a majority of the active circuit judges that question was not presented nor [63] This is clear in view of the history of Section 46. Before the Judicial Code was revised in 1948, Section 117 of that code (then 28 U.S.C. Sec. 212), the predecessor of Section 46, provided that in each circuit there should be a Circuit Court of Appeals consisting of three judges, two of whom would constitute a quorum. This presented a question whether, in a circuit having more than three circuit judges, all of the judges could sit in banc. In Textile Mills S. Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, this Court resolved the conflict on this point between the Third Circuit in the Textile Mills case itself, 117 F.2d 62, and the Ninth Circuit in Lang v. Commissioner, 97 F.2d 867, holding with the Third Circuit that a circuit court of more than three circuit judges could sit in banc. This was followed in U. S. ex rel. Robinson v. Johnson, 316 U.S. 649, where this Court, in remanding the case to the Ninth Circuit for further proceedings because of a conflict between two divisions of the Ninth Circuit and so that consideration could be given to the court's decision in Waley v. Johnson, 316 U.S. 101, suggested that leave be granted to petitioner to apply for a hearing in banc.

The Court's interpretation of the former statute was carried into the revision and 28 U.S.C. Sec. 46(c) now provides:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."

According to the reviser's note,—

> "This section preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case but provides in subsection (c) that cases shall be heard by a court of not more than three judges unless the court has provided for hearing in banc. This provision continues the tradition of a three-judge appellate court and makes the decision of a division the decision of the court, unless rehearing in banc is ordered."

The point of importance is that while Section 46(c) and the Textile Mills case make plain the power of a Court of Appeals to sit in banc, there is nothing in either of them that even suggests that a disappointed litigant has any right to a rehearing in banc or to demand as of right that his petition for a rehearing be passed upon by all of the active circuit judges of the circuit.

was the majority attempting to pass upon that question. The question before the Court of Appeals was, absent any order by a majority of the circuit judges that there be a rehearing in banc, what is the established practice of the court relating to petitions for rehearing in banc? Specifically, does a disappointed appellant, who has lost its appeal in division, have the right to compel all of the active circuit judges to entertain and pass upon its petition for rehearing in banc? That, and only that, was what the majority ruled upon, as clearly appears.

After first pointing out that by ordering the case to be heard in division the court has indicated that a hearing in banc on original hearing is not deemed requisite, the majority go on to state the question before them thus:

> "There remains to inquire whether the losing party in the cause is at this juncture entitled as of right to have the petition for rehearing considered and ruled upon by a court composed of all the circuit judges." (R. 2293) (Emphasis supplied.)

That is all that the court was deciding.

On that issue, what does the court say? It is simply this: "* * * the court has consistently retained to itself as a matter of administrative and intramural concern only the problem whether or not any given case should be heard or reheard in banc." (R. 2295) And further: "* * * the composition of the court to which a case may be assigned for determination is a matter wholly outside the province of the parties." (R. 2295)

Not only is this entirely sound, but the reason for it, stated by the court, is equally sound.

> "Adoption of the view currently being urged [by petitioners here] would render merely tentative or pro-

Material Relating to Allocation of Taxes by Corporations Filing Consolidated Returns

I. MATERIAL FROM THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

A. Report of the Federal Trade Commission on Public Utility Holding Companies.[1]

The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 resulted in part from an investigation of the practices of public utility holding companies by the Federal Trade Commission. The report of the Commission reads, in part, as follows:

Income of holding companies due to methods of handling Federal income-tax payments. — Some holding companies have collected from their respective subsidiary companies funds with which to pay Federal income tax for all the companies in a group. The total amount of funds collected by the holding companies from the subsidiaries usually exceeded the amounts actually paid by the holding companies. This practice has resulted in an unusual, if not unjustifiable, means of income to those holding companies engaging in this practice.

(1) Summary Report of the Federal Trade Commission to the Senate of the United States, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 83, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., on Economic, Financial and Corporate Phases of Holding and Operating Companies of Electric and Gas Utilities, Part 72-A, Sen. Doc. No. 92, 70th Cong., 1st Sess.

During 1923 to 1929, inclusive, The North American Co., from this practice, recorded 1.6 percent of its total income, and Associated Gas & Electric Co. recorded 3.3 percent of its total income. While New England Power Association, in effect, followed this practice, it added the excess amounts so collected to a suspense account and not to income. Cities Service Co. added the amounts collected in following this practice to surplus and related accounts.

Some State commissions engaged in the regulation of gas and electric public-utility companies have permitted operating companies to add the estimated amounts of Federal income tax to operating expenses. These estimated amounts are then, in many cases, paid to a holding company, which, in turn, files a consolidated Federal income-tax return. Any saving in tax accomplished through the consolidated return accrues to the gain of the holding company and is retained.

The fact that holding companies retain the difference between the amounts collected from subsidiaries and the amounts paid as income tax indicates that holding companies have not tried to pass on to their subsidiaries the savings which evolve from the corporate structure of holding-company groups. Instead of subsidiary operating companies having this saving, the operating expenses of those companies are inflated by such amounts. The original amounts charged to subsidiary companies were estimated on a basis of what those companies would have had to pay if individual income-tax returns had been made. Inasmuch as the amounts for Federal income tax should never have were added to operating expenses in the first place and were only estimated amounts, anyway, and also, since the amounts were in excess of the Federal income-tax requirements of the group, it would seem that due to this practice there is an inaccurate recording of the true cost of operations of the electric and gas operating companies following this procedure.

In order to emphasize the extent of collections of estimated amounts for Federal income-tax payments from subsidiary companies, by certain holding companies, over the amounts of Federal income tax paid by those holding companies, some illustrations are given.

One illustration of this procedure appears in the report on New England Power Association. During 1928 and 1929 the subsidiary companies paid to New England Power Association, on the basis of individual Federal income-tax returns, $376,971.36 in excess of the amount of Federal income tax paid by the holding company on the basis of consolidated income-tax returns.

During the years from 1926 to 1929, inclusive, Associated Gas & Electric Co. recorded a gain, due to this procedure of handling Federal income tax, of $2,938,513.12. It is significant to note that Associated Gas & Electric Co. paid no Federal income tax whatever during the years from 1926 to 1929, inclusive, although, of course, Associated Gas & Electric Co. may be subject to assessments in subsequent years for the said period. Also, New England Gas & Electric Association, affiliated with Associated Gas & Electric Co., recorded during 1927 to 1929, inclusive, as income $514,662.99 on the basis of the plan explained above, but no Federal income tax was paid by New England Gas & Electric Association to the United States Government.

An outstanding illustration of this procedure is shown in the report on Cities Service Co. During the years from 1922 to 1930, inclusive, Cities Service Co. collected from its subsidiaries $11,611,601.35 for Federal income taxes. During this period, Cities Service Co. paid Federal income taxes on the basis of a consolidated income-tax return in the sum of $1,745,220.98. The excess amount collected over the amount paid by Cities Service Co. was $9,866,380.37.

As a further illustration, The North American Co. recorded as income $324,915.17 in 1927, $675,000 in 1928, and $275,000 in 1929, or a total of $1,274,915.17 in the 3 years, from handling Federal income-tax payments in the manner previously described.

This Commission considers that there should not be added to operating expenses of electric and gas utility companies any amounts paid as Federal income tax. The amounts paid as Federal income tax should be deducted from the net income on which the tax was calculated.

Holding companies are not justified in recording as income the savings from this procedure of handling Federal income-tax payments. The subsidiary companies in a holding-company group are entitled to the benefit of any savings to the group due to filing a consolidated income-tax return. Only the amount of Federal income tax paid by a holding company on the basis of a consolidated return should be borne, in proportion to the taxable income, by those companies having taxable income, for which companies a consolidated return was filed. Stated differently, each company in a holding-company group should pay only its pro-rata share of the tax paid for the group. There no gain from this source would be derived by holding companies.

The pro-rata amount of the total Federal income tax, paid by an operating subsidiary company, should be properly treated on the books of the operating companies. These amounts are not a part of the costs of producing and distributing electric energy or gas (pp. 477-479).

The Commission further stated:[2]

(2). Direct Statutory Inhibitions

The more usual and long-established method of legislation which directly and specifically prohibits certain practices, with proper penalties, cannot be overlooked in discussing remedies for the present utility holding company situation. This means that a separate statute should be drawn which makes felonies or misdemeanors of the disclosed abuses so far as they may be reached under Federal jurisdiction. That is to say, it would apply to all utility corporations or their holding companies and affiliates or subsidiaries which are engaged in interstate commerce or which directly affect such commerce. It is believed such legislation can be made to cover situations where a holding company controls in any degree the acts and policies of corporations in different States although no one of them operates in more than one State. The privilege of the mails may also be denied as to all matter and transactions intended to promote or carry on the enumerated abuses.

The recommendations immediately following relate primarily to protection of the rate-paying public.

* * * 5. A proper amendment to the Federal income-tax law to prevent collection of anticipated income taxes from operating subsidiaries by holding companies and nonpayment to the Government; also to prevent evasion of such taxes through various forms of so-called "reorganizations", carried on largely within the holding company groups and often primarily for the purpose of such avoidance. In a single instance such avoidance involved a cash profit of over $9,000,000 (pp. 69-70).

THE TREATMENT OF "TAX SAVINGS" IN FINANCIAL STATEMENTS FILED WITH THIS COMMISSION

Cases involving the treatment of so-called "tax savings"[23]

(23) We think it undesirable in principle and possibly misleading to refer to this problem as involving "tax savings" although due to the general use of the term in this sense we have adopted that nomenclature here. It seems to us that the term "tax saving" is apt to connote some sort of standard or normal tax law and a standard or normal earnings year to which that law applies. The facts are, of course, that there has not been a static or standard or "normal" tax law or tax status; nor has it been possible except in most unusual cases to characterize any particular fiscal year of a company as a "normal earnings" year, from which all others are to be regarded as departures. Under such conditions, each year's tax is whatever happens to result from the application of the computation formula, provided by the tax law of that year, to the sum total of taxable transactions and tax deductions resulting from whatever business may have been done in that particular year. Moreover, the past few years during which the term and the problem of "tax savings" appeared have clearly been unusual in nearly every respect. Finally, if the phenomenon in question is to be described as a "tax saving" it would seem necessary to describe as a "tax loss" the failure to carry through a transaction which it can be said would have resulted in a "tax saving." And if taxes in one year are higher should not that increase itself be considered to be a "tax loss." Our strong preference is to describe the problem as involving "tax reductions."

in financial statements have arisen with increasing frequency in recent months. For that reason, as stated earlier, we feel it desirable to state our views as to the treatment to be accorded such items in statements filed with us and to point out the reasons which have led us to those conclusions.

* * * * * * *

We now examine the contention that income taxes should be allocated "as other expenses are allocated." The accountants who appeared before us cited to us no other expense which, for general accounting purposes, is allocated in the manner proposed for income taxes, nor have any such instances otherwise come to our attention. We note, moreover, that in a dissent to the bulletin mentioned earlier it was stated:

> "No expense other than federal income and profits taxes is allocated on the basis of applying to a given transaction so much of the expense as would not have occurred if the transaction to which the expense is attributed had not taken place. The usual method is to allocate a total expense ratably to given accounts or transactions on a consistent basis."

The illustrations of expense allocation cited to us by the certifying accountants in this case appear to us to support the above statement. In each case cited there was an expense actually incurred that was first allocated to the period under the usual accrual principles and then distributed over a number of accounts. In no case was there an estimate made of what the expense would have been under other conditions. In no case cited, was there a distribution of an expense to several accounts by means of what can be termed an algebraic formula in which a negative sum is credited against one item to offset the positive charge to another item of an amount in excess of the actual expense. We do not regard such a treatment as an appropriate means of allocating income taxes in financial statements which purport to reflect the actual results of operations. We have doubt indeed that such a method can properly be termed an allocation at all, as that term is customarily used.

We note, in passing, moreover, that in the examples of expense allocation cited to us there existed a direct, almost physical association between the item being allocated and the item to which it was charged. For example, in the case of real estate taxes allocated to construction the tax item is directly and closely related to the construction. Likewise, in the case of brokerage fees, and stamp or transfer taxes, the tax item is closely and directly related to the specific transaction. In both cases, moreover, the tax is independent of any other transactions of the company. Nor is there any attempt made to increase in the course of the allocation the amount of such taxes to an estimated sum. We feel therefore that such illustrations can not properly be cited in support of the proposed treatment for income taxes.

It is also sometimes pointed out that "cost" in the case of securities or property acquired is generally considered to be the sum of the purchase price plus incidental costs such as brokerage and any specific taxes paid by the buyer and that on sale the proceeds are computed as the selling price less incidental deductions such as commissions or any specific taxes paid by the seller. By analogy and in justification of the proposed treatment of income taxes it is frequently urged that a so-called "tax saving" must be allocated or attributed to or ultimately associated with particular losses or expenses because the tax consequences of the transaction involving the loss or expense were a motivating factor in arriving at the decision to consummate it. Thus, it is claimed that a property would not have been sold but for the "tax saving" thereby effected and that for this reason it is proper to consider that the true "loss" on the sale is not the excess of cost over selling price but is equal instead to the difference between cost on the one hand and selling price plus "tax saving" on the other. We do not believe such an analogy is sound and we cannot accept that analysis as a basis for reporting the results of actual operations. It is undoubtedly true that the tax consequences of selling a property often are an important consideration in arriving at the decision to sell, and may in some cases have been a deciding factor. However, tax consequences undoubtedly play an important role in the making of a great variety of decisions involving the incurrence and amounts of purely operating expenses such as advertising, wage rates and bonus plans. Yet it can hardly be argued that wages or bonuses or advertising are to be reported as less in amount because income taxes would have been higher if the amounts spent on such items were less. We see no basis for adopting a different approach in figuring the "loss" involved in a sale of property. We feel instead that there has been a loss of the full difference between cost and selling price coupled with a tax benefit which is properly reflected in the lower taxes actually paid. We feel that the proposed treatment of income taxes tends to obscure these facts and that the treatment of income taxes required by our rules and heretofore almost universally followed clearly discloses what has taken place. Where the tax paid for the year is unusual in amount because of unusual conditions, an appropriate explanation would be called for as is now required in the case of other unusual events.

As to this last principal contention urged by the certifying accountants (that income taxes are an expense that should be allocated as other expenses are allocated) we feel, first, that there is grave doubt whether income taxes can properly be considered as an expense in the same category as the cost of materials or wages, and, second, that the treatment proposed does not result in the allocation of income taxes "as other expenses are allocated." We feel instead that the proposed treatment is purely an effort to have items shown in the income statement at what is considered to be a "normal" amount. We note that this objective is clearly expressed as a prime purpose of the method in the bulletin referred to earlier which states at p. 185:

> "As a result of such [unusual] transactions the income tax legally payable may not bear a normal relationship to the income shown in the income statement and the accounts therefore may not meet a normal standard of significance." (Emphasis supplied)

There are, finally, a number of difficulties involved in the proposed treatment of income taxes that deserve mention even though they are not directly related to the specific contentions put forward by the certifying accountants in the case.

The first involves the preparation of general statistical data from financial reports. Under the method proposed, it is permissible to show, as taxes, an amount in excess of the taxes payable. If such items are totalled for a period of years or for groups of companies, they may well be used as evidence of the aggregate amount of taxes paid by the company or by the industry. Obviously any such representation is erroneous and will misstate, often very materially, the underlying facts. We feel that we should not permit the filing with us of income statements which readily permit, if they do not actually invite, such misuse. Even a "charge in lieu of taxes" may result in distorted overall statistics since it operates to reduce net income after taxes and so affects the ratio of actual taxes to net income. If the offsetting credit is netted against a surplus charge the distortion may be permanent.[35]

(35) Under one variant of the practice no change is made in final net income. In the statements originally filed in the instant case, for example, part of the amount included as a charge among the operating expenses represented a $609,949 reduction in income taxes due to the taking for tax purposes of accelerated amortization of emergency facilities at the rate of 20% a year while in the finan-

The second and somewhat technical problem is the difficulty of the computation. It is usual in contemplating the tax consequences of a proposed transaction to treat it as an incremental or marginal item. Where tax rates are graduated, this results in associating the marginal income or expense with the highest tax bracket. It is questionable, whether such a principle is realistic when applied to the results of operations for a completed year. Net taxable income is a composite of all taxable income and all deductible items applicable to the period. The propriety of singling out any specific item as the item which is taxed in the highest tax bracket, is doubtful. Moreover, in applying the theory to losses and expenses it would appear that the existence of a reduction in taxes is due not only to the expense but is equally dependent on the existence of taxable income to offset the expense. It would appear possible that some part of the benefit from the "reduction" ought to be attributed to the existence of income.[36] Even if this cial statements only normal depreciation was being accrued. See p. 11 supra and Exhibit A. In the original statements this $609,949 was added back as the last item in the account. This internal in-and-out treatment appears to us to suffer from all of the difficulties we have discussed even though no change results in the amount of "net income." In our opinion, an overstatement of operating expenses is not corrected by "adding back" the amount of the overstatement at a later point in the income statement. Such treatment is in our view artificial and deceptive to all but the most experienced reader. While there may be some grounds for crediting such reductions in taxes to a special amortization reserve there is none for the equivocal practice here followed.

(36) We note the customary solution of a somewhat similar problem that arises when a group of companies files a consolidated tax return. In assigning to each constituent its fair share of the consolidated tax paid by the group it is usual to divide the actual tax among the companies who would have had to pay a tax on an individual basis. If one of the included companies operated at a loss, the consolidated tax is of course reduced, but no part of the "saving" is ordinarily paid over to the loss company by the other members of the group. Instead, only those contributing income to the consolidated return share directly in the benefit of the current reduction. This principle is incorporated in our Rule U-45 under the Public Utility Holding Company Act.

point be waived, however, there has been no satisfactory analysis presented of the effect to be given to the carry-back, carry-forward provisions of the present income tax law. Without exploring all of the possible difficulties, one case may be cited. Suppose that a loss has been charged to surplus but is deductible for taxes. Suppose further that in accordance with the present proposal there is charged to income, as provision for taxes, the amount of $200,000 although the actual tax amounts to only $50,000. If in the next year the company suffers an operating loss of $500,000, then in view of the carry-back provisions the reader of the two income statements would reasonably expect to find a carry-back refund of $200,000—the amount shown as taxes in the first year. However, obviously no more than $50,000 would actuallly be refundable. The question arises whether having overstated taxes in the first year it is not necessary, to be consistent, to overstate the refund in the second year. Finally, there are the permutations in the computation where a company pays taxes as a member of a consolidated group. In addition to the allocation of the actual tax paid among the several companies in the group, the proposed treatment raises the difficult question of whether the amount of the so-called "saving" is to be computed on the basis of a company's individual status or on that of the consolidated group and, once this is decided, of whether to allocate this "saving" as between the several companies or attribute it solely to the company having the deduction—even though perhaps it itself contributed no taxable income!

The third difficulty is the propriety of singling out the income tax item for adjustment on the ground that it does not bear a "normal" relationship to the income reported. Particularly, under conditions like the present, many if not most of the income and expense items bear unusual relationships to each other. Under the influence of the war sales volumes are often very high. Maintenance may be very high due to continuous operation of the plant, or very low because of the inability to obtain materials and labor, or very high because of the use of inexperienced labor and the inability to get new machinery, or very low because operations cannot be stopped long enough to make thorough-going maintenance possible. Selling costs may be very low because of the volume of war business or very high because of the use of advertising to keep restricted products in the public's mind. With many items of income and expense apt to be out of line, there appears to be little justification and a good deal of danger in singling out one item for adjustment.

III. MATERIAL FROM THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILROAD AND UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS

A. Excerpts from the 1943 Report of the Committee on Accounts and Statistics of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners.

The subject of federal income and excess profits taxes has reached an importance in utility regulation requiring our constant consideration.

It has come to our attention that some utilities are including in the expense accounts for taxes, as a part of the accrual for federal income and excess profits taxes, amounts which they do not pay because of advantage gained by them from certain statutory deductions. We wish to call to your attention the fact that only the amount which it is anticipated will actually be payable for federal income and excess profits taxes can be included in the expenses of a public utility under the systems of accounts now in effect. The so-called "provision in lieu of taxes" may not be entered as an expense of the utility, nor may the amount of taxes which would have been payable, had certain statutory deductions not been available, be recorded as the tax expense.

In view of the importance of such taxes, the Committee has endeavored to prepare a report form that will present to the regulatory commissions such information as it must have for an adequate understanding of the impact of federal income taxes. Our endeavor is to prepare a form that will not involve substantial additional work and still will provide the necessary information. A draft of such form was prepared by the conferee representing the Michigan Commission (Mr. C. R. Angell) and the said draft has been discussed at our meetings. Such discussion has brought out certain difficulties which it is hoped will soon be overcome. After the said report has been prepared to the satisfaction of the Committee, it will be circulated among all of the member commissions for their attention (pp. 255-56).

B. Excerpts from the 1945 Report of the Committee on Accounts and Statistics of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners.

FEDERAL INCOME AND EXCESS PROFITS TAXES

In the 1943 and 1944 reports of the Committee, attention was directed to the problem of accounting for federal income and excess profits taxes by utility companies. Since the beginning of the period of high wartime taxes it has been the practice of many utilities to include in their tax accounts or in unprescribed accounts, such as "charges in lieu of taxes," amounts which do not represent taxes actually payable. Specifically, these amounts represent reductions in taxes otherwise payable except for extraordinary transactions such as a refunding of bonds, losses on sales of non-operating property, and of statutory provisions permitting amortization for tax purposes over a five-year period of certain facilities which qualify under the tax law as emergency facilities. The whole question, however, is complicated by a multiplicity of circumstances whereby there is non-conformity of taxable net income and financial net income reflected by a utility's books of account.

Extensive study also has been given to this question by the staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who furnished considerable material to aid the Committee in its consideration of the question. At the May, 1945 meeting, the Committee culminated its study of the problem by concurrence in the following points:

(1) Income tax expense accounts should be charged with no more than the actual tax liability or a reasonable estimate thereof.

(2) A caption, "charges in lieu of taxes" or similar title should not be used.

(3) When charges to income measured by tax savings are made, they must be made to the proper account for the item to be charged off and must be adequately described.

(4) In assigning income taxes to departments and non-utility operations and transactions, the distribution should be to those departments, etc., which show net profits or income; it is not permissible to assign negative amounts to departments, etc., which show net losses.

An interpretation in accord with the foregoing is included with this report.

* * * * * * *

The Chairman of your Committee canvassed the views of the members and conferees and submitted the question for further discussion at the meeting in May, 1945. On the basis of this interchange of views, the Chairman was authorized to issue the following statement:

* * * For accounting purposes no charge can be permitted in operating expenses except for expenses actually incurred during the period for which the income statement is prepared. Provisions for future expenditures made during a current period must be made by means of an appropriation of net income.

With respect to the rate-making treatment, the following should be observed:

(a) The inclusion as an operating expense of any portion of tax savings, regardless of how they are described or of what they are to cover, is entirely unwarranted. (pp. 458-460)

IV. MATERIAL FROM THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

A. I.T. 3637 [1944 Cumulative Bulletin 258]:

Section 29.115-3: Earnings or profits.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.

For the purpose of determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations for the taxable year 1942 in order to ascertain the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends, the consolidated income tax for that year should be apportioned between the members of the group in consonance with the ratio of each corporation's normal-tax net income to the consolidated normal-tax net income, and the consolidated excess profits tax should be apportioned between the members of the group on the basis of the adjusted excess profits net income.

Advice is requested as to the proper method of allocating consolidated income and excess profits taxes for 1942 in the case of an affiliated group of corporations for the purpose of determining the amount of the earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends.

Authority for the filing of consolidated income and excess profits tax returns for the year 1942 is found in section 141(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 159(a) of the Revenue Act of 1942. Section 141(b) of the Code, as amended, delegates to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the right to prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary "in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations * * * and of each corporation in the group * * * may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the income- and excess-profits-tax liability * * * and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability." In so far as they are pertinent to the present inquiry, Regulations 104, the consolidated income tax regulations, and Regulations 110, the consolidated excess profits tax regulations, are substantially identical.

Section 33.12(a) of Regulations 110 provides that the consolidated return shall be filed by the common parent corporation for the affiliated group. Section 33.12(b) prescribes that each subsidiary must prepare a certain statement consenting to Regulations 110 and authorizing the common parent corporation to make the consolidated return. Section 33.15(a) of Regulations 110 prescribes that "Except as provided in paragraphs (b) [liability of a corporation in bankruptcy or receivership] and (c) [liability of a subsidiary after withdrawal from the group], the common parent corporation and each subsidiary * * * shall be severally liable for the tax * * *." Section 33.16(a) of Regulations 110 reads in part as follows:

> The common parent corporation shall be for all purposes [except where a subsidiary has withdrawn from the group and except where the common parent corporation is dissolved] * * * the sole agent, duly authorized to act in its own name in all matters relating to such tax, for each corporation * * * of the affiliated group. The corporations, other than the common parent, shall not have authority to act for or to represent themselves in any such matter. For example, all correspondence will be carried on directly with the common parent; notices of deficiencies will be mailed only to the common parent * * *; the common parent will file petitions and conduct proceedings before the Board of Tax Appeals [now The Tax Court of the United States] * * *; the common parent will file claims for refund or credit; refunds will be made directly to and in the name of the common parent * * *; and the common parent in its name will give waivers, give bonds, and execute closing agreements * * * and all other documents, and any waiver or bond so given * * * or any other document so executed, shall be considered as having also been given or executed by each such corporation.

For the year 1941, except in the cases of affiliated railroad corporations and Pan-American trade corporations, consolidated returns were not permitted for Federal income tax purposes, such returns being allowed only in connection with the excess profits tax. With respect to the year 1941, section 23(c)(1)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code, prior to its amendment by section 105(c)(1) of the Revenue Act of 1942, permitted the excess profits tax as a deduction in determining normal-tax net income. In this connection, Treasury Decision 5086 (C.B. 1941-2, 38, at page 46), amending Regulations 103 to conform to the Revenue Act of 1941, added section 19.23(c)-4, relating to deductibility of the excess profits tax imposed by Sub-chapter E of Chapter 2 of the Code. Paragraph (d) of section 19.23(c)-4 of Regulations 103, as so added, provides as follows:

> The deduction allowable to a taxpayer which is a member of an affiliated group filing a consolidated excess-profits tax return is an amount which bears the same ratio to the excess-profits tax of the group as the normal-tax net income of the taxpayer, computed without a deduction for excess-profits tax, bears to the sum of the normal-tax net incomes of the several members of the group, computed without a deduction for excess-profits tax.

As shown above, in the case of a consolidated return, each member of the affiliated group is severally liable for both the income tax and the excess profits tax. It has also been shown that all tax matters are handled solely by the common parent corporation. That is for administrative reasons; each legal entity is still preserved. It was stated in Senate Report No. 960, Seventieth Congress, first session (C.B. 1939-1 (Part 2), 409, at pages 418, 419), in connection with the revenue bill of 1928:

> The advisory committee of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, the members of which worked most of the summer in preparing suggestions for the simplification of the revenue laws and their administration, reached the conclusion that, because of the difficulties encountered in administration, there should be a substitute for the consolidated returns provision. It should be emphasized that this conclusion was reached, not upon the ground that consolidated returns were unsound, that additional revenues would be received by the elimination of the consolidated returns provision, but solely upon the ground that the administration of the law would be simplified.
> * * * * * * *
>
> The permission to file consolidated returns by affiliated corporations merely recognizes the business entity as distinguished from the legal corporate entity of the business enterprise.
>
> * * * The committee believes it to be impracticable to attempt by legislation to prescribe the various detailed and complicated rules necessary to meet the many differing and complicated situations. Accordingly, it has found it necessary to delegate power to the Commissioner to prescribe regulations legislative in character covering them.

The Bureau is not concerned with arrangements made between affiliated companies as to the payment of the tax. The regulations look to payment being made by the parent corporation only, as such corporation is the only member of the group which can transact negotiations with respect to the tax. As a matter of fact, one of the affiliates may make all of the tax payment via the parent corporation, but if there is an overpayment, the refund is made to the parent corporation. (See section 33.16(a), Regulations 110, supra.)

In determining the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the affiliated group which is available for dividend purposes, it is necessary that each company's earnings be separately ascertained. One of the factors in determining earnings and profits for any taxable year is the amount of income and excess profits taxes due for such year. In a consolidated return case, the consolidated taxes should be allocated, as set forth below, to each member of the affiliated group. The fact that the parent corporation pays all of the tax should not militate against such an allocation. As heretofore indicated, such tax is paid by the parent as agent for the subsidiaries.

Accordingly, it is held that for the purpose of determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations for the taxable year 1942 in order to ascertain the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends, the consolidated income tax for that year should be apportioned between the members of the group in consonance with the ratio of each corporation's normal-tax net income to the consolidated normal-tax net income. The consolidated excess profits tax should be apportioned between the members of the group on the basis of the adjusted excess profits net income.

Section 29.115-3; Earnings or profits.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.

Method of determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations filing consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns for 1942 and subsequent taxable years, in order to ascertain the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends.

I.T. 3637 (page 258, this Bulletin) amplified.

Request is made for an amplification of I.T. 3637 (page 258, this Bulletin), relating to the method of determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations filing consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns for the taxable year 1942 in order to ascertain the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends.

For the purpose of determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations for the taxable year 1942 and subsequent years in order to ascertain the amount of earnings and profits of each member of the group which is available for dividends, the consolidated income tax (line 41, page 1, Form 1120) should be apportioned between the members of the group in accordance with the ratio of that portion of the consolidated normal-tax net income attributable to each member of the affiliated group to the consolidated normal-tax net income (line 40, page 1, Form 1120), leaving out of consideration any member of the group having no net income. The consolidated excess profits tax (line 18(c), page 1, Form 1121) should be apportioned between the members of the group in accordance with the ratio of that portion of the consolidated adjusted excess profits net income attributable to each member f the affiliated group to the consolidated adjusted excess profits net income (line 8, page 1, Form 1121), leaving out of consideration any member of the group having no net income. The taxes thus determined should be (a) decreased by the amount of the consolidated credit for debt retirement (line 21, page 1, Form 1121) attributable to each company; (b) increased or decreased, as the case may be, by the amount of any section 734 adjustment (line 23, page 1, Form 1121) attributable to each company; and (c) decreased by the amount of the consolidated credit for foreign taxes attributable to each company (line 19, page 1, Form 1121). In the event that the income taxes paid to a foreign country or United States possession are in excess of the amounts allowed as credits, the excess should be taken into consideration in arriving at the earnings available for dividends.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Method of apportioning the income and excess profits tax of an affiliated group of corporations filing consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns for taxable years ending after June 30, 1950, in determining the earnings and profits of each member of such group.

Advice is requested as to the method of apportioning the income and excess profits tax of an affiliated group of corporations filing consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns for taxable years ending after June 30, 1950, in determining the earnings and profits of each member of such group.

The excess profits tax for taxable years ending after June 30, 1950, as in the case of normal tax and surtax, is imposed as a part of the income tax on corporations under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, whereas for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1939, and before January 1, 1946, the excess profits tax was imposed as a separate tax under subchapter E of chapter 2 of the Code. In this regard, section 40.0(b) of Regulations 130 states that the normal tax, surtax, and excess profits tax on corporations are reported on the corporation income tax return, and are treated as one tax for all purposes, including assessment, collection, payment, period of limitations, and the consolidated return privilege.

Notwithstanding the fact that the excess profits tax for taxable years ending after June 30, 1950, is imposed as a part of the income tax under chapter 1 (subchapter D) of the Internal Revenue Code, separate calculations apportioning the income tax and the excess profits tax of an affiliated group of corporations are deemed necessary in computing the earnings and profits of each member of the affiliated group because of (1) adjustments to the consolidated normal-tax net income required in determining the consolidated excess profits net income and (2) allowance of a consolidated excess profits credit in computing the consolidated adjusted excess profits net income.

Accordingly, it is held that in determining the earnings and profits of each member of an affiliated group of corporations filing consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns for taxable years ending after June 30, 1950, the consolidated normal tax and surtax imposed under subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code should be apportioned among the members of the group in accordance with the ratio of that portion of the consolidated normal-tax net income attributable to each member of the affiliated group to the consolidated normal-tax net income, leaving out of consideration any member of the group having no net income. The consolidated excess profits tax imposed under subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Code should be apportioned among the members of the group in accordance with the ratio of that portion of the consolidated adjusted excess profits net income attributable to each member of the affiliated group to the consolidated adjusted excess profits net income, leaving out of consideration any member of the group having no net income. The taxes thus determined should be (a) increased or decreased, as the case may be, by the amount of any section 452 adjustment attributable to each company, and (b) decreased by the amount of the consolidated credit for foreign taxes attributable to each company. In the event that the income taxes paid to a foreign country or United States possession are in excess of the amounts allowed as credits, the excess should be taken into consideration in arriving at the earnings and profits. (For similar method under prior law, see I. T. 3637, C. B. 1944, 258, and I. T. 3692, C. B. 1944, 261.)

SEC. 19.23(c)-4. Excess-profits tax under Subchapter E of Chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code.—The deductibility of the excess-profits tax imposed by Subchapter E of Chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code is subject to the following special rules:

* * * * * * *

(d) The deduction allowable to a taxpayer which is a member of an affiliated group filing a consolidated excess-profits tax return is an amount which bears the same ratio to the excess-profits tax of the group as the normal-tax net income of the taxpayer, computed without a deduction for excess-profits tax, bears to the sum of the normal-tax net incomes of the several members of the group, computed without a deduction for excess-profits tax.

Of Trustee Re: 1946 Income Tax Returns for Gulf Coast Lines and International-Great Northern Railroad Company.

Comes now GUY A. THOMPSON, Trustee New Orleans, Texas and Mexico Railway Company, The St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company, The Beaumont, Sour Lake & Western Railway Company, The Orange & Northwestern Railroad Company, New Iberia & Northern Railroad Company, Iberia, St. Mary and Eastern Railroad Company, Houston and Brazos Valley Railway Company, San Antonio, Uvalde & Gulf Railroad Company, Sugar Land Railway Company, Rio Grande City Railway Company, Asherton and Gulf Railway Company, Asphalt Belt Railway Company, San Antonio Southern Railway Company,

Houston North Shore Railway Company, and San Benito and Rio Grande Valley Railway Company, Debtors; hereinafter referred to as the "Gulf Coast Lines," and the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, and respectfully states to the Court:

1. That the New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway Company, Debtor, is the parent Company of what is known as the "Gulf Coast Lines" and owns all of the stock, except qualifying shares held by Directors, and all of the bonds of each of the Debtor Companies making up the Gulf Coast Lines; that said New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway Company also owns all of the stock, except qualifying shares held by Directors and two shares held by other individuals of the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor.

2. That during the years of these reorganization proceedings, all of the Debtor Companies included in the Gulf Coast Lines and the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, have filed their Federal Income Tax Returns on a consolidated returns basis, as it was considered advantageous for them to do so.

3. Trustee further states that a preliminary return on a consolidated basis for the Gulf Coast Lines and International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, for the taxable year 1946 was filed in March, 1947, said tentative return showing the Income Tax liability of the group for the taxable year 1946 to be $500,720.00; that a detailed and final Return for 1946 must be filed on or before September 15, 1947; that if separate returns are filed, one for the Gulf Coast Lines and one for the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, the tax liability of the Gulf Coast Lines will be approximately $2,572,000.00 and there will be no liability for the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor. On the basis of these estimates, it appears that the filing of a consolidated return, including all of the Debtor Companies named above, will result in a saving to the following named Gulf Coast Lines Companies of approximately $2,072,000.00, to-wit:

New Orleans, Texas & Mexico Railway Company;
The St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company;
The Beaumont, Sour Lake & Western Railway Company;
Houston and Brazos Valley Railway Company;
Asphalt Belt Railway Company;
Houston North Shore Railway Company.

4. Trustee further states that since in the event separate returns are filed the International-Great Northern Railroad Company would have no tax liability, it is clear that if a final return for the taxable year 1946 is filed on a consolidated basis that the entire tax liability for that year should be allocated to the Gulf Coast Lines Group hereinabove named; that it also appears that International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, in consideration of its willingness to join the Gulf Coast Lines Companies in making a consolidated return for the taxable year 1946 is entitled to receive from the Gulf Coast Lines Group certain credits or payments; that International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, sustained a net loss for the year 1946 of approximately $2,690,000.00; that in view of this fact, if a separate return is filed in behalf of the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, for the year 1946, it would be entitled to a refund of 1944 taxes resulting from the carry-back of its net loss from 1946 to 1944 amounting to approximately $1,867,000.00.

5. It thus appears that considering the years 1944 and 1946 together, as they must be considered in view of the carryback provisions of the Income and Excess Profits Tax Laws, it is advantageous to the Debtor Companies, as a Group, to file a consolidated return for the year 1946, since the saving of approximately $2,072,000.00 to the above mentioned Gulf Coast Lines Companies from such action is in excess of the detriment of $1,867,000 resulting to International-Great Northern Railroad Company from such action. The net saving to the consolidated Group from the filing of a consolidated return for the year 1946 is estimated to be $205,000.00.

WHEREFORE, Trustee Prays:

(a) That his action in filing a preliminary Income Tax Return on a consolidated basis for the Gulf Coast Lines Companies and the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, for the taxable year 1946 be approved, and that he be further authorized and directed to file the detailed and final return for 1946 for said Debtor Companies on a consolidated basis.

(b) That immediately upon the filing of said detailed and final return for 1946, the Gulf Coast Lines Debtor Companies that receive a saving in their 1946 income tax return due to the fact that the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, has joined with them in said return, shall pay to the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, in proportion to their said saving, the amount which the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, would have been entitled to receive as a refund to it on 1944 taxes resulting from the carryback of its net loss from 1946 to 1944.

(c) That when the returns of said Gulf Coast Lines Companies and the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, have been finally audited by the Internal Revenue Department, that any adjustments which may be appropriate in the light of the figures contained in the returns so finally audited shall be made by the said Debtor Companies.

2. That said Trustee be and he hereby is further authorized and directed to file the detailed and final return for 1946 for said Debtor Companies on a consolidated basis.

3. That, forthwith, upon the filing of said detailed and final return for the taxable year 1946, such of the Gulf Coast Lines Companies as receive a saving in their 1946 Income Tax by reason of the fact that the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, has joined with them in a consolidated return, shall pay to the estate of the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, in proportion to their said saving the amount which the estate of said International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, would have been entitled to receive as a refund to it on 1944 Income Taxes resulting from the carryback of its net loss from the year 1946 to the year 1944.

4. That when the returns of said Gulf Coast Lines Companies and the International-Great Northern Railroad Company, Debtor, have been finally audited by the Internal Revenue Department, that any adjustments which may be appropriate in the light of the figures contained in the returns so finally audited shall be made by the said Debtor Companies.

[Title of District Court and Cause.]

OPINION

Goodman, District Judge.

Plaintiff, a former holding company, whose interest in its subsidiary had been finally declared valueless in the subsidiary's reorganization proceeding under § 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, has tendered the novel claim that it should be awarded, in equity, a part, if not all, of the subsidiary's income tax saving while in reorganization, resulting from the filing of consolidated corporate income tax returns.

A somewhat detailed history must be set down [259] in order to properly appraise the unique demand of plaintiff.

Plaintiff is The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation; its subsidiary was Western Pacific Railroad Company, an operating railroad company, herein referred to as the "debtor"; defendant, the reorganized subsidiary, is The Western Pacific Railroad Company.

Statement of Facts

Plaintiff corporation, a so-called holding company, from 1916 to April 30, 1944, owned all the outstanding capital stock of the debtor. For some years prior to 1935, the financial condition of the debtor had been steadily worsening. In 1935 it filed a petition under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 USC 205) and this Court in that year placed its affairs in the hands of trustees. Thereafter a plan of reorganization was proposed and in 1939 it was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. 233 ICC 409. Inter alia, it was determined in the plan that the capital stock of the debtor owned by the plaintiff was without equity or value and that plaintiff and its stockholders therefore were not entitled to participate in the plan. In 1940 this Court approved the plan of reorganization, including approval of the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the worthlessness of the plaintiff's equity. The Circuit Court of Appeals (now Court of Appeals) of the Ninth Circuit reversed in 1941 (124 F. 2d 136). In 1943 the Supreme [260] Court reversed the Circuit Court and affirmed the order of the District Court. (318 U.S. 448). It there considered and rejected the contention of the plaintiff that it should have the right to participate in the plan because of recent increased earnings of the debtor. (318 U.S. 508, 509.) [1]Thereafter, the plan of reorganization was, in accordance with the statutory provisions (11 USC 205e), submitted to the creditors, and, after their approval, the plan was confirmed on October 11, 1943, by this Court. The reorganization committee designated in the plan of reorganization, instead of forming a new corporation, determined to use the corporate structure or shell of the old company (debtor) and to execute the plan of reorganization by revesting its former properties in the reorganized company, i.e., the defendant. On November 22, 1943, an agreement was made between the plaintiff, its secured creditors and the reorganization committee wherein a modus of revesting was set up. Among other things, the plaintiff agreed therein to transfer all of its stock in the debtor to the reorganization committee. This agreement was approved by this Court, in December, 1943. The transfer of the stock was not actually made until April, 1944, because of an unsuccessful litigative[2] attempt [261] to prevent the same. During the period of years in which the plaintiff was the owner of all the outstanding stock of the debtor, plaintiff had followed the practice of filing consolidated or affiliated income tax returns, in which it had reported the earnings of the debtor as well as other affiliated companies, which the plaintiff wholly or partly owned. The amount of taxes paid by the plaintiff pursuant to such returns was allocated among the various subsidiary companies having taxable income in proportion to the amount of such taxable income. The practice of filing the consolidated returns continued throughout the reorganization period. The returns, during the reorganization period, were prepared by the employees of the debtor and signed by the president of the plaintiff corporation, although they were never submitted to its board of directors for approval or consideration.

During the year 1942, the debtor made substantial net earnings. Neither plaintiff, nor any of its other subsidiary companies, had any earnings during 1942. A consolidated return was filed for the year 1942 in which the tax liability, due to the earnings of the debtor, was $4,144,828. Later in 1943, after the filing of the 1942 return and payment of the tax, the tax attorneys for defendant "discovered" Section 123 of the Revenue Act of 1942. (26 USC 23(g)4.)[3] They proposed what they de- [262] noted a "paradoxical" theory, by which the worthlessness of the plaintiff's stock (which had cost the plaintiff some $75,000,000) in the operating railroad company (debtor), might be availed of as an offset to the operating income of the debtor and thus result in a net loss and no tax obligation. Further, their theory was that part of this $75,000,000 loss in 1943, could be "carried back" to 1942 (§ 122(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code.) and part could be "carried over" to 1944 (§ 122(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code.).

Thereupon a claim for refund of the amount of tax paid for 1942 was filed in the name of the plaintiff. Operations of the debtor during 1943 and up to April 30, 1944, were increasingly profitable and, except for the offset of the capital stock loss of the plaintiff itself, would have called for the payment of some $17,000,000 in income taxes. So the tax attorneys caused the filing of consolidated tax returns for 1943 and for the forepart of 1944 in the name of plaintiff, in which sufficient portions of the $75,000,000 stock loss were used as offsets against the operating accounts for these years, so as to show no net income. The validity of the offsets was questioned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and conferences were had between the tax counsel for the defendant and the Commissioner. As a result, a tax settlement was made with the Commissioner [263] whereby, in consideration of the withdrawal of the claim for refund, the Commissioner accepted and approved the returns. The nature and basis of this compromise settlement will be hereafter more fully discussed.

[3] "Stock in affiliated corporation. For the purposes of paragraph (2) stock in a corporation affiliated with the taxpayer shall not be deemed a capital asset." (Subsection 4 of § 23g). By this subsection, losses resulting from worthlessness of stock of an affiliate became operating losses instead of capital losses as theretofore.

Subsequent to the filing of the claim for refund of the 1942 tax paid, and the filing of the consolidated tax returns for 1943 and part of 1944, and after negotiations for the settlement of the entire tax issue with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had started, the plaintiff, on October 10, 1946, filed its bill of complaint in equity herein. In substance the bill of complaint recited the filing of the claim for refund, the commencement of the negotiations for the approval of the consolidated returns and prayed that the Court settle the proprietary rights of the plaintiff and the defendant in the tax saving involved. It was further prayed that funds equivalent to the tax savings be placed in the custody of the court for proper and equitable distribution.[4]

On April 7, 1947, the Court permitted the filing of a complaint in intervention on behalf of certain stockholders of the plaintiff who wished to join in the demand of the plaintiff and in its prayer for relief against the defendant. The settlement and agreement with the Commissioner, by which the claim for refund was withdrawn and the consoli- [264] dated returns for the years 1942, 1943 and part of 1944 were accepted and approved, was consummated on August 14, 1947.

On December 17, 1947, plaintiff filed a supplementary bill of complaint, wherein the consummation of the settlement and compromise was set forth. It was there further alleged that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant. Throughout the proceedings and in the trial, this has been referred to as "duality of control."

In the supplementary complaint, the plaintiff prayed that the Court, in equity, enter a decree allocating and directing the payment of the abated taxes, amounting to some $17,000,000, to the plaintiff by way of mitigation of its losses in its subsidiary.

After many preliminary motions were made and disposed of, and after the filing of answers by the defendant and after pre-trial conferences, the cause finally came on for trial.

The trial itself consumed 13 days; the proceedings are set forth in 1700 pages of transcript; 14 witnesses testified and 164 exhibits, with various subdivisions, were introduced in evidence.

A number of special defenses were pleaded and testimony and exhibits offered at the trial in support thereof.

[265] But I am of the opinion, in view of the fact that the cause is concededly of equitable cognizance, that decision must depend upon the essential righteousness of plaintiff's claim as an equitable demand.

Discussion

The income tax picture presented is bizarre indeed. It is "paradoxical" as the defendant's tax attorneys put it.[5] The Western Pacific Railroad Company, the operating company, profitably conducted its railroad facilities in reorganization during 1942, 1943 and the forepart of 1944. Its own profit and loss records showed the debtor to be accountable to the United States in the sum of $21,346,567 income taxes for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944. During this same period of time the plaintiff was still the legal owner of all the capital stock of the debtor, an ownership which had been declared by both the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Reorganization Court to be valueless. But the tax attorneys for the defendant conceived a "paradoxical" plan. They [266] decided that they would file, pursuant to Section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code and the Treasury Regulations issued thereunder[6] affiliated or consolidated returns on behalf of the parent company and its subsidiaries and in them set up the plaintiff's stock loss (i.e., its ownership in the debtor) as an income tax deduction against the operating profits. Ostensibly they found their authority for so doing in Section 123 of the Revenue Act of 1942. (26 USC § 23(g)(4).[7] Thus, part of the lost $75,000,000 stockholding of the plaintiff in the debtor was applied as an offset to operating profits during each of the forth his idea of, using the plaintiff's stock loss in the debtor to offset debtor's profits, saying: "This is commented upon rather than suggested, since it is paradoxical to compute a loss upon the operating company's stock which, through the mechanics of consolidated return reporting, could be used to nullify the very income of the affiliate whose stock had become worthless." (Italics supplied.)

three years in question to the end that no part of the $21,346,567 tax would be paid.

This was more than mere tax "saving"; it amounted to a complete tax "escape." But the debtor had already paid $4,144,828 income taxes for the fiscal year 1942 and it had filed a claim for refund of such taxes upon the ground that it owed no taxes for 1942 if, on the theory of "carry-back," part of the $75,000,000 stock loss was a proper deduction. So in order to make the far larger saving or "escape" offered for the three years in question, the claim for refund was waived and the Commissioner then accepted the returns for 1942-1943 and the fore part of 1944. The effect of this was that [267] the debtor paid $4,144,828 taxes to the United States in order to escape the $21,346,567 previously mentioned, or a net saving or "escape" of $17,201,739. To all of this the Commissioner agreed. It was stated to be a compromise because of some question as to the date of definite ascertainment of the stock loss. The Commissioner apparently agreed that, under the 1942 amendment (§ 23(g)4), it was proper to offset the capital stock loss against the net operating gain, and the taxpayer paid $4,144,828 to resolve some alleged uncertainty as to the date of ascertainment of the stock loss.[8]

How the amendment to the statute, (§ 23(g)4), could have been availed of by the debtor is, mildly stated, puzzling, if not downright amazing. Its application in an orthodox case is understandable. The theory of deducting

---

[8]It is not at all clear to the Court how the alleged uncertainty as to the date of ascertainment of the stock loss could have been a true factor affecting the tax settlement, inasmuch as any such uncertainty would, if it existed, as well apply with respect to the 1943 and 1944 returns.

a loss in an economic aggregation of affiliated corporations, where one unit gains and the other unit loses, has been recognized and approved by Congress and the Courts.

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1938, losses resulting from the worthlessness of stocks and bonds were deductible from ordinary income and were not subject to the so-called capital-loss limitations. These limitations, that is that a capital loss could only offset a capital gain, had applied only to sales and [268] exchanges, with the result that it was more advantageous to allow stocks, that might become worthless, to become worthless rather than to sell them. By the 1938 Act losses sustained by reason of the worthlessness of securities were treated as if they resulted from the sale or exchange of capital assets and thus were subject to the limitations applying to deductions in the form of capital losses. 26 USC 23(g)4, which was Section 123 of the Revenue Act of 1942, accorded losses on worthless stocks held by a taxpayer in affiliated corporations the same treatment accorded losses from all worthless securities prior to the Revenue Act of 1938.

Research does not disclose any statement of Congressional reason or purpose for the enactment of Section 123 of the Revenue Act of 1942 26 USC 23(g)4. It was not in the original House Bill (H.R. 7378), but was an amendment added in the Senate (S. Rept. 1631, p. 89, 77th Cong. 2nd Sess.) Neither the Senate Report, nor the Conference Report of the Bill, H. Rept. 2586 (Cong. Rec. 77th Cong. 2nd Sess. p. 8401, 8441) state the reasons for the amendment. It is of interest that in the Revenue Act of 1942 (26 USC 117(i).) securities held by banks were accorded the same benefits as Section 123 accorded to affiliated corporations.

While the purpose and intent of Congress has not anywhere been precisely stated, it is a fair and justifiable inference that the intent was to enlarge the general benefits afforded by consolidated or affiliated corporate returns.

[269] It may be briefly stated that the philosophy of the consolidated return is to disregard the corporate entity and to tax as a single business or economic unit, what really is a business unit. This has been found to be sound, equitable and convenient tax procedure. It treats an affiliate group of corporations as one business enterprise, the various affiliates being considered as if they were branch offices of the main business establishment. The income from all units is considered as a single income, and the losses from all units, are treated as a single loss. See the following in this connection: Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation, (1942) Vol. 8, § 46.01 and § 46.02: Montgomery's Federal Taxes—Corporations and Partnerships 1948-1949, Vol. II, p. 678; Miller, "The Taxation of Intercompany Income;" Law and Contemporary Problems, 1940, Vol. 7, 301, 306; Commerce Clearing House Standard Federal Tax Reporter, 1949, Vol. 1, paragraph 200C-1. See also statement of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, regarding the preliminary report of the Special Committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, 1933, p. 13.

In my opinion, it is crystal clear that in enacting Section 23(g)4, the Congress were merely furthering the general purposes and benefits of the statutory provisions allowing the filing of affiliated corporation returns. Obviously it intended by the provision, (23(g)4), to allow a parent company in an affiliated group, if its ownership of stock in a subsidiary becomes worthless, to offset it against other income of the parent company in any other subsidiaries or [270] subsidiary, in the same manner, as it had been permitted to offset operating losses in one subsidiary as against operating gains in another. To assume however that the Congress intended by 23(g)4 to statutorily authorize what was done in this case, is to attribute plain stupidity to the Congress of the United States—an unthinkable procedure, despite the general habit of criticism, both fair and unfair. But here the inexplicable occurred. For $4,144,828, the United States released $21,346,567 in taxes upon a basis which is completely incomprehensible. The tax "escape" invites a type of scrutiny which this Court is powerless to give it.

Obviously the Court cannot pass judgment upon the validity of the tax compromise and settlement. It is now closed. It is final and cannot be reopened except for fraud.

I am not unmindful of the recognized and approved philosophy that a taxpayer may avail himself of every proper means of reducing his taxes.[9] In every sense of the word, however, there was a real escape from the payment of taxes here. If I had the power, I would not hesitate to set aside the tax settlement. Indeed, if I could, I would order these taxes paid to the United States. That would effectively dispose of the cause.

[271] Perhaps it may be said that it is impertinent for the Court to concern itself with a closed tax transaction and agreement such as this. But if equity principles are our guide, then this tax settlement is of the web and woof of the issue to be decided. Equity has no precise boundaries, and certainly not in this unique controversy.

If this were an ordinary and more common type of tax saving, there might be impertinence to the Court's concern with it. But this so-called "saving" is inextricably entwined with the equities. Its very nature shapes and molds these equities. It is a "pot of honey equally attractive to principals and advocates."[10] When equity is invoked to divide or distribute the "pot," it cannot be blindfolded as to the origin or nature of the "honey."

It is argued, in effect, by plaintiff that, irrespective of whether or not the tax settlement was in accord with the statute, nevertheless it is a completed transaction and a closed book and should have no place in the determination of the validity of plaintiff's cause of action. It is asserted that tax savings having been made, the only question remaining is whether or not on the record here, the defendant must turn over to plaintiff an amount equal to, or a substantial part of, the tax savings. But in my opinion, the tax escape was erroneous and unjust. It cannot be cured by committing the further inequity of distributing the gain thus made to others.

[272] Debtor, having made good its "escape," now comes plaintiff and prays for a share, if not all, of that which "escaped." Whether there was, or was not, "duality of control" respecting the directorates of the two companies, appears to me to be not too important. True, there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of "duality of control." Be that is it may, I am compelled to rest decision upon the fundamental issue of the justice and equity of plaintiff's right, if any, to be paid for that which was escaped. Analytically speaking, what the plaintiff seeks is to collect from the defendant an amount equal to all, or a substantial part of, taxes that the debtor did not pay to the United States.

What is the true nature of the claim of plaintiff and of the relief it seeks? What plaintiff really seeks is not all or a share of the so-called tax savings. Rather it is a circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership, rejected in the reorganization plan. Or put differently, it is an effort to share in the earnings of the debtor during the reorganization period. Essentially a so-called tax saving is but a different name for an earning. Assuming, arguendo, the validity of plaintiff's contention, its right or claim is dependent upon the debtor making earnings. If there were no earnings there could be no so-called tax saving. A "saving" in taxes is a negative concept. It is a benefit to one obligated to pay money, resulting from not having to pay. No benefit could inure [273] from participating in non-payment of an obligation, unless there rested upon the participant an obligation to pay. Absent such obligation, any sharing of that which is not paid out, would be gratuitous. In effect therefore, recognition of plaintiff's claim would be recognition of a right in plaintiff to share in debtor's earnings. As already stated, a demand substantially seeking this end was heretofore asserted by way of opposition to the plan and rejected. Ecker v. Western Pac. Co. 318 U.S. 448.

Not only that, but the philosophy underlying Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act stands as a barrier against the equitable validity of plaintiff's claim in this cause. Rehabilitation of a debtor by readjusting its financial structure in the interest of the debtor, its creditors and the public, in a fair and equitable plan or reorganization, is the essential purpose of Section 77. If a debtor in fact has an equity, it is and should be recognized. If not, it is disregarded. Above all, Section 77 was devised to provide in the public interest both a speedy and efficient means of resuscitating, among others, sick and ailing railroads.

See: Van Schaick v. McCarthy, 10 Cir. 116 Fed. 2d 987, 992; New England Coal & Coke Co. v. Rutland R. Co. 2 Cir. 143 Fed. 2d 179, 185; In re Denver & R.G.W.R. Co., 10 Cir. 150 Fed. 2d 28, 34; Thompson v. State of Louisiana, 8 Cir. 98 Fed. 2d 108, 110; Craven "The Judicial and Administrative Mechanism of Section 77," 1940, 7 Law and Contemporary Problems 464.

[274] When it was finally determined, after running the full gamut of court and administrative procedure, in the reorganization of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, that the plaintiff's interest was worthless, nothing short of some extraordinary cause justifying reopening the reorganization proceeding could effect a change. To make any award in this cause, under the assumed authority of equity principles, would be in effect to modify the administrative and judicial judgments in the reorganization proceeding. Such a procedure would be an indirect nullification of the purpose of the reorganization statute, in the guise of an afterthought allegedly of equitable persuasion.

What was the actual result of the tax saving agreement by which it was determined that some $21,000,000 in taxes were not due to the United States? Simply that the debtor did not pay taxes. It does not follow at all from this, that an obligation to pay the unpaid tax money, one to another, was thereby created.

The so-called "duality of control," much discussed and emphasized, is not important in resolving the tendered issue. For in the final analysis, plaintiff's hope to succeed here depends upon whether it could have lawfully acquired these unpaid tax monies by voluntary agreement between the directorates of the two companies. In my opinion, it could not. For such a procedure would violate and nullify the reorganization plan and the decree of the Court confirming it. It would permit [275] the plaintiff to share in the earnings of the debtor during the period of reorganization. Equity would aid the creditors of debtor to prevent it. Indeed there is some merit to defendant's contention that a firm obligation rested upon plaintiff to conform and cooperate to the end that the creditors and new owners should be benefited to the fullest.

What would be the result if the contention of plaintiff, that law and equity imposes an obligation upon defendant to pay the whole amount of unpaid tax money over to plaintiff, were sustained? It would mean a court order directing defendant to pay over to plaintiff an amount equal to the taxes the debtor should have paid to the United States. So the plaintiff, which formerly owned and was a failure in operating the debtor, would get from the defendant a sum of money out of debtor's earnings during reorganization equal to the taxes the debtor should have paid to the United States resulting from its profitable operations. In my opinion, such a whirligig rationale transcends all reasonable concepts of equity and justice.

An array of able counsel on both sides have put forth prodigious and ingenious efforts,[11] one side to retain the benefits of the tax "escape," and the [276] other to obtain them. And all the time the taxes escaped in reality belong to the United States.

The Court cannot cause these taxes to be paid, where they should be paid, to the United States. But, as between the parties, no persuasion of conscience or equity impels me to do otherwise than to leave the parties where they are, the defendant with its amazing and undeserved tax success; the plaintiff, as the reorganization decree left it, without interest in the debtor.

For the reasons stated, judgment will go for the defendant.[12]

NOTE: The declaration of worthlessness of the stock of the Debtor owned by the Holding Corp as provided in the plan of reorganization certified by the Interstate Commerce Commission and confirmed by the Reorganization Court, resulted in a loss to the Holding Corp which greatly exceeded what would otherwise have been the taxable income of other members of the affiliated group for the calendar year 1943 and no tax was reported or paid for that year by any member of the group.

road company. The operating company became financially distressed during [2215] the "depression of the early thirties" and in 1935 it filed a petition under Section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act (11 U. S. C. 205). The court, in that year, placed its affairs in the hands of trustees. In 1939 the Interstate Commerce Commission approved (233 I. C. C. 409) a proposed plan of reorganization, which was thereafter submitted to and approved by the district court in 1940. In the plan it was determined, inter alia, that the capital stock of the subsidiary, owned by Corporation, was without equity or value and therefore was not entitled to participate in the plan. Appeals followed and, after a contrary holding by this court, the Supreme Court considered and rejected the contention of Corporation that it should have the right to participate in the plan because of increased earnings of the debtor while in reorganization, and affirmed the district court on March 15, 1945.[2] Thereafter the plan of reorganization was submitted to the creditors in accordance with the statutory requirement (11 U. S. C. 205(e)), and, following their approval, was confirmed on October 11, 1943 by the district court. On April 30, 1944, with the approval of the court, Corporation transferred all of its stock in the subsidiary to the reorganization committee and this stock was later cancelled. On December 31, 1944, the trustees turned the railroad properties over to the reorganized company, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, appellee here.

This litigation involves a dispute about taxes and [2216] tax savings for the years 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944, a period during which the railroad properties were controlled and operated by the trustees of the bankruptcy court.

During the years in which Corporation was the owner of all the outstanding stock of the pre-reorganization, The Western Pacific Railroad Company, including the years the trustees of the bankruptcy court had possession and control of the railroad properties, Corporation followed the practice of filing consolidated income tax returns in which it reported the earnings of the operating company as well as other affiliated companies.

During the year 1942 the operating company, under the control of the court's trustees, had substantial net earnings. On May 15, 1943, a consolidated return for the calendar year 1942, showing tax liability of $4,201,821.54, was filed by Corporation in behalf of all members of the affiliated group. Corporation, not having had any net earnings during 1942, did not pay any part of the tax.

On July 15, 1944 consolidated income and excess profits tax returns for the calendar year 1943, showing no taxable income, were filed by Corporation in behalf of all members of the affiliated group. The operating company, under the management of the trustees, again made substantial net earnings in 1943, but the loss sustained by Corporation by reason of the declaration of worthlessness of its stock[3] in the operating company (which had cost [2217] Corporation $75,000,000) was utilized as an offset in the consolidated returns and thus resulted in a net loss and no tax obligation for any of the affiliated group. In addition, part of the loss was "carried back" to 1942[4] and a claim for refund of the taxes paid under the consolidated return for 1942 was filed with the Commissioner by Corporation on March 9, 1945. A consolidated return in behalf of the affiliated group was filed on June 15, 1945 by Corporation for the first four months of 1944. No tax liability was shown by this return by reason of the "carry forward"[5] of an unused portion of the loss arising from the declaration of the worthlessness of the stock of the subsidiary company owned by Corporation.

The validity of the stock loss offsets was questioned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and after negotiations a tax settlement was made with the Commissioner on August 13, 1947 whereby, in consideration of the withdrawal of the claim for refund of 1942 taxes, the Commissioner accepted and approved the returns for the calendar year 1943 and first four months of 1944. Except for the offset of the capital stock loss of Corporation, the [2218] net earnings of the subsidiaries for 1943 and the first four months of 1944 would have required the payment of some $17,000,000 in income and excess profits taxes.

This suit in equity was instituted October 10, 1946 by Corporation, alleging "consolidated income tax returns were filed by the plaintiff for itself and its affiliates which reported a deductible loss by the plaintiff in an amount sufficient to eliminate all taxable income for the group as a whole" for the periods in question and praying that the rights and interests of the plaintiff and the defendants be fixed and determined. A complaint in intervention was filed by three stockholders of Corporation on April 7, 1947. The principal difference between the original complaint and the complaint in intervention is the allegations in the latter pertaining to "duality" or interlocking management and "domination" of the parent by the subsidiary. It is alleged that various directors, officers and counsel of Corporation acted as directors, officers and counsel of the subsidiary with the result that the subsidiary dominated and controlled Corporation; that said officers caused Corporation to file consolidated tax returns when Corporation had "no duty or obligation whatsoever so to do". Corporation filed an answer to the complaint in intervention in which it denied "on its own behalf and on behalf of its officers and directors all allegations . . . of domination and control of the plaintiff, its officers and directors" by the subsidiaries and affiliates, but six months later Corporation filed a supplemental bill of complaint [2219] alleging a "duality of control" and, though falling short of intervenors' allegation of "domination", it alleges "at the special instance and request of the defendants and the trustees in the reorganization proceedings acting for the defendants the plaintiff, however, consented to the filing on its behalf of consolidated . . . tax returns with defendants" for the tax periods in question. It is further alleged that plaintiff "does not aver that in so conducting themselves" the officers acting for both corporations "were aware of wrong-doing or consciously disregarded the interests of plaintiff". There is no assertion of actual fraud or specific acts of deceit nor would the record support any such assertion. Corporation's claim appears to rest on constructive fraud presumed from the intercorporate relationship which it asserts deprived it of its independence and caused it to suffer a loss.

The appellants emphasize that Corporation maintained its offices jointly with those of its subsidiaries and the trustees in New York; that Corporation's officers, who handled the tax transactions, were also employees of the subsidiaries and trustees, and their salaries and the expenses of the office were jointly paid; that because of its impoverished financial condition, Corporation was incapable, as of June 1, 1943, of paying salaries or office expenses and thereafter the subsidiaries paid all of the salaries and office expenses. Appellants refer to this as "duality of management" which they contend created a fiduciary relationship and the subsidiaries' duty to deal fairly with Corporation.

[2220] Many of the cases cited by appellants deal with the duties of trustees, agents and partners and with the granting of restitution for violation of their duties. Clarity of reasoning has suffered because of the failure to distinguish between the several varieties of fiduciaries and the duties imposed on each. Although all trustees are fiduciaries, all fiduciaries are not necessarily trustees.

> "A person in a fiduciary relation to another is under a duty to act for the benefit of the other as to matters within the scope of the relation. Fiduciary relations include among others the relation of trustee and beneficiary, guardian and ward, agent and principal, attorney and client . . . The directors and officers of a corporation are also fiduciaries, as are receivers, and executors and administrators. The scope of the transactions affected by the relation and the extent of the duties im- posed are not identical in all fiduciary relations . . ." (Restatement of Restitution, Section 190, comment "a".) (emphasis added.)

As stated by Professor Scott in 49 Harvard Law Review at page 521:

"In some relations the fiduciary element is more intense than in others; it is peculiarly intense in the case of a trust . . ." (emphasis added.)

Appellants place a great measure of reliance on the case of Commercial National Bank in Shreveport vs. Parsons, 144 F. 2d 231. That case is distinguishable from the case before us in that the fiduciary relationship arose out of a contract which imposed the duties of a trustee upon the "new [2221] bank". The court decided the case on the established rule that a trustee owes the duty of absolute fidelity to the trust estate and may not profit by dealing with it. We know of no better way to point up the distinction than to use the words of the court cited and emphasized by appellant's brief:

"The credit thus obtained by the new bank was a profit derived from the trust property as effectively as if it had been paid that much in cash." (emphasis added.)

Cases which deal with trustees, agents and partners are not controlling here as there is no contention that the subsidiary was a trustee, agent or partner. It is appellants' contention that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through the dual officers. If this be true, then a fiduciary relationship existed, but the duties imposed were not those of a trustee. While a trustee may not deal with the trust estate and thereby make a profit, affiliated corporations are usually associated for the very purpose of dealing with each other for profit, e.g., manufacturing and sales companies; railroads and their subsidiary short line companies. Even the corporation which dominates its subsidiary, with the resultant fiduciary relationship, properly deals with its affiliate for profit as long as there is no overreaching or unfairness.

Whether or not a fiduciary relationship exists, and the extent of the duties imposed, depends upon the particular field of substantive law involved. We must look to the law of corporations to determine whether the subsidiary stood in a fiduciary relation [2222] to Corporation. The mere fact of officers and directors in common does not create such a fiduciary relationship. There is nothing insidious about duality of management and control as such. It is very common in the realm of business, particularly in the situation of parent and subsidiary, as here. At times business convenience requires such relationship. The officers and directors who occupy this dual position are fiduciaries to both companies and owe a duty of loyalty to each. Thus they cannot favor the interests of one corporation while sacrificing or betraying those of the other. If they do so, they must respond in damages for their tortious conduct or account for any benefits derived through their breach of duty.

But rules relating to the individual officers do not reach the point involved in this case. Here we must determine whether the subsidiary corporation stood in a fiduciary relation to the parent corporation. There are several orthodox ways in which one corporation may become a fiduciary in relation to another corporation, e. g., it may hold property in trust for the other, or it may become an agent for the other. Fiduciary duties also arise where one corporation dominates the other. Consolidated Rock Co. v. Du Bois, 312 U. S. 510. Although the presence of common officers and directors does not in itself create a domination or a fiduciary relationship between the corporations, it does subject dealings between them to judicial scrutiny as to their fairness and reasonableness to ascertain if domination exists, and if so, whether it has resulted in [2223] overreaching which will raise a presumption of constructive fraud.

There obviously existed an interlocking management between Corporation and the subsidiaries. But this situation was not of the subsidiary's making. On the contrary, it was created by Corporation, whose stockholders elected its Board of Directors, who appointed its officers. Since plaintiff Corporation owned 100% of the stock of the subsidiary, it elected all of the directors of the subsidiary, which, in turn, appointed its officers. After the subsidiary was reorganized it was no longer controlled by Corporation but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court.[6] Corporation continued in office the same directors who, in turn, continued to employ the same officers. This was not unnatural since Corporation continued to own all the capital stock of the subsidiary long after it had been divested of control of the subsidiary by reason of the reorganization.

If it be assumed that the advent of the trustees into the affiliation and the increased prosperity of the subsidiary resulted in control of the affairs of Corporation so as to raise fiduciary obligations, the scope and extent of the subsidiary's obligations would be to deal fairly with Corporation. A corporation can only act through its officers and agents. It follows that if there was domination and [2224] unfairness it was exercised through the dual officers who forsook their obligations to Corporation, by which they were appointed, and served the purposes of the subsidiary. Although the arguments of appellants are exceedingly general, it is apparent that they assign three particulars wherein the dual officers failed in their obligations to Corporation, resulting in unfairness: (1) They filed consolidated returns; (2) they failed to exact an agreement from the subsidiary requiring payment of money to Corporation as a condition to their consent to file consolidated returns; (3) they should have resigned and allowed the appointment of successors who would have exacted such an agreement from the subsidiary. We shall discuss these three particulars seriatim.

The consolidated returns were filed by Corporation as the parent, for itself and its subsidiaries. Appellants contend that the subsidiaries caused[7] Corporation to file consolidated returns when it had "no duty or obligation whatsoever so to do". The filing of these returns was in exact conformity with the practice followed since 1916. Beginning in 1927 Michael J. Curry, first as treasurer and after February 1, 1942 as president of Corporation, supervised preparation of consolidated returns, [2225] signed and filed them. In each year the consolidated tax liability was distributed pro rata to those members of the group who had taxable incomes without allocating any tax to a company showing a loss or paying such company tribute for the tax "saved" by the use of its loss in the returns. Mr. Curry supervised preparation of tentative tax returns for 1942, and on March 15, 1943 signed and filed them and arranged for an extension of time until May 15, 1943 to file the final returns. On March 23, 1943, F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., who was counsel for Corporation at the time and appears on the pleadings and briefs in this case as present counsel for appellants, suggested by letter[8] to Mr. Schumacher, one of the trustees of the operating company, that he be authorized to employ Messrs. Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, tax experts, to advise him on tax matter. This was done. Mr. Polk of this firm continued to advise with the officers of the group through the periods here in question. Mr. Polk reviewed the tax situation with Mr. Curry and Mr. Nicodemus and on May 20, 1943 prepared a detailed written report[9] addressed to Mr. Curry and circulated to Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Nicodemus. The report reviewed the tax advantages of consolidated returns and suggested the possibility that, under the recently enacted amendment to Section 23(g) of the Internal Revenue Code, the loss of Corporation, upon a [2226] determination that its stock in the subsidiary was worthless, might constitute under a consolidated return, an offset to income of other group members. A consolidated return reporting the loss of Corporation as an offset to group income was prepared in the joint New York office, signed by Mr. Curry, and filed by him on July 15, 1944. The returns reported no tax owing. Substantially the same procedure was followed for the "carry back" claim for refund March 9, 1945, as well as the consolidated tax returns for the first four months of 1944, which were filed July 15, 1945.

It hardly seems conceivable that Corporation could complain because consolidated returns were filed. Not only was it in accordance with past practice of the group and under the supervision of Corporation's president, as in former years, but it was done under the guidance of the independent tax experts employed upon the suggestion of the General Counsel for Corporation, who represents appellants in the present proceeding. As the trial court stated[10] ". . . when everybody was, as they were in this case, acting completely in the open in the matter, nobody was concealing anything from anyone else, the element of fraud or deception, of the kind that you refer to, is absent . . . Everybody knew that consolidated returns were being filed . . . Everybody knew that these attorneys were being employed to file this consolidated return. It was all done right out in the open." At the time [2227] of trial plaintiff intervenors appeared to agree with these observations of the trial court,[11] but on this appeal they infer that there was something sinister about the filing of the consolidated returns.

It is interesting to note the reactions of appellants to observations in the opinion of the trial court[12] to the effect that the Commissioner erred in allowing the tax deduction in question. They vehemently argue that the filing of the consolidated returns and the use of plaintiff's loss to offset defendant's income was proper under the tax law and regulations. It is also interesting to note that the compromise of the tax claim between the Bureau of Internal Revenue and Corporation acting through its attorney-in-fact, James K. Polk, [2228] occurred after this action was commenced on October 10, 1946, and after the filing of the complaint in intervention on April 7, 1947; that no effort was made to invoke the power of the court to enjoin the officers of Corporation from continuing in their efforts to have the Bureau accept the consolidated returns as filed; that nothing was done to revoke Polk's power-of-attorney to represent Corporation in the proceedings before the Bureau; that Polk, as attorney-in-fact for Corporation, made an offer of settlement of tax liability for 1942, 1943 and the first four months of 1944 by letter of May 19, 1947 to the Internal Revenue Bureau; that a stipulation (hereafter discussed) was entered into between counsel in this case approving the settlement of the returns with the Government; that Corporation's Board of Directors adopted a resolution approving [2229] and ratifying the offer of settlement August 13, 1947.

The conclusion is inescapable that Corporation's officers, when they filed consolidated returns, did not violate any obligation but, on the contrary, were conforming with the policy and directions of Corporation.

Appellants suggest that Corporation was under no obligation to file consolidated returns; that it could have demanded that the subsidiaries enter into an agreement to pay it a sum of money as a pre-requisite to its consent to filing such returns; that inasmuch as it officers did not exact such an agreement, they failed in their obligation to Corporation and are chargeable with an "unfair" omission to be imputed to the subsidiary by reason of the supposed domination.

Section 141(a) of the Internal Revenue Code grants the privilege of filing consolidated returns upon the condition that all members of the affiliated group consent to the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner under the authority of subsection (b) of the same section. Regulation 104, Section 23.12 provides that the consolidated return shall be made by the parent corporation. Under the Regulations, the parent corporation is the agent for the entire group, and (except in unusual circumstances) all dealings with the Commissioner are handled by the parent.

Appellants argue that consolidated returns were designed solely for the benefit of the parent corporation. The argument is not sound. The Code [2230] and Regulations recognize that the benefit of consolidated returns is for all corporations in the group: Any subsidiary in the group, as well as the parent, may prevent the filing of consolidated returns if the filing is detrimental or contrary to the interests of such corporation. Appellants assert that in the usual case the tax saving which a subsidiary effects will enure to the parent by way of increasing the value of its stock or by way of dividends. This is quite true in the usual case. But it does not mean that this result must follow, nor does it follow that, because the value of a parent's equity in a subsidiary corporation is increased by reason of benefits flowing to the subsidiary's preferred stockholders and creditors, it may receive the benefits direct, regardless of the rights of the subsidiary's preferred stockholders, creditors and minority common stockholders.

The appellants and intervenors contend that the tax laws require "economic unity" for the filing of consolidated returns. This is incorrect. The Regulations suggests procedure in cases where a subsidiary has left the affiliated group. Regulation 104, Section 23.12(e). Thus, the regulations specifically envision situations where economic unity shall cease and yet permit the filing of consolidated returns. If, by the time the returns are filed the affiliation has ceased to exist, any benefits to the subsidiary obviously cannot insure to the parent. That is precisely the situation in the case at bar. In the tax periods involved there was an affiliated group. When the returns and the claim for refund were [2231] filed, affiliation no longer existed. Therefore, the benefit of the consolidated return could not accrue to the parent corporation. If the assertion of appellants that consolidated returns "are not permitted for the benefit of the subsidiaries" were literally true, then there would be no lawsuit here because consolidated returns could not have been filed in the first instance.

Appellants cite three decisions of the Securities and Exchange Commission in support of their view that the rationale of the tax laws requires that any benefits resulting from the tax laws should go to the parent.[13] These decisions do not support this contention of appellants. These companies were seeking the approval of the Commission to alteration of inter-company agreements respecting income taxes. All three decisions show a decided viewpoint that the tax savings from consolidated returns shall not be paid over to the parent if this would in any way endanger the position of the creditors of the subsidiary. They also make clear that a company whose loss was utilized for the benefit of the group does not have a right to compensation from those who benefited. In the Cities Service case, supra, the Commission said:

> "... we think it should be observed that in [2232] the ordinary case the fact that one subsidiary contributes a particular income deduction to a consolidated return does not in itself entitle that subsidiary to the benefits of the reduced taxes resulting from the deduction. Where the reductions are possible from filing a consolidated return, they ordinarily are due to a number of factors contributed by the various members of the consolidated group, including, among others, earnings, and excess profits tax credits, as well as income deductions." (emphasis added)

There is nothing in the Code or Regulations that compels the conclusion that a tax saving must or should enure to the benefit of the parent company or of the company which has sustained the loss that makes possible the tax saving.

Assuming, as we have, that the subsidiary dominated Corporation through control of the dual officers, it did not abuse its supposed dominant position because the officers and directors common to both corporations did not sacrifice Corporation's interests to those of the subsidiary. When the Supreme Court decided that Corporation could not participate in the increased earnings of the operating company while in reorganization, Corporation suffered a severe loss. Since it had no income, there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss. But its affiliate did have use for the loss and the group was entitled, under the tax law, to make use of that means of tax savings. The dual officers owed fiduciary duties to both corporations to promote the interests of both and [2233] to obtain for each what it was entitled to under the tax laws. Under this state of facts these officers had a positive duty to make use of the loss as they did, that is, to offset the income of members of the affiliated group with deductible losses of other members. If the positions of the corporations were reversed and the subsidiary had a loss and the parent had income, the officers would have been obliged to file consolidated returns to enable Corporation to make use of the loss. Indeed, this very thing had occurred in previous years of the affiliation and Corporation had effected substantial tax savings (Def. Ex. 46) by reason of filing consolidated returns. The record is clear that on none of these occasions was tribute paid to a subsidiary which had suffered a loss. The officers would have been derelict in their duty to the subsidiary had they failed to file consolidated returns. Their duty to Corporation required only that they not sacrifice its interests and did not require them to exact tribute for following the practice of the past twenty-five years. After the transaction Corporation was in exactly the same position that it was in before the subsidiary had effected the tax saving allowed by the tax laws.

However, it is contended that the subsidiary should have notified the Corporation's stockholders and directors of the filing of consolidated returns so that independent directors and officers could have been put in charge of Corporation's interests to make a bargain with the subsidiaries and obtain compensation as a prerequisite to filing consolidated [2234] returns. There are several things wrong with this argument. The most obvious is that the entire transaction was open and above board. Many persons having an interest in Corporation, including stockholders and counsel, were fully aware of the situation. They chose not to act. They apparently preferred to permit the transaction to stand, intending thereafter to bargain for a share in the tax savings. They made no effort to inject themselves into the tax settlement with the government. But all this assumes that it would have been proper for Corporation to have made such a bargain. The Corporation was the sole owner of the subsidiary's capital stock. As such it was under a duty to deal fairly with the subsidiary having full regard for the interests of the creditors and holders of other securities. Consolidated Rock Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522. It owed a duty not to require its subsidiary to forego a legitimate tax saving and could not bargain to perform its duty. A parent company is not acting in the best interests of its subsidiary when it seeks to appropriate to itself an advantage which the tax laws give the subsidiary.

Plaintiff argues that it was a "complete stranger" to defendant when the consolidated return was filed July 15, 1944 because the affiliation terminated on April 30, 1944 when its stockholdings were transferred to the reorganization committee. A tax return is an historical document relating to the past. This return related to a period when the affiliation existed. All fiduciary duties with respect to matters arising during the relationship continue during the [2235] winding up period, and are "as sacred and inviolable after as before the expiration of its term".[14] It would be ridiculous to say that a fiduciary who performs an act winding up matters which relate to the affiliation period may exact payment merely because the relationship has technically terminated. If Corporation had required tributed as a condition of its cooperation, then it would have been acting with less than the required standard of fairness to the subsidiary's creditors. Equity will not permit a recovery as a substitute for a bargain which would have been unfair.

The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary, or that there was a breach of any duty owed to Corporation. As the trial court stated, "The so-called 'duality of control' much discussed and emphasized, is not important."

Appellants contend that they have a special claim to the 1942 tax saving. They rely upon a pretrial stipulation and order. The proposed settlement of tax liability with the government provided that the returns for 1942, 1943 and first four months of 1944 were to be approved as filed, and that the claim for refund of 1942 taxes was to be rejected. Intervenors applied to the court below for an order restraining the consummation of the settlement on [2236] the theory that the rejection of the 1942 refund claim might be prejudicial to the position of Corporation in this litigation. The parties entered into a stipulation providing that for purposes of litigation the 1942 refund claim, diminished in proportion to the diminuation of the entire tax saving, should be deemed to have been allowed and "paid to the plaintiff as the agent for the affiliated group . . ." (emphasis added). The pretrial order confirmed the stipulation.

The trial court did not make formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, but relied upon section 52(a) F.R.C.P., which provides in part: ". . . If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed, it will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law appear therein . . .'' Findings of fact and conclusions of law are intended to aid appellate courts by affording them a clear understanding of the basis of the decision below. Findings are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal which this court may not waive. Even in cases where there are no findings, if the record is so clear that the court does not need them, it may waive the defect on the ground that the error is not substantial in the particular case.[15]

In the instant case the trial court's opinion discloses adequately the issues of fact which were before the court and the court's findings thereon.

The trial court, in a note appended to its opinion, [2237] stated that ''inasmuch as there is little factual dispute'' the opinion would serve as findings of fact and conclusions of law, but ''counsel if they wish, may submit findings . . .''. All parties elected not to submit additional or more detailed findings except that the appellants proposed findings with respect to the above stipulation and pretrial order, and also a conclusion of law to the effect that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of $3,385,290. These proposed findings and conclusions, which were inconsistent with those embodied in the opinion, were rejected by the trial court.

Appellants argue that the court below concluded that it should leave the parties where it found them and that Corporation is therefore entitled to the assumed avails of the reduced refund claim.

[15] Mayo v. Lakeland Highlands Canning Co., 309 U. S. 310;
Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, 136 F. 2d 796;
Goodacre v. Panagopoulos, 110 F. 2d 716.

The stipulation and pretrial order were entered into and made for the purpose of protecting the position of Corporation in relation to the refund claims only if it should be found entitled to the refund. The court found it was not entitled to it. Appellants' position is no stronger with respect to the refund for 1942 taxes paid by the subsidiaries than it is with respect to the 1943 and 1944 savings of the subsidiaries. It is true that the government requires consolidated returns be filed in the name of the parent and that refunds are paid to the parent, but where such refunds are paid, the parent holds the refund as agent or trustee for the benefit of the affiliate which has overpaid.[16]

[2238] In their brief appellant-intervenors allude to the losses they sustained as stockholders and imply that they have an equitable right to compensation apart from that of Corporation. To believe this would be to misapprehend their position. A corporation is a legal entity separate and distinct from its stockholders and benefits to the latter flow from the rights of the corporation. If this were not true these intervenors could not hope to gain by this proceeding as they sustained no loss by reason of Corporation being barred from participation in the reorganization plan. Their pleadings, as well as a stipulation filed in this suit, show that they acquired their stock after Corporation's stock in the subsidiary had been declared worthless. Defendants offered to prove at the trial that intervenors purchased their stock for less than one cent on the dollar. The offered evidence was properly excluded as irrelevant by the trial court. The fact, if it be a fact, that any or all of the present stockholders of Corporation acquired their stock as a speculation while the corporation was in the process of liquidation and its "stock was of trifling value" (page 11, intervenors' opening brief), is irrelevant to the issues here. Corporation is an entity and the issue is whether or not it is entitled to recover $17,000,000 from the successor of its former subsidiary. If it prevails its stockholders are entitled to reap the benefit, regardless of when they became such, or how "trifling" a sum they paid for their stock. The intervenors recognized this when they [2239] filed their complaint in intervention to assert Corporation's claims.

We have examined the other authorities cited by appellants and find nothing contrary to our holding here. Appellants cite Southern Pacific Company v. Bogert, 250 U.S. 483, 492. That case was not concerned with the question of fiduciary relationship between parent and subsidiary. Rather, it was concerned with the fiduciary duty owed by the holders of the majority of the stock of a corporation to the minority stockholders. The case holds that a parent company has a fiduciary duty to any minority stockholders of the subsidiary.

Also cited is North American Co. v. S. E. C., 327 U. S. 686, 693. That case is not in point either. The court was not concerned with any question of fiduciary relationships. Rather it was concerned with the validity of the so-called "utility holding company death sentence" provision of the Public Utilities Holding Company Act.

The judgment is affirmed.

JAMES ALGER FEE, District Judge, dissenting:

There are no findings of fact which support the judgment of the Trial Court or the affirmance thereof by a majority of this Court.[1] The cause should be remanded for this reason alone.[2] The Trial Court gives two reasons for decision against plaintiff: first, that the "tax escape" was a fraud on the government, and, second, that a recovery [2240] would violate the reorganization decree. Neither has any validity.

The major portion of the opinion of the Trial Court is devoted to the proposition that the "tax escape" was a fraud upon the government,[3] and therefore the proceeds were given to the defendant, an active wrongdoer.[4] This position that there was a fraud is given no support by the tax agents of the government who made the settlement.[5] It was expressly repudiated in open court by every party in this case. The majority of this Court, as the opinion shows, does not rely upon it.

A second subsidiary theory was also advanced below with little emphasis. The Trial Court said it would be inequitable to allow recovery to plaintiff because the stock of the then subsidiary owned by plaintiff was denied participation in either the assets or earnings in the reorganization proceeding. This reason is as unstable as the first.[6] The claim of plaintiff was not one against the original company, which was placed in reorganization. Everyone admits the genesis of the loss of plaintiff occurred later. Therefore, the claim would not in any event be barred by the decree of reorganization.[7] The liability to the government for taxes was not barred by that decree either. Liability for the use of plaintiff's loss long after the closure of the reorganization proceeding to obtain a benefit for defendant by compromise of the still existing tax claim could not be discharged nor affected by the decree in reorganization. The right furnished consideration for contractual liability between [2241] plaintiff and defendant as independent corporations. Plaintiff had a property right as owner of these shares of stock.[8] The reorganization court had power to deny plaintiff participation in the assets of its subsidiary, and, as a result, all but nominal values in the shares in the subsidiary were lost. But plaintiff was not in reorganization itself.[9] The company in reorganization did not own the stock and could not legally exercise the appurtenant property right to file a consolidated return. The reorganization court had no jurisdiction of plaintiff or of these property rights.

Decree of that court attempting to destroy rights of property in the stock owned by plaintiff would be void. The reorganization decree does not deal with the property rights in the stock and is therefore res judicata neither as to plaintiff nor as to its rights of property in the shares of stock or appurtenances.

Thus the two grounds advanced to sustain the judgment fail. The cause should be reversed for failure to state adequate findings to support the judgment. Findings must be made in the Trial Court. Appellate courts have no such right or function. The majority opinion attempts to accomplish justification of the result below by drawing inferences, deductions and conclusions from evidence which they claim to find in the record. It would be possible for other judges to set up a diametrically opposite set of facts from which a judgment in favor of plaintiff might be based. The very reason that Rule 52 requires findings of fact [2242] is illustrated by the majority opinion. For the technical difficulties of finding a basis of fact for this judgment are many. Indeed, such difficulties are insurmountable.

If recovery is to be denied, the findings of fact, upon which determination adverse to plaintiff is based, must deal with the admitted facts and the allegations of the complaints of intervenors and plaintiff. Thereby, these material claims must be negatived.

In order to indicate what findings must be made to negative plaintiff's claim, a review of various phases thereof will be made. First, plaintiff had a property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns, which could neither be given away without consideration nor cut off judicially without due process. Second, a trust fund was apparently created to pay these taxes by the reorganization court, and no order thereof has been shown vesting this fund in defendant. Third, by stipulation with defendant, plaintiff, as trustee, deposited a trust fund in court, which has not been distributed. Fourth, as an independent corporation, plaintiff, at request of defendant, filed consolidated returns and made a settlement with the United States, from which defendant derived benefit. Therefore, plaintiff is entitled to recovery for at least as much as it was worth. Fifth, a recovery much in excess of bare compensation for doing the acts is foreshadowed. Plaintiff has not been found to be in a fiduciary capacity toward defendant, and therefore the actual cash benefit obtained by defendant by use of losses [2243] of plaintiff might well be compensated by award of an equitable portion of the tax remission which the United States allowed on account thereof. The findings made do not negative these contentions.

First then, plaintiff was found by the Trial Court to have been the owner of all the stock in the operating company when the petition for reorganization was filed. The Interstate Commerce Commission held that the assets of the operating company, at the initiation of the proceeding, were so shrunken that this stock was valueless for the purpose of participation in either the assets or earnings of the reorganization. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the petition of plaintiff for this relief. Plaintiff thereby is found to have sustained a loss of $75,000,000.00. There is no finding that the property right in the shares of stock was taken away from plaintiff either by this order or by the decree of reorganization.[10] Because of this ownership of these shares, plaintiff claims, under the recent enactment of Congress, a property right appurtenant thereto to use this loss in consolidated return and to offset it against earnings made by the properties in reorganization. Since, under the law, all corporations concerned must consent to the filing of consolidated returns, it is clear, contrary to the statement in the majority opinion, that plaintiff had no duty requiring it to file these returns. Plaintiff had a legal right to refuse to file. There is neither finding of fact that this property right did not accrue to plaintiff nor a finding that the [2244] right vested in the subsidiary, the trustees in reorganization or in defendant.

It is found that plaintiff, by contract, transferred the stock in the former subsidiary to the reorganization trustees, after the right to file consolidated returns and have the benefit of offsetting losses against operating gains by the trustees, for income tax purposes, had accrued. These shares are thus recognized as property rights. There is no finding that the right to file or refrain from filing consolidated returns was sold and transferred with the shares of stock to the reorganization trustees.

And here it might be well to deal with one specious argument. It seems to be assumed that the officers of plaintiff could give away the property right to file or refuse to file consolidated returns either voluntarily or acting under the control of defendant or the reorganization trustees. This is strange doctrine. At the time of the transfer of stock, rights of creditors of plaintiff as well as those of stockholders were involved. By the enactment of Elizabeth, an insolvent corporation cannot hinder, delay or defraud its creditors by a transfer of property in their despite.[11] The equitable considerations are stressed by the Trial Court. The Chancellors have universally held that a transfer of all the assets of corporation, at the time not insolvent, cannot be made even by a majority of the stock.[12] Neither officers nor directors, without a vote of the majority, have such power.[13] In this case, it is of stellar importance that this right of plaintiff was its sole asset and that, upon appropriation thereof, [2245] it became insolvent.[14] Specifically in any event, the transfer must be for adequate consideration and not in fraud of creditors or it will be invalid as against stockholders.[15] There are thus equitable considerations which the findings did not exclude.[16]

In a suit where stockholders of plaintiff intervene, there must be findings that there was adequate consideration for the shares of stock and the appurtenant right of filing a return. Otherwise, the District Court would be obliged to set aside the reorganization decree in order to grant relief by recapturing the assets of plaintiff improvidently given away.[17]

But a jury argument is made based upon a bare offer, which the Trial Court properly held incompetent, that the present stockholders of plaintiff did not pay adequate value for the stock. Suffice it to say that the James interests, which are present stockholders of defendant and which will share in this windfall, apparently acquired that stock to some extent by compromise of the interests of plaintiff in the stock which it formerly held.

Second, plaintiff claims there was a trust fund created by the reorganization court in the amount of $7,100,000.00 for the payment of taxes, and that defendant added $3,000,000.00 to the fund for the same purpose. Plaintiff claims, since these funds were saved by its action in filing the consolidated returns and making a contract of settlement with the government, that it is entitled to receive some compensation for conserving the trust funds. This claim is not valid as to the fund initiated by defendant [2246] itself. A corporation has a right to set up reserves from its funds to meet contingencies. But the money impounded by the Bankruptcy Court to pay taxes was made up of funds in the hands of the reorganization trustees. There must be a finding that the Court decreed that this money should become the property of the defendant if not used to pay taxes. Otherwise, it constitutes a trust fund of undistributed assets of the reorganization.[18]

Third, plaintiff claims defendant stipulated that the $3,385,290.00 should be treated as if it had been paid to plaintiff "as agent" and the latter had placed this trust fund in court for distribution.[19] By the stipulation, plaintiff "as agent" was trustee of an express trust and, as such, had a right to deposit the fund and ask for a determination of the rights of all parties thereto, as in the nature of interpleader. Plaintiff affirmatively demanded findings upon this feature, and the Trial Judge refused to make them. A stipulation of parties to litigation that a fund is deposited in court is sufficient. The Court must give affirmative directions that the fund be paid to the proper party.[20] Before such a judgment be entered, findings of fact are required. It is assigned as error that the Trial Judge refused to make findings on this point. The Rule requires findings of fact. This is error requiring reversal. The judgment here against plaintiff did not end the case. According to the very record before us, there is still a fund in the Trial Court which has not been distributed.

Fourth, we need not go so far afield. If we disregard [2247] control of the officers[21] of plaintiff by defendant, the ownership of the stock and the appurtenant right to file returns and the presence of a trust fund, still a cause of action was proven prima facie[22] by facts which the Trial Court did find. We need only to be sophomorical enough to remind ourselves that, where one, at the special instance and request of another, does an act and benefit accrues to the one who made the request, the legal result is so standardized that for centuries it has been stated in one of the common counts.[23] Here there were two independent corporations at the time of the settlement of tax liability. They were capable of contracting with each other. Neither was longer connected with the other. Plaintiff, at the request of defendant long after the reorganization had been closed, entered into a settlement with the United States, whereby its losses were used to obtain a benefit of $17,000,000.00 for defendant. Plaintiff was not bound to refuse consent to the filing of consolidated returns. It would seem, therefore, that sufficient facts are shown so that, in an action on the claim, plaintiff should recover (quantum meruit)[24] as much as the service was worth. Findings as to any affirmative defense should be specific.

If defendant had emerged sufficiently from reorganization to pay its own attorneys $300,000.00 for the same service, it is difficult to see how the reorganization decree prevents defendants from compensating plaintiff at least for what the services were worth, which were rendered at its request and which resulted in benefit to it.

Fifth, it seems clear that definitive findings must [2248] be made on other phases in order to deny plaintiff a much broader recovery. An argument is made that plaintiff is a fiduciary as respects defendant. The tax statute provides that plaintiff could use its loss of $75,000,000.00 to offset the earnings of the reorganization trustees and thereby obtain a remission of taxes for the reorganized company. Without the loss to plaintiff, the statute would not have applied. Without consent of plaintiff, neither could consolidated returns have been filed nor settlement made. The tax statute does not go farther and lay down any rule for allocation of the benefits obtained from a remission of taxes. The principles of equity should control division.[25] It is said, although there are no findings that the history of prior consolidated returns is controlling.[26] Of course, it cannot probably be shown how plaintiff heretofore dealt with a consolidated return after there has been a divorce from a subsidiary. If we look at it realistically, but little question arises. If plaintiff were still the owner of the stock of defendant, then the allocation of the $17,000,000.00 to defendant would be reflected in the increased value of its stock. The transfer of the stock left the right untouched. Since increase in value of stock in defendant no longer is of avail to plaintiff, there should be another method of applying the remission to the loss.

Finally, it may be, as the Trial Court said, that there is an overwhelming public policy which dictates that the reorganized company should be left alone as owner of the "amazing and undeserved tax" remission. But, before we, as Judges, take this [2249] sole remaining asset without compensation from stockholders of the plaintiff, who bore the losses, and give it as a surplus to distribute to the stockholders of the reorganized company, we should set out in clear and specific findings of fact the exact steps by which we accomplish such a result.

The cause should be reversed in order to permit adequate findings to be made.

FOOTNOTES

[1]The patent insufficiency of the findings of the lower court to support the weight of the superstructure now imposed is apparent. The order adopted the opinion as findings: "Findings of Fact. Plaintiff having proposed findings of fact in addition to the findings contained in the Court's opinion filed herein on September 6, 1949, and the defendant having objected thereto, and the Court being now satisfied that all facts necessary for decision are found in the opinion of September 6, 1949, now adopts by reference all such findings as its formal findings of fact in this cause, for all purposes as if the same were fully set forth herein. Conclusions of law. The Court concludes that the plaintiff shall take nothing herein and that the defendants shall have judgment in their favor for their costs of suit." Rule 52, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2106; Interstate Circuit vs. United States, 304 U.S. 55, 56; Kelley vs. Everglades District, 319 U.S. 415, 420, 421.

[2]The opinion of September 6, 1949, thus referred to, appears in 85 F. Supp. 868. Insufficiency of findings appears in important particulars indicated below.

[2250] There are no findings as to the mechanics of use of the right of plaintiff. It is not shown whether any resolutions were passed by the Board of Directors or stockholders of plaintiff authorizing the use for benefit of defendant. There is no finding whether a gift of the right was intended or whether there was an attempted payment of consideration.

There is no finding that plaintiff was ever party to the reorganization proceeding. There is no finding that plaintiff had any connection with the proceeding except to prosecute a claim for value of stock, which was disallowed.

There is no finding that the compromise settlement with the government, in which plaintiff participated and from which benefit to defendant arose, was connected with or contemporaneous with the reorganization proceeding.

The court should have found that defendant honestly believed that it was rightfully entitled to use the loss of plaintiff without consulting those beneficially interested in plaintiff or it used the loss fraudulently in deliberate disregard of the rights of those beneficially interested in plaintiff. The court should have found whether defendant was guilty either of mistake or of fraud. The belief of defendant's officers as to its rights at the time of filing the consolidated returns is one of the key facts in the case and should have been the subject of findings.

[3]The rationale of the opinion is set forth in colorful language. 85 F. Supp. 868, 875: "An array of able counsel on both sides have put forth prodigious and ingenious efforts, one side to retain the benefits of the tax 'escape', and the other to obtain them. And all the time the taxes escaped in reality belong to the United States! The Court cannot cause these taxes to be paid, where they should be paid, to the United States."

[4]Even if the transaction were illegal, the result reached by the Trial Court could not stand. Cf. Barney vs. Saunders, 57 U.S. 534, 543: "They cannot be allowed to aver that the profits made on the [2251] trust funds should be put in their own pockets, because they were unlawful gains, for fear that the conscience of the cestui que trust should be defiled by participation in them. To indulge trustees in such an obliquity of conscience, would be holding out immunity for misconduct and an inducement to speculate with the trust funds, and put them in peril."

[5]The fact that the agents of the government, who effected the settlement, did not agree that there was a fraud on the United States is shown by United States ex rel. S. Roberts vs. The Western Pacific Railroad, 9 Cir., No. 12,723, June 15, 1951.

[6]The error of the lower court was in assuming that plaintiff is seeking an interest in the defendant corporation instead of compensation for property taken by defendant which belonged to plaintiff. The Trial Court made no finding as to the nature of the right to file consolidated returns, which only plaintiff could exercise (Reg. 104, § 23.16(a)), but which it could refuse to exercise (Reg. 104, § 23.11(a)). Until such findings are made, there is no basis for a judgment denying participation in benefit.

[7]The effect of the decree is provided by 11 U.S.C.A. § 205(f), Tilt vs. Kelsey, 207 U.S. 43, 52. Since the tax settlement between the government and the corporation occurred after the decree in reorganization, there could be no res judicata. Commissioner vs. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591, 597, et seq.; Diaz vs. United States, 223 U.S. 442, 449.

[8]An incontrovertible proof of the proposition that plaintiff had no duty to apply the loss for the benefit of defendant may be cited. If plaintiff had sold a gold mine for a profit of over $75,000,000.00, its loss on the stock of the subsidiary could have been applied to offset any taxes against plaintiff. In that event, the trustees in reorganization would have been required to pay taxes against the operating company. Once used, the power of applying the loss would be functus officii, and plaintiff would have received the entire benefit.

[2252] [9]Callaway vs. Benton, 336 U.S. 132. The error in this proceeding, therefore, was the failure to reorganize plaintiff also. An illustrative case, where the parent was in reorganization, is reported in a series of opinions as In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F.Supp. 857-921. There a consolidated return was filed during the proceedings and the benefits appropriately distributed.

[10]It is inconceivable that a decree of reorganization prevents the company, when released from tutelage, from entering engagements and incurring liabilities. Otherwise, the reorganization would be perpetual. See In re Portland Electric Power Co., 97 F.Supp. 857, 873.

[12]Des Moines Life & Annuity Co. vs. Midland Insurance Co., 6 F.2d 228. The statutes carry out the principle with various limitations. As plaintiff is a Delaware corporation, see Del. Rev. Code (1935) § 65.

[14]The trust fund theory probably applies. See Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations (Perm. Ed.) § 7371.

[15]Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations (Perm. Ed.) § 2946, notes 99 and 1.

[16]An interesting case in this Court, where the subsidiary was held liable for the unauthorized transfer of property of the parent by an officer of the subsidiary, is Clark & Wilson Lumber Company vs. McAllister, 101 F.2d 709.

[17]Since plaintiff is a Delaware corporation, the decisions of that state are cited as illustrative of the general principle. Robinson vs. Pittsburg Oil Refining Corporation, 14 Del. Ch. 193, 199; Hutton vs. [2253] West Cork Railway Company, 23 L.R. Chancery Div. (1883) 654, 671, 677; Revised Code of Delaware (1935), Ch. 65, § 65, Ch. 174. Cf. Laws of Delaware (1941), Ch. 132, § 1.

[18]The Court below, the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, was the reorganization court. 34 F.Supp. 493. It therefore had the power to set aside the decree in reorganization, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 11(8), 205(1), and administer this unadministered asset. Incidentally, the defendant cannot escape under any theory since it is under bond to pay all claims against the trustees.

[19]The stipulation of the parties was that a fund was paid into Court by plaintiff and therefore it must be returned to plaintiff's possession, unless some affirmative proof showed defendant was entitled thereto. The Trial Court held: "But, as between the parties, no persuasion of conscience or equity impels me to do otherwise than to leave the parties where they are, the defendant with its amazing and undeserved tax success; the plaintiff as the reorganization left it, without interest in the debtor." Instead of restoring the parties to status quo ante, the Trial Court affirmatively awarded this to defendant. But no findings to sustain affirmative award are present.

[22]Other grounds for constructive trust, which it is possible for the trier of the fact to find upon the basis of evidence in the record, are fraud (Restatement of Restitution, § 166, Comment b; Templeton vs. Hollinshed, 119 Oregon 620, 250 P. 747), mistake (Restatement of Restitution, §§ 49, 170; 3 Scott on Trusts, § 468), and conversion or misappropriation (Burke Grain Co. vs. St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Co., 8 Cir., 94 F.2d 458; Pioneer Mining Co. vs. Tyberg, 9 Cir., 215 F. 501). As noted in the text following, a trust need not be worked out in all probability since simpler theories may serve for recovery.

The petitions of the appellants and intervenors for a rehearing are denied. Insofar as the petitions seek a rehearing en banc, they are stricken as being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of the court. See Kronberg v. Hale, 9 Cir., 181 F. 2d 767.

ON APPELLANTS' PETITIONS FOR REHEARING

Before: HEALY, Circuit Judge, and
FEE and BYRNE, District Judges.

JAMES ALGER FEE, District Judge, (dissenting and suggesting a rehearing en banc of all Circuit Judges):

This cause involves the disposition of over $21,000,000.00. The solution requires application of novel statutory language affecting the fields of bankruptcy and taxes. I have expressed myself heretofore and still feel that the findings of the lower court do not support the determination made by two judges on the panel here.

I am unable to agree with either the denial of rehearing or the striking of the petitions which ask for a rehearing by the full complement of Circuit Judges of this Court en banc. Two District Judges and one Circuit Judge constituted the panel which heard the case. As has been pointed out in this serious and important litigation, three District Judges have, respectively, expressed three widely divergent views, while no member of the Court of Appeals has written a line on the merits.

[2262] I therefore suggest to the Court of Appeals a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges. For this there is precedent in this Circuit.[1] The practice as I understand it, substantially accords with that of the Third Circuit,[2] which is admirable. Inasmuch as this might be the court of last resort in this case, it seems fairer to have the issues disposed of by Circuit Judges.

The Supreme Court of the United States at least once has given permission to an appellant to apply to this court for a hearing en banc. 316 U. S. 649.[3] In taking that action, reference was made to Textile Mills Securities Corporation vs. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 314 U.S. 326.

At page 177 of 142 F. 2d appears Circuit Judge William Denman's motion for a rehearing en banc of the Hopper case, supra, wherein it is stated that the cause is "now pending for rehearing in this Court." V. Opinion and Dissenting Opinion of July 9, 1952, in Re Petition to File Motion to Vacate Order, etc. in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

[2288] United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

[Title of Cause.]

IN RE PETITION OF WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CORPORATION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A MOTION DENOMINATED "MOTION TO VACATE ORDER STRIKING APPELLANT'S PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC AND REINSTATING SUCH PETITION."

Before: DENMAN, MATHEWS, STEPHENS, HEALY, BONE, ORR, and POPE, Circuit Judges

HEALY, Circuit Judge.

OPINION

Case No. 12,506, supra, upon its coming at issue in this court, was regularly assigned for hearing and [2289] determination to a court or division of three judges comprising Circuit Judge Healy and District Judges Fee and Byrne. Subsequent to argument and submission of the case the court handed down an opinion and order affirming the judgment of the district court, Judge Fee dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Thereafter the appellants petitioned for "rehearing and rehearing en banc," and the court on January 30, 1952, denied the petition, Judge Fee again dissenting. —— F. 2d ——. Insofar as the petition sought a rehearing in banc it was ordered stricken as unauthorized by law or practice.

On March 10, 1952, the Western Pacific Corporation presented the petition for leave described in the caption. In its supporting brief it asserts that it is its right under the law to have its petition for rehearing considered and acted upon by all the circuit judges. On order of a majority of the circuit judges, the court has been assembled in banc for the purpose of announcing the principles of law and practice it deems applicable in respect of in banc hearings. This course is thought appropriate in order that litigants and the bar may be advised not only of the position taken by the court but of the reasons for it.[1]

[2290] The governing statutory provision, 28 USCA § 46(c), reads:

> "(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court

---

[1]In recent years it has become the custom of counsel almost as a matter of course to petition the full membership of the court for a rehearing in banc, upon suffering an adverse decision at the hands of a court of three judges. This hopeful concept of the right of litigants appears to stem from declarations in the dissenting opinion in Independence Lead Mines v. Kingsbury (1949), 9 Cir., 175 F. 2d 983, at p. 992, cert. den. 338 U. S. 900, to the effect that two judges in a court or division of three are without authority to pass upon or deny a petition for rehearing addressed to all the circuit judges.

The numerous petitions of this nature have been disposed of by the court or division concerned either (1) by ignoring the application for in banc action and treating the petitions simply as ordinary petitions for rehearing, or (2) by striking them insofar as they sought in banc action. The treatment has not in the least served to discourage losing counsel or to stem the growing tide of such petitions.

in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit."[2]

The obvious intendment of this statute is to perpetuate the United States Courts of Appeals as courts of three judges in all cases save those in which an in banc hearing is ordered by all or a majority of the circuit judges. No doubt Congress was [2291] fully alive to the fact that these courts, despite the increase in their membership, would be unable to keep abreast of the constantly growing volume of judicial business unless they continued in all normal circumstances to function as courts of three.

Important light will be shed on the problem under inquiry if we examine the method pursued in the assignment of cases, as prescribed by our Rule 4.[3] In practice the cal-

---

[2]The section was enacted as part of the 1948 Judicial Code revision. In its entirety it reads as follows:

"46. Assignment of judges; divisions; hearings; quorum

(a) Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs.

(b) In each circuit the court may authorize the hearing and determination of cases and controversies by separate divisions, each consisting of three judges. Such divisions shall sit at the times and places and hear the cases and controversies assigned as the court directs.

(c) Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit.

(d) A majority of the number of judges authorized to constitute a court or division thereof, as provided in paragraph (c), shall constitute a quorum."

[3]Rule 4, subdivisions 1 and 2, reads:

"ASSIGNING OF CAUSES FOR HEARING

"1. The calendars of the court shall be made up by the Clerk endars for the court are tentatively made up by the chief judge in collaboration [2292] with the clerk. On these calendars each case is assigned for hearing and determination to a court or division of three named judges, unless it has been otherwise ordered. The proposed calendar is circulated among all the judges, and any designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority. When the calendar is approved by the judges their action is uniformly manifested by their initialing the same, as is done in the case of court orders generally. Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative determination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc. In the instances in which at the time of assignment it is agreed by all or a majority of the judges that a particular case should be heard and determined in banc, it is calendared as such.[1] It [2293]

2. The Chief Judge after conference with the Circuit Judges shall designate and assign the judges who are to hear the causes placed upon the calendars of the court; such designation or assignment may be modified or set aside by a majority of the judges."

[1]Since the decision in Textile Mills v. Commissioner, 314 U. S. 326 (1941) approximately thirty cases in all have been heard in banc in this circuit. Nineteen of these, or about two-thirds of the whole, were assigned to the court in banc at the time they were originally calendared. Perhaps more than half of the nineteen were cases of great public consequence, such, for example, as those growing out of the suspension during the war of the writ of habeas corpus and the institution of martial law in Hawaii, or cases involving the forcible removal of the Japanese from the Pacific Coast states. Others were contempt matters involving claimed sometimes occurs, too, that examination of a case preliminary to hearing, or consideration of it after argument, leads the judges to whom it was assigned to conclude that it is an appropriate cause for in banc consideration, and they so indicate to the remaining judges. If the latter or a majority of all agree, the case is then reassigned for hearing by all the judges.[5]

If we examine the status of Case No. 12,506 in the light of this practice, it becomes apparent that it was calendared and heard by court order as one in which in banc consideration was not deemed requisite. There remains to inquire whether the losing party in the cause is at this juncture entitled as of right to have its petition for rehearing considered and ruled upon by a court composed of all the circuit judges.

The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a "court or division of three judges" the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, subject to review only as prescribed by 28 USCA § 1254. Circuit judges other than those designated to sit on such violations of the constitutional prohibition against self-incrimination.

There are no definite criteria that we know of by which to determine what cases are suitable for in banc consideration. However, causes of extraordinary public importance or those involving constitutional questions probably belong in the category.

[5]McCoy v. United States, 9 Cir., 169 F. 2d 776; Samuel v. United States, 9 Cir., 169 F. 2d 787; Tee Hit Ton Tribe v. Olson, 9 Cir., 160 F. 2d 525; Los Angeles Building & Construction Trades Council v. LeBaron, 9 Cir., 185 F. 2d 405; Price v. Johnston, 9 Cir., 159 F. 2d 234, 161 F. 2d 705.

court or division are not members of it, and officially they play, and are entitled to play, no part in its deliberations at [2294] any stage. That this is so is made clear by subdivision (a) of § 46 (see Note 2 above) providing that "Circuit judges shall sit on the court and its divisions in such order and at such times as the court directs." If regard be had for this mandate circuit judges may not intrude themselves, or be compelled on petition of a losing party to intrude, upon a court or division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit.

A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily be treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all or a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration.[6]

[2295]. Adoption of the view currently being urged would render merely tentative or provisional the decisions of the court in 98 per cent or more of the cases that come before it. On petition of a dissatisfied party its decisions would automatically be subject to a species of horizontal appeal which would completely nullify the prime statutory objective of effecting a division of the court's work. The judges other than those to whom the cases had been assigned would perforce be required to acquaint themselves with the issues and problems involved in the same painstaking manner as did their associates who had heard and determined the causes initially, and this without the latter's advantage of having heard oral argument. Obviously, unless he is prepared to stultify himself, no judge would undertake to rule upon petitions for rehearing without adequate and full study and investigation of the merits.

On these considerations and in harmony with its understanding of the statutory scheme, the court has consistently retained to itself as a matter of administrative and intramural concern only the problem whether or not any given case should be heard or reheard in banc. Accordingly, in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion the court has declined altogether to entertain petitions of litigants for such hearings. The position it takes is that, apart from the possible disqualification of a judge, the composition of the court to which a case may be assigned for determination is a matter wholly outside the province of the parties.

It has been remarked by some commentators that [2296] the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts. The hazard, we think, may easily be overestimated. It is minimized by the alertness of counsel and by informal and unofficial interchanges among the judges. Where conflicts occur they are capable of remedy by in banc action without wholesale duplication of effort, as our own practice and experience have demonstrated.

The petition for rehearing in this cause has already been authoritatively denied by the division to which the cause was assigned. The petition for leave to file, addressed to the court in banc, is denied.

From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing.

DENMAN, Chief Judge, dissenting from the court's holding that the circuit judges not participating in a division, here six of the seven such judges, (a) are without power to consider a litigant's petition for a rehearing en banc, and (b) where a rehearing or rehearing en banc has been denied by a division, are without power to vote to grant a rehearing en banc, if two of the division's judges, here with but one circuit judge, do not desire such a rehearing. This appears from the following language of the opinion:

> "A petition for rehearing in any such case, whatever its form or wording, must necessarily[1] be [2297] treated as addressed to and is solely for disposition by the court or division to which the case was assigned for determination. If the court so constituted, or a majority of its members, denies the petition, that ends the matter so far as concerns the Court of Appeals. If it grants a rehearing it may follow either of two courses: (a) it may, and in all ordinary situations does, rehear the case itself; or (b) it may for reasons thought adequate suggest to the nonparticipating judges that the case is one which ought to be reheard in banc; and if all or a majority of the circuit judges agree, the case is then placed on the calendar for in banc consideration."

* * * *

"The statute, it will be recalled, commits to a 'court or division of three judges' the power to hear and determine the cases and controversies assigned to it. Obviously its determination of any such case or controversy is a decision of the Court of Appeals, and as such is a final decision, subject to review ONLY as prescribed by 28 U.S.C. § 1254." Thus squarely is denied the power of the court en banc to review a division's decision in a "rehearing en banc . . . ordered by a majority of the circuit judges." See 28 U.S.C. 46(c).

* * * *

"From this time forward petitions, if any, for rehearing in banc in cases determined by divisions of three judges will be considered and disposed of by the latter as ordinary petitions for rehearing."

In this case the Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, hereafter the Corporation, petitions the [2298] Court en banc for leave to file a petition for a rehearing en banc. The latter seeks to establish, inter alia, that the judgment of the division which heard the case decided the main issue therein contrary to the decision of a prior division of this court.

The division in the instant case, consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges, has ordered "stricken" a petition addressed to the seven judges constituting the court en banc. This order follows a precedent of similar strikings of petitions for rehearings en banc in the cases of Kronberg v. Hale, 181 F.2d 767 (Cir. 9), Fruehauf Trailer v. Myers, 181 F.2d 1008 (Cir. 9), Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Gilbert, 182 F.2d 256 (Cir. 9).

Since Kronberg v. Hale, the Clerk has distributed no petitions for rehearings en banc to the non-participating circuit judges. From a casual remark of counsel in a social contact, I learned of the Corporation's instant petition and instructed the Clerk to distribute it to the six circuit judges not sitting in the division. But for this casual discovery and my suggestion that the stature and determination of the Corporation's counsel made it likely they would seek mandamus in the Supreme Court, the petition would have had the "striking" treatment of the above cases.

The court's opinion came after a conference originally called for the consideration of the adoption of the rule considered last in this dissent, which would have made the burden of such petitions one we easily could bear.

[2299] A. The court's decision violates (as well as ignores) the Supreme Court's decision in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, 650, a decision aimed to settle differences in the circuit's divisions.

The case of Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, held that notwithstanding the three-judge provision of section 212 of title 28, U.S.C., 1940 ed., a court of appeals might lawfully consist of a greater number of judges, and that the five active circuit judges of the third circuit might sit in banc for the determination of an appeal.

The Third Circuit in C.I.R. v. Textile Mills Corp., 117 F.2d 62 at page 70, in holding that its five circuit judges could sit en banc, states that otherwise they would not have the power to correct differing views of the judges in the divisions of the court such as the Supreme Court describes as occurring in the Fifth Circuit in John Hancock Ins. Co. v. Bartels, 308 U.S. 180, 181.[2]

The Supreme Court in its Textile Mills case at page 334 in affirming the Third Circuit and overruling our decision in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F.2d 867, 869, where we held we could not sit en banc [2300] where two divisions of the court differed as to the law controlling, states of rehearings en banc[3] that:

> . . . "Certainly, the result reached makes for more effective judicial administration. Conflicts within a circuit will be avoided. Finality of decision in the circuit courts of appeal will be promoted. Those considerations are especially important in view of the fact that

[2]Following this the Textile Mills case states at page 71:

. . . "Where, however, there is a difference in view among the judges upon a question of fundamental importance, and especially in a case where two of the three judges sitting in a case may have a view contrary to that of the other three judges of the court, it is advisable that the whole court have the opportunity, if it thinks it necessary, to hear and decide the question . . ."

[3]What is said of the need of rehearings en banc for the then Third Circuit applies a fortiori today to the Ninth Circuit. The Third Circuit in the 1941 fiscal year had but five judges and 285 docketings. The Ninth Circuit has had an increase in population of six million in twelve years. In the fiscal year 1952 it had 446 docketings. On the national average of docketings for circuit judges the Ninth Circuit should have ten judges. It has seven judges but the Senate has passed a bill increasing the judgeships to nine and the House Judiciary Committee has agreed they are needed. 'No doubt within a year we will have nine judges with three divisions sitting simultaneously. That is to say, we have 56% more docketings and will have almost half again the number of divisions in which exist the hazard of conflicting decision referred to in the Textile Mills decisions.

in our federal judicial system these courts are the courts of last resort in the run of ordinary cases . . ."

In enacting 28 U.S.C. § 46(c) Congress codified the Textile Mills decision, the Reviser's Notes stating that that section "preserves the interpretation established by the Textile Mills case."

Prior to this codification of the Textile Mills decision, there was decided by one division of this circuit the case of Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, [2301] and later in a division of three other judges; the case of Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547. The two divisions differed on the controlling law. Certiorari was sought in the Robinson case before the Crockett case was decided and it was denied. A petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court was denied. The Crockett case was then called to the attention of the court in a second petition for rehearing which was granted. The order denying the petition for certiorari was set aside and the writ of certiorari granted. Certainly this action of the Supreme Court was purposeful and deliberate.

In granting certiorari the Supreme Court in United States ex rel. Robinson v. Johnston, 316 U.S. 649, held it was the duty of this court en banc to entertain a petition for leave to file a petition for rehearing en banc, for it vacated our judgment and remanded the case to us, stating:

"... In view of the conflict of views which has arisen among the judges of the Ninth Circuit with respect to the decision in this case (see Robinson v. Johnston, 118 F.2d 998, 1001, and Crockett v. United States, 125 F.2d 547, 548, 549), and in view of this Court's decision in Waley v. Johnston, ante, p. 101, reversing 124 F.2d 587, the judgment is vacated, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court of Appeals for further proceedings, including leave to petitioner to apply for a hearing before the court en banc. See Textile Mills Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326 . . ."

The Corporation strongly urges the above contentions in its denied petition, all of which is ignored [2302] in this court's opinion. Instead it is said of the seeking of the leave to file the petition, that consideration of such action by any of the circuit judges not in the division (here six) would be "to intrude upon a . . . division on which they have not by order of the court been directed to sit."

How absurd it was, one must conclude, for the Supreme Court to order such an intrusion in Robinson v. Johnston!

B. The Cavalier Refusal of the Court to Consider the Contentions of the Corporation's Petition.

The shabby treatment of the litigant and his counsel in refusing to consider their contentions and authorities comes after the court's claim that its opinion gives consideration to "*the principles of law * * * which it deems applicable to en banc hearings.*"

No self respecting federal judge sleeps comfortably if he is conscious of having rendered an opinion deciding a case in which he has purposely failed to consider a substantial contention supported by authorities submitted to him and by such evasion has based his decision on a ground directly opposed to the evaded contention.

A possible explanation for the silent treatment of the litigant's contention and authorities in this case is that Robinson v. Johnston was deemed irrelevant because decided before the codification of the Textile Mills case in 28 U.S.C. § 46(c). That seems absurd, however, for the Supreme Court's construction of a law before its exact codification, as here, [2303] is applicable after codification. Otherwise, why in 28 United States Code Annotated are there the thousands of citations in sections of the Judicial Code, enacted in 1948, which codifies the then law and statutes?

C. The Opinion's Absurd Misstatements Respecting the Assignment of Cases to the Court's Divisions.

The opinion states:

> "... Thus the calendar as finally adopted evidences or necessarily implies at least the tentative predetermination of the judges that the cases assigned to courts of three are not of such character as to warrant their being heard before the court in banc..."

The Supreme Court in the Textile Mills case has established a definite criterion for the rehearings en banc provided for in 28 U.S.C. § 46(c). It is the only one there stated, though there are others. It is that conflicts of law between the decisions of two of the court's divisions are cause for rehearing en banc. By clearing the law en banc, the circuit does so for the 96.3% of litigation in which this court's decisions are final.

Such en banc action prevents the burden on the Supreme Court, such as in the certification of the question of such differing divisions in Lang's Estate v. C.I.R., 97 F.2d 867, 869, a burden the Supreme Court later refused to assume in its return of Robinson v. Johnston for our en banc consideration of our divisions' divergencies.

[2304] It is almost a rude question to ask, "How, in heaven's name, are the seven judges en banc to know tentatively or otherwise that the division to which they assign the case will thereafter decide it without conflict with a prior decision of a different division"? The phrase, "How, in heaven's name," is used advisedly, for our tentative decision would require divine omniscience.

The opinion states that another criterion is whether the case to be assigned to a division is "one involving constitutional questions."

The slightest reflection shows that the court en banc could make its tentative assignment of a case to a division because not involving a constitutional question only by examination of all the briefs in all the cases to be assigned to determine whether such a constitutional contention is at issue.

Were this truly what we have done, it would have involved a volume of judicial effort comparable to that the court's opinion seeks to avoid with petitions for rehearings en banc.

In the eleven years since the Textile Mills case, the Clerk advises, we have assigned to division over two thousand two hundred cases. In but nineteen cases, less than one per cent, have they been assigned to the court en banc. These were cases whose extraordinary importance had wide newspaper notoriety. In none of the remaining two thousand two hundred cases has the court en banc assigned them to division after an examination of the briefs for that purpose.

[2305] D. Further to avoid considering the corporation's contention and authorities, the opinion misstates the source of the contention that rehearings en banc are needed to cure the divergence of divisions.

On the source of this contention the court's opinion states, "It has been remarked by some commentators that the procedure outlined by Congress for the Courts of Appeals involves a distinct hazard of intracircuit conflicts."

"Some commentators"! To what extent will the court go in order to avoid mentioning that this hazard was stated first by the Third Circuit in the Textile Mills case and on its appeal by the Supreme Court, and later implicitly by the Supreme Court in returning Robinson v. Johnston to this court because of the difference in viewpoint of our divisions. That is to say, in such holdings on the criterion of divergence, the Third Circuit and the Supreme Court are no more than mere commentators.

The opinion seeks to minimize the likelihood of a division overruling sub silentio a prior division's holding and this with the certainty of nine judges and three divisions in the near future.[4] The idea is that the judges in the division so acting, "by *in*formal and unofficial interchanges" with the nonparticipating judges, will advise the latter that the decision is at variance with that of a prior division. In my seventeen years on the bench I have had no associate so confess his mistaken act.

An examination of the three cases cited, supra, the Kronberg, Fruehauf Trailer and Northwestern [2306] Mutual cases, in which the petitions for rehearing en banc were stricken, shows that two of them were founded on such conflict of divisions and the third on conflicts in district court decisions on important matters. Also in the seven cases of Bradley Mining Co. v. Boice, 12684; Acheson v. United States, 12772; Independence Lead Mines Co. v. Kingsbury, 11959; Tanimura v. United States, 13014; California v. United States, 12184; Sunbeam Lighting Co. v. Sunbeam Corp., 12357, and Zamlock v. United States, 12753, the division judges refused consideration of the petition addressed to the seven and thus prevented the court en banc from considering the contention in each that the division's decision conflicted with the decision of a prior division.

[4]See footnote 3, supra.

E. The court's confessed fear of the burden of an overwhelming volume of such petitions may be avoided by an amendment of its rules.

Against a flood of such petitions we can protect ourselves, as has the Supreme Court, by amending our Rule 25 as follows:

"Rule 25.

REHEARING

"A petition for rehearing of a decision by a division of the court may be presented within 30 days after judgment. It must be printed, and briefly and distinctly state its grounds, and be supported by certificate of counsel that in his judgment it is well founded and that it is not interposed for delay. Twenty printed copies must be filed with the clerk of this court.

[2307] "Where there has been a denial of a rehearing of a decision by a division, a petition for a rehearing in bank may be filed within fifteen days. The petition shall be in the form above described and with the same certificate of counsel. No petition will be entertained, unless one of the judges participating in that decision shall join in seeking such rehearing."

The Supreme Court has similarly protected itself on its petitions for rehearing by a provision in its Rule 33, of which the pertinent portion is:

"Such a petition . . . will not be granted unless a justice who concurred in the judgment desires it and a majority of the Court so determines."

In the last seven years there have been but 75 dissents, an average of less than 11 per year. Probably less than 11 judges per year would join in petitioning for a rehearing en banc.

In view of our prospective three divisions and the likely need for such rehearings en banc, an average of eleven such petitions would not be an intolerable burden, less than 4% of our submitted cases. It would substantially reduce the likelihood of conflict between the divisions.

By requiring first a rehearing by the division, the district judges would not be barred from the reconsideration of a decision.

The motion to file should have been considered on its merits and granted.

VI. Supplement of September 11, 1952, to Dissenting Opinion of Chief Judge Denman in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

[2313] United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

[Title of Cause.]

Sept. 11, 1952

SUPPLEMENT TO DISSENTING OPINION OF CHIEF JUDGE DENMAN, FILED HEREIN ON JULY 9, 1952

Since the writing of my dissenting opinion herein I have been advised by Chief Judge Harold M. Stephens of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that that court has rendered a series of decisions in conflict with the decision of this court on the question of the right to consider a petition or motion for rehearing in banc [2314] where made by a litigant alone or by a single judge in the division which has decided the case.

It thus appears that this case is of the character described in Rule 38(5)(b) of the Supreme Court. The decisions of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia determining its practice there are those contained in the following communication to me from Chief Judge Stephens:

"Washington, D. C.
September 11, 1952

Honorable William Denman
Chief Judge
U. S. Court of Appeals
United States Post Office and Courthouse
San Francisco

My dear Judge Denman:

In response to your inquiry regarding the practice in this court with respect to hearings in banc and rehearings in banc under the provisions of Section 46 of Title 28 of the United States Code, I wish to advise as follows:

In determining in which cases to sit in banc, two methods have been followed in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, namely:

(1) Any judge or judges or any division of the court may request that a case be heard originally or reheard in banc. Such judge or judges or division of the court usually addresses a memorandum to all of the active circuit judges indicating why he or they thinks the case should either be heard or reheard [2315] in banc, and requests the judges to notify the chief judge of their votes on the request. If a majority favor the in banc hearing, an order to that effect is entered and the case is scheduled for the in banc hearing or rehearing.

(2) Any party to a case may by written motion or petition request that the original hearing or a rehearing to be held in banc. Such a motion or petition is submitted to and ruled upon by all of the active circuit judges of the circuit.

In the following cases rehearings in banc were ordered on the request of one member of the division of the court which originally heard the case:

No. 10446, Kephart vs. Kephart, 193 F. 2d 677.

No. 11081, Quinn vs. U. S. Not yet decided.

No. 10943, Emspak vs. U. S. Not yet decided.

In the following case rehearing in banc was ordered on the request of a judge not a member of the division which originally heard the case:

No. 10063, Stewart vs. Overholser, 186 F. 2d 339.

In the following cases the original hearings in banc were ordered on the request of the original division:

No. 11039, Thompson Co. vs. D. C. Not yet decided.

No. 11044, D. C. vs. Thompson Co. Not yet decided.

[2316] In the following case the original hearing in banc was ordered on the request of one member of the court:

No. 10473, Overholser vs. Boddie, 184 F. 2d 240.

In the following cases rehearings in banc were ordered on the petition of one of the parties:

No. 10504, in the Matter of John W. Carter, 192 F. 2d 15.

No. 10854, Columbia National Bank vs. D. C., 195 F. 2d 942.

No. 10846, Citizens Bank vs. D. C., 195 F. 2d 946.

No. 10835, D. C. vs. Catholic Education Press. Not yet decided.

Very truly yours,

/s/ HAROLD M. STEPHENS,
Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit."

It is ordered that the above opinion be printed as a part of the record in this case and that a properly certified copy be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States as a part of the certiorari proceedings sought by Western Pacific Railroad Corporation.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

Petitioners MEREDITH H. METZGER, HENRY OFFERMAN and J. S. FARLEE & CO., INC., plaintiffs-intervenors below, pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review (a) the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, entered on October 29, 1951, and (b) that Court's order of January 30, 1952 denying their petition for rehearing and striking their petition for rehearing en banc. Said petitioners are preferred stockholders of the plaintiff and submit this petition simultaneously with plaintiff's petition.

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court (R. 258) is reported in 85 F. Supp. 868. The opinion of the Court of Appeals

(R. 2214) affirming the judgment of the District Court and the dissenting opinion of Fee, J. (R. 2239) have not yet been reported. A further opinion of the Court of Appeals striking petitions for rehearing en banc (R. 2260) and the opinion of Fee, J. dissenting therefrom and suggesting a rehearing by all the Court of Appeals Judges (R. 2261) have not yet been reported.

Jurisdiction

The Court of Appeals judgment was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). Thereafter on January 30, 1952 a petition for rehearing en banc, or alternatively for rehearing duly filed was denied, the prayer for rehearing en banc being ordered stricken as "without authority in law or in the rules or practice" of the Court (R. 2260). By order dated April 24, 1952, this Court extended petitioners' time for seeking certiorari until June 27, 1952.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. § 1254(1). The Court of Appeals had jurisdiction under 28 U. S. C. §§ 1291 and 1294(1), and the District Court had jurisdiction under 28 U. S. C. §§ 1331 and 1332.

Statutes Involved

The statutes relied upon are Internal Revenue Code §§ 23(g)(2) and (4), 52 and § 141; Treasury Regulation 104, Title 28 U. S. C. § 46(c), R. C. P. 52(a); the pertinent provisions thereof are reprinted in the appendix hereto.

Statement

1. Plaintiff's $75,000,000 stock loss. In 1916, plaintiff, a holding company, acquired for $75,000,000 all the stock of respondent, an operating railroad company (R. 493). In 1935, respondent went into reorganization (Bankruptcy Act, § 77) and remained in reorganization under two court appointed Trustees until December 29, 1944 (R. 494, 1908, 1916).

On March 15, 1943 this Court reinstated the Interstate Commerce Commission's plan, which declared that plaintiff's stock interest in respondent was without equity and not entitled to share in the assets of the reorganized respondent. Ecker v. Western Pac. R. Corp., 318 U. S. 448 (1943).

This plan was consummated on December 29, 1944, when the reorganization Trustees returned the assets to respondent and respondent issued its new securities in accordance with the plan (R. 499, 2000).

Respondent's reorganization irretrievably wiped out plaintiff's $75,000,000 investment in respondent's stock. After March 15, 1943—the date of the Supreme Court's affirmance of the reorganization plan—plaintiff and respondent became and remained economic strangers to each other. However prosperous respondent might become in the future, plaintiff had no share therein.

2. The use of plaintiff's loss as a tax credit to wipe out respondent's tax liability. Staggering as plaintiff's loss was, it presented one mitigating feature: The tax laws gave plaintiff the right to deduct this loss for income and excess profits tax purposes. (Internal Revenue Code, § 23(g)(4)). This section, enacted in 1942, provided that losses resulting from the worthlessness of a stock investment in an affiliate were to be treated as operating losses (rather than as capital losses as theretofore).

Plaintiff's loss was so utilized, but it derived no benefit therefrom whatsoever. Instead, the entire benefit was reaped by respondent—plaintiff's loss was used to discharge respondent's tax liabilities. This was accomplished through the mechanics of consolidated tax returns.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, § 141 consolidated tax returns may be filed for a group of corporations headed by a common parent and interconnected by at least 95% stock ownership. In such a return, the respective losses and profits of each of the affiliated corporations are offset against each other and taxes are paid on any net profit for the group as a whole. However, only the parent can file such a return (Treasury Reg. 104, §§ 23.12 and 23.16).

Although this Court's decision rendered plaintiff's stock interest in respondent worthless, plaintiff, nonetheless, continued to be the legal owner of all of respondent's stock. This was so because respondent's reorganization was not consummated until much later. Plaintiff's ownership of this old stock continued until April 30, 1944, on which date plaintiff surrendered all of this stock to respondent's reorganization committee (R. 260). Hence the plaintiff, for tax purposes, continued as respondent's parent and had the right to file consolidated returns for the year 1943 and the first four months of 1944.*

Since respondent, during this period, had earned substantial profits from its wartime railroad operations, it would have had to pay a huge tax thereon, more than $17,000,000 (R. 262). But there was an alternative to the payment of this tax: To cause plaintiff to file consolidated tax returns and for plaintiff therein to offset its huge stock loss against respondent's profits, resulting in no tax payable by respondent. This could be accomplished not only for the year 1943, in which plaintiff's stock loss had occurred, but also by carrying this loss back and forward to 1942 and 1944, respectively (Internal Revenue Code, § 122(b)).

Exactly this was done. As a result, plaintiff's stock loss wiped out respondent's tax liability for the year 1943 and 1944 and provided the basis for a refund of the taxes paid for the year 1942.

Thereafter, in August, 1947, by settlement with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the returns for 1943 and 1944 were approved as filed and the claim for refund was denied (R. 171-5, 262-3).

* Hereafter referred to as the year 1944.

Thus respondent, instead of paying more than $21,000,000 in taxes for the period 1942-44; paid only about $4,000,000. Respondent therefore saved $17,000,000 by using plaintiff's tax credit (R. 266-7).

3. The anomaly of respondent's retaining all, and plaintiff's none, of the $17,000,000 tax benefit. Normally one suffering a loss, deductible for tax purposes, will likewise be the beneficiary of the tax savings flowing from this deduction. To state that the tax laws intend this result merely emphasizes the obvious.

Nor would this purpose be any less effectuated in consolidated returns. There a parent corporation would deduct its loss from the earnings of a subsidiary. The resulting tax savings of the subsidiary normally would automatically—through the payment of dividends or through the increased value of the parent's equity in the subsidiary—redound to the benefit of the parent which, in an economic sense, owns the subsidiary's assets.

This result would likewise accord with the purpose of consolidated returns. As will be shown hereinafter (pp. 13-19), such returns were permitted in order to give the owners of a parent corporation utilizing subsidiaries, the same tax benefits as the owners of a corporation doing business through various departments.

But this automatic effectuation of the purposes of the tax laws was impossible in the instant case. Plaintiff's stockholdings of respondent though, legally valid, were actually worthless pieces of paper during the period for which, and at the very time plaintiff was filing consolidated tax returns. The Supreme Court's decision of March 15, 1943 had severed the economic relationship between plaintiff and respondent and in fact respondent had ceased to be plaintiff's subsidiary. Hence, plaintiff could derive no automatic benefit—either through dividends or increased value of stock—from any tax savings conferred on respondent.

If nonetheless the tax savings were permitted to remain where they fell, namely, with respondent, the purpose of the tax laws would be perverted: Plaintiff's stock loss would be unalleviated by any tax advantage; the owners of plaintiff, as the parent, would be denied the benefits of consolidated returns. The prosperous respondent in turn would obtain a wholly gratuitous deduction for a loss which it never suffered. In short, respondent would obtain an undeserved and unmotivated tax windfall.

However, the parties had at hand the means to make sure that the tax benefits would go where in justice and by the spirit of the tax law they belonged, namely, the plaintiff. Suitable arrangement could have been made at the time of the filing of the consolidated returns concerning the ultimate disposition of the resulting tax savings (see infra, pp. 18, 19). Such an arrangement would have assured plaintiff all or a substantial portion of the tax savings in effectuation of the purposes of the tax laws.

No such arrangements were made. Instead the tax savings were permitted to remain where they fell—in respondent's hands. Plaintiff received none, although its tax credit and its filing of consolidated returns produced the savings and the tax laws intended these savings to mitigate plaintiff's loss.

This gratuitous conferring of a $17,000,000 benefit on respondent has a simple explanation: "The failure to observe the fiduciary principle, the precept as old as Holy Writ, that 'a man cannot serve two masters'." 48 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 8, per Mr. Justice Harlan F. Stone.

4. The divided allegiance of the plaintiff's management; respondent's domination and control of plaintiff. During the critical period in which the consolidated returns were filed, all of plaintiff's officers were respondent's employees; they received their entire compensation from respondent, none from plaintiff (Pl. Ex. 30, R. 527, 1738). Thus plaintiff's president, Mr. Curry, was respondent's employee as well as vice-president, director and a member of its executive committee (R. 719, 1724). Despite these titles, Curry's actual position was, and had been since 1927, simply that of chief clerk or office manager, under his "boss", Mr. Schumacher, one of respondent's trustees (R. 639). He considered himself merely a "signing officer" (R. 641,) and he signed whatever documents Schumacher, the trustee, or Elsey, respondent's president, told him to sign (R. 642). From June 1, 1943 until the latter part of 1948, Curry's entire compensation was paid by respondent (R. 1738, 1288, 653, 656).

During this critical period, a majority of plaintiff's board of directors were likewise employees of respondent. They, too, received their compensation solely from respondent, not at all from plaintiff (Pl. Ex. 22, R. 1720; R. 1135-1139).

Plaintiff's general counsel (Messrs. Nicodemus and Campbell, constituting the firm of Pierce & Greer) simultaneously were attorneys for respondent and its trustees (R. 793, 1119-21, 2150). For these services, they received their compensation from respondent's trustees plus additional fees from respondent (R. 534-8, 1730-1, 1738). They received no compensation from plaintiff (R. 1723).

Respondent's tax counsel were Whitman Ransom Coulson & Goetz, Messrs. Polk and Coulson being the partners in charge of these tax activities; they likewise became plaintiff's tax counsel and continued as such throughout the critical period (Pl. Ex. 39-A, 39-E, R. 543-547, 556, 1399, 1438-41). That firm's compensation for its tax work was paid exclusively by respondent (R. 548-557).

Thus, in the handling of the tax transactions, plaintiff was without independent management and independent attorneys; the financial stake of all lay with respondent, not plaintiff.

This divided allegiance manifested itself in the handling of the tax returns. At every stage, it was respondent and its tax counsel who took the initiative in the handling of these tax transactions. Plaintiff's role was confined to the mechanical, unquestioning and uninformed execution of respondent's decisions. Respondent's tax counsel conceived the plan of utilizing plaintiff's stock loss as a tax deduction in consolidated returns (Pl. Ex. 50, R. 1757, 1760-1). They made their recommendation to do so early in 1944, but only to respondent (R. 1267-8, 1410-11, 1448). They sent an opinion from New York to respondent in California (Pl. Ex. 54, R. 605)—with not even a copy to plaintiff in New York (R. 665). Respondent and tax counsel simply determined to use plaintiff's tax credit to eliminate its own taxes without bothering to ask for plaintiff's permission (R. 1448). Respondent's "full time employees", under the supervision of tax counsel, prepared the tax returns (R. 663). They were then submitted to Curry, respondent's employee and plaintiff's president and "signing officer" for his signature. Thereupon Curry did just that. He signed (R. 664). He did so without benefit of advice of independent counsel, without consultation with his board, indeed without any thought whatsoever (R. 664, 808).

Roughly the same procedure was followed in connection with the 1944 returns and the 1942 refund claim. Again respondent and its tax counsel made the decision and the same "signing officer" signed the returns as plaintiff's president (R. 623, 1018, 1449-50). However, by this time, plaintiff's president had moved to the office of respondent's tax counsel, and was receiving a $3000 annual retainer from respondent via tax counsel with instructions "to put himself at Polk's (tax counsel's) disposal" (R. 1498, 1744).

Finally, in 1947, these tax matters culminated in a settlement with the government. The same pattern was pursued in the handling of this settlement. Respondent's tax counsel procured the signature of plaintiff's president on a power of attorney—again without consulting plaintiff's board and without the board's knowledge or approval (R. 667-8, 1025-6). Thereafter, on February 11, 1947, tax counsel submitted a written offer of settlement to the government in plaintiff's name (R. 1430), but he did so after procuring authorization only from respondent, not from plaintiff (R. 1282-4, 1429-31). Two months later, on the heels of a conference with respondent, tax counsel finally notified plaintiff of the settlement offer which he had made in its name (R. 668-9, Pl. Ex. 68, R. 1788, 1460-1). The reason for this one-sided representation is baldly admitted by tax counsel: "my responsibility was to them (respondent) and not to the corporation (plaintiff)" (R. 1431).

5. The proceedings below. In October 1946, prior to the settlement with the government, plaintiff brought the instant action against respondent for an accounting for the tax benefits flowing from the use of plaintiff's tax credits in the consolidated returns.

Petitioners' motion for intervention herein was granted on April 7, 1947 (R. 122).

Both petitioners and plaintiff sought accounting from respondent for the tax savings. However, petitioners as plaintiff's stockholders, at no time connected with its or respondent's management, urged below that, on the facts herein, respondent was plaintiff's fiduciary, charged with a minimum fiduciary duty of "entire fairness" in conducting these tax transactions. To determine the fairness of respondent's taking all, and plaintiff none, of these tax savings, petitioners, inter alia, looked to the animating purposes of the tax laws which permitted these savings, to determine the extent to which this result effectuated or defeated their purpose. We urged on the basis of controlling authority in this and other Courts, and congressional expressions of purpose and intent, that the purpose and intent of the tax laws was to confer on the plaintiff, which suffered the loss and was the parent, the tax savings flowing therefrom. Hence fairness entitled plaintiff, not respondent, to obtain the tax benefits.

The District Court gave judgment to respondent for reasons having nothing to do with the above contentions—indeed, on a ground not urged by any of the parties and without benefit of any briefs thereon. As stated by Fee, J. (dissenting opinion below):

> "The major portion of the opinion of the Trial Court is devoted to the proposition that the 'tax escape' was a fraud upon the government, and therefore the proceeds were given to the defendant, an active wrongdoer. This position that there was a fraud is given no support by the tax agents of the government who made the settlement. It was expressly repudiated in open court by every party in this case" (R. 2240).

As a "subsidiary theory", the District Court stated that plaintiff's claim to the tax savings was in some fashion at variance with respondent's plan of reorganization (R. 273).

The Court of Appeals affirmed in an opinion by Byrne, District Judge, Healy, Circuit Judge concurring, with dissenting opinion by Fee, District Judge.

However, both majority and dissent rejected the District Court's grounds for its decision.

Broadly summarized, the basis for the majority opinion, leaving respondent with $17,000,000 of tax benefits, is the holding that plaintiff was under a duty to respondent to file consolidated returns, and use its own loss therein in order to obtain and confer tax savings on respondent. The majority reached this conclusion as a matter of law—federal tax law and fiduciary law—and as a matter of fact, based on findings made by it, not the District Court.

The dissenting opinion recommended reversal and remand to permit adequate findings to be made because: "There are no findings of fact which support the judgment of the Trial Court or the affirmance thereof by a majority of this Court" (R. 2239). In the course of sustaining this position, the dissent takes up the contentions of the majority and clearly indicates complete disagreement with them.

Thereafter, petitioners asked the Court below for rehearing en banc before all the Court of Appeals Judges of the Ninth Circuit, or alternatively for reargument. The same panel (Byrne and Fee, District Judges, and Healy, Court of Appeals Judge) entertained the petition and denied the request for reargument; rehearing en banc was stricken as "without authority in law or the rules of practice of this court" (R. 2260). Again, Fee, J. dissented, "suggesting rehearing en banc":

> "This cause involves the disposition of over $21,000,000.00. The solution requires application of novel statutory language affecting the fields of bankruptcy and taxes. * * *
>
> "* * * Two District Judges and one Circuit Judge constituted the panel which heard the case. As has been pointed out in this serious and important litigation, three District Judges have, respectively, expressed three widely divergent views, while no member of the Court of Appeals has written a line on the merits.
>
> "I therefore suggest to the Court of Appeals a rehearing en banc of all the Circuit Judges. For this there is precedent in this Circuit" (R. 2261-62).

Questions Presented

1. Must a former parent corporation join in consolidated Federal income and excess profits tax returns with its former subsidiary and use therein the former parent's loss to extinguish the tax liability of its former subsidiary, without any accounting by the former subsidiary to the former parent for the benefit thus obtained? The loss so utilized was the parent's loss of its entire investment in the subsidiary. It was so utilized by the former parent's management and counsel at the direction of the former subsidiary for whom they likewise were officers and counsel.

2. Does not the Court of Appeals exceed its appellate office and so far depart from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings as to call for this Court's exercise of its power of supervision (Sup. Ct. Rule 38(5)(b)), where the appeals court finds facts ab initio to affirm a judgment which it holds to be non-sustainable on the legal theories applied by the trial court, particularly where the appeals court's findings are contrary to those which the trial court made and to the evidence?

3. May a litigant petition a Court of Appeals for a rehearing en banc under 28 U. S. C. § 46(c) after decision by a three-judge panel; or may two judges of the panel strike out such petition as "being without authority in law or in the rules or practice of this court", thus preventing the petition from being considered by the court of seven judges?

Reasons for Granting the Writ

The errors of the majority below present substantial questions of Federal law and procedure which this Court should review. The importance of these errors is emphasized in the dissenting opinion below; in addition, the majority's decision has recently been criticized as erroneous (65 Harv. Law Rev. 1256, May 1952).

The Court below held that the purpose and intent of the Federal tax laws were to give the former subsidiary, respondent, the benefit of the tax savings, and not the former parent, plaintiff. Based on this construction of the tax laws, it gave judgment for respondent. The Court below thereby misconstrued the purposes of the tax laws. Its error on this critical issue of Federal tax law justifies the granting of certiorari herein. See Phillips-Jones Corporation v. Parmley, 302 U. S. 233, on writ of certiorari, reversing 88 F. 2d 958 (C. C. A. 3, 1937).

The majority below further premised its judgment on findings of fact made, de novo, to sustain a theory of recovery not even remotely encompassed by the District Court's opinion. These findings were contrary to those which the trial court made and to the uncontradicted evidence in the record. This highly prejudicial procedure likewise requires review because it is a departure "from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings" by Federal courts of appeal (Sup. Ct. Rule 38(5)(b); see also Oil Shares Inc. v. Commercial Trust Co. of N. J., 304 U. S. 551 (1937), per curiam, granting certiorari and simultaneously reversing and remanding to the District Court for appropriate findings).

The Court below decided questions of fiduciary law without first determining the applicable local law, without citation or discussion of any local law whatsoever and in fact contrary thereto.

In urging the above reasons for certiorari herein, we are mindful of the need for brevity. To that end, we shall avoid unnecessary repetition of material presented in plaintiff's petition for certiorari, simultaneously filed herein. The Court is respectfully referred to the arguments therein (including all discussion of the third question, supra), as supplementary to and in support of this petition.

We proceed to take up the reasons for granting the writ herein.

POINT I

The construction of the Federal Tax Laws by the majority below is contrary to uniform and overwhelming authority.

The majority below held:

> "There is nothing in the Code or Regulations that compels the conclusion that a tax savings must or should inure to the benefit of the parent company or of the company which has sustained the loss that makes possible the tax savings" (R. 2232).

Instead, it found that the tax laws intended to and did give the benefit of such tax savings to the subsidiary, the respondent.

A

In so holding, the majority flies in the face of overwhelming and uniform authority establishing that consolidated returns were designed and intended for the benefit of the parent, plaintiff, not the subsidiary, respondent: Handy & Harman v. Burnet, 284 U. S. 136, 140 (1931); Report of the Senate Finance Committee, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., S. R. 960, p. 14 (1928), quoted in Spreckles Co. v. Commissioner, 41 B. T. A. 370, 375 (1940); Atlantic City Electric Co. v. Commissioner, 288 U. S. 152, 154 (1933); Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F. 2d 543, 545 (C. C. A. 4, 1930), cert. den. 283 U. S. 903. The same rule was enunciated in the 9th Circuit in Alameda Investment Co. v. McLaughlin, 28 F. 2d 82 (D. C., N. D. Cal., 1928), aff'd 33 F. 2d 120 (C. C. A. 9, 1929); and by the District Court in this case (R. 269).

This was clearly stated in the Report of the Senate Finance Committee (supra), quoted in Spreckels Co. v. Commissioner (supra):

> "The permission to file consolidated returns by affiliated corporations merely recognizes the business entity as distinguished from the legal corporate entity of the business enterprise. * * * The mere fact that by legal fiction several corporations owned by the same stockholders are separate entities should not obscure the fact that they are in reality one and the same business owned by the same individuals and operated as a unit. To refuse to recognize this situation and to require for tax purposes the breaking up of a single business into its constituent parts is just as unreasonable as to require a single corporation to report separately for tax purposes the gains from its sales department, from its manufacturing activities, from its investments, and from each and every one of its agencies."

To assure that the consolidated group would "in reality (be) one and the same business", Congress adopted the requirement that the parent own 95% of the stock of its subsidiary. It did so with the clear contemplation and design that such a requirement would assure this economic unity. Thus, the same Committee (supra, at p. 14) stated

> "Much of the apprehension about consolidated returns will be removed when it is realized that it is only when the corporations are really but one corporation that the permission to file consolidated returns is given, and that no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results. The present law permits the filing of consolidated returns only where one corporation owns at least 95 percent of the stock of the other corporation or if at least 95 per cent of the stock of both corporations is owned by the same interest. The provision embodies the business man's conception of a practical state of facts."

Thus the purpose of consolidated returns was simply to give the common owner of a corporation operating through subsidiaries the same tax benefits as the owner of a corporation operating through various departments. In both cases the intended beneficiary was neither the department nor the subsidiary, but rather the owners of the business, i.e., the parent and its stockholders. Hence, neither the department nor the subsidiary, if it operates profitably, would have any ground in its own person to seek a reduction of its taxes, even though another department or another subsidiary has sustained a loss. But the parent (the common owner) can do so because the profits and losses of each department or subsidiary are the profits and losses of the parent.

Hence the right to offset such losses and profits against each other in consolidated returns is the parent's right created in its interest and for its benefit; any advantage flowing to the subsidiary therefrom is merely incidental and the happenstance by which the parent obtains its intended advantage. Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner (supra).

None of the above authorities were discussed or even mentioned by the majority below. Nonetheless, their conclusion was rejected.

The Court below proceeded to reach a diametrically opposite and contrary result, i.e., the tax laws intended to give the subsidiary (the respondent) all the benefit of consolidated returns and the parent (plaintiff) none. The majority cites no authority whatsoever for this conclusion. Nor can any be cited. It rests its conclusion on a fragmentary analysis of two provisions of the tax law: the provision giving the subsidiary the right to refuse to join in consolidated returns; and the provision permitting consolidated returns for a period of affiliation less than the taxable year, even though such affiliation had ceased at the time for filing such returns.

Neither of these provisions justifies the Court below's conclusions therefrom. The right of the parent, which alone can file consolidated returns, to refuse to do so is not comparable to the right of the subsidiary to refuse to do so. Giving this right to the parent was in furtherance of the purpose and intent that the parent should be the beneficiary of the benefits. Congress viewed the parent and its stockholders as the owners of one business consisting of a group of affiliates (supra, pp. 14, 15). It therefore gave the parent the sole right to file consolidated returns for the group on the assumption that as the common owner it would and should determine, in its own self-interest whether or not to file such returns. As stated in Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner (supra):

> "It (Congress) assumed that if there was that degree of affiliation which the law required, there was a dominant control, and it gave to that dominant control the right to make the choice" (p. 545).

Hence, concluded that Court, if the parent were to "decide that its best interests require filing by it of a separate tax return, no provision of the law denies it this privilege" (p. 545).

The subsidiary's right was not given for any such reason. Congress obviously did not view the subsidiary as the owner of the group. Therefore, the subsidiary's right to refuse to join is not, like the parent's, given in recognition of its position as the common owner. In fact, it is no more than a protective veto to cover this possible eventuality: Despite the presence of 95% stock ownership, the subsidiary might still be independent of and not properly an economic unit with the parent; it could then exercise its veto and refuse to join in consolidated returns. This has occurred when the subsidiary's trustee in bankruptcy exercised this veto. George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F. 2d 72 (C. C. A. 2, 1937).*

Equally unfounded is the Court's reliance on tax law provisions permitting consolidated returns for a period of affiliation less than the taxable year, though the affiliation had ceased at the time of actual filing of returns. Permitting the filing of such returns has an obvious justification: Consolidated returns, if appropriate for a full tax year, are just as appropriate for any part thereof in which the affiliation existed. But such consolidated returns are no different from others. The fact that such returns could be filed does not prove, as the Court below held, that "any benefits to the subsidiary obviously cannot inure to the parent" (R. 2230). Since only the parent can file consolidated returns, its self-interest will determine whether it should or should not file such returns for a shortened period. If the subsidiary in its self-interest should deem it appropriate, it may prevent the filing by exercising its protective veto of non-consent. In short, the filing or non-filing of such returns and the sharing of the benefits therefrom could well be the subject of negotiation and result in both sharing. On the other hand, the parent, in the very act of terminating the affiliation, can insure itself the benefit of subsequent filing of consolidated returns. Thus, if the parent were selling its 95% stock interest in a subsidiary to a stranger and at the time of sale knew that its loss in a consolidated return would confer a $17,000,000 tax saving on the subsidiary, could it be doubted that this would be reflected in the price of the stock being sold?

* As is urged in plaintiff's petition for certiorari, the decision below in effect nullifies this protective veto. The Court below expressly stated that the trustee in reorganization herein, if it had the loss, would have been under a mandatory duty to join in consolidated returns with plaintiff and contribute its loss thereto (R. 2233).

From this right to file consolidated returns after termination of affiliation, the Court further deduces that the tax laws do not "require 'economic unity'". Nor did the appellants argue, as stated by the Court, that the tax laws did "require" economic unity. Instead, appellants argued that the tax laws contemplated that there would be economic unity during the period of affiliation; the authorities established this contention; (supra, pp. 14, 15). And the statute required 95% stock ownership on the theory that compliance with this requirement would effectuate the contemplated objective of economic unity. Instances have arisen where despite literal compliance with the statutory requirement of 95%, the contemplated economic unity did not in fact exist. Nonetheless, the Courts have held that compliance with the literal statutory requirement is the test for the filing of consolidated returns. Burnet v. Aluminum Goods Mfg. Co., 287 U. S. 544 (1932); George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F. 2d 72 (C. C. A. 2, 1937); Trinity Buildings Corp. v. Commissioner, 40 B. T. A. 1315 (1939). It is precisely that compliance with the literal statutory requirement which permitted consolidated returns herein, dispite the absence of economic unity.

But this result hardly establishes, as the Court below found, that therefore consolidated returns are permitted for the benefit of the subsidiaries. The purpose of the tax laws remains unaltered. But in this and similar cases the purpose of the tax laws is not automatically effectuated. The parent's normal and automatic benefiting from its subsidiary's savings, could not occur; it held mere pieces of paper representing neither equity nor right to dividends. Hence, the statutory purpose required effectuation in another fashion, namely, by an agreement among the parties allocating the resulting tax savings.

Agreements of this type are expressly permitted by the tax regulations (Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.15(a) and (d), Appendix herein). Such agreements are a familiar device and have received administration sanction and approval. Matter of Consolidated Electric & Gas Co., 15 S. E. C. 161

B

Finally, not only has the majority below misconstrued the purpose of consolidated returns, but it has also overlooked the purpose of another aspect of the tax laws. Congress in 1942 made a loss in the stock of an affiliate deductible against ordinary income. It did so for an obvious purpose. It wished to mitigate the economic impact of such stock loss by any tax savings resulting from its deductibility. This purpose, too, has been subverted herein. For plaintiff suffered the loss, but only respondent obtained the tax savings resulting therefrom. Patently, plaintiff's loss has not been mitigated when tax savings resulting therefrom go to another, the respondent.

C

For the above reasons we submit that it is indefensible for the majority below to conclude:

> "There is nothing in the Code or Regulations that compels the conclusion that a tax saving must or

* In each case, the S.E.C., pursuant to its Rule U 45(b)(6), approved as fair and reasonable agreements allocating tax savings. In each instance, the parent received the benefit of those savings. But the question posed was how it should receive that benefit. In Matter of Consolidated Electric & Gas Co. (supra), the parent was permitted to obtain these savings by direct payment from the subsidiaries in whose pockets the savings originally fell; there, as here, the parent's loss produced the saving—the loss being, as here, in the stock of a subsidiary. In the other two cases, the tax savings were paid to the subsidiary contributing a particular deduction with the parent still benefiting therefrom. Indeed, the need for such an agreement is much stronger in the instant case than in those before the Commission. For in each of those cases the consolidated group was an economic unit and the benefits did automatically inure to the parent; thus permission for tax saving payments there was a matter of expediency, whereas in the instant case, with the economic unity destroyed, such payments were a matter of necessity.

should inure to the benefit of the parent company or of the company which has sustained the loss that makes possible the tax saving" (R. 2232).

Equally indefensible was the Court's unsupported holding that these tax laws did compel the conclusion that the tax savings must and should inure to the subsidiary which didn't suffer any loss.

This erroneous interpretation of the tax laws was then used as an essential link in concluding that respondent, not plaintiff, was entitled to judgment herein. For, said the Court, whether plaintiff be respondent's fiduciary (as it held) or both were under a fiduciary duty to deal with each other without "unfairness" (as it assumed)—performance of these duties entitled respondent to the tax savings because they were "an advantage which the tax laws give the subsidiary" (R. 2234), which "it was entitled to under the tax laws" (R. 2232), and which plaintiff "owed a duty not to require its subsidiary to forego" (R. 2234).

Again, the Court below found performance of these duties in certain conclusions of fact which it drew. We proceed to show that these facts were found, without support in the District Court's decision and contrary to the evidence in the record.

POINT II

The Court below improperly found—without support in the District Court's decision—that respondent's retention of the savings conformed with the "past practice" of the parties and "the policies and directions" of the plaintiff. These improper findings were essential for the decision below.

The majority below found as a fact that the group, since 1946, had filed consolidated tax returns and no member made any payment over to any other member of the group contributing a loss and producing tax savings therefrom.

It found that the parties, in joining in consolidated returns for the critical period herein, without plaintiff's obtaining any of the tax savings flowing from the inclusion of its loss, acted in conformance with their "past practice". Furthermore, found the Court below, filing and joining in consolidated returns in this fashion, conformed with "the policy and directions" of plaintiff.

Hence, based on these findings, the Court held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover any of the tax savings herein since defendant's retention was in conformance with the alleged "past practice" of the parties and its own "policies and directions".

Implicitly recognizing the need for findings of the trial court to justify these essential findings of fact, the majority stated:

> "In the instant case the trial court's opinion discloses adequately the issues of fact which were before the court and the court's findings thereon" (R. 2236).

As we shall see, the trial court's opinion, performs no such function with respect to "past practice"; with respect to the corporation's "policy and directions", its findings are contrary to those of the majority below.

A

The findings of "past practice" by the Court below.

The trial court made no findings whatsoever on this alleged practice; its opinion is silent on this issue. Past practice was totally immaterial for its decision. Therefore, both petitioners and the appellate court were deprived of the judgment of the trier of the facts on this issue. The majority below was therefore compelled to make its own findings de novo.

The vice of permitting such de novo findings is not merely technical. Frequently trial courts, during the trial, give strong indications that certain issues are immaterial; counsel therefore abjures rebuttal evidence; and the trial court adheres to this view in its decision. If the appellate court overrules this view and, instead of remanding, then proceeds to make its own findings of fact on such a record, the litigant and his counsel have been neatly trapped. In the instant case, the trial court did express the view that past practice and evidence thereon was immaterial.* No rebuttal evidence was adduced. The trial court in its opinion adhered to his view. Nonetheless, the majority, adopting a contrary view, has, instead of remanding, proceeded on this record to find the facts.

Fortunately, despite the absence of rebuttal evidence, there is sufficient in the record, principally from respondent's evidence, to indicate that the majority produced de novo findings contrary to the evidence.

In fact, a member of the consolidated group did make substantial tax savings payments to plaintiff. During the years from 1918 to 1924, one of the then affiliates, Utah Fuel Company, joined with plaintiff and respondent in the filing of consolidated returns. Plaintiff's losses offset against that affiliate's income in consolidated returns, gave rise to tax savings for that affiliate. Nonetheless, it did not keep those tax savings. Instead, it made tax savings payments to plaintiff, the parent.† Thus, the majority's finding (made without any discussion of these facts) that "the record is clear" that no tax payments were made (R. 2233), is refuted.

Nor was there in fact any practice worthy of the dignity and effect given to it by the Court below. Prior to bank-

* The trial court itself had said (R. 1377):

> "I just don't see the point of what any affiliated company has done in the past as a matter of practice in these returns, because they have all been decisions that have been made by the parent company, and when the parent company decided that it was proper to file affiliated returns, it filed them, * * *. What we have in this case is not concerned with that."

† The facts with respect to these payments appear from a Price Waterhouse report (Deft. Ex. 40, not printed pursuant to order; R. 2176).

ruptcy, tax savings fell into the pockets of both plaintiff and respondent (Deft. Ex. 46, 47; R. 2040-1); but to plaintiff, as the parent of an economic unit, it was immaterial, during this period, where they fell since in either event, as the tax laws intended, plaintiff automatically benefited therefrom. Thereafter, during bankruptcy, neither plaintiff nor respondent's trustees had taxable income until 1942 (Deft. Ex. 46, 47; R. 2040-1). And in 1942, unfettered by any so-called past practice, tax counsel was retained to advise, inter alia, on the "very critical question" of whether consolidated or separate returns should be filed (Pl. Ex. 39-B, 39-D; R. 544), and consolidated returns were then used merely because they were advantageous (R. 1759).

B

The findings of the Court below that the tax transactions were handled in conformance with "the policy and directions" of plaintiff.

The majority below states:

> "The conclusion is inescapable that Corporation's (plaintiff's) officers, when they filed consolidated returns, * * * were conforming with the policy and directions of Corporation" (R. 2229).

Necessarily, this must mean that plaintiff's "policy and directions" were formed and acted upon by its officers and counsel who were independent of respondent. The Court below found this independence: "The record is barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation (plaintiff) was dominated by the subsidiary (respondent), * * *" (R. 2235).

These conclusions are belied by the District Court's own findings and the uncontradicted evidence in the record.

The findings of the District Court are unambiguous:

> "It was there (in the supplementary complaint) further alleged that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation, and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant. Throughout the proceedings and in the trial, this has been referred to as 'duality of control'" (R. 264).

"* * * there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control'" (R. 272).

The trial court's opinion setting forth the chronology of events, constantly gives effect to these conclusions of fact. It reiterates that what was done in the handling of these tax transactions, was done not by plaintiff, but by respondent, its employees and its tax counsel (R. 261-263, 265). In short, it found that the men of divided allegiance did in fact serve the quick, not the dead.

The majority below nevertheless reached a contrary conclusion. But it did so simply by ignoring the facts. It portrayed the actors in these tax transactions as if they were independent representatives of plaintiff. Thus, the majority narrates the tax activities herein in terms of what was done by Mr. Curry, F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., and Mr. Polk and his law firm. Curry is described merely as plaintiff's president, and one time treasurer (R. 2224); F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., is described merely as "the General Counsel for Corporation" (plaintiff) (R. 2226); and Polk and his law firm are described as "independent tax experts" (R. 2226).

Briefly summarized, the uncontroverted facts, nowhere mentioned in the majority opinion, with respect to these persons are:

Mr. Curry, as we have shown, supra (pp. 6-8), was, during the critical period, respondent's vice-president, an employee of respondent's trustees, receiving his compensation from them, not plaintiff and, finally, on retainer to the respondent for services in connection with the very tax transactions involved herein.

F. C. Nicodemus, Jr., plaintiff's general counsel was, throughout the critical period, employed to represent respondent's trustees and respondent, and received his compensation from them while receiving no compensation from plaintiff (R. 533-6, 793, 1119-21, 1723, 1730-1, 1738, 2150, Def. Ex. 14, R. 1901).

Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz (Mr. Polk), for the tax services involved herein, were paid by respondent and not by plaintiff (R. 548, 557, 1721). Far from being "independent", this firm had the strongest ties to respondent. Throughout the reorganization it represented respondent's largest single creditor entitled under the plan to about 28% of respondent's stock, i.e., the James interests (R. 963); it was this representation and the "vital" stake of this client in respondent which caused that firm, shortly before their retention, to look into the manner in which respondent's tax matters were being handled and thereupon to be retained as tax counsel (R. 965, 536-548). As the representative of this large creditor interest, Mr. Coulson was made a member of respondent's reorganization committee and his firm became its counsel (Int. Ex. 15, R. 1625, Pl. Ex. 10; R. 1674, 1677). After reorganization, while his firm was still handling these tax transactions, he became a director of respondent, still representing the James 28% stock interest therein (R. 548).

The opinion is replete with other examples of the effect of this same sin of omission. For example: The majority says tax counsel was employed "upon the suggestion of General Counsel for Corporation" (plaintiff), citing plaintiff's exhibit 39B, R. 544 (R. 2226). In fact, this was Mr. Nicodemus' letter to his client, respondent's trustee, Mr. Schumacher. And in broaching this subject, Mr. Schumacher, writing to Nicodemus on trustee's stationery, clearly shows this:

"As one of the Trustees of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, I am looking to you to cooperate with > Mr. Matthew, General Counsel for the Trustees in protecting the trust estate in the preparation of the final return" (Pl. Ex. 39A; R. 544).

Again, the majority refers to another letter, Polk's letter of May 20, 1943 (Pl. Ex. 50) as a report addressed to Mr. Curry and circulated to Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Nicodemus (R. 2225). The trial court more accurately described this letter for what it was: a letter "addressed to Curry, vice-president of defendant company" (R. 265, ftn. 5); and it was circulated by Polk to his paying client, the trust[illegible] and the latter's New York attorney.

Thus, the majority's conclusion that what was done was in conformance with "the policies and directions" of plaintiff cannot stand comparison with the record and the findings of the trial court. The record establishes and the trial court's finding reflect that, in fact, respondent dominated and controlled plaintiff in the handling of the tax transactions.

The majority's error herein underlines the necessity for strictly adhering to the principle that trial courts, not appellate courts, ought to find the facts. The dissenting opinion below aptly summarized the vice of any other practice:

> "The cause should be reversed for failure to state adequate findings to support the judgment. Findings must be made in the Trial Court. Appellate courts have no such right or function. The majority opinion attempts to accomplish justification of the result below by drawing inferences, deductions and conclusions from evidence which they claim to find in the record. It would be possible for other judges to set up a diametrically opposite set of facts from which a judgment in favor of plaintiff might be based. The very reason that Rule 52 requires findings of fact is illustrated by the majority opinion. For the technical difficulties of finding a basis of fact for this judgment are many. Indeed, such difficulties are insurmountable" (R. 2241-2).

POINT III

The Court below's conclusions of law concerning the fiduciary relations and duties between the parties are not based on the application of any local law and are clearly contrary thereto.

The majority below held plaintiff to be respondent's fiduciary in the critical period, merely because of its ownership of respondent's worthless stock. It rejected plaintiff's contention that respondent was plaintiff's fiduciary in these tax transactions; interlocking management, says that Court, absent respondent's domination and control of plaintiff, does not give rise to a fiduciary relationship. It then assumed, arguendo, that respondent was under a fiduciary duty to deal "fairly" with plaintiff; it held that there was fairness so long as the cestui, plaintiff, suffered no damage.

The majority asserted all of the above conclusions without ascertaining what local law is applicable and without citing any local law whatsoever so holding.

In each instance, the rule of law enunciated by the Court below is contrary to the local law applicable hereto.

A

The majority's conclusion of law that plaintiff was respondent's fiduciary is erroneous.

The majority holds plaintiff was respondent's fiduciary solely because it was "the sole owner of the subsidiary's capital stock". Clear beyond cavil is the contrary rule of law: Mere stock ownership does not make the parent a fiduciary of its subsidiary. Allied Chemical and Dye Corporation v. Steel and Tube Co., 14 Del. Ch. 1, 120 Atl. 486; Blaustein v. Pan American P. & T. Co., 263 App. Div. 97, 119, 31 N. Y. S. 2d 934, 956 (1st Dept., 1941), aff'd 293 N. Y. 281, 56 N. E. 2d 705 (1944); Southern Pacific Co.

v. Bogert, 250 U. S. 483 (1919); Fletcher, Corporations, Vol. 13 § 5811, pp. 127-8. All of the above authorities require, in addition to mere stock ownership, that the stockholder in fact dominate and control his corporation. This the Court below could not find. In fact, it conceded that during the critical period respondent "was no longer controlled by Corporation (plaintiff) but by the Trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court", and respondent's "railroad properties were controlled and operated by (said) trustees" (R. 2223, 2216).

The only authority cited by the majority below for its conclusion is Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522 (1941). But there, too, at the very page cited, this Court plainly stated that it was imposing fiduciary duties on a holding company because "it has dominated and controlled its subsidiaries".* Strangely enough, the Court below, in another point in its opinion, states the same holding for that case: "Fiduciary duties also arise where one corporation dominates the other. Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522."

The majority's holding that respondent was not plaintiff's fiduciary is erroneous.

Although the majority below conceded "there obviously existed an interlocking management," (R. 2223) it nonetheless held that, as a matter of law, "the mere fact of officers and directors in common does not create such a

* The Supreme Court's complete language reads (312 U. S., at 522):

> "But equity will not permit a holding company, which has dominated and controlled its subsidiaries, to escape or reduce its liability to those subsidiaries by reliance upon self-serving contracts which it has imposed on them. A holding company, as well as others in dominating and controlling positions (Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295), has fiduciary duties to security holders of its system which will be strictly enforced." (Italics ours.)

fiduciary relationship" (R. 2222). The Court cites no authority whatsoever for this rule of law. The contrary, we submit, is a rule of universal application.

The law is the same in Delaware, where plaintiff is incorporated; in California, where defendant is incorporated; in New York, where the interlocking officers functioned and the returns were filed; and in other jurisdictions throughout the land. Keenan v. Eshleman, 23 Del. Ch. 234, 243-4, 2 Atl. 2d 904 (S. Ct., 1938); Kennedy v. Emerald Coal & Coke Co., 42 Atl. 2d 398, 402 (S. Ct., Del., 1944); Goodell v. Verdugo Canon Water Co., 138 Cal. 308, 71 Pac. 354 (1903); Title Ins. & Tr. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 205-6, 152 Pac. 542 (1915); Chelrob v. Barrett, 293 N. Y. 442, 460-2, 57 N. E. 2d 825 (1944); Globe Woolen Co. v. Utica G. & E. Co., 224 N. Y. 483, 489-90. 121 N. E. 378 (1918, Cardozo, J.); Mayflower Hotel Stockholders Protective Committee v. Mayflower Hotel Corp., 173 F. 2d 416, 418-23 (App. D. C., 1949, with numerous references). Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 245 Fed. 225 (C. C. A. 9, 1917), rev'd on other grounds, 254 U. S. 590 (1921).

The rule rests on wisdom, as old as Holy Writ, that "no man can faithfully serve two masters, whose interests are or may be in conflict"; San Diego v. San Diego & L. A. R. Co., 44 Cal. 106, 113 (1872). Just as there is danger that a director, in dealing with his corporation, will favor his personal interests, so in transactions between interlocking corporations "the danger to be avoided is that a director or group of directors, common to two corporations, may, for reasons of self-interest, favor one of the entities in its dealings with the other"; Mayflower Hotel case, supra, 173 F. 2d, at 420. Hence, courts impose "the most careful scrutiny of transactions between the corporations represented by common directors, to the end that in the absence of arm's length bargaining, the scales may not, even through mistake or inadvertence, be unfairly tipped to one side or the other"; Chelrob v. Barrett, supra, 293 N. Y., at 461.

This Court has given the classical and most frequently cited formulation of this doctrine in Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 254 U. S. 590, 599 (1921):

> "The relation of directors to corporations is of such a fiduciary nature that transactions between boards having common members are regarded as jealously by the law as are personal dealings between a director and his corporation; and where the fairness of such transactions is challenged, the burden is upon those who would maintain them to show their entire fairness; * * * This court has been consistently emphatic in the application of this rule, which, it has declared, is founded in soundest morality and, we now add, in the soundest business policy."

The Court below rejected this universal rule without discussion of the above authorities. It merely held that, in addition to interlocking management there must be domination and control. It cited no authority whatsoever for this proposition. We know of none. (The Court further compounded this error by making its own finding of fact, contrary to the District Court's finding, that there was no domination and control (discussed supra, pp. 23-26).)

Certain other grounds are suggested in the majority's opinion as possible bases for its rejection of the rule of interlocking management: Absence of assertion or proof of "actual fraud" and the openness of dealing and the good faith of the parties are adverted to (R. 2219, 2226); however, the rule is applied nonetheless. Cases cited supra, p. 29; Blum v. Fleishhacker, 21 F. Supp. 527, 533 (D. C., N. D. Cal., 1937), mod. and aff'd 109 F. 2d 543, cert. den. 311 U. S. 665; Goodell v. Verdugo Canon Water Co., 138 Cal. 308, 314, 71 Pac. 354 (1903). The issue, says the Court, is whether a subsidiary stood in a fiduciary relationship to a parent (R. 2222) and the interlocking management "was not of the subsidiary's making" but of the parent's (R. 2223). The rule of interlocking management is imposed with the same rigor whether the subsidiary or parent invokes its protection. Potter v. Sanitary Co. of America, 22 Del. Ch. 110, 194 Atl. 87 (1937); Banco, Kentucky Co.'s Receiver v. National Bank of Kentucky's Receiver, 281 Ky. 784, 137 S. W. 2d 357 (1939). Once duality is created—no matter by whom or how innocently—it subjects the entities to fiduciary standards in their dealings with each other. In re James Estate, 86 N. Y. Supp. 2d 78 (Surr. Ct., 1948).*

C

The Court below erred in holding that the fiduciary duty of fairness permits the fiduciary to use the cestui for its own profit so long as the cestui is not damaged thereby.

Having assumed, arguendo, respondent's fiduciary obligations to plaintiff, the Court below held that respondent could deal with plaintiff "for profit as long as there is no overreaching or unfairness" (R. 2221).

The Court then applied this standard. It concluded that respondent, by keeping all the profit, had nonetheless dealt fairly with its cestui, the plaintiff.

This was "fairness", said the Court, because it "did not sacrifice Corporation's (plaintiff's) interests to those of the subsidiary" (R. 2232). And there was no such "sacrifice" because plaintiff, poor and without income, could not use its own loss by itself to create tax savings for itself.

Shorthanded, the Court simply held that this fiduciary could profit at will from its dealings with its cestui so long as the cestui was not damaged thereby. This holding is not tendered as the applicable local law; it is supported by no authority. The law to the contrary is well established generally, as well as in cases specifically involving tax savings and the conduct of fiduciaries with respect thereto. (See

* Moreover, as we have seen, this argument has a totally fallacious factual premise. Respondent and its trustees, not plaintiff, created the duality during the critical period. They made plaintiff's management and counsel their "full time employees" and made their tax counsel plaintiff's tax counsel. They alone compensated them for their services.

cases cited and discussed at length in plaintiff's accompanying petition.)

The majority's conclusion is particularly shocking as a rule of fiduciary conduct, which, formulated to require conduct far above the "morals of the market place", is here applied to require far less.

In its most basic terms, the filings of consolidated returns were indeed transactions designed to make a profit. Plaintiff and respondent each had an essential ingredient for achieving the profit. Plaintiff had a $75,000,000 loss; respondent had large taxable income. The tax savings could be made only if both got together on a joint course of action, namely, the plaintiff would file consolidated tax returns for both in which its loss would offset respondent's income with resulting tax savings of $17,000,000. This was done and the joint effort of both produced those savings or profits. But only one, of all people, the fiduciary, respondent, retained all the profit while plaintiff, its cestui, received none.

Can this result possibly be fairness by a fiduciary to its cestui?

Let us compare our case with a more usual commercial analogy: Suppose that a fiduciary manages two businesses, one belonging to himself, the other to his cestui. By combining the purchasing power of the two, he buys merchandise at prices cheaper than each business would have had to pay separately. However, the entire amount of the reduced price is kept by the fiduciary; the cestui gets none of the savings. Could it be doubted that the fiduciary would be held guilty of "overreaching or unfairness"? Would even the "morals of the market place" produce such a result were there strangers dealing at arm's length? Would it be any answer for the fiduciary to say that his cestui was undamaged because it was still getting the same old merchandise at the same old price?

We submit that in our case as in the above hypothetical case, any reasonable test of fairness would deny that a fiduciary can take all and give its cestui none of the results of their joint efforts.

Conclusion

This "serious and important litigation" has traveled a most unusual litigative road. The District Court, after a thirteen day trial and upon a voluminous record (R. 264), reached its conclusion on grounds not urged or briefed by any of the parties. Thereafter, the Court below, by a majority, affirmed. But it rejected the District Court's grounds. Instead, it substituted its own and, to do so, it in effect sought to constitute itself as the trial court. The majority opinion below is the result—shot through with improper and erroneous findings of fact, misconstruction of the federal tax laws, improper and erroneous application of the rules of fiduciary law, lack of regard for local law—all intertwined and inseparable grounds for the decision below. A dissenting opinion was written, and thereafter a further dissent, making the unusual suggestion that "this serious and important litigation" should be heard by all the Court of Appeals' Judges of the Ninth Circuit.

Thus, the cleavage among the four Judges (three District Court Judges and one Court of Appeals Judge), who have thus far heard this case, has been deep, vehement and fundamental. The four have voiced three significantly different and conflicting major points of view, with further conflicts on important legal and factual premises.

Undoubtedly, these conflicts and errors reflect the difficulty of the issues involved and the large amount at stake. Landmark cases, such as the instant one, beget such deep-seated differences. They likewise require and justify hearing by this Court to set those conflicts at rest authoritatively and finally.

For all of the reasons herein, we respectfully urge that substantial justice for the petitioners and for the thousands of stockholders of plaintiff, justifies the granting of this petition for certiorari.

Dated, June 25, 1952.

Respectfully submitted,

JULIUS LEVY,
Attorney for Petitioners.

APPENDIX

Text of Statutes and Regulations Relied On.

Internal Revenue Code

§ 23. Deductions from gross income. In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions: * * *

(g) Capital losses.

(1) Limitation. Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent provided in section 117.

(2) Securities becoming worthless. If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) become worthless during the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

(3) Definition of securities. As used in paragraph (2) of subsection the term "securities" means (A) shares of stock in a corporation, and (B) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares.

(4) Stock in affiliated corporation. For the purposes of paragraph (2) stock in a corporation affiliated with the taxpayer shall not be deemed a capital asset. For the purposes of this paragraph a corportion shall be deemed to be affiliated with the taxpayer only if:

(A) at least 95 per centum of each class of its stock is owned directly by the taxpayer; and

(B) more than 90 per centum of the aggregate of its gross incomes for all taxable years has been from sources other than royalties, rents (except rents derived from rental of properties to employees of the company in the ordinary course of its operating business), dividends, interest (except interest received on deferred purchase price of operating assets sold), annuities, or gains from sales or exchanges of stocks and securities; and

(C) the taxpayer is a domestic corporation.

§ 141. Consolidated returns.

(a) Privilege to file consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns. An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of consolidated returns shall be upon the condition that the affiliated group shall make both a consolidated income-tax return and a consolidated excess-profits-tax return for the taxable year, and that all corporations which at any time during the taxable year have been members of the affiliated group making a consolidated income-tax return consent to all the consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax regulations prescribed under subsection (b) prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. The making of a consolidated income-tax return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year, the consolidated returns shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group. In the case of a corporation which is not a member of the affiliated group after March 31, 1942, of the last taxable year of such group which begins before April 1, 1942, such corporation shall not be considered a member of the affiliated group for consolidated income-tax-return purposes for such year but shall be considered a member of such group for consolidated excess-profits-tax-return purposes for such year, and the consent required in the case of such corporation shall relate only to the consolidated excess-profits-tax regulations.

(b) Regulations. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax returns and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the income- and excess-profits-tax liability and the various factors necessary for the determination of such liability, and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability. Such regulations shall prescribe the amount of the net operating loss deduction of each member of the group which is attributable to a deduction allowed for a taxable year beginning in 1941 on account of property considered as destroyed or seized under section 127 (relating to war losses), and the allowance of the amount so prescribed as a deduction in computing the net income of the group shall not be limited by the amount of the net income of such member.

(d) Definition of "affiliated group". As used in this section, an "affiliated group" means one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is an includible corporation if—

(1) Stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

As used in this subsection, the term "stock" does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

§ 52. * * * In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

Treasury Regulation 104

§ 23.12:

(a) A consolidated return shall be made on Form 1120 by the common parent corporation for the affiliated group. Such return shall be filed at the time and in the office of the collector of the district prescribed for the filing of a separate return by such corporation.

(b) Each subsidiary must prepare duplicate originals of Form 1122, consenting to these regulations and authorizing the common parent corporation to make a consolidated return on its behalf for the taxable year and authorizing the common parent (or, in the event of its failure, the Commissioner or the collector) to make a consolidated return on its behalf (as long as it remains a member of the affiliated group), for each year thereafter for which, under section 23.11 (a), the making of a consolidated return is required. One of such forms as prepared by each subsidiary shall be attached to the consolidated return, as a part thereof; and the other shall be filed, at or before the time the consolidated return is filed, in the office of the collector for the district prescribed for the filing of a separate return by such subsidiary. No such consent can be withdrawn or revoked at any time after the consolidated return is filed.

* * * * * *

§ 23.15:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), the common parent corporation and each subsidiary, a member of the affiliated group during any part of a consolidated return period, shall be severally liable for the tax (including any deficiency in respect thereof) computed upon the consolidated net income of the group.

(b) If, at the time of filing a consolidated return, one or more, but not all, of the members of the affiliated group are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United States or in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, then the liability under paragraph (a) of each such member of the group with respect to the period covered by such return shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability for such period as the several corporations included in the consolidated return may, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, agree upon, or, in the absence of such an agreement, an amount equal to its liability for such year computed as if a separate return had been filed.

(c) If a subsidiary has ceased to be a member of the affiliated group, its liability under paragraph (a) shall remain unchanged, except that if such cessation occurred prior to the date upon which any deficiency is assessed and resulted from a bona fide sale of stock for fair value, the Commissioner may, if he believes that the assessment or collection of the balance of the deficiency will not be jeopardized, make assessment and collection of such deficiency from such former subsidiary in an amount not exceeding the portion thereof allocable to it upon the basis of income used in the computations respectively of the normal tax and any surtaxes included in such deficiency.

(d) Any agreement entered into by one or more members of the affiliated group with any other members of such group or with any other person shall in no case have the effect of reducing the liability prescribed under this section.

§ 23.16

(a) The common parent corporation shall be for all purposes, in respect of the tax for the taxable year for which a consolidated return is made or is required, the sole agent, duly authorized to act in its own name in all matters relating to such tax, for each corporation which during any part of such year was a member of the affiliated group. The corporations, other than the common parent, shall not have authority to act for or to represent themselves in any such matter. For example, all correspondence will be carried on directly with the common parent; notices of deficiencies will be mailed only to the common parent, and the mailing to the common parent shall be considered as a mailing to each such corporation; notice and demand for payment of taxes will be given only to the common parent, and such notice and demand shall be considered as a notice and demand to each such corporation; the common parent will file petitions and conduct proceedings before the Board of Tax Appeals, and any such petition shall be considered as having also been filed by each such corporation; the common parent will file claims for refund or credit; refunds will be made directly to and in the name of the common parent and will discharge any liability of the Government in respect thereof to any such corporation; and the common parent in its name will give waivers, give bonds, and execute closing agreements, offers in compromise, and all other documents, and any waiver or bond so given, or agreement, offer in compromise, or any other document so executed, shall be considered as having also been given or executed by each such corporation. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, however, any notice of deficiency, in respect of the tax for a consolidated return period, will name each corporation which was a member of the affiliated group during any part of such period, and any assessment (whether of the original tax or of a deficiency) will be made in the name of each such corporation (but a failure to include the name of any such corporation will not affect the validity of the notice of deficiency or the assessment as to the other corporations); any notice and demand for payment will name each corporation which was a member of the affiliated group during any part of such period (but a failure to include the name of any such corporation will not affect the validity of the notice and demand as to the other corporations); and any distraint (or warrant in respect thereof), any levy (or notice in respect thereof), any notice of a lien, or any other proceeding to collect the amount of any assessment, after the assessment has been made, will name the corporation from which such collection is to be made. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply whether or not a consolidated return is made for any subsequent year, and whether or not one or more subsidiaries have become or have ceased to be members of the group at any time. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, the Commissioner may, if he deems it advisable, deal directly with any member of the group in respect of its liability, in which event such member shall have full authority to act for itself.

Title 28 U. S. C., § 46(c)

Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a court or division of not more than three judges, unless a hearing or rehearing before the court in banc is ordered by a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit who are in active service. A court in banc shall consist of all active circuit judges of the circuit.

R. C. P., Rule 52(a)

In all actions tried upon the facts without a jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon and direct the entry of the appropriate judgment; * * *.

The Decision of the Court of Appeals 27

Assignment of Errors 29

Summary of Argument 31

POINT I—Respondent was under the fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff because of the duality of their managements 34

1. The interlock between the managements of plaintiff and respondent imposed upon respondent a fiduciary duty of dealing fairly with plaintiff in their tax transaction (the "duality rule"); the duty existed regardless of actual domination of plaintiff by respondent 34

2. The District Court found, contrary to the Court of Appeals, and the evidence demonstrates, that the conduct of plaintiff's tax affairs was dominated by respondent 38

3. Plaintiff did not create the managerial interlock with respondent; even if it had, respondent's fiduciary duties would have been the same 41

4. The absence of secrecy did not relieve respondent from the duty to deal fairly with plaintiff 42

PAGE

5. The alleged good faith of the dual officers did not relieve respondent from the duty to deal fairly with plaintiff 44

6. The fiduciary rule is applicable to tax transactions between fiduciary and cestui 45

POINT II—Respondent breached its fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff by taking all, and allowing plaintiff none of the tax benefits produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit 48

A. The purpose of the tax laws was to benefit plaintiff, not respondent 49

1. The purpose of § 23(g)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code, in recognizing a stock loss as a tax credit, is to confer a tax benefit on the corporation which has suffered the loss 50

2. The purpose of the consolidated return statute, in permitting the losses of one affiliate to be offset against the profits of another affiliate, is to benefit the common owner of the group, i.e., the parent corporation 51

3. The Court below erred in holding that the tax laws were not designed for plaintiff's benefit 54

(a) In requiring the subsidiary's consent to the filing of consolidated returns, the tax laws do not indicate a purpose of conferring a tax benefit on the subsidiary 55

(b) The fact that consolidated returns may be filed in certain anomalous situations where the economic unity between parent and subsidiary is severed, does not indicate a statutory purpose to benefit the subsidiary rather than the parent 56

(c) The Court of Appeals overlooked that tax savings payments are particularly justified in those situations where, because of the economic severance of the affiliates, the purpose of the tax laws is not automatically effectuated 59

B. Plaintiff's tax credit was a valuable assets which, in fairness, plainfiff could not be expected to surrender to respondent without receiving an adequate share of the resulting tax benefits 61

C. Plaintiff owed respondent no legal duty to file consolidated returns and thus to make its tax credit available to respondent 65

1. Plaintiff's ownership of respondent's stock did not impose fiduciary duties on plaintiff 65

2. The holding of the Court of Appeals that every affiliated corporation having a deductible loss owes its profitable affiliates a duty to join in consolidated returns has dangerous implications, is contrary to the tax laws and finds no support in fiduciary law 67

D. The alleged tax practice of the Western Pacific group in earlier years furnishes no precedent for a period in which the affiliation between plaintiff and respondent had ended 69

E. Agreement for the fair allocation of tax savings among affiliated corporations are permitted and well supported by precedent 72

1. Agreements for the allocation of tax savings are expressly permitted by statute and regulation 72

2. Agreements for the allocation of tax savings are well supported by precedent 74

PAGE

POINT III—The Court of Appeals erred in making findings of fact where the District Court had made none or had made contrary findings 81

POINT IV—The grounds upon which the District Court based its decision were erroneous 87

A. Plaintiff's alleged inability to recover because of the injustice of respondent's tax savings 87

1. The Government was not unjustly deprived of taxes 87

2. The Government's tax claim, if any, has been validly and properly settled 89

3. Even if the tax settlement had been a wrong against the Government, it would not defeat plaintiff's rights 89

ing companies,* acquired 61% of plaintiff's common and 8.8% of its preferred stock (R. 501), constituting control. By 1943 plaintiff's common stock, ranging behind more than $38,000,000 of preferred (R. 1717), had become completely worthless.

But the James Interests also held large amounts of the secured obligations of respondent (R. 1718) which, under the reorganization plan, entitled them to 28% of the to-be-issued stock of respondent (Pl. Ex. 1). It was therefore to the advantage of the James Interests to favor respondent, not plaintiff. Thus if the tax savings here involved enured to respondent, the James interest therein was 28%; while it was only 8.8% if the tax savings went to plaintiff.

The James Interests acted in accordance with their advantage: They abandoned plaintiff and cast their lot with respondent. They decided to support respondent's reorganization plan (R. 618) which theretofore they had opposed (R. 536-7). They decided to withhold further advances to plaintiff (R. 575-6); the James representatives on plaintiff's board retired (R. 1480); and at plaintiff's annual meetings the James stock was neither represented nor voted (Pl. Ex. 19, R. 503; Def. Ex. 54, R. 1632, 2053-2069). Plaintiff was thus deprived of that measure of protection and supervision which a vigilant controlling stockholder ordinarily would exercise over a corporation's management.

Plaintiff's 4700 public stockholders (R. 659), scattered throughout the country (R. 659), were forced into equal inactivity since plaintiff was too impoverished even to

* Arthur Curtiss James died in 1941 (R. 745). He, his estate, his personal holding companies (R. 503) and the James Foundation of New York, Inc. (R. 1011) are herein referred to as the "James Interests".

 Under the plan, the James Interests were entitled directly to 21½% of the respondent's new voting stock (R. 975) and, in addition, to convertible bonds of respondent which the James Interests subsequently converted into voting stock of respondent (R. 1718; see R. 1725-8), giving them an aggregate of 28%.

send out proxies or proxy statements for its annual meetings (Def. Ex. 54, R. 1632, 2053-2069). None of those meetings was therefore attended by a quorum (Pl. Ex. 19; R. 503).

The protection of plaintiff's interests was thus left entirely to the integrity and vigilance of its officers and directors.

(c) Plaintiff's officers. During the period in which the consolidated tax returns and the refund claim were filed—1944 and 1945—plaintiff had only two officers: Its president Curry and its secretary Wienken, later replaced by Valouch (R. 1719).

Michael J. Curry was not only the president, treasurer and a director of plaintiff throughout the critical period (R. 1719, 1720) but, at the same time, also a vice-president, a director and a member of the executive committee of respondent (R. 719, 1724).*

With all his titles, Curry considered himself merely a "figurehead" (R. 646-7). His actual position was, and had been since 1927, simply that of chief clerk or office manager (R. 639); he was "merely a signing officer" (R. 641, 1450) and signed whatever documents Schumacher (respondent's chairman) or Elsey (respondent's president) told him to sign (R. 642).

From June 1, 1943 Curry's entire compensation was paid by respondent (R. 1738); nothing whatever by plaintiff (R. 645).

After the closing of the New York office on April 30, 1945, respondent arranged for Curry to move to the offices of Whitman Ransom Coulson and Goetz, respondent's tax counsel (R. 1287-8), and for them to pay him a $3,000 annual "retainer", because Curry's services "as president of the old holding company" (i.e., plaintiff) were "essential"

* Curry resigned as respondent's vice-president on April 30, 1945 (R. 1724) and as respondent's director on November 20, 1944 (R. 719).

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1952

No. 160

MEREDITH H. METZGER, HENRY OFFERMAN and J. S. FARLEE & CO., INC.,

Petitioners,

vs.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, SACRAMENTO NORTHERN RAILWAY, TIDEWATER SOUTHERN RAILWAY, DEEP CREEK RAILROAD COMPANY, THE WESTERN REALTY COMPANY, THE STANDARD REALTY AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY and DELTA FINANCE CO., LTD.,

Respondents.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF FOR PETITIONERS

Opinions Below

The decision of Goodman, D.J., in the United States District Court for Northern California, Southern Division (R. 258), dismissing the action after a trial without jury, is reported 85 F. Supp. 868.

The District Court's decision was affirmed on appeal. The prevailing and dissenting opinions in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, both on the appeal itself and on petitions for rehearing (R. 2214, 2239, 2260, 2261, 2289, 2296), are reported 197 F. 2d 994.

A supplemental dissenting opinion (R. 2313) has not yet been reported.

Jurisdiction

The District Court's jurisdiction was predicated on diversity of citizenship and presence of the jurisdictional amount; 28 U. S. C., § 1332. The jurisdictional facts are alleged in the Complaint (R. 6) and admitted in the Answers (R. 12, 117-8).

The jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals rested on 28 U. S. C., § 1291.

The jurisdiction of this Court rests on 28 U. S. C., § 1254(1). The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered October 29, 1951 (R. 2255). A timely petition for rehearing, filed December 17, 1951, was denied on January 30, 1952 (R. 2256-7, 2259-60). On April 24, 1952, by order of Mr. Justice Douglas, petitioners' time to file a petition for certiorari was extended to June 27, 1952. The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed June 26, 1952, and granted October 13, 1952.

The Parties

This action was brought by the plaintiff Western Pacific Railroad Corporation (hereinafter called the "plaintiff" or the "Corporation"). The defendants, respondents here, are the Western Pacific Railroad Company (hereinafter called "respondent" or the "Company")* and certain of its subsidiaries. The latter have comparatively minor stakes in this litigation.

* With respect to the period from November 1935 to December 1944, the reference to "respondent" or the "Company" will include its reorganization trustees in whose hands, during that time, were respondents' assets and affairs. Respondent, upon emerging from its reorganization, assumed the obligations of the trustees (Pl. Ex. 15, R. 499, 1712, 1713).

The petitioners here are preferred stockholders of plaintiff, owning 25,465 shares of plaintiff's preferred stock (R. 1650-2); about 6.7% of all of the preferred outstanding (R. 1717). Petitioners became stockholders of plaintiff between July 1942 and February 1944, long before the transactions complained of (R. 1650-2).

Petitioners were permitted to intervene in this action as parties plaintiff (R. 122). Plaintiff as well as petitioners appealed from the adverse decision of the District Court (R. 326-7); and, after the affirmance by the Court of Appeals, both were granted certiorari by this Court.

In the light of the able and learned brief submitted by counsel for plaintiff, we would hesitate to burden this Court with an additional memorandum were it not for certain differences in presentation and analysis which we consider as important. The differences arise from the history of the litigation and the peculiar position of these petitioners.

In June, 1946—prior to this action—the petitioners instituted a stockholders' action in the federal District Court for Southern New York, in which the claim involved herein (in addition to other claims) was asserted for the first time (R. 337, 706-7, 1024). The New York complaint alleged, in short, that plaintiff and respondent had interlocking managements; that plaintiff was controlled by respondent's agents; that these facts created a fiduciary relation between plaintiff and respondent, requiring respondent to deal fairly with plaintiff; and that respondent, in certain tax transactions with plaintiff, had breached its fiduciary duty to plaintiff by appropriating all benefits of the transactions to itself and allowing none to plaintiff.

After the legal sufficiency of the New York complaint had been sustained (R. 337), plaintiff's management and attorneys (named as defendants in New York) caused the Corporation to bring the present action on October 10, 1946, complaining of the same tax transactions with respondent (R. 5).

Plaintiff, however, failed to allege the managerial interlock between the parties or the control of plaintiff by respondent's agents. Accordingly, we moved for leave to intervene herein on the ground that plaintiff's management inadequately represented the rights of plaintiff and its stockholders; and this motion was granted on April 7, 1947 (R. 122).

Our intervenors' complaint (R. 123) alleged the facts, omitted by plaintiff, establishing what we conceive to be the all-important fiduciary relation between plaintiff and respondent. Plaintiff at first denied these allegations and put us to our proof * (R. 156); later on plaintiff adopted certain of our allegations, but not those referring to its own personnel (R. 208); until finally plaintiff's present counsel, retained on the eve of trial, likewise proclaimed the existence of the fiduciary relation.

Nonetheless, substantial differences still exist between plaintiff and petitioners in the presentation and analysis of the factual basis and the legal effect of this fiduciary relation. As intervenors, we are not bound by any admissions of plaintiff, Park & Tilford v. Schulte, 160 F. 2d 984, 988-9 (C. C. A. 2, 1947), cert. den. 332 U. S. 761. We are therefore impelled to submit this separate brief in which, appearing on behalf of stockholders (not management), we can let the chips fall where they will.

Statement of Case

1. Plaintiff's $75,000,000 stock loss.

In 1916 plaintiff, a holding company, acquired all the stock of respondent, an operating railroad company (R. 493). Plaintiff's investment in respondent's stock was more than $75,000,000 (R. 262).

* The petitioners accepted this invitation, as demonstrated by the extensive depositions (R. 275) which produced the evidence at the trial.

In 1935 respondent went into bankruptcy reorganization (Bankruptcy Act, § 77) in the District Court for Northern California, Southern Division. Its property was placed in the hands of two court-appointed trustees (R. 494). In 1939 the Interstate Commerce Commission promulgated a plan of reorganization (233 I. C. C. 409) which declared that respondent's stock held by plaintiff was worthless and not entitled to share in the assets of the reorganized Company (R. 259, 495). Under the plan the secured creditors of respondent were to become its new owners and were to receive all of its stock, when issued.

This reorganization plan was approved by the District Court in 1940 (R. 259). Although reversed on appeal, In re Western Pac. R. Co., 124 F. 2d 136 (C. C. A. 9, 1941), the plan was, on March 15, 1943, reinstated and affirmed by this Court and thus became final; Ecker v. Western Pac. R. Corp., 318 U. S. 448 (1943). In due course, the plan was confirmed on October 11, 1943 (R. 260); and it was consummated on December 29, 1944 when the reorganization trustees returned the assets to respondent and respondent issued its new securities in accordance with the plan (R. 499, 2000).

The results of respondent's reorganization were shattering to plaintiff. Its principal asset, the $75,000,000 investment in respondent's stock, was totally lost. The loss was irretrievable; for however prosperous respondent might become in the future, plaintiff had no part therein. From March 15, 1943—the date of this Court's affirmance of the reorganization plan—the economic unity between plaintiff and respondent was severed: plaintiff and respondent became and remained complete strangers to each other.

2. Plaintiff's tax credit and its use to save respondent's taxes.

Staggering as plaintiff's loss was, it presented one mitigating feature: The amount of the loss could be used as an income and excess profits tax deduction. The right to this tax credit was created by Internal Revenue Code, § 23(g)(4),* enacted in 1942 (56 Stat. 820), which provided that losses resulting from the worthlessness of the stock of an affiliate are to be treated as operating losses (rather than as capital losses as theretofore).

But plaintiff was not allowed to derive any benefit from this tax credit. Instead, the entire benefit was reaped by respondent. This was accomplished through the mechanics of consolidated tax returns.

(a) Consolidated tax returns may be filed by an affiliated group of corporations headed by a common parent and inter-connected by at least 95% stock ownership (Internal Revenue Code, § 141). In such a consolidated return the affiliated group is treated, for tax purposes, as a single enterprise, so that the losses sustained by any one or more affiliates are deducted from the profits realized by the other affiliates. Only if the group as a whole realizes a net profit is a tax payable thereon.

A consolidated return can be filed only by the parent corporation of the group; and it requires the consent of all affiliates. Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.12(b) and § 23.16(a), 26 C. F. R. (1949), § 23.12(b) and § 23.16(a).

(b) Plaintiff, as stated, owned all of respondent's stock. Although this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, had rendered the stock economically worthless, the stock was still legally valid because respondent's reorganization was not yet consummated. Plaintiff continued to own the stock until April 30, 1944, on which date plaintiff surrendered it to respondent's reorganization committee (R. 260). This legal stock ownership made it possible for plaintiff to file consolidated tax returns for itself and respondent, covering the year 1943 and the first four months of 1944 (see infra, pp. 57-58).

During this period respondent had realized very substantial profits from its war-time railroad operations. Ordinarily respondent would have had to pay a huge tax—more than $17,000,000—on its profits (R. 262). But there was an alternative to the payment of this tax: If plaintiff filed consolidated tax returns, plaintiff's tax credit arising from its stock loss could be offset against respondent's profits, and no tax would be payable. This possibility of offsetting plaintiff's loss against respondent's profits existed not only in the year 1943, in which plaintiff's stock loss had occurred; but plaintiff's tax credit could also be "carried back" to 1942 and "carried forward" to 1944 (Internal Revenue Code, § 122(b)).

* The text of the statutes and regulations cited is set forth in the Appendix of this brief.

(c) The opportunities offered by the tax laws were utilized. Under circumstances to be detailed below, respondent caused plaintiff to file consolidated returns for 1943 and the first four months of 1944.* These returns (Pl. Exs. 4-A, 4-B, 5-A, 5-B) claimed plaintiff's stock loss as a complete offset to respondent's earnings; hence they reported no tax as due; and respondent paid no taxes for these periods (R. 266-7).

Nor was this all. Respondent had paid $4,201,821.54 in taxes for 1942 (Pl. Ex. 6; R. 492, 1654-6). But the carry-back of plaintiff's stock loss to 1942 would eliminate all of respondent's tax liability for that year. Accordingly, plaintiff filed a claim with the Government for the refund of these $4,201,821.54 (Pl. Ex. 6; R. 492, 1654).

These documents—the consolidated returns and the refund claim—were each filed after March 15, 1943, the date of the economic severance of plaintiff and respondent, namely:

the 1943 returns on July 15, 1944;
the 1942 refund claim on March 9, 1945;
the 1944 returns on June 15, 1945.

(Pl. Exs. 4-A, 4-B, 5-A, 5-B, 6; R. 491-2.)

* For brevity, the returns for the first four months of 1944 are hereinafter referred to as the "1944 returns".

(d) The Government did at first dispute the propriety of deducting plaintiff's stock loss, principally on the ground that the loss had occurred in 1940 and was therefore inadmissible as a deduction against 1943 income (R. 267, 1423-8). Finally, however, in August 1947, the Government consented to a settlement; plaintiff agreed to the rejection of its refund claim for 1942, while the Government acquiesced in the 1943 and 1944 tax returns showing no tax due (R. 171-5, 262-3).

The District Court found that, but for the use of consolidated returns and the deduction of plaintiff's stock loss, respondent would have had to pay more than $21,000,000 in taxes for the period 1942 to 1944 (R. 261-2, 265). As a result of the settlement, respondent paid only about $4,000,000, so that it realized a net tax saving of more than $17,000,000 (R. 266-7).

All of these savings were retained by respondent. Plaintiff has obtained none.

3. The anomalous nature of respondent's retention of the tax saving and the denial of any tax benefit to plaintiff.

(a) Normally the tax credit arising from a stock loss—such as that sustained by plaintiff—redounds to the benefit of the party who suffered the loss. This is as it should be, since the tax deduction is designed to mitigate the loss.

Normally, this reasonable result obtains also where a parent corporation, by filing consolidated returns, deducts its loss from the earnings of a subsidiary. For the tax saving of the subsidiary redounds automatically—through the payment of dividends or through the increased value of the parent's equity in the subsidiary—to the benefit of the parent which, in an economic sense, owns the assets of the subsidiary. Again this accords with the purpose of the tax law which permits consolidated returns in order to give the parent, as the owner of the group, the benefit of all group losses, both its own and its subsidiaries'.

But this normal and intended result of the operation of the tax laws (more fully discussed infra, pp. 50 et seq.) completely failed in the case at bar. At the time the consolidated returns here were filed, plaintiff's stockholdings in respondent had been declared worthless by this Court; the economic relationship between plaintiff and respondent had been severed; and plaintiff derived no benefit whatever from any tax savings flowing to respondent. The purpose of the tax laws was thus perverted: The prosperous respondent obtained a wholly gratuitous deduction for a loss which it had never suffered; while the intended automatic upstream flow of respondent's tax saving to its parent, the plaintiff, was prevented by the economic severance of the parties. Plaintiff's stock loss remained unalleviated by any tax advantage; while respondent obtained an undeserved and unmotivated tax windfall.

(b) Plaintiff nevertheless had the means to cause the tax benefits to go where, in justice and by the spirit of the tax law, they belonged, namely, to plaintiff. For plaintiff had, as a matter of law, a free choice whether or not it would file consolidated returns (R. 1458).* Before filing consolidated returns plaintiff's management could have made suitable arrangements with respondent concerning the ultimate disposition of the resulting tax savings—a type of arrangement both legal and by no means unusual (infra, pp. 72 et seq.). If respondent was willing to do equity it was bound to agree that the tax benefits flowing from plaintiff's $75,000,000 loss should belong to plaintiff in order to mitigate that loss. If respondent insisted on its pound of flesh, plaintiff could at least have made sure that it would receive an appropriate portion of the tax savings. Under no circumstances was respondent in a position to demand that all the tax savings be given to it and that plaintiff get nothing.

* Under Internal Revenue Code, § 141(a), the filing of consolidated returns is a "privilege" the exercise of which is optional. The fact that plaintiff had filed consolidated returns in earlier years, did not prevent it from filing separate returns for 1943 and 1944; 2 Montgomery's Federal Taxes, Corporations and Partnerships (1946-47), 649-650.

And yet this is precisely what was done. Although virtually all of the tax savings were, by the intent of the tax law and by every instinct of reason and equity, intended to mitigate plaintiff's loss; and although none of the savings could have been accomplished without plaintiff's filing consolidated returns and the use of plaintiff's tax credit; nevertheless plaintiff was not allowed to receive one cent. Respondent was permitted to retain for itself the entire $17,000,000.

4. Duality of Management.

This complete and abject surrender of plaintiff's interest to respondent has a simple explanation: The allegiance of plaintiff's management to respondent. In short, during the critical period in which the consolidated returns were filed, plaintiff's officers were actually subordinate employees of respondent; a majority of plaintiff's board of directors were employees of respondent; plaintiff's lawyers were simultaneously lawyers for respondent. All compensation paid to these persons was paid solely by respondent, not one cent by plaintiff. These were the people who were charged with the responsibility of protecting plaintiff's interests in its relation to respondent.

The duality of allegiance of plaintiff's management forms an important basis of our claim; it created the fiduciary relation and respondent's duty to deal fairly with plaintiff. The facts must therefore be stated in somewhat more detail.

(a) Plaintiff's financial collapse and its dependence on respondent. This Court's affirmance of respondent's reorganization plan on March 15, 1943 left plaintiff as an empty corporate shell. Its assets were pledged with creditors; it had no income; it had no funds (Pl. Ex. 47; R. 570, 573, 789-790). Its principal investment, the stock of respondent, was declared worthless. At the same time, its only other substantial asset, a one-half interest in the stock of the Denver Railroad, was eliminated by the latter's reorganization plan (R. 575).* As one of plaintiff's directors put it, plaintiff had become a "corporation without assets", a mere "non-entity" (R. 1130-1).

From the early days of their affiliation, plaintiff and respondent had maintained a joint office in New York, staffed by common employees (R. 643). On June 1, 1943, on the heels of this Court's decision, respondent assumed the whole expense of the New York office and took over plaintiff's officers as "full time employees" of respondent (Pl. Ex. 30, R. 527, 1738). The individuals thus taken over by respondent nevertheless remained the officers of plaintiff, but received their compensation solely from respondent, nothing from plaintiff (Pl. Ex. 23, R. 520, 1721; Pl. Ex. 27, R. 523, 1729-33). On April 30, 1945, at respondent's direction, the New York office was closed (R. 650) and plaintiff's officers and records were quartered at the offices of Whitman Ransom Coulson and Goetz, respondent's New York tax counsel (R. 651-2, 655).

Plaintiff's financial collapse, as will be seen, had its inevitable effect upon plaintiff's officers, directors and lawyers. Even plaintiff's dominant stockholder, finding its economic stake in respondent much larger than that in plaintiff, switched its allegiance to respondent.

(b) Plaintiff's stockholders (the James Interests). In 1925, one Arthur Curtiss James, through his personal hold-

* The Denver's reorganization plan, approved by the I. C. C.'s order of June 14, 1943 (254 I. C. C. 349, 385), was subsequently affirmed by this Court, Reconstruction Finance Corp. v. Denver and R. G. W. R. Co., 328 U. S. 495 (1946).

"in connection with the pending tax questions which your company [i.e., respondent] has up with the Federal Government" (Pl. Ex. 32-A, R. 528, 1744). Respondent agreed to reimburse Whitman Ransom for these retainer payments "as one of our disbursements in connection with the pending tax matters" (R. 1746, 1288). Thus respondent paid Curry in order that, as plaintiff's president, he might help respondent in its tax matters. Respondent also paid Curry a small pension (R. 653). Curry remained with the Whitman Ransom firm until the latter part of 1948 (R. 656).

During the time when Curry should have safeguarded plaintiff's interest against encroachments by respondent, he was thus an officer and director of respondent and his livelihood depended on respondent.

John F. Wienken was plaintiff's only other officer, to wit, its secretary; and he remained such until May 1, 1945 (R. 1719). He was also a director of plaintiff until April 25, 1946 (R. 1720). Although adorned with these weighty titles, Wienken was actually a stenographer (R. 648) employed by both plaintiff and respondent in the joint New York office. Since June 1, 1943, his $2,875 annual salary was paid solely by respondent (R. 1735, 1738).

Mary C. Valouch became the secretary and a director of plaintiff on May 1, 1945, upon Wienken's resignation and the closing of the New York office (R. 1719, 1720). For many years before that date, Valouch had been a clerk in the employ of respondent (R. 530); she handled the Western Pacific tax matters and did secretarial work (R. 647). Since June 1, 1943 she received her salary—less than $3,000 annually—solely from respondent (R. 1735, 1738). Upon the closing of the New York office and her appointment as secretary and a director of plaintiff, she moved—together with Curry—to the Whitman Ransom firm and became its employee (R. 530, 652).

Each of the three officers of plaintiff—Curry as president, and Wienken, succeeded by Valouch, as Secretary—was thus during the critical period in the employ and pay of respondent and subject to the inevitable tug of loyalty to his paymaster. By the very nature of their employment they were nothing but dummies and figureheads.

(d) Plaintiff's directors. Nine persons were; during all or part of the critical period from 1944 to 1945, directors of plaintiff: Curry, Wienken, Valouch (from May 1, 1945), Schumacher, Sheehan (from February 15, 1944), Hatton, Osborn, Wood and Campbell (until May 1, 1945) (Pl. Ex. 22, R. 1720).

Three of these—Curry, Wienken and Valouch—have been discussed and their financial dependence on respondent shown.

Thomas M. Schumacher was the real "boss" of the New York office before and during the critical period (R. 639, 736). Since 1927 he had been the chief executive officer and a director of both plaintiff and respondent (R. 735); and in 1935 the bankruptcy court appointed him as one of the two reorganization trustees of respondent (R. 735). On February 1, 1942—before the critical period of the consolidated returns here involved—Schumacher resigned as plaintiff's president because of plaintiff's inability to pay his $15,000 salary (R. 743). Nevertheless, in his capacity as trustee for respondent (R. 738-9), Schumacher continued "in command of the New York office" (R. 736) until December 31, 1944, when respondent emerged from the reorganization and Schumacher retired (R. 1724) with a $12,000 pension from respondent (Pl. Ex. 34-C, R. 532). Although no longer an officer of plaintiff, Schumacher continued as a member of its board of directors until his death in early 1948. Throughout the critical period Schumacher was paid only by respondent, not by plaintiff (R. 645).

Catherine Sheehan was the telephone operator, receptionist and filing clerk in the joint New York office (R. 647, 1138). Her $2,000 salary was paid solely by respondent (R. 1138-9, 1738). She was elected to plaintiff's board in order to fill a quorum (R. 1139), never took part in the discussions of the board and, in casting her vote, simply followed the majority (R. 1140).

William W. Hatton was a minor officer of the Denver Railroad (R. 1134), charged with "purely clerical" duties at a salary of $4,500 (R. 1137). Schumacher, bankruptcy trustee of respondent, was his "superior and chief" (R. 1135). Hatton—like Sheehan—was elected to plaintiff's board in order to fill a quorum (R. 1137-8); he never participated in board discussions and simply voted with the majority (R. 1136).

A. Perry Osborn was not only a director of plaintiff since 1937 (R. 988), but also a director and member of the executive committee of respondent to November 20, 1944 (R. 992).

Willis D. Wood was a long time friend of Arthur Curtiss James, at whose request he had joined plaintiff's board (R. 1123). During the period 1943-45, Wood and his family owned substantial amounts of respondent's securities (Int. Ex. 11, R. 2138-2141), but none of plaintiff's, except qualifying shares (Pl. Ex. 17, R. 501, 1717). Since this Court's decision of March 15, 1943, he considered plaintiff a "nonentity", so that "there was no action necessary on my part, and hence I did not give it the attention that I did in former years" (R. 1130-1).

H. Brua Campbell, an attorney, was a partner of the New York law firm of Pierce & Greer (R. 532-3), who, as will presently be stated more fully, were attorneys for both plaintiff and respondent during the critical period 1944 and 1945, but received their compensation solely from respondent, nothing from plaintiff.

A clear majority of plaintiff's directors—Curry, Wienken, Valouch, Schumacher, Sheehan, Osborn and Campbell—thus owed their allegiance to respondent. All of those just named (except Osborn) received their pay solely from respondent, nothing from plaintiff. And even the two remaining directors (Wood and Hatton) were likewise by interest and allegiance oriented to respondent.

(e) Plaintiff's lawyers. Two New York law firms acted for plaintiff during the critical period *: Its general counsel, Pierce & Greer; and the firm of Whitman Ransom Coulson and Goetz, as tax lawyers.

Pierce & Greer. This firm, composed of H. Brua Campbell and Frank C. Nicodemus (R. 532-3), acted not only as general counsel for plaintiff (R. 533), but simultaneously as attorneys for respondent and its trustees (R. 533-6, 793). Their representation of respondent continued throughout 1945 (R. 1119-21, 2150). Since June 1, 1943 they received no compensation from plaintiff (R. 1723). They did receive an annual retainer from respondent's trustees and additional fees from respondent (R. 534-8, 1730-1, 1738).

Respondent and its bankruptcy trustees never made any bones about their conception of the duties of the Pierce & Greer firm in tax matters: They looked to the firm "to cooperate with Mr. Matthew, general counsel for the Trustees [of respondent], in protecting the trust estate [i.e., respondent] in the preparation of the final return" (Pl. Ex. 39-A, R. 543-4).

Much later, on October 10, 1946 (simultaneously with the commencement of this action), Nicodemus became a director of plaintiff.

Whitman Ransom Coulson and Goetz. In March 1943 this firm was retained, by the trustees for respondent, as tax counsel for the Western Pacific group, including both plaintiff and respondent (Pl. Exs. 39-A to 39-F, R. 543-548; R. 556). The firm continued as tax counsel for plaintiff until at least 1947 (R. 1438-41); and they still are tax counsel for respondent (R. 1438).

The partners in charge of the tax work were Robert E. Coulson and James K. Polk (R. 1399). Coulson was, since

* A California attorney, Judge Marcus C. Sloss, was retained by plaintiff in 1934 solely to represent its interests as a stockholder and unsecured creditor in the reorganization proceedings of respondent, by opposing the I. C. C.'s plan of reorganization (R. 1603, 1611). He had nothing to do with plaintiff's taxes (R. 1603-4).

October 1943, a member of respondent's Reorganization Committee (Pl. Ex. 10, R. 496, 1674, 1675-6) and since December 28, 1944, a member of respondent's board of directors (R. 548).

The firm's compensation for its tax work was paid exclusively by respondent (R. 548-557); nothing was paid by plaintiff (R. 1721). But the firm was tied to respondent by even more profound considerations.

For nearly twenty years the firm had been personal counsel to Arthur Curtiss James and general counsel to the various corporations created by him (R. 536, 962); Coulson was an officer and director of these corporations (R. 964). As attorney for the A. C. James Company, Coulson took an active part in all steps of respondent's reorganization (R. 963). By reason of their large financial stake in defendant, the James Interests, represented by Coulson's firm, were vitally interested in respondent's welfare, including its taxes (R. 965); while, since the Supreme Court's decision of March 15, 1943, their interest in plaintiff was negligible; so that, as we have shown, the James Interests cast their lot with respondent and abandoned plaintiff (supra, pp. 11-12).

It is therefore understandable—although hardly excusable—that Polk, while attorney for both plaintiff and respondent, thought "my responsibility was to them [respondent] and not to the corporation [plaintiff]" (R. 1431). This distorted view of a lawyer's duty to his client accorded with Coulson's ante-litem expression that his firm was dealing with the tax matters "in behalf of The Western Pacific Railroad Company [i.e., respondent]" (R. 529) and that plaintiff was "without financial stake" in the consolidated returns (R. 1744). Indeed, even after this action and the New York stockholders' suit had notified Coulson of plaintiff's "financial stake", he persisted in taking sides with one client, respondent, against the other client, plaintiff. For on December 11, 1946—while he and his firm were still actively representing plaintiff in the tax matter (R. 1438-41)—Coulson assured counsel for respondent that his interest was "solely in protecting the operating company" [i.e., respondent] in connection with this and the New York litigation (Int. Ex. 9, R. 717, 2133-4).

To summarize: Plaintiff's entire personnel—its principal stockholders, its officers, its directors and its lawyers—was infected with dual allegiance which was bound to prompt them, in any conflict of interest between plaintiff and respondent, to give their first and foremost loyalty to respondent. We proceed to show how the conduct of these persons in handling the tax transactions was actually influenced by their divided loyalties.

5. Duality in action in the handling of the consolidated returns.

The handling of plaintiff's tax matters for 1943 and 1944 confronted plaintiff with a number of grave questions: Should plaintiff make the tax credit arising from its stock loss available to respondent by filing consolidated returns? Would plaintiff derive any benefit from so doing? If not, was plaintiff entitled in fairness to any such benefits? Should plaintiff secure a fair share of the tax savings by insisting on an agreement with respondent giving it a fair share?

Important as these questions were, plaintiff was not permitted to pose, let alone to answer, them. Without so much as asking plaintiff, respondent made the decision that plaintiff was to file consolidated returns and make its tax credit available to respondent (R. 1448-1450, 1278). Plaintiff's role was confined to the mechanical, unquestioning and uninformed execution of respondent's decisions.

(a) The returns for 1943. The thought of utilizing plaintiff's stock loss as a tax deduction in consolidated returns was first suggested in Polk's letter of May 20, 1943, addressed to Curry as vice-president of respondent (Pl. Ex. 50, R. 521, 1757, 1760-1). The letter did not mention that plaintiff might have to be consulted.

By December 1943, Coulson and Polk were prepared to recommend definitely the adoption of Polk's suggestion (R.

1409-10). They made their recommendation—but only to respondent. Early in January, 1944, Polk traveled to the west coast where respondent's principal office was located, and there advised the trustees and officers of respondent that the use of plaintiff's stock loss in a consolidated return would eliminate all 1943 taxes (R. 1267-8, 1410-11, 1448).

Respondent, although quite unconcerned about plaintiff's concurrence in the plan, was concerned about the legal soundness of Polk's advice and therefore requested a formal opinion of the Whitman Ransom firm (R. 1268, 1411). On January 11, 1944 Coulson sent this opinion from New York to respondent (Pl. Ex. 54, R. 605)—with not even a copy to plaintiff (R. 665). The opinion assumed as a matter of course, that plaintiff would join in consolidated returns and would bestow upon respondent the tax benefits flowing from plaintiff's stock loss.

Respondent was satisfied with this opinion. Without bothering to ask for plaintiff's permission, respondent simply decided * to use plaintiff's tax credit to eliminate its own taxes (R. 1448). Respondent at once acted pursuant to this decision. It reversed, in January, 1944, tax accruals of about $7,500,000 theretofore placed on its books for 1943 (R. 873, 1770). In March 1944 it advised the bankruptcy court that no taxes would be payable for 1943 (Pl. Ex. 58, R. 619, 1772). And in May, 1944—still before the 1943 returns were filed—respondent stated in its report to stockholders that plaintiff "can and will" file consolidated returns in which plaintiff's stock loss "will result in elimination" of respondent's tax liability (Pl. Ex. 20-B, R. 512).

Who, then, decided on behalf of plaintiff that it "will" file such consolidated returns? Its board of directors did not; the 1943 tax matters were never presented to plaintiff's board, either for discussion or decision (R. 1018). Nor did its then two officers, its president Curry, and its secretary Wienken. The latter had nothing at all to do with taxes; and Curry was a mere "figurehead", a "signing officer", and completely ignorant of tax matters ("tax matters were wholly Greek to me. I didn't understand them at all * * ", R. 808).

The method by which respondent caused plaintiff to file the consolidated returns for 1943 was simple. After respondent had resolved that plaintiff would file the consolidated returns utilizing its stock loss (R. 1448, 1278), such returns were prepared by Valouch (then a full time employee of respondent, but neither an officer or director of plaintiff), with the help of an accountant recommended by Polk (R. 1402), and under the supervision and consultation of Polk (R. 662-3). The completed returns were given by Valouch to Curry for his signature (R. 664). At Curry's question, Valouch assured him that Polk had approved the returns (R. 664). Thereupon Curry, without questioning Polk or his firm as to why plaintiff should endow respondent with the stupendous gift of this tax saving; without his asking or even thinking whether it would not be fair for plaintiff to receive the tax savings or at least a part thereof, as an offset against its huge loss; without giving any thought to the wisdom of retaining independent counsel to ascertain and protect plaintiff's rights against respondent; and without bothering to consult plaintiff's directors—Mr. Curry, the "signing officer", did just that: He signed (R. 664).

(b) The returns for 1944. The story for the 1944 returns is much the same as for the preceding year. Plaintiff's board was not consulted; it never considered or decided on the filing of consolidated returns (R. 1018). What happened was that on December 20, 1944 Coulson advised respondent—but not plaintiff—by telegram that "the only course open is to proceed as indicated in conversations with you, including report on the consolidated basis up to May 1 [1944]" (Pl. Ex. 62, R. 623). Thereupon the decision to file consolidated returns for the first four months of 1944 was made by respondent—not by plaintiff (R. 1449-50). The returns were then prepared in Polk's office and brought to Curry for his signature (R. 666). At that time Curry had moved to the Whitman Ransom suite with instructions from Coulson to "put himself at Polk's disposal" (R. 1498); and this meant that, under his retainer, he, as plaintiff's president, was to perform such services as respondent would require to achieve and safeguard the tax savings for itself. Hence when Curry was told that Polk wanted him to sign the returns, he obliged—again without asking plaintiff's board of directors (R. 666).

* Curry "supervised" the preparation of the returns (R. 830) only in the sense that he was the "office manager" (R. 639) and instructed the employees of the New York office as to their duties (R. 649). He never prepared a tax return (R. 659), tax matters being handled by Valouch (R. 659; Pl. Ex. 29, R. 527, 1737).

(c) The refund claim for 1942 was prepared with even less ceremony than the tax returns. Polk himself decided that plaintiff should file such a claim (R. 1450). He prepared the claim; placed it before "the proper signing officer", i.e., Curry, with the request for his signature (R. 1450); and Curry signed, again, of course, without benefit of consultation or approval by plaintiff's board of directors (R. 666-7).

(d) Curry's preoccupation with respondent's interests. That Curry, in signing, was preoccupied with respondent's interests, not plaintiff's, is indisputably established by his own contemporaneous statements. Plaintiff was confronted in February, 1945, with a possible forfeiture of its charter for non-payment of Delaware franchise taxes. Curry, in discussing the problem, gave serious consideration to it—but only with an eye to respondent's tax savings and their possible jeopardy; and without any thought to the interests of plaintiff and its stockholders. This is clearly stated in a letter from Curry, as plaintiff's president, to Nicodemus, copy to Polk (Int. Ex. 5, R. 705, 2125-7):

> "If we default and our charter is voided, the question arises what would be the effect on the consolidated income and excess-profits tax returns filed by the Corporation, as parent, for the years 1942, 1943 and 1944. As you know, a very large deduction was taken in 1943, which wiped out any tax liability for that year and will also have an effect upon the 1942 and 1944 consolidated returns. I understand the total tax saving to The Western Pacific Railroad Company [i.e., respondent] will amount to about 15 million dollars. Therefore, I feel the payment or non-payment of these franchise taxes must be determined particularly from the Federal income tax angle.

"I would suggest that before arriving at a decision in this matter you confer with the firm of Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz, our tax counsel, who are aware of this situation and are considering the consequences which the non-payment of these franchise taxes would have from an income tax viewpoint."

The same thought had long before been expressed by Coulson and Polk.* Coulson therefore decided that plaintiff's franchise tax must be paid; and the A. C. James Company—departing in this instance from its policy of making no further advances to plaintiff (R. 575-6)—loaned plaintiff the funds to pay its franchise tax (R. 713).

(e) The tax settlement with the Government. The proceedings culminating in the 1947 settlement of the tax dispute with the Government further illustrate the extent to which respondent managed plaintiff's tax affairs with complete disregard of plaintiff.

In 1945 and the early part of 1946, an Internal Revenue agent audited the tax returns for 1942-1944 (R. 1419). For his discussions with the Government Polk needed a power of attorney from plaintiff (R. 1424). Polk drafted

* On May 26, 1943, Polk advised Nicodemus that plaintiff's "dissolution should be deferred * * * as tax aspects warranted" (Pl. Ex. 52, R. 601). On June 26, 1943, Coulson asked Polk whether "it would be embarrassing in the Western Pacific situation" if plaintiff's charter were cancelled for failure to pay its Delaware franchise tax; Polk replied "it is essential, to protect the possible use of the net loss carry-back, that the holding company [i.e., plaintiff] continue until the consummation of the reorganization" (Pl. Ex. 54, R. 592, 600).

such an instrument (Pl. Ex. 65, R. 626, 1784). Among other things it authorized Polk and two of his partners to "execute closing agreements", i.e., to settle any tax dispute. At Polk's request, Curry, then lodged in Coulson's office, signed this power of attorney—again, of course, without consulting plaintiff's board and without the board's knowledge or approval (R. 667-8, 1025-6). Significantly, Curry felt that the signing of the power of attorney was one of his duties under his retainer agreement with the Whitman Ransom firm (R. 906) under which the latter paid him $3,000 annually, for the account of respondent.

Armed with this power of attorney, Polk entered upon his discussions with the Government (R. 1424-5). At a conference in Washington on February 11, 1947 Polk suggested the possibility of a settlement (R. 1427-8). When the Government representative asked Polk to put his offer in writing, Polk replied that he would get authorization to do so (R. 1427). Polk promptly proceeded to procure such authorization—but only from respondent, not from plaintiff (R. 1429-31). He immediately telephoned Coulson, who at the time was in San Francisco, and outlined to him the proposed offer (R. 1429-30). Coulson at once consulted respondent's president Elsey, who, in turn, canvassed respondent's directors (R. 1282-4). After a few hours Elsey advised Polk by telephone that his proposed settlement offer was approved by respondent (R. 1430). Polk at once reduced his offer to writing and, in plaintiff's name, submitted it to the Government (R. 171, 1430). The thought that plaintiff might have to be consulted occurred, they say, to no one (R. 1431). Until two months later plaintiff's directors and officers had no information whatever of what was being done in their names (R. 668-9).

This patent disregard of plaintiff's rights was also manifested in the terms of Polk's settlement offer. At the time the offer was made (February 11, 1947), the present action was already pending and respondent had filed its Answer asserting certain technical defenses, such as the statute of limitations (R. 28-29). But these technical defenses would obviously have been unavailable as to any moneys which might come directly into plaintiff's possession and as to which, therefore, plaintiff would not have to sue respondent. The 1942 tax savings were of that character. The refund claim for 1942 (R. 1654) was, and had to be, filed by plaintiff; if the claim had been allowed by the Government, the $4,201,821.54 taxes for 1942 would have been paid by the Government to plaintiff.* The refund claim was therefore particularly valuable to plaintiff since the 1942 tax moneys, if collected by plaintiff from the Government, were not subject to respondent's technical defenses. Polk's settlement proposal provided that plaintiff was to surrender its refund claim for 1942, whereas respondent was to be freed of any tax liability for 1943 and the first four months of 1944 (R. 171-3). The proposed settlement was thus to be accomplished wholly at plaintiff's expense.

Not until two months later, after a conference with respondent on April 2, 1947, did it occur to Polk to notify plaintiff of the settlement offer which he had made in its name, and to request the approval of plaintiff's board (Pl. Ex. 68, R. 669, 1788, 1460-1). The board members, alerted by our New York shareholders' action to their possible personal liability, appointed a three-man committee to consider the settlement offer. On May 5, 1947 Curry, on behalf of the Committee, notified Polk that they were "prepared to recommend" to plaintiff's board the sending to Polk of a "letter of general approval", but demanded a stipulation by respondent which would assure to plaintiff its day in court, free of the technical defenses asserted in respondent's Answer (Pl. Ex. 69, R. 676, 1794). In effect, this letter instructed Polk not to proceed with the settlement until such a stipulation between plaintiff and respondent were made.

* Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.16(a), 26 C.F.R. (1949), §23.16(a), provides that, with respect to consolidated returns, the Government deals only with the parent corporation of an affiliated group, and that refunds will be made directly to the parent.

These instructions from his client and principal made no impression on Polk. Without waiting for the stipulation or for plaintiff's "letter of general approval", without, indeed, further asking or even notifying plaintiff (R. 681, 1027-8), Polk, on May 19, 1947, again acting as plaintiff's attorney in fact, renewed his settlement offer to the Government in the identical terms of his previous offer (Pl. Ex. 71; R. 679, 1799). On August 13, 1947 the Government accepted Polk's offer (R. 174, 1437).* In this fashion the settlement thus became an accomplished fact.

(f) Respondent's $10,100,000 reserve for this litigation. At the time the consolidated returns herein were filed in 1944 and 1945, respondent anticipated a tax controversy with the Government and therefore created a $10,100,000 tax reserve, which it invested in United States Treasury Savings Notes (R. 616-7).

After the tax settlement with the Government in 1947, respondent continued this $10,100,000 tax reserve as a reserve against the outcome of this litigation (R. 517-8, 617).

The Decision of the District Court.

The District Court's decision (R. 258) found that the duality of control, contended for by us, was sustained "by a preponderance of the evidence" (R. 272). It nevertheless dismissed the action upon two grounds:

In the first place, the District Court thought that the Government should not have permitted respondent to "escape" the payment of its taxes through the use of plaintiff's tax credit. The 1947 tax settlement improperly deprived the Government of taxes due to it. Equity should not compound this injustice by distributing respondent's illegal gains to plaintiff; "as between the parties, no per-

* Respondent tendered evidence that, on August 13, 1947, plaintiff's board resolved not to withdraw Polk's offer (R. 1644-5). The resolution was academic since on the same day the Government accepted Polk's offer. The trial court rejected the proffered evidence as irrelevant (R. 1647).

suasion of conscience or equity impels me to do otherwise than to leave the parties where they are" (R. 270-1, 276).

The Court of Appeals rejected this reasoning (R. 2227-8, fn. 12); and it is, as we shall show, indeed untenable.

As its second ground for dismissal, the District Court advanced this reasoning: The taxes "saved" by respondent were actually earnings which it did not pay to the Government. Plaintiff's demand for all or part of respondent's tax savings is therefore actually a demand for a share in respondent's earnings. Plaintiff cannot make such a demand; for plaintiff's stock interest in respondent was wiped out by the latter's reorganization; plaintiff thus forfeited all future interest in respondent's earnings; and plaintiff's demand here alleged was but "a circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership [of respondent's stock], rejected in the reorganization plan" (R. 272-4).

The Court of Appeals did not adopt this reasoning; and, as we shall show, it is as untenable as the District Court's first ground of decision.

The Decision of the Court of Appeals.

The Court of Appeals, by a bench consisting of one circuit judge and two district judges, affirmed the decision of the District Court, but on wholly different grounds (R. 2214). One judge dissented.

The majority opinion of the Court of Appeals agreed with our contention that plaintiff and respondent had interlocking managements (R. 2233). But it thought that this duality of control was "not important" (R. 2235). The "mere fact of officers and directors in common", it held, created no fiduciary relation, unless "one corporation dominated the other" (R. 2222); and the Court found the record "barren of evidence" to support our contention that respondent dominated plaintiff (R. 2235). Hence respondent was under no obligation to deal fairly with plaintiff in the tax transaction.

But even if domination and a fiduciary relationship requiring fair dealing be assumed (R. 2223, 2232), the majority of the Court of Appeals held that respondent had not breached its duty to deal fairly with plaintiff (R. 2235). It rejected our contention that it was the purpose of the tax laws to confer a tax benefit on plaintiff (R. 2229-2232); on the contrary, it held that the tax savings here were "an advantage which the tax laws give the subsidiary" (R. 2234). The Court further held that the transaction was fair because it was "open and above board" (R. 2234); because the practice of filing consolidated returns had prevailed in the earlier years of the Western Pacific group (R. 2225, 2233); and because plaintiff had no income of its own against which to offset its tax loss (R. 2232-3). It characterized plaintiff's claim as an attempt to "require tribute" (R. 2235) for its cooperation in filing consolidated returns; and it held that that would have been inequitable because plaintiff and its officers were under a "positive duty" to respondent to file the consolidated returns (R. 2233-5).

Judge Fee dissented (R. 2239), mainly on the grounds that plaintiff's tax credit was its property, which it was under no duty to surrender to respondent; and that the majority's decision was based on facts not found by the District Court and unsupported by the weight of the evidence.

We moved for a rehearing of the case en banc pursuant to 28 U. S. C., § 46(c). The two judges who had rendered the majority opinion (i.e., a circuit judge and a district judge) struck the motion as unauthorized in law (R. 2260); Judge Fee again dissented and suggested a rehearing en banc (R. 2261). Thereafter, upon renewal of the petition, it was denied by the full Court of Appeals sitting en banc (R. 2288) on the ground that the denial by the two judges was authoritative and binding (R. 2296). Denman, Ch. J., dissented (R. 2296, 2313).

Assignment of Errors.

1. The Court of Appeals, without determining or applying any applicable local law, held that the interlock between the managements of plaintiff and respondent (R. 2223) imposed no fiduciary duty on respondent to deal fairly with plaintiff in the tax transaction, unless respondent actually dominated plaintiff's affairs (R. 2222-3). This was error. The managerial interlock alone, regardless of domination, subjected respondent to the fiduciary duty of dealing fairly with the plaintiff; and that is clearly the law of the three jurisdictions (New York, Delaware, California) having contacts with this case.

2. The Court of Appeals held that the record is barren of evidence to support our contention that plaintiff was dominated by respondent (R. 2235). This was error. It was not the Court's function to make such a finding; and its finding was contrary to that of the District Court (R. 264, 272) and to the weight of the evidence.

3. The Court of Appeals held that, even if respondent dominated plaintiff, nevertheless respondent did not breach its duty to deal fairly with plaintiff in the tax transaction (R. 2235). This was error. The tax credit arising from plaintiff's stock loss was plaintiff's property. Respondent utilized plaintiff's tax credit for itself, without allowing plaintiff any share in the resulting benefits. That was not fair dealing by respondent.

4. The Court of Appeals held that respondent did not act unfairly in using plaintiff's tax credit for itself because the tax laws which made respondent's tax savings possible were designed for respondent's rather than plaintiff's benefit (R. 2229-2232, 2234). This was error. By recognizing plaintiff's stock loss as a tax credit, the statute intended to mitigate the loss suffered by plaintiff, not to enrich respondent which had sustained no loss whatever.

5. The Court of Appeals held that respondent did not act unfairly in using plaintiff's tax credit for itself because the practice of filing consolidated returns had prevailed in previous years and plaintiff had profited therefrom (R. 2225, 2233). This was error. A practice prevailing while plaintiff and respondent were actually affiliated constituted no precedent for a period when the affiliation had ended. Moreover, the Court's finding that in earlier years the companies contributing a tax loss had received no compensation for doing so was beyond the province of the Court to make and was contrary to the evidence.

6. The Court of Appeals held that respondent did not act unfairly in using plaintiff's tax credit for itself because the entire transaction was "open and above board" (R. 2226-7, 2234). This was error. Lack of secrecy does not excuse a breach of duty.

7. The Court of Appeals held that respondent did not act unfairly in using plaintiff's tax credit for itself because plaintiff, having no taxable income of its own, could not use it for itself (R. 2232-3). This was error. Plaintiff's tax credit was its property. It had value precisely because respondent could use it. Moreover, there were possibilities of plaintiff's using the tax credit for itself.

8. The Court of Appeals held that respondent did not act unfairly in using plaintiff's tax credit for itself because plaintiff, as the owner of all of respondent's capital stock, was under an affirmative duty to make its tax credit available to respondent through the mechanics of consolidated returns (R. 2233-5). This was error. Under the tax laws, plaintiff had the right to refuse the filing of consolidated returns. The naked ownership of respondent's stock did not make plaintiff a fiduciary, since the stock did not carry control of respondent, the latter being in the hands of its bankruptcy trustees. Even if plaintiff had been a fiduciary of respondent, it was under no duty to surrender the tax credit, which was plaintiff's property, to respondent.

9. The Court of Appeals made findings of fact where the District Court had made none or had made contrary findings. This was error. The Court of Appeals exceeded its functions; its findings were contrary to the evidence.

10. The Court of Appeals, sitting en banc, held that it had neither power nor duty to consider the application for rehearing on its merits. This was error. The statute, 28 U. S. C., § 46(c), entrusts "a majority of the circuit judges of the circuit" with the decision whether or not a hearing or rehearing en banc shall be ordered. The Court below should not have entrusted this decision to one circuit judge and one district judge and should not have held itself bound by their determination.

Summary of Argument.

We propose to show:

1. Respondent was under the fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff because of the duality of their managements (Point I, infra).

We shall show under this pointhead that, contrary to the decision below, the interlock between plaintiff's and respondent's managements was enough to subject respondent to the fiduciary duty of dealing fairly with plaintiff in the tax transaction. That duty did not depend upon a finding that respondent actually dominated plaintiff; but if domination be deemed essential, it was found as a fact by the District Court and is amply supported by the evidence. Nor was respondent's duty to deal fairly any less stringent because, as the Court below thought, plaintiff had created the managerial interlock, or because respondent had acted openly and without secrecy, or because the dual officers were not actuated by evil motives. The fiduciary duty to deal fairly applies to tax transactions no less than to transactions of a more common or stereotyped nature.

2. Respondent breached its fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff by taking all, and allowing plaintiff none of the tax benefits produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit (Point II, infra).

We shall show under this pointhead that the transaction between plaintiff and respondent bore none of the earmarks of an arm's length bargain, and hence was unfair to plaintiff. Respondent should have allowed plaintiff all or at least a substantial share of its tax savings. The tax laws permitted the use of plaintiff's stock loss as a tax credit in consolidated returns in order for plaintiff, the parent, to obtain mitigation of the economic impact of its loss, not to confer a benefit upon the prosperous respondent; allowing respondent to retain all of the tax savings produced by plaintiff's tax credit is therefore a perversion of the purpose of the tax laws. Moreover, plaintiff's tax credit was a valuable asset; it was plaintiff's property; plaintiff might have used it for its own benefit; respondent's use of that property for itself without letting plaintiff share in the resulting benefits was unfair.

We shall further show that the fairness of the transaction cannot be sustained on the ground advanced by the Court below that plaintiff owed respondent a "positive duty" to file consolidated returns. Plaintiff was under no such duty; it was not a fiduciary of respondent merely because of its stock ownership, absent control or domination; and if plaintiff be a fiduciary of respondent, it was nevertheless under no obligation to surrender its own property to respondent. We shall also show that the so-called practice of the Western Pacific group of filing consolidated returns in earlier years, when the members of the group were affiliated, created no precedent for what should have been done during a later period in which the economic unity between plaintiff and respondent was at an end; in fact, there was no practice at all relevant to the issue herein.

Fairness, we contend and shall show, required respondent, at the time of the consolidated returns, to agree with plaintiff that the latter was to receive all or an appropriate share of the benefits to be produced by the use of its tax credit. Such an agreement would have been both legal and well supported by precedent. Since plaintiff's dual management, with its allegiance riveted on respondent, failed to secure such an agreement as part of the tax transaction, this Court may do equity and allow plaintiff to recover what was its due in the first place.

3. The Court of Appeals made numerous findings of fact where the District Court had made none or had made contrary findings (Point III, infra).

We shall show under this pointhead that the Court of Appeals found numerous facts, important to its conclusions, without any basis in the findings of the District Court and, indeed, contrary to the evidence. This procedure ran counter to the mandate of Rule 52 F.R.C.P.

4. The grounds upon which the District Court dismissed the action were erroneous (Point IV, infra).

We shall show under this pointhead that neither of the two grounds advanced by the District Court justified a dismissal of the action. The District Court thought that plaintiff cannot recover because the tax savings were contrary to law, and equity should not lend its hand in providing for the distribution of illegal gains. But the filing of the consolidated returns was proper vis-a-vis the Government; and the Government settled the tax controversy by a compromise which cannot be collaterally reviewed in this action.

The District Court also thought that a recovery by plaintiff would allow it to share in respondent's income, contrary to respondent's reorganization plan. But that reorganization plan merely eliminated plaintiff's stock-holdings in respondent; it gave respondent no right to use plaintiff's tax credit. Hence if respondent used plaintiff's tax credit for itself, it must share the resulting benefits with plaintiff and cannot find shelter behind its reorganization plan.

POINT I

Respondent was under the fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff because of the duality of their managements.

The parties, engaging in the tax transactions we have described, did not deal at arm's length. That was prevented by the duality of their personnel. We contend that, acting in this position, respondent was required by law to treat plaintiff with the highest degree of fairness; that respondent's duties to plaintiff were those of a fiduciary to his cestui; and that the dealings between the parties are subject to close and jealous judicial scrutiny.

Under this pointhead we shall demonstrate the existence and scope of respondent's duties; under the next, their violation by respondent.

1. The interlock between the managements of plaintiff and respondent imposed upon respondent a fiduciary duty of dealing fairly with plaintiff in their tax transaction (the "duality rule"); the duty existed regardless of actual domination of plaintiff by respondent.

(a) Throughout the critical period during which the consolidated returns and the refund claim were filed (July 15, 1944 to June 15, 1945), the management of plaintiff was shot through with divided allegiance to respondent. The rule is deeply imbedded in our law that the existence of interlocking managements between two corporations will create a fiduciary relation in dealings between them.

Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 254 U. S. 590, 599 (1921), contains the classical and most frequently cited formulation of the doctrine:

> "The relation of directors to corporations is of such a fiduciary nature that transactions between boards having common members are regarded as jealously by the law as are personal dealings between a director and his corporation; and where the fairness of such transactions is challenged, the burden is upon those who would maintain them to show their entire fairness; * * * This court has been consistently emphatic in the application of this rule, which, it has declared, is founded in soundest morality and, we now add, in the soundest business policy. Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 588; Thomas v. Brownville, Ft. K. & P. R. Co., 109 U. S. 522; Wardwell v. Union P. R. Co., 103 U. S. 651, 658; Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 251 U. S. 68."

And similarly in Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Slattery, 302 U. S. 300, 308 (1937):

> "Common management of corporations through officers or directors * * * gives such indication of unified control as to call for close scrutiny of a contract between them whenever the reasonableness of its terms is the subject of inquiry."

The rule is of universal application. It has been recognized by the Court below, Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 245 Fed. 225, 235-6 (C. C. A. 9, 1917), rev'd on other grounds 254 U. S. 590, in holding > "that upon principle contracts between corporations having a common director should be regarded very much as are contracts between individual directors and their corporations, and that while such contracts are not prohibited, and are not prima facie void or fraudulent, they are voidable, and that the burden rests upon those who seek to sustain them to show clearly and satisfactorily that they are entirely fair and free from wrong."

The law is the same in Delaware, where plaintiff is organized:

Keenan v. Eshleman, 23 Del. Ch. 234, 243-4, 2 Atl. 2d 904 (S. Ct., 1938);

Kennedy v. Emerald Coal & Coke Co., 42 Atl. 2d 398, 402 (S. Ct., Del., 1944); in California, where respondent is incorporated:

Goodell v. Verdugo Cañon Water Co., 138 Cal. 308, 71 Pac. 354 (1903);

Sausalito Bay Land Co. v. Sausalito Imp. Co., 166 Cal. 302, 306, 136 Pac. 57 (1913);

Title Ins. & Tr. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 205-6, 152 Pac. 542 (1915);

in New York, where plaintiff's dual officers functioned and the tax returns were filed;

Chelrob v. Barrett, 293 N. Y. 442, 460-2, 57 N. E. 2d 825 (1944);

Globe Woolen Co. v. Utica G. & E. Co., 224 N. Y. 483, 489-90, 121 N. E. 378 (1918, Cardozo, J.);

Marian v. Mariani, 276 App. Div. 205, 93 N. Y. S. 2d 370 (1st Dept., 1949); and in other jurisdictions throughout the land;

Mayflower Hotel Stockholders Protective Committee v. Mayflower Hotel Corp., 173 F. 2d 416, 418-423 (App. D. C., 1949, with numerous references).

The rule rests on "the ancient precept against serving two masters", Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295, 311 (1939), a principle as old as Holy Writ, "infallible and hallowed", Hexander v. Theleman, 69 F. 2d 610, 613 (C. C. A. 10, 1934); San Diego v. San Diego & L. A. R. Co., 44 Cal. 106, 113 (1872).

Just as there is danger that a director, in dealing with his corporation, will favor his personal interests, so in transactions between interlocking corporations "the danger to be avoided is that a director or group of directors, common to two corporations, may, for reasons of self-interest, favor one of the entities in its dealings with the other"; Mayflower Hotel case, supra, 173 F. 2d, at 420. Hence courts impose "the most careful scrutiny of transactions between the corporations represented by common directors, to the end that in the absence of arm's length bargaining, the scales may not, even through mistake or inadvertence, be unfairly tipped to one side or the other"; Chelrob v. Barrett, supra, 293 N.Y., at 461.

Hence we contend that the mere fact of the duality of the parties' personnel subjected respondent, in its dealings with plaintiff, to the strict duty to treat plaintiff with the highest degree of fairness and loyalty.

(b) Although the Court below conceded "There obviously existed an interlocking management" (R. 2223), it nonetheless rejected the duality rule: "The mere fact of officers and directors in common does not create such a fiduciary relationship" (R. 2222). Duality, the Court thought, merely invites an inquiry "to ascertain if domination exists" (R. 2222); and only if domination is found, will unfairness or overreaching raise a "presumption of constructive fraud" (R. 2222-3).

The Court below did not cite any authorities for its rule thus formulated; and we believe there are none.

To begin with, the scope of the duality rule is clearly a question of state law. Contrary to the mandate of Klaxon Co. v. Stentor El. Mfg. Corp., 313 U. S. 487, 496 (1941), the Court below did not determine which state's law was to govern pursuant to the conflict of laws principles of California.

But we need not be detained by the conflict of laws problem. The case has contacts with only three jurisdictions: Delaware, where plaintiff is organized, California, where respondent is organized, and, most important, New York, where plaintiff's dual management was located and where the tax returns were filed. Each of these States, as we have shown, accepts the duality rule as formulated by this Court in the Geddes case, supra (254 U. S., at 599); each holds that duality alone, regardless of domination, requires that searching scrutiny of inter-corporate transactions which will result in relief unless complete fairness is demonstrated.

Thus the Chelrob case, supra (293 N. Y. 442), and the Marian case, supra (276 App. Div. 205), involved the sale of property by one corporation to another. The sales price was found to be less than the value of the property sold. There was no finding that the purchaser dominated the seller; but the corporations had interlocking managements; and that was held enough to permit the seller to recover the difference between the price received and the fair price. The Court below, we submit, erred therefore in holding that respondent's duty to deal fairly with plaintiff depended on a finding of domination. It further erred, as we now proceed to show, in holding that domination of plaintiff by respondent was not established (R. 2235).

2. The District Court found, contrary to the Court of Appeals, and the evidence demonstrates, that the conduct of plaintiff's tax affairs was dominated by respondent.

The Court of Appeals found the record "barren of evidence to support the contention that Corporation was dominated by the subsidiary" (R. 2235). This finding of the Court of Appeals is contrary to that of the District Court, and contrary to the evidence.

The findings of the District Court are unambiguous:

> "It was there [in the supplementary complaint] further alleged that the defendant through its officers and attorneys had controlled the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation and that by reason of such control plaintiff was caused to file the consolidated returns for the benefit of the defendant. Throughout the proceedings and in the trial, this has been referred to as 'duality of control'" (R. 264).

"* * * there is a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the plaintiff's contention of 'duality of control'" (R. 272).

This finding that respondent "controlled" plaintiff in the tax transaction could be set aside only if it was "clearly erroneous"; Rule 52(a) F. R. C. P. Far from being erroneous, the finding is supported by the overwhelming weight of the evidence. We cite only a few manifestations of respondent's control.

The decision to use plaintiff's stock loss in consolidated returns was made by respondent, not by plaintiff (R. 1448-1450, 1278). Plaintiff's board of directors was never consulted (R. 1018). Plaintiff's president Curry merely "learned" in January, 1944 that plaintiff's stock loss was to be so used (R. 874-6); but nobody bothered to ask him. Even if plaintiff's directors or officers had been asked, such consultation would have been a mere formality; plaintiff could have neither objected nor demanded conditions since it was being kept alive for the very purpose of preserving its tax credit for the benefit of respondent (Int. Ex. 5, R. 705, 2125-7; R. 713).

Respondent argues that Curry, as plaintiff's president, had a volition about signing the returns. But who was Curry to refuse his signature? He was a mere "figurehead", a "signing officer" (R. 651, 646-7, 1450). His livelihood depended on respondent, not plaintiff; for it was respondent, not plaintiff, that paid his salary (R. 645, 1738). Curry had no understanding whatever of taxes (R. 808). Hence, when the returns were placed before him, he merely asked whether they were approved by tax counsel, i.e., Mr. Polk; and when he was told they were, he signed without further ado (R. 664).

Without so much as mentioning any of these facts, the Court below denies domination because the tax returns were prepared "under the supervision of Corporation's president" (R. 2226)!

As further support of its finding that plaintiff was free of domination, the Court below says that the returns were prepared "under the guidance of the independent tax experts" (R. 2226). Independent indeed! These tax experts were Messrs. Whitman, Ransom, Coulson & Goetz. This law firm was indeed retained as tax experts—by the trustees for respondent, Mr. Schumacher and Mr. Ehrman (Pl. Ex. 39-D, R. 546); Curry was just "told" of their retainer (R. 660). This firm was indeed paid for its tax services—by respondent, not by plaintiff (R. 548-557; Pl. Ex. 23, R. 1721). So "independent" was that firm that its partner Polk felt his responsibility was due to his one client, the respondent, and not to his other client, the plaintiff (R. 1431).

But, says the Court below, these tax experts had been "employed upon the suggestion of the General Counsel for Corporation" (R. 2226), i.e., Mr. Nicodemus (R. 2225-6). That is a singularly incomplete description of Mr. Nicodemus' functions. The Court omits mentioning that Mr. Nicodemus and his firm (Pierce & Greer) were also the attorneys for respondent and for respondent's trustees (R. 533-6, 793); that they received their pay from respondent, but no pay whatever from plaintiff (R. 534-8, 1723, 1730-1, 1738); and that it was their job to cooperate with counsel for the trustees of respondent in protecting the respondent's estate in the preparation of the final returns (Pl. Ex. 39-A, R. 543-4).

We submit that the District Court's finding of domination, far from being "clearly erroneous", was clearly right; that the domination of plaintiff by respondent in the conduct of the tax transaction was fully established; and that consequently respondent was subject to all the fiduciary duties which follow from the exercise of domination and control.

Southern Pacific Co. v. Bogert, 250 U. S. 483, 492 (1919);
Kavanaugh v. Kavanaugh Knitting Co., 226 N. Y. 185, 194-5, 123 N. E. 148 (1919);
Title Ins. & Tr. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 205-6, 152 Pac. 542 (1915).

3. Plaintiff did not create the managerial interlock with respondent; even if it had, respondent's fiduciary duties would have been the same.

The Court of Appeals, conceding that there existed an "interlocking management" between plaintiff and respondent, held: "But this situation was not of the subsidiary's [respondent's] making. On the contrary, it was created by Corporation [plaintiff], whose stockholders elected its Board of Directors, who appointed its officers" (2223). Although the Court does not spell out the consequences flowing from this finding, it may be assumed that it was thought to lessen, if not to eliminate, respondent's fiduciary obligations.

Actually, however, plaintiff had, during the critical period, no say in the selection of respondent's management. During respondent's reorganization, its trustees, directors and officers were appointed by the bankruptcy court. And after respondent emerged from reorganization in December, 1944, its management was selected by its new stockholders, not by plaintiff.

In any event, it is immaterial who created the duality. There is nothing invidious about interlocking managements as such. Indeed, "business convenience many times requires interlocking directorates"; 3 Fletcher Cyc. Corp. (Perm. Ed., 1947), § 961, p. 433. But once duality is created —no matter by whom or how innocently—it subjects the entities to fiduciary standards in their dealings with each other; In re James Estate, 86 N. Y. S. 2d 78, 84 (Surr. Ct., 1948). Even though a parent corporation, for business convenience, has created duality, nevertheless it is held protected from unfair treatment in transactions with its own subsidiary. Potter v. Sanitary Co. of America, 22 Del. Ch. 110, 194 Atl. 87 (1937); Banco Kentucky Co.'s Receiver v. National Bank of Kentucky's Receiver, 281 Ky. 784, 798-9, 137 S. W. 2d 357 (1939).

In Chelrob v. Barrett, supra (293 N. Y. 442), the duality had certainly been created by the corporation which subsequently sought and obtained relief from the action of the dual management. There, as here, the stockholders of the parent (Queens Company) elected its board of directors; those directors elected its officers; and since Queens owned all the voting stock of the subsidiary (Nassau Company), Queens was also responsible for the selection of Nassau's directors and officers. Queens thus had "created" the interlock; nevertheless, in an action by Queens against Nassau, based upon the unfairness of a contract between the two companies, Queens was permitted to recover.

The Court below, we submit, erred in holding that the managerial interlock between plaintiff and respondent had been created by plaintiff (the District Court had made no such finding); and it erred in ascribing any legal significance to the fact thus found by it.

4. The absence of secrecy did not relieve respondent from the duty to deal fairly with plaintiff.

The Court of Appeals held that "the entire transaction was open and above board. Many persons having an interest in Corporation [plaintiff], including stockholders and counsel, were fully aware of the situation. They chose not to act" (R. 2234). The implication seems to be, either that the lack of secrecy relieved respondent from the duty to deal fairly with plaintiff, or that respondent's duty to deal fairly was fulfilled by respondent's acting "openly".

Again the Court does not reveal upon which local law it predicates this holding. Again the holding is contrary to the laws of all the jurisdictions with which this case has contacts.

Just as a larceny is no less a crime because committed in broad daylight, so a fiduciary cannot escape accountability because his breach of duty was open and notorious. Lack of secrecy is no excuse for a breach of duty. "The publicity alone of an illegal and unauthorized act of the directors of a corporation does not make it legal or valid", Goodell v. Verdugo Cañon Water Co., supra (138 Cal., at 314); Blum v. Fleishhacker, 21 F. Supp. 527, 533 (D. C., N. D. Cal., 1937), mod. and aff'd 109 F. 2d 543, cert. den. 311 U. S. 665. In Marian v. Mariani, supra (276 App. Div. 205), the court, speaking of a transaction between interlocking companies, found that "The sale was made openly and in good faith"; nevertheless the inadequacy of the sales price received by one of the corporations was held to justify it in recovering a fair price from the other. Like facts and rulings were involved in Chelrob v. Barrett, supra (293 N. Y. 442).

We submit that the Court of Appeals erred in ascribing any legal significance to the alleged lack of secrecy in the transaction.

And it was equally error for the Court below to find (without any such finding by the District Court *) that the transaction was known to plaintiff's stockholders and counsel. In fact, plaintiff's largest stockholder (the James Interests) and plaintiff's counsel were just as dual as

* The Court of Appeals (R. 2226) quotes a remark of the District Judge made by him in the course of the trial (R. 970); but such a remark, made before the conclusion of the trial, cannot take the place of a finding. The Court of Appeals (R. 2227, fn. 11) also quotes what it considers an admission by counsel for petitioners; but counsel, faced with a barrage of simultaneous questions from the bench, answered the last and merely admitted—indeed proclaimed—that the consolidated returns were filed so that respondent would not have to pay any income tax (R. 971); he did not admit that the transaction was "open" and known to plaintiff's stockholders.

plaintiff's officers; and we find no evidence in the record that plaintiff's other stockholders were notified or had knowledge of the tax transaction.

5. The alleged good faith of the dual officers did not relieve respondent from the duty to deal fairly with plaintiff.

Respondent has argued that the dual personnel was honest and free from evil motive. But judicial scrutiny of the fairness of a transaction between interlocking corporations will not be forestalled by a showing that the common officers acted honestly and in good faith.

Chelrob v. Barrett, supra, 293 N. Y., at 460-2;
Marian v. Mariani, supra, 276 App. Div. 205, 93 N. Y. S. 2d 370 (1st Dept., 1949);
Overfield v. Pennroad Corp., 42 F. Supp. 586, 610 (D. C., E. D. Pa., 1941), rev'd on other grounds 146 F. 2d 889;
Blum v. Fleishhacker, 21 F. Supp. 527, 533 (D. C., N. D. Cal., 1937), mod. and aff'd 109 F. 2d 543, cert. den. 311 U. S. 665.

In each of these cases the courts paid tribute to the good faith and honesty of the dual actors as well as to their independence and freedom from domination; they simultaneously imposed the fiduciary duty to deal fairly and found its breach.

Indeed, the rule could not be otherwise. Duality works in an insidious fashion. Even if it does not corrupt the honesty of the dual agent, it may insensibly dampen the exertion of his best skill and ingenuity. Thus respondent here asserts that dual tax counsel never had any thought of plaintiff's right to the tax savings. (R. 1433, 1473-5). Assuming these protestations, they merely emphasize the deadly effect of divided allegiance. For the evidence shows that tax counsel had at hand all the information which would lead him to the realization of plaintiff's rights.* His failure to realize them may well have been due to a lack of wholehearted devotion to plaintiff's cause. To say whether it was or not, would involve that "calculus of probabilities [which] is beyond the science of the chancery", Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N. Y. 458, 465, 164 N. E. 545 (1928). Hence the rigid rule of prophylaxis which, in the presence of duality, requires absolute fairness, regardless of subjective honesty and good faith.

6. The fiduciary rule is applicable to tax transactions between fiduciary and cestui.

Fiduciaries who mishandle a company's tax affairs or derive private tax advantages from their management of the company's tax business, are subject to the same accountability as in other transactions with their cestuis.

Shreveport Bank cases;†

* As we shall later show, the problem of an inter-company adjustment of tax savings was not uncommon. It arose, just during the critical period, under the S.E.C.'s Rule U-45(b)(6) 17 C.F.R. (1949), § 250.45(b)(6), and was treated in several S.E.C. decisions. In 1943, Polk was familiar with Rule U-45(b)(6) and refered to it in giving advice concerning the tax allocation of the Western Pacific group (R. 1466-7). Copies of the S.E.C. decisions, discussed below, were received by Polk's firm at the time they were released between June, 1943 and January, 1945 (R. 1467-8).

Thus, in the Shreveport Bank cases, supra, the "old bank" had transferred certain real estate to the "new bank" as collateral security for claims of the new bank, creating a pledgor-pledgee relation. The two banks had interlocking boards. Under the applicable tax laws of Louisiana, a corporation owning real estate was entitled to certain tax deductions. The new bank, as the technical legal owner of the aforesaid real estate, claimed and procured such tax savings. But the courts held that the real estate belonged equitably to the old bank; that the new bank was the fiduciary of the old; and that it must, therefore, account for all private tax savings which it procured in the conduct of its fiduciary activities:

> "The dominant officers of the new bank were the directors of the old, and they were doubly bound to treat the latter fairly." (144 F. 2d, at 236)
>
> "There can be little question but that the relation of the new Bank to the old and the administration of the property and estate intrusted to the former, was one requiring the utmost good faith and constituted it an agent, trustee or fiduciary. * * * It could not profit therefrom in any manner * * *.
>
> "* * * the new Bank * * * should not be allowed to take credit for the taxes paid under the circumstances of this case." (28 F. Supp., at 933)

The Court below would distinguish these cases as involving an actual "trust" relation (R. 2220-1); but there was no "trust" in the technical sense, just a relation of pledgor and pledgee. Certainly the directorial interlock furnished an important foundation for the finding of the fiduciary relationship (141 F. 2d, at 236). And certainly the fiduciary principle was applied to a tax transaction just as it would have been had the transaction been of a more common or stereotyped nature.

In the Truncale case, supra (76 F. Supp. 465), the directors of a corporation had exercised options to buy the corporation's stock at prices far below its market value. The difference between the market value and the purchase price constituted taxable income to the directors and, at the same time, a tax-deductible expense to the corporation. The directors, in violation of their fiduciary duties, caused the corporation to waive its right to this tax deduction; the corporation's waiver enabled the directors to save substantial amounts of their private taxes. The directors were held accountable to the corporation for their tax savings, although the amount of their savings far exceeded the tax detriment which the corporation had sustained by reason of its waiver.

The present case likewise involves a tax transaction between plaintiff and respondent. In order to achieve the tax saving, plaintiff and respondent had to agree to join in the consolidated returns. Plaintiff which alone could file them elected to do so; respondent gave its consent. By filing the returns, plaintiff made its tax credit arising from its stock loss available to reduce respondent's taxes; plaintiff surrendered thereby, pro tanto, its privilege to use its tax credit as a reduction of its own future taxes. Moreover, by filing the consolidated returns, plaintiff subjected itself to joint and several liability for any taxes or tax deficiencies which the Government might assess on respondent's income (Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.15(d)). In short, by joining in consolidated returns, the parties engaged in a transaction which required mutual contributions and affected their mutual rights and relations.

We submit that, in the light of the duality of plaintiff's management and the dominant part which respondent played in the tax transactions, respondent was under the fiduciary obligation to treat plaintiff with the highest degree of fairness. We proceed to show that respondent breached this obligation.

POINT II

Respondent breached its fiduciary duty to deal fairly with plaintiff by taking all, and allowing plaintiff none of the tax benefits produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit.

The requirements of "fairness", however general the connotations of that term may be, are well understood. "The essence of the test is whether or not under all the circumstances the transaction carries the earmarks of an arm's length bargain", Pepper v. Litton, supra, 308 U. S., at 306-7. Or, in the words of Judge Learned Hand, the test is "whether the proposition submitted would have commended itself to an independent corporation", Ewen v. Peoria & E. R. Co., 78 F. Supp. 312, 316 (D. C., S. D. N. Y., 1948), cert. den. 336 U. S. 919.

We are thus brought to the question whether the tax transaction between these parties carried "the earmarks of an arm's length bargain". The answer is simple. The filing of the consolidated returns here conferred great advantage—a $17,000,000 tax saving—on respondent, the fiduciary. It conferred no advantage on plaintiff, the cestui. The transaction was thus unilaterally advantageous to the fiduciary. No such transaction could possibly have "commended itself to an independent corporation". If respondent wished to have the use of plaintiff's tax credit, fairness required it to allow plaintiff at least a substantial share in the tax savings to be produced by plaintiff's tax credit. An independent management of plaintiff, competent and well advised, would have insisted on an agreement to that effect; and respondent, if it was willing to act fairly, would have given it.

We propose to show under this pointhead:

1. The purpose of the tax laws, in allowing the use of plaintiff's stock loss as a tax credit in consolidated returns, was to benefit plaintiff, not respondent (A, infra).

2. Plaintiff's tax credit was a valuable asset which, in fairness, plaintiff could not be expected to surrender to respondent without receiving an adequate share of the resulting tax benefits (B, infra).

3. Plaintiff was under no legal duty to surrender its tax credit to respondent through the filing of consolidated returns (C, infra).

4. The Western Pacific group's so-called previous practice constituted no precedent for a period when the affiliation between plaintiff and respondent had ended and was, in fact, non-existent (D, infra).

5. An agreement between plaintiff and respondent allowing plaintiff at least a substantial share of the tax savings would have been altogether proper, as evidenced by contemporaneous precedents (E, infra).

The purpose of the tax laws was to benefit plaintiff, not respondent.

The fairness of a transaction allocating tax benefits between two private parties could in considerable measure depend upon the purpose of the tax law which creates the benefit. Thus if the enjoyment of the $17,000,000 tax saving by respondent, and the denial of any share therein to plaintiff, accorded with the purpose and philosophy of the tax law, then there is much to be said for the fairness of the transaction as between the parties. If, however, respondent's enjoyment of the tax saving was a mere windfall to it, made possible by the letter of the tax statute, but unsupported by its underlying purpose, and if plaintiff's enjoyment of those savings would more nearly fulfill the statutory purpose; then an agreement allowing plaintiff all or a substantial share would indeed be fair.

The Court below apparently recognized that much; but it held that the applicable tax laws were intended to give an advantage to respondent rather than to plaintiff (R. 2229-2232, 2234). In this, we submit, the Court of Appeals erred.

1. The purpose of § 23(g)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code, in recognizing a stock loss as a tax credit, is to confer a tax benefit on the corporation which has suffered the loss.

Prior to 1938 a loss resulting from the worthlessness of stock held by a taxpayer was fully deductible for tax purposes. In 1938 the Code was amended to make such losses "capital losses", deductible only from capital gains (Revenue Act of 1938, § 23(g), 52 Stat. 461). In 1942, however, § 23(g)(4)* was added to the Code providing that a loss sustained through the worthlessness of the stock of an affiliate constitutes an ordinary loss, unrestrictedly available as a tax deduction from any kind of income (Revenue Act of 1942, § 123, 56 Stat. 820).

Respondent's stock held by plaintiff became worthless in 1943; and under § 23(g)(4), plaintiff could use this stock loss as a tax deduction against any kind of income.

As stated by the District Court (R. 268), the legislative history of § 23(g)(4) throws no light upon its purpose and philosophy. That purpose, however, would seem to be self-evident: The new section was designed to mitigate the economic impact of such a stock loss. Accordingly the authorities, more fully discussed below, recognize that, realistically, the tax saving resulting from a stock loss should be viewed as a partial offset to such loss; Matter of Consolidated Electric & Gas Co., 15 S. E. C. 161, 164 (1943).

Since in this case the loss was sustained by plaintiff, the tax credit arising therefrom was likewise designed for plaintiff, in order to offset its loss.

Plaintiff's management failed to take any step to effectuate this purpose. Its sole interest was to make plaintiff's tax credit available to respondent. This objective was accomplished through the filing of consolidated tax returns, with the result that plaintiff's tax credit was not used to mitigate plaintiff's loss, but to confer upon respondent what the District Court called an "amazing and undeserved" tax benefit (R. 276).

This diversion of the tax credit from plaintiff to respondent was not only contrary to the purpose of § 23(g)(4); it was also, as we now proceed to show, contrary to the purpose of consolidated returns.

2. The purpose of the consolidated return statute, in permitting the losses of one affiliate to be offset against the profits of another affiliate, is to benefit the common owner of the group, i.e., the parent corporation.

Consolidated tax returns are permitted by § 141 of the Internal Revenue Code* and are governed by regulations issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. These returns may be filed by an "affiliated group of corporations" interconnected by at least 95% stock ownership. The privilege of filing consolidated returns is designed for the protection and benefit of the common owner, or parent, of the affiliated roup. Without consolidated returns, the investor, that is, the parent company, investing in two subsidiaries, one profitable, and the other a losing proposition, would have to pay a tax on the income from its good investment, without being able to deduct its loss from the bad one. The rationale of consolidated returns

* See Appendix.

"is the recognition of this common owner's right to set off against his gains in the one [corporation] his losses in the other [corporation] * * *";

Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, 44 F. 2d 543, 545 (C. C. A. 4, 1930), cert. den. 282 U. S. 903.

The underlying principle has been well stated by the District Court (R. 269):

"* * * the philosophy of the consolidated return is to disregard the corporate entity and to tax as a single business or economic unit what really is a business unit * * *. It treats an affiliated group of corporations as one business enterprise, the various affiliates being considered as if they were branch offices of the main business establishment. The income from all units is considered as a single income and the losses of all units are treated as a single loss. (Citing authorities)."

An authoritative statement of the purpose of the consolidated returns statute is found in the Report of the Senate Finance Committee, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., S. R. 960, p. 14 (1928), from which, because of its importance, we quote at some length:

"The permission to file consolidated returns by affiliated corporations merely recognizes the business entity as distinguished from the legal corporate entity of the business enterprise. Unless the affiliated group as a whole in the conduct of its business enterprise shows net profits, the individuals conducting the business have realized no gain. The failure to recognize the entire business enterprise means drawing technical legal distinctions, as contrasted with the recognition of actual facts. The mere fact that by legal fiction several corporations owned by the same stockholders are separate entities should not obscure the fact that they are in reality one and the same business owned by the same individuals and operated as a unit. To refuse to recognize this situation and to require for tax purposes the breaking up of a single business into its constituent parts is just as unreasonable as to require a single corporation to report separately for tax purposes the gains from its sales department, from its manufacturing activities, from its investments, and from each and every one of its agencies. It would be just as unreasonable to demand that an individual engaged in two or more businesses treat each business separately for tax purposes.

"Much of the misapprehension about consolidated returns will be removed when it is realized that it is only when the corporations are really but one corporation that the permission to file consolidated returns is given, and that no ultimate advantage under the tax laws really results. The present law permits the filing of consolidated returns only where one corporation owns at least 95 per cent of the stock of the other corporation or if at least 95 per cent of the stock of both corporations is owned by the same interest. The provision embodies the business man's conception of a practical state of facts." (Italics added.)

Consolidated returns are thus permitted for the benefit of the "common owner" of the affiliated enterprise, that is, the parent corporation and its stockholders. They are not permitted for the benefit of the subsidiaries. If a subsidiary operates profitably it has no ground, in its own person, to seek a reduction of its taxes, even though its parent, or another subsidiary of the parent, has sustained a loss; for such loss cannot affect the financial position of the profitable subsidiary. But otherwise the common parent; in an economic sense, the profits of each member of the group are the profits of the parent, and the losses of each member of the group are the losses of the parent; the right to offset such losses and profits against each other is therefore the parent's right, created in the interest and for the benefit of the parent. As stated in the Alameda case, supra (28 F. 2d, at 82), "The benefit of the statute extends to him on whom is the hazard of the several enterprises", that is, the parent.

It is true that consolidated returns may also redound to the advantage of the subsidiary. Thus where a losing parent files a consolidated return for itself and a profitable subsidiary, the latter's taxes may be reduced. But this tax advantage is not allowed for the subsidiary's sake. It is allowed for the parent's sake which, normally, gets the full benefit of the subsidiary's tax savings by the automatic operation of economic factors—either through the increased value of the parent's stock in the subsidiary or through the declaration of dividends.

It follows, we submit, that plaintiff, as the parent, rather than respondent, as the subsidiary, was the intended beneficiary of the consolidated returns statute.

3. The Court below erred in holding that the tax laws were not designed for plaintiff's benefit.

The Court of Appeals rejected our analysis of the purpose of the tax laws (R. 2229-2232). It held that the tax saving here accomplished was "an advantage which the tax laws give the subsidiary" (2234). In reaching this conclusion, the Court below failed to discuss or even to mention any of the legislative materials and other authorities we have cited. It rested its conclusion on a fragmentary analysis of two provisions of the tax law: The provision giving the subsidiary the right to refuse to join in consolidated returns (R. 2230); and the provisions permitting consolidated returns for a period of affiliation less than the taxable year, even though such affiliation had ceased at the time of filing such returns (R. 2230-1).

Neither of these provisions justifies the Court's conclusions therefrom.

(a) In requiring the subsidiary's consent to the filing of consolidated returns, the tax laws do not indicate a purpose of conferring a tax benefit on the subsidiary.

The right of the parent, which alone can file consolidated returns, to refuse to do so is not comparable to the right of the subsidiary to refuse to do so. Giving this right to the parent was in furtherance of the purpose and intent that the parent would and should enjoy the benefits. Congress viewed the parent and its stockholders as the owners of one business consisting of a group of affiliates (supra, pp. 52-53). The law therefore gives the parent the sole right to file consolidated returns for the group (Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.12(a)) on the assumption that, as the common owner, it would and should determine, in its own self-interest, whether or not to file such returns. As stated in Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner (supra):

> "It [Congress] assumed that if there was that degree of affiliation which the law required, there was a dominant control, and it gave to that dominant control the right to make the choice" (44 F. 2d, at 545).

Hence, concluded that Court, if the parent were to "decide that its best interests require filing by it of a separate tax return, no provision of the law denies it this privilege" (p. 545).

The subsidiary's consent was not required for any such reason. Congress obviously did not view the subsidiary as the owner of the group. Therefore, the subsidiary's right to refuse to join is not, like the parent's, given in recognition of its position as the common owner. The principal grounds of requiring the subsidiary's consent were these: (1) To assure uniform action by the entire affiliated group (otherwise the group might play fast and loose by having the parent file a consolidated return and the subsidiary a separate return); and (2) To assure that the subsidiary is legally bound by the parent's election to file a consolidated return (otherwise the subsidiary might, for instance, deny that it is jointly and severally liable for the taxes payable under the parent's consolidated return, as provided in Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.15(a)).

In the normal situation of economic unity between parent and subsidiary—and that is the situation contemplated by the statute—the subsidiary will be in no position to veto the parent's decision to file a consolidated return, since the "dominant control" of the parent will enable it to guide the subsidiary. The requirement of the subsidiary's consent does not, therefore, as the Court below thought (R. 2230), indicate that consolidated returns are intended for the benefit of the subsidiary.

(b) The fact that consolidated returns may be filed in certain anomalous situations where the economic unity between parent and subsidiary is severed, does not indicate a statutory purpose to benefit the subsidiary rather than the parent.

The Court of Appeals recognized that, "in the usual case", an affiliated group of corporations entitled to file consolidated returns is an economic unit so that "the tax saving which a subsidiary effects will inure to the parent by way of increasing the value of its stock or by way of dividends" (R. 2230). But, says the Court of Appeals, there are other situations in which consolidated returns may be filed although there is no "economic unity" between parent and subsidiary. Thus, if the affiliation between parent and subsidiary has ended, the parent may nevertheless file a consolidated return for the affiliated period; if such a return results in a tax saving by the subsidiary, there can be no automatic upstream flow of the benefit to the parent. The same is true if the subsidiary is in bankruptcy; if the parent and the trustees of the bankrupt subsidiary join in consolidated returns, the tax savings of the subsidiary will not automatically redound to the benefit of the parent. From these instances, the Court of Appeals deduces that the tax laws do not "require" economic unity between parent and subsidiary as a precondition of filing consolidated returns and hence that the statutory purpose of permitting consolidated returns is not to confer a benefit upon the parent (R. 2230-1).

The trouble with this argument is that it confuses the requirements of the statute with the purpose of the statute.

We never contended that the consolidated return statute "requires" economic unity; we do contend that it contemplates economic unity; the authorities establish this contention (supra, pp. 52-53). It is true enough that all that the statute requires is 95% stock ownership; but the statute makes this requirement on the theory that, by and large, corporations interconnected by 95% stock ownership "are in reality one and the same business", "a single business" (Senate Report, supra, pp. 52-53). It is true that in a few anomalous situations the requirements of the statute can be fulfilled, although there is no economic unity; but the purpose of the statute nevertheless remains the same, namely, to grant relief to the owners of an economically unified enterprise.

How, then, did it happen that the purpose of the statute is not precisely reflected in its requirements? The answer lies in the history of the consolidated return statute. Originally, consolidated returns were regulated in strict accordance with their underlying purpose; they could be filed only by a group of affiliated corporations actually constituting an economic unit. See United States v. Cleveland P. & E. R. Co., 42 F. 2d 413 (C. C. A. 6, 1930), setting forth the early history of consolidated return law. But the statutory definitions of economic unity proved so vague as to be unworkable. In the interest of administrative convenience (see Report of Senate Finance Committee, supra, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., S. R. 960, p. 13), the test of affiliation was therefore simplified: The legal ownership by one corporation of at least 95% of the stock of another corporation was made the sole test of "affiliation". But this change of the requirements of the statute did not indicate a change of its purpose; the purpose remained the same, namely, to give the owners of the affiliated group the privilege of deducting the losses of one affiliate from the profits of another affiliate, just as if the entire affiliated group were a "single enterprise".

It is true that in those situations where the affiliation has ended prior to the actual filing of the consolidated returns, the "economic unity" then no longer exists. But it does not follow, as the Court below held, that in such situation "any benefits to the subsidiary obviously cannot inure to the parent" (R. 2230). Since only the ex-parent can file consolidated returns, its self-interest will determine whether or not it should file such returns for the affiliated period. The ex-subsidiary, in turn, may prevent the filing by refusing its consent to do so; and it will refuse if its self-interest so dictates. In short, the filing or non-filing of such returns and the sharing of the benefits therefrom could well be the subject of negotiation between the ex-parent and the ex-subsidiary and may well result in the sharing by both corporations. Moreover, the parent, in the very act of terminating the affiliation, can assure itself the benefit of the subsequent filing of consolidated returns. Thus, if the parent were selling its 95% stock interest in a subsidiary to a stranger and at the time of the sale knew that the parent's loss would, in a consolidated return, confer a $17,000,000 tax saving on the subsidiary, could it be doubted that this would be reflected in the price of the stock being sold?

By the same token, the purpose of the tax laws could not be automatically effected by the consolidated returns in the case at bar. Although plaintiff was the parent, its normal and automatic benefiting from the tax saving of its subsidiary, the respondent, could not occur; for the stock certificates of respondent, held by plaintiff, were merely pieces of paper representing neither equity nor right to dividends. Hence, the statutory purpose could be effected only in another fashion, namely, by an agreement among the parties allocating the resulting tax savings.

(c) The Court of Appeals overlooked that tax savings payments are particularly justified in those situations where, because of the economic severance of the affiliates, the purpose of the tax laws is not automatically effectuated.

The Court of Appeals advanced one further argument: Granting, says the Court, that in the usual case of an economically unified group the tax savings of the subsidiary redound automatically to the parent (by increasing the value of the parent's equity in the subsidiary), it does not follow that the parent "may receive the benefits direct, regardless of the rights of the subsidiary's preferred stockholders, creditors and minority common stockholders" (R. 2230). In other words: The parent, in consolidated returns, deducts its own loss from the earnings of the subsidiary; the subsidiary's taxes are thereby reduced; this benefits the parent by enhancing its equity in the subsidiary; but the parent cannot receive an actual payment from the subsidiary for making its tax credit available to the subsidiary.

We ask, why not? In the S.E.C. cases discussed below (pp. 75-78), the Commission approved just such payments as fair, under appropriate circumstances. This much, however, is true: In the case of an economically unified group there is ordinarily not much justification for these tax savings payments; for the purpose of the tax laws is fully accomplished by enhancing the parent's equity in the subsidiary; and an actual payment by the subsidiary to the parent will not advance that purpose any further.

But the case is different where, as here, the economic unity of the parent and subsidiary is severed. In that event, the filing of consolidated returns and the resulting tax saving of the subsidiary do not automatically benefit the parent; the parent's loss remains unalleviated by any tax advantage; the subsidiary obtains a tax windfall without economic rhyme or reason; and the purpose of the tax laws fails altogether. That purpose can be more nearly achieved only by the subsidiary's paying all or at least a substantial part of its tax savings to the parent.

While, therefore, in an economically unified group there is ordinarily no need and little justification for a tax saving payment, the need and justification of such a payment is strong where, as here, the economic unity is destroyed.

The Court below referred to "the rights of the subsidiary's preferred stockholders, creditors and minority common stockholders" (R. 2230). But the creditors, the preferred and the minority common stockholders of the subsidiary have no better right than the subsidiary itself to demand that the parent make its tax credit available to the subsidiary. Consolidated returns are not permitted for the benefit of any particular subsidiary, nor for the benefit of the creditors, etc., of that subsidiary; they are permitted for the benefit of the common owner of the affiliated group, i.e., the parent company and its stockholders. If parent and subsidiary are economic strangers, and if the creditors of the subsidiary wish the parent to join with the subsidiary in consolidated returns, they have no more rights in the premises than the subsidiary itself. The Court's reference to the rights of the creditors, etc., of the subsidiary poses, therefore, a false issue.

We submit that an independent management of plaintiff, with all these thoughts in mind, before consenting to consolidated returns and to the use of plaintiff's tax credit by respondent, might well have insisted on an agreement with respondent assuring plaintiff at least a fair share in the dollars to be achieved by their joint action, in accordance with the purpose of the tax laws. And respondent's management, if willing to act fairly, would have acceded to such a demand.

But even if the purpose of the tax laws were not indicative of what fair dealing between these parties required, there were other reasons which made it fair for plaintiff to receive at least a substantial share of the tax savings to be produced by the use of its tax credit.

Plaintiff's tax credit was a valuable asset which, in fairness, plaintiff could not be expected to surrender to respondent without receiving an adequate share of the resulting tax benefits.

Plaintiff's tax credit was its property. It was a thing of value. An asset which can produce benefits of $17,000,000 would seem to be valuable indeed. Respondent acted unfairly in causing plaintiff to part with this asset and in using it for itself, without allowing plaintiff a share of the resulting benefits.

The Court of Appeals denied that plaintiff's tax credit was a valuable asset. It thought that plaintiff, having no income of its own, could not utilize its tax credit for itself; hence respondent's use of that tax credit would not "sacrifice" any of plaintiff's interests, but would leave plaintiff "in exactly the same position that it was in before"; it was therefore proper for respondent and its officers to cause plaintiff to file consolidated returns which made plaintiff's tax credit available to respondent; and plaintiff could not demand "tribute" for doing so (R. 2232-3).

The premises as well as the conclusion of the Court below are wholly untenable.

(a) The Court of Appeals erred in holding that plaintiff could not use its tax credit for itself. The value of plaintiff's tax credit must be determined as of the time respondent appropriated it, i.e., July 15, 1944 (the date of the 1943 returns). At that time plaintiff had a real possibility of utilizing its tax credit to its own direct benefit. The fact that plaintiff's tax credit could be carried forward as far as 1945 could have been utilized to attract new capital investments in plaintiff; and plaintiff, with the income produced by such new financing, could have enjoyed the benefit of its tax credit. See Alprosa Watch Corp. v. Commissioner, 11 T. C. 240 (1948), the facts of which are set forth in the footnote.* Plaintiff's management, devoted solely to the interests of respondent, entertained no such thoughts; but that does not change the fact that plaintiff's tax credit could have been the instrument of breathing new life into plaintiff. It was therefore an asset of real and substantial value; and the contention that its surrender to respondent cost plaintiff nothing is plainly wrong.

(b) By filing consolidated returns, plaintiff subjected itself to joint and several liability for any taxes or tax deficiencies which might be assessed upon respondent's income. Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.15(d). Fairness certainly did not require plaintiff to make itself gratuitously the surety for the tax obligations of respondent.

(c) Even if it be assumed that plaintiff could under no circumstances have used its tax credit for itself, respondent could. The very fact that plaintiff's tax credit was useful to respondent made it a valuable asset of plaintiff.

Suppose that two corporations with interlocking managements own one patent each; the two patents complement each other; neither can be used without the other. Each patent is worthless to its owner except for the value it has because of its usefulness to the other corporation. The common management causes one corporation to license its patent to the other, without any arrangement for royalties or other consideration. Upon a challenge of this transaction by stockholders of the licensor company, the licensee answers that the transaction is fair because the licensor could not use its patent for itself and thus, after the transaction, "was in exactly the same position that it was in before". To a court of equity such an argument would, we believe, be nothing short of shocking.

* The taxpayer in the Alprosa Watch case was a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling gloves under the name of "Esspi Glove Corporation". It sustained a substantial loss in its operations. The stockholders of the corporation thereupon sold their stock to a new group. The new stockholders changed the name of the taxpayer to "Alprosa Watch Corporation", moved its business to new quarters and caused the corporation to give up the glove business and to engage in the business of purchasing and selling jewelry. The Tax Court held that the corporation could use the loss sustained in its glove business as a tax credit against the profits made in its jewelry business.

In our case plaintiff and respondent each had an essential ingredient for achieving a tax benefit. Plaintiff had a $75,000,000 loss; respondent had a large taxable income. Both respondent's taxable income and plaintiff's tax credit were necessary elements to achieve the tax saving, just as both patents were necessary to make a useful process. Plaintiff and respondent did join their resources to produce the tax benefit; and the joint effort of the two was indeed successful. But only one, the fiduciary, respondent, retained all the profit while the plaintiff, its cestui, received none.

Can this result possibly be called fair dealing by a fiduciary with its cestui?

Indeed, the recognition of this unfairness is implicit in the opinion below. For the Court below held that "affiliated corporations are usually associated for the very purpose of dealing with each other for profit" (R. 2221). But certainly this purpose of "dealing with each other for profit" must not become a one-way street. The purpose is foiled if one corporation reaps all the profit of the deal and the other none. Such unequal weighting of the scales becomes doubly repugnant to the sense of fairness where it is the dominant corporation which channels all the benefits of the joint transaction to itself and allows none to its ward whose destinies it has undertaken to guide. We submit that, on the very premises proclaimed by the Court below, the unfairness of respondent's dealing with its and plaintiff's tax affairs is palpable and glaring.

The argument of the Court below that plaintiff was, after the transaction, in the same position as before, implies that plaintiff cannot recover because it did not suffer actual injury. The Court does not reveal upon which local law it predicates the necessity of injury. The law, we submit, is well settled that a fiduciary dealing unfairly cannot

2. Agreements for the allocation of tax savings are well supported by precedent.

The question whether the tax benefits arising from consolidated returns have been fairly allocated among affiliated companies will rarely reach the cognizance of a court, since ordinarily the affiliation is too close for inter-company controversies. The question has, however, arisen from time to time in the field of public utility holding companies under regulations issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Although these regulations are not directly applicable to the present parties, their administration by the S. E. C. discloses the underlying principles of fairness which sanction the present plaintiff's claim.

(a) The S. E. C. regulation most directly pertinent is the Commission's Rule U-45(b)(6), 17 C.F.R. (1949), § 250.45(b)(6),* applicable to affiliated groups of public utility companies, and specifically regulating inter-company tax adjustments. This rule directs, in effect, that ordinarily the consolidated tax payable by an affiliated utility group shall be allocated among the members of the group in the proportion of their respective net incomes, but that deviations from this formula may be permitted by the Commission. As stated by the Commission, "Rule U-45(b)(6) was designed to effect a fair distribution of taxes based on consolidated returns".† To effectuate this purpose, the Commission has approved deviations from its rule and permitted "tax saving payments", i.e., payments by a profitable affiliate to a losing affiliate for the use of the latter's tax credit. The Commission's rulings and opinions are therefore significant on the issue of fairness herein.

* See Appendix.

† Matter of Cities Service Company (S. E. C. Holding Company Act Release No. 5535, January 3, 1945, File No. 70-933); see infra, p. 76.

Matter of Consolidated Electric & Gas Co., 15 S. E. C. 161 (1943), involved an affiliated group of utility companies including a parent corporation ("Consolidated") and 44 subsidiaries. Parent and subsidiaries filed consolidated tax returns. The parent had sold the assets of nine of the subsidiaries, sustaining a large loss on its investment therein. This loss could be used as a tax deduction by reason of a 1942 amendment of the Internal Revenue Code —the same amendment which qualified the present plaintiff's stock loss as a tax deduction. If the loss sustained by Consolidated was utilized in the consolidated return, the taxes payable by the affiliated group would be reduced by more than $2,000,000. Most of this tax saving would redound to the benefit of the subsidiaries, only a small fraction to the direct benefit of the parent.

In order to prevent the subsidiaries from receiving this undeserved windfall at the expense of their parent, the group members entered into an agreement under which the subsidiaries were to pay to their parent all of the tax savings resulting from the parent's capital loss. Since this arrangement was intrinsically fair, the Commission approved it:

> "To the extent that tax savings may accrue to the parent in connection with such sales, the result is in effect to reduce the amount of loss accruing to Consolidated by virtue of the transaction." (p. 163)
>
> "Under all the circumstances we believe that it is more realistic to view the tax savings as, in effect, partial offsets to the capital loss otherwise suffered by Consolidated in connection with the sales." (p. 164)

Like considerations should control the case at bar. The present plaintiff, like Consolidated, sustained an extraordinary capital loss giving rise to a tax deduction. The tax deduction here, like that in the Consolidated case, was designed as "partial offset to the capital loss". Just as it was fair for Consolidated to collect from its subsidiaries the tax savings which they obtained through Consolidated's loss,* so it would have been fair for plaintiff to obtain a similar arrangement with respondent.

Indeed, the present case is much stronger than Consolidated. The Consolidated group—unlike the Western Pacific group—constituted an economic unit. The tax savings of Consolidated's subsidiaries thus enured automatically to the benefit of the parent; and the Commission noted that Consolidated might have secured most of the tax benefits of its subsidiaries through the payment of dividends (15 S. E. C., at 164). The permission for tax saving payments was thus a matter of expediency rather than necessity. By contrast, the economic unity of the Western Pacific group was destroyed. Plaintiff could derive no automatic benefit from the tax saving of respondent; an agreement for the sharing of the tax savings was thus, not merely a matter of expediency, but imperatively required in the interest of fairness, to effectuate the "more realistic" view of the tax savings as partial offsets to plaintiff's capital loss.

Matter of Cities Service Company (S. E. C. Holding Company Act Release No. 5535, January 3, 1945, File No. 70-988) contains an even broader statement of the applicable policies. Cities Service Co. was the parent of an affiliated utility group filing consolidated tax returns; Refining Corporation was a subsidiary. Under the war emergency, the Refining Corporation had built a refinery at a cost of $77,000,000, borrowed in large part from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The refinery was subject to rapid obsolescence. Pursuant to special dispensation, Refining Corporation was permitted to amortize its investment, for tax purposes, over a period of five years; in other words, it had in each year a tax deduction equal to 20% of its $77,000,000 investment. If these tax deductions were utilized in consolidated returns, they would enure to the benefit of other affiliates rather than that of Refining

* The tax savings paid to the parent in Consolidated were solely those flowing from the use of Consolidated's stock loss. Other tax savings flowing from the consolidated return remained with the subsidiaries.

Corporation. This would be an undeserved advantage to those affiliates who had not, with borrowed funds, made a large investment threatened with early obsolescence. The affiliates therefore agreed to pay to Refining Corporation their tax savings derived from the latter's amortization tax credits; and the S. E. C. approved. We quote the Commission's conclusions in full:

"Conclusions

"Rule U-45 (b) (6) was designed to effect a fair distribution of taxes based on consolidated returns. In appraising a proposed deviation from our rule we think it should be observed that in the ordinary case the fact that one subsidiary contributes a particular income deduction to a consolidated return does not in itself entitle that subsidiary to the benefits of the reduced taxes resulting from the deduction. Where tax reductions are possible from filing a consolidated return, they ordinarily are due to a number of factors contributed by the various members of the consolidating group, including, among others, earnings, and excess profits tax credits, as well as income deductions.

"On the basis of the estimates of the tax liability for 1944 it appears that Refining Corporation will contribute special deductions but that the other subsidiaries will contribute the income necessary to permit full utilization of the deductions. Thus, while a portion of the tax reductions possible from consolidation could not be realized without the special amortization items, the reduction likewise could not be realized in the absence of the income furnished by the other companies.

"Obviously it is difficult to determine the precise weight to be given to these various factors and in this case the problem is made more difficult since we have available the results of only five months' operation of the refinery.

"However, the impact of our rule in this instance and the circumstances surrounding the construction of the refinery as recited above persuade us that we should grant the exception requested if the effect in subsequent years will not cause undue detriment to the other subsidiaries of Cities. We shall therefore permit the escape an accounting on the ground that the cestui suffered no detriment.

In Young v. Higbee Co., 324 U. S. 204 (1945), a preferred stockholder of a bankrupt corporation, acting as representative of his class, demanded that the claims of certain creditors be subordinated. The District Court rejected the demand. The stockholder appealed; but while the appeal was pending, he sold his stock, and with it the appeal, to his adversaries. He was held accountable for the moneys received although there was no proof that, but for his surrender, the claim would have prevailed. Detriment to the cestui (the preferred stockholders as a class) was thus not held to be a prerequisite for recovery from the unfaithful fiduciary. The rule of this case has been followed in New York and in other jurisdictions; Clarke v. Greenberg, 296 N. Y. 146, 71 N. E. 2d 443 (1947); Certain-Teed Products Corp. v. Topping, 171 F. 2d 241 (C. A. 2, 1948).

A similar result was reached in the Shreveport Bank cases (supra, pp. 45-46), where the fiduciary (the new bank) used for itself a tax credit belonging to the cestui (the old bank); although the cestui could not have utilized the tax credit, it was permitted to recover the tax savings of the fiduciary ("regardless of whether the principal had suffered injury or not", 28 F. Supp. at 933; 144 F. 2d, at 237). And likewise in Fleishhacker v. Blum, 109 F. 2d 543, 546 (C. C. A. 9, 1940), cert. den. 311 U. S. 665, a bank officer was held accountable for the breach of his fiduciary duty, "even though the bank has suffered no damage". Accord: Restatement, Restitution (1937), § 1, Comment (e), pp. 14-15; § 197, Comment (c), pp. 809-810.

Let us compare our case with a more usual commercial analogy: Suppose that a fiduciary manages two businesses, one belonging to himself, the other to his cestui. By combining the purchasing power of the two, he buys merchandise at prices cheaper than each business would have had to pay separately. However, the entire amount of the reduced price is kept by the fiduciary; the cestui gets none of the savings. Could it be doubted that the fiduciary would be held guilty of "overreaching or unfairness"? Would even the "morals of the market place" produce such a result were there strangers dealing at arm's length? Would it be any answer for the fiduciary to say that his cestui was undamaged because it was still getting the same old merchandise at the same old price? And would the cestui's demand for a fair share of the price saving be condemned as an attempt to "require tribute"?

We submit that in our case, as in the above hypothetical case, any reasonable test of fairness would deny that respondent as the fiduciary can take all and give its cestui none of the results of their joint efforts.

Plaintiff owed respondent no legal duty to file consolidated returns and thus to make its tax credit available to respondent.

The Court of Appeals held that it would have been improper for plaintiff to "bargain" for a share of respondent's tax savings because plaintiff and its officers were under a "positive duty" to file consolidated returns making plaintiff's tax credit available to respondent (R. 2233-5). Plaintiff, says the Court, "was the sole owner of the subsidiary's capital stock" (R. 2234). Hence plaintiff was "under a duty to deal fairly with the subsidiary". Plaintiff therefore "owed a duty not to require its subsidiary to forego a legitimate tax saving and could not bargain to perform its duty" (R. 2234). Had the positions of the corporations been reversed, i.e., had respondent sustained a loss and plaintiff realized a profit, then respondent and its officers would have been obliged to file consolidated returns to enable plaintiff to make use of the loss (R. 2233).

This holding, we submit, is erroneous for several reasons.

1. Plaintiff's ownership of respondent's stock did not impose fiduciary duties on plaintiff.

The Court below thought that plaintiff, "as the sole owner of the subsidiary's capital stock", was respondent's fiduciary. But the law is well settled that naked stock ownership creates no fiduciary duty unless the parent corporation dominates or controls the subsidiary:

Southern Pacific Co. v. Bogert, 250 U. S. 483, 492 (1919);

Blaustein v. Pan American P. & T. Co., 263 App. Div. 97, 119, 31 N. Y. S. 2d 934, 956 (1st Dept., 1941), aff'd 293 N. Y. 281, 56 N. E. 2d 705 (1944);

Allied Chemical & Dye Corp. v. Steel & Tube Co., 14 Del. Ch. 1, 12-13, 120 Atl. 486 (1923);

Title Ins. & T. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 205-6, 152 Pac. 542 (1915);

13 Fletcher, Corporations (Perm. Ed., 1943), § 5811, pp. 127-8.

Thus this Court held in the Southern Pacific case, supra (250 U. S., at 492):

> "It is the fact of control * * * that creates the fiduciary obligation."

And in Blaustein, supra, the New York state court held (253 App. Div., at 119):

> "Mere ownership of a majority or all the stock of a corporation does not in and of itself spell domination. Stockholders are not ipso facto trustees for each other. [Citing authorities.] The fiduciary role is not assumed, and the obligation will not be imposed, until a majority stockholder usurps the functions of the directors in the management and conduct of the business of the corporation to the detriment of the corporation and the minority. [Citing authorities.]"

The Court below (R. 2234) cited Consolidated Rock Products Co. v. DuBois, 312 U. S. 510, 522 (1941); but that case does not stand for any rule different from that of the authorities just cited:

> "But equity will not permit a holding company, which has dominated and controlled its subsidiaries, to escape or reduce its liability to those subsidiaries by reliance upon self-serving contracts which it has imposed on them. A holding company, as well as others in dominating and controlling positions (Pepper v. Litton, 308 U. S. 295), has fiduciary duties to security holders of its system which will be strictly enforced."

(312 U. S., at 522; italics ours.)

The Consolidated Rock Products case, like our other authorities, thus makes domination and control the decisive pre-condition of a parent company's fiduciary duty to its subsidiary.

The exercise of domination by plaintiff over respondent was plainly impossible. Respondent had been in the hands of its bankruptcy trustees since 1935. The Court of Appeals so held: "After the subsidiary was reorganized it was no longer controlled by Corporation but by the trustees appointed by the bankruptcy court" (R. 2223).

In the absence of domination or control, the mere ownership of respondent's stock did not subject plaintiff to any fiduciary duties.

Of course, once plaintiff and respondent actually entered into a transaction with each other, the managerial interlock imposed upon both the duty to deal fairly with each other. But it certainly does not follow that the managerial interlock (any more than the stock ownership) subjected plaintiff to an obligation to file consolidated returns.

2. The holding of the Court of Appeals that every affiliated corporation having a deductible loss owes its profitable affiliates a duty to join in consolidated returns has dangerous implications, is contrary to the tax laws and finds no support in fiduciary law.

The holding of the Court below comes, in effect, to this: If in an affiliated group one member has a profit and the other sustains a loss, then the loss company is obligated, as a matter of law, to join in consolidated returns making its tax credit available to the profit company. That such was its holding was made quite clear by the Court below; for it held not only that plaintiff, as the owner of respondent's stock, was under a duty to respondent to file consolidated returns; it further held that, if the situation had been reversed, respondent would have been under a similar duty to plaintiff.

The consequences of this holding are far-reaching indeed. Under the tax laws, only the parent can file consolidated returns; the filing of such returns is optional. The Internal Revenue Code, § 141(a), refers to the "privilege of making consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns". The law has heretofore been settled that, if the parent's stockholders "decide that its best interests require filing by it of a separate tax return, no provision of the law denies it this privilege", Duke Power Co. v. Commissioner, supra, 44 F. 2d, at 545.

All this would have to be changed if the Court below were to be sustained. The parent's "privilege" to file consolidated returns would become a compulsion; the option of the various affiliates to consult their best interest would be abolished; the statutory requirement of their consent would become a mere formality or idle ceremony.

We submit that the tax laws, in creating the consolidated return privilege, did not intend any such result; and it should not be created by judicial fiat.

Nor does the fiduciary duty to deal "fairly", if applicable at all, compel any such result. Despite the rigorous rules of fiduciary dealings, we know of no requirement that the fiduciary must turn its own property over to the cestui for the latter's benefit and advantage. The cestui cannot demand it, and no court would compel the fiduciary to do so, no matter how advantageously the cestui could use this property.

The tax credit herein was plaintiff's property, not respondent's; plaintiff could not be compelled to surrender its property to respondent in consolidated returns. Plaintiff was free to use its own property as its best interests dictated. Indeed, the Court below, in a different context, so stated (R. 2230):

> "Any subsidiary in the group, as well as the parent, may prevent the filing of consolidated returns if the filing is detrimental or contrary to the interests of such corporation."

Here, then, the Court of Appeals expressly recognized that the parent, in deciding whether or not to file consolidated returns, may be guided by its own interest rather than by that of its subsidiary. Nevertheless, a few pages later in its opinion, the Court of Appeals stated that plaintiff was obliged to file consolidated returns if that was in the respondent's, the subsidiary's, interest (R. 2234). The two holdings are plainly contradictory; and we submit that the first was right, the second wrong.

Hence, whether or not a member of an affiliated group be deemed a fiduciary of the other members is, we believe, immaterial to the question of whether such member can be required to file consolidated returns. If an affiliated company owns a tax credit, it is its own property; and no law, written or unwritten, compels the loss company to join in consolidated returns and thereby to surrender its tax credit to others.

D

The alleged tax practice of the Western Pacific group in earlier years furnishes no precedent for a period in which the affiliation between plaintiff and respondent had ended.

The Court of Appeals advances another reason for sustaining the fairness of respondent's receiving all the tax savings and plaintiff none. The argument runs (R. 2225, 2233): During the years prior to 1943 plaintiff, respondent and their affiliates had consistently filed consolidated tax returns. The taxes paid by plaintiff pursuant to such returns were allocated among the various affiliates having taxable income in proportion to the amount of such incomes. Affiliates who contributed a loss and thereby reduced the consolidated tax are said to have received no payment for contributing their loss. Such having been the practice before 1942, the Court says it would have been unfair for plaintiff to demand a change in 1943 and thereafter, when such change would be to plaintiff's advantage.

The argument does not stand analysis.

1. It is factually unsound. During the years from 1918 to 1924, one of the affiliates joining with plaintiff and respondent in consolidated returns did make substantial "tax savings payments" to plaintiff, as is more fully demonstrated in the footnote.*

---

* The affiliate was the Utah Fuel Company. The facts appear from a Price, Waterhouse report (Def. Ex. 40, R. 1517, not printed in the record, but filed with the Court below and with this Court). Page references in this footnote refer to said Defendants' Exhibit 40.

In the interest of brevity, we confine ourselves to the taxes for the year 1923, other years being similar. In 1923 the separate income of Utah Fuel Company (including its subsidiaries) was $1,053,957.73 (pp. 6, 13). At the then prevailing 12½% tax rate, the income tax payable by Utah Fuel Company, on a separate basis, would have been $131,744.72.

Utah Fuel Company however joined with plaintiff and the other members of the Western Pacific group in a consolidated tax return. Plaintiff had sustained a substantial loss in 1923 (p. 13). The total consolidated tax amounted therefore to only $71,268.88 (p. 13); and the proportionate share of Utah Fuel Company in the consolidated tax would have been only a fraction of this $71,268.88.

But actually the benefit of this tax reduction was not passed on to Utah Fuel Company. On the contrary, Utah Fuel Company paid the full sum of $131,744.72 (p. 6), i.e., the tax it would have had to pay on a separate basis. It paid to the Government:	$71,268.88

to plaintiff:	$60,475.84 (p. 6)
Total paid by Utah Fuel Co.:	$131,744.72 (p. 6)

This transaction is thus a clear instance of a "tax savings payment" and refutes the holding of the Court of Appeals that none of the loss companies of the Western Pacific group received payment for the use of its tax credit in consolidated returns.

2. In any case, the tax practice of the Western Pacific group in earlier years is totally irrelevant to the events of 1943 and thereafter. The $593,976.33 tax savings which plaintiff is said to have derived by filing consolidated returns (Def. Ex. 46, R. 1552, 2040), accrued during the period from 1924 to 1935 (R. 2040). During this period, the Western Pacific group was an economic unit; tax savings payments would have been unnecessary and pointless since all tax savings automatically redounded to the benefit of plaintiff, the common parent. Thus, if plaintiff sustained a loss and one of its subsidiaries profited, the tax saving of the subsidiary became automatically the tax saving of the parent, so that the formality of a tax saving payment was superfluous. Conversely, if plaintiff had a profit and one of its subsidiaries a loss, a tax saving payment by the parent to the subsidiary would have been as meaningless as it would be for an individual to shift money from one pocket to another. So long as the Western Pacific group constituted an economic unit, there was no reason or purpose for making tax savings payments.

But the situation was quite different when, on March 15, 1943, the economic unity of plaintiff and respondent was severed. From that time on, the automatic upstream flow of respondent's tax savings was interrupted. The tax savings of respondent were no longer the tax savings of plaintiff. Hence it was at this point, and not before, that an adjustment of tax savings between respondent and plaintiff became important and necessary.

We submit that the alleged absence of tax savings payments during the period before 1943—when such payments would have been unnecessary and meaningless—furnishes no test for the years 1943 and thereafter when the usefulness and significance of such payments first arose.

Nor does it afford any justification for the failure of plaintiff's management to obtain an agreement by respondent assuring plaintiff its fair share of the tax savings. Such an agreement, as we now proceed to show, would have been wholly legal and proper.

E

Agreements for the fair allocation of tax savings among affiliated corporations are permitted and well supported by precedent.

In the Court below respondent argued that an agreement between plaintiff and respondent for the allocation of the tax savings would have been illegal; or that, at least, it would have been contrary to some undefined public policy, allegedly reflected in certain administrative rulings. The opposite is true.

1. Agreements for the allocation of tax savings are expressly permitted by statute and regulation.

Under earlier Revenue Acts, the subject of inter-company tax allocations was covered by the statute itself. § 240(a) of the Revenue Act of 1918 provided that a consolidated tax shall be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations "in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them".* Allocation agreements made under this provision were thus binding not only among the parties, but even on the Commissioner who could collect from each affiliated corporation only such share of the consolidated tax as it had agreed to assume.

Since this statutory scheme made the collection of consolidated taxes unduly difficult, it was abandoned by the 1928 amendment of the Revenue Act which authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make appropriate regulations governing the subject; Internal Revenue Code,

* The Revenue Act of 1918, § 240(a), 40 Stat. 1082, provided, in pertinent part:

> "In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income properly assignable to each. * * *"

§ 141(b). Pursuant to this authorization, the Commissioner promulgated Treas. Reg. 104, § 23.15, which provided:

> "(a) Several Liability of Members of Affiliated Group.
>
> "Except as provided in paragraph (b), a common parent corporation and each subsidiary, a member of the affiliated group during any part of a consolidated return period, shall be severally liable for the tax (including any deficiency in respect thereof) computed upon the consolidated net income of the group.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> "(d) Effect of Inter-company Agreements.
> "Any agreement entered into by one or more members of the affiliated group with any other members of such group or with any other person shall in no case have the effect of reducing the liability prescribed under this section."

This regulation thus had a threefold effect: Each group member became severally liable to the Government for the entire tax; this liability to the Government could not be impaired by an inter-company agreement; but as between the members of the group the validity of inter-company agreements for the allocation of tax burdens or tax benefits was recognized. Unquestionably, therefore, an agreement between plaintiff and respondent, allowing plaintiff a share in the tax savings of respondent, would, as a matter of tax law, have been wholly legal.*

* Respondent has argued that such an agreement would amount to an improper "merchandising of tax advantages", condemned by cases such as Gregory v. Helvering, 293 U. S. 465 (1935), and Higgins v. Smith, 308 U. S. 473 (1940). But the rule of these cases applies only to schemes designed for the evasion of taxes due the Government. Once a tax saving has been legitimately achieved, the Government is not concerned with agreements for the inter-company allocation of the resulting benefits.

fiduciary duties to plaintiff, occupies no different position. As was held by this Court in Barney v. Saunders, 16 How. (57 U. S.) 535, 543 (1853):

> "It is a well-settled principle of equity, that wherever a trustee, or one standing in a fiduciary character, deals with the trust estate for his own personal profit, he shall account to the cestui que trust for all the gain which he has made. * * * They [the fiduciaries] cannot be allowed to aver that the profits made on the trust funds should be put in their own pockets because they were unlawful gains, for fear that the conscience of the cestui que trust should be defiled by a participation in them. To indulge trustees in such an obliquity of conscience, would be holding out immunity from misconduct and an inducement to speculate with the trust funds, and put them in peril."

We submit that the District Court's first ground for dismissing the action cannot stand.

B

Plaintiff's claim is not inconsistent with respondent's reorganization plan.

The District Court's reasoning runs: A "saving" in taxes actually means earnings not paid out to the Government. Plaintiff's claim is therefore a demand for a share of respondent's earnings; and the assertion by plaintiff of such a claim "is a circuitous way of obtaining something in the nature of equity or value for its ownership [of respondent's stock], rejected in the reorganization plan" (R. 372-4).

1. The fallacy of this reasoning lies in the confusion of what plaintiff is entitled to get by virtue of its stock ownership in respondent; and what it is entitled to get by virtue of respondent's use of plaintiff's tax credit.

It is perfectly true that respondent's reorganization plan, giving effect to the "absolute priority rule", Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Co., 308 U. S. 106 (1939), precluded plaintiff from any share in respondent's assets or earnings based upon plaintiff's ownership of stock in respondent. That stock was wiped out by respondent's reorganization plan; and plaintiff was left, at this point, without right or interest in respondent's assets and earnings.

But after this was done—indeed, because it was done—plaintiff had a tax credit. The tax credit belonged to plaintiff; it did not belong to respondent. Respondent's reorganization plan, and the orders approving and confirming it, may be searched from A to Z; no breath of a suggestion will be found that plaintiff's tax credit must be made available to respondent.*

Plaintiff did make its tax credit available to respondent; defendant caused it to do so. This was a new transaction not contemplated by the reorganization plan. Plaintiff's claim stems from this new transaction; for, as we say, plaintiff was in fairness entitled to the benefits from respondent's use of plaintiff's tax credit. By no stretch of argument may plaintiff's claim be viewed as based on its previous stock ownership in respondent.

Indeed, this is graphically demonstrated by the sequence of events. The consolidated returns and the refund claim were filed between July 15, 1944 and June 15, 1945. Prior to any of these dates—on April 30, 1944—plaintiff had surrendered its stock in respondent to the reorganization committee. Plaintiff was therefore no longer a stockholder of respondent at the time the tax returns and the refund claim were filed. Whatever rights plaintiff has in connection with these events, they cannot stem from its stock ownership in respondent which, at that time, was nonexistent. It follows that plaintiff's present claim, based upon the use of its tax credit by respondent, does not contravene the provisions of the reorganization plan eliminating plaintiff's stock interest in respondent.

* The plan could contain no such suggestion. It was formulated in 1939 and approved in 1940 (R. 259). But the statutory amendment, which made the tax credit possible—Internal Revenue Code, § 23(g)(4)—was not enacted until October 21, 1942 (56 Stat. 820).

2. Respondent has argued ad misericordiam that plaintiff's claim would undermine the financial position of respondent. But actually it would leave respondent where the bankruptcy courts intended to place it and where respondent itself and its security holders counted on being placed. When this Court passed on respondent's reorganization plan, the junior interests demanded consideration because of respondent's "unexpectedly large earnings"; Ecker v. Western Pacific R. Corp., 318 U. S. 448, at 508 (1943). In answer this Court referred to the "effect of taxation" which was "more likely to affect net earnings" (ibid.). Respondent's new capitalization was thus based on the assumption that it would have to pay the full taxes on its income; and of this fact respondent gave warning to the world by setting aside a $10,100,000 tax reserve. Respondent has now succeeded in avoiding these taxes. Its security holders thereby obtained a windfall which this Court never contemplated giving them. But the windfall came from the use of plaintiff's tax credit. To say, under these circumstances, that plaintiff's claim to a fair share in this windfall would deplete the assets of respondent or circumvent its reorganization plan is little less than a parody on the facts.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that the judgments of the Court of Appeals and of the District Court should be reversed and that this Court should grant judgment for plaintiff in the amount of respondent's tax savings or, at least, of such part thereof as to this Court may appear fair in the circumstances of this case.

declaration to become effective, but in order that we may have an opportunity to examine the future effects of the amended contract and take any action which may appear necessary or appropriate following such examination, our order will be subject to the condition that the proposed amendment to the contract regarding allocation of Federal income and excess profits tax liability shall cease to be effective upon order of the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing.

"An appropriate order will issue."

This decision clearly shows that the S. E. C. was concerned with the same problem here presented, namely, "a fair distribution of taxes based on consolidated returns." The problem was further similar to ours in that the five-year amortization of the investment was tantamount to an investment loss spread over five years. The S. E. C. held that the tax credit arising from such a loss is designed to mitigate the loss; hence it found fair an agreement among the affiliates effectuating that purpose by a tax saving payment to the Refining Corporation, particularly since the latter needed that payment to discharge its loan obligation to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Nor was the arrangement inconsistent with the underlying purpose of the consolidated return statute to benefit the common parent of the group; for the Cities Service group was an economic unit; hence, whichever affiliate might obtain the tax saving in the first place, it was bound to enure ultimately to the benefit of Cities Service, the common parent; and Cities Service, in its own interest, wished to channel the payment to the Refining Corporation.

In the present case the retention of the tax savings by respondent would defeat not only the purpose of the tax law to alleviate plaintiff's investment loss. It would also defeat the purpose of the consolidated return statute to confer a tax benefit on the parent company. Both purposes would be achieved if plaintiff were permitted a share in respondent's tax savings. We submit that fairness required respondent to make an agreement with plaintiff allowing plaintiff such a share; and since plaintiff's dual management failed to seek or make it, a court of equity will see that equity be done by awarding judgment to plaintiff for its fair share of the tax savings.

(b) The Court below drew different inferences from the S. E. C. decisions just cited (R. 2231-2). It found in these decisions "a decided viewpoint that the tax savings from consolidated returns shall not be paid over to the parent if this would in any way endanger the position of the creditors of the subsidiary". And it also read those decisions as holding that "a company whose loss was utilized for the benefit of the group does not have a right to compensation from those who benefited" (2231).

There are several difficulties with the conclusions thus reached by the Court below. In the first place, they are based upon an abbreviated excerpt from the S. E. C.'s decision in the Cities Service case (R. 2231-2) which does not give the slightest inkling of the Commission's actual holding in that case. The Commission did hold in Cities Service that, "in the ordinary case", the contribution of a loss by one subsidiary does not "in itself" entitle that subsidiary to compensation. But the Commission also held that in an extraordinary case a different arrangement would be fair; it held that the facts in Cities Service presented such an extraordinary situation; and hence it authorized an agreement by which the subsidiary which had contributed the tax deduction received a share of its affiliates' tax savings thus produced. That was the gist of the S. E. C.'s decision; and it was wholly overlooked by the Court below.

We did and do cite the S. E. C. decisions to demonstrate that agreements between affiliated corporations, allowing the loss company a share of the tax savings produced by its loss, have been made in the past; that such agreements, under appropriate circumstances, are "fair"; and that they have found administrative sanction. Each of the S. E. C. decisions cited by us involved such an agreement; and in each the agreement was approved by the Commission. The Court below completely overlooked this aspect of the S. E. C. decisions.

We fail to find in the S. E. C. decisions any of the broad rules which the Court below purported to distill from them (R. 2231). But even if those rules were to be accepted, they would not be relevant here. Assume, arguendo, the Court's postulate (R. 2231) that a subsidiary's tax savings from consolidated returns must not be paid over to the parent if this would endanger the creditors of the subsidiary. There is nothing in this record to indicate that a recovery by plaintiff herein would endanger the creditors of respondent; on the contrary, respondent has a $10,100,000 reserve available for that very purpose. Or assume, arguendo, the Court's postulate (R. 2231) that an affiliate whose loss was utilized for the benefit of the group does not, ipso facto, have a "right" to compensation from those who benefited. The question here is whether it would have been "fair" for plaintiff, under the particular facts of this case, to obtain a share of the tax savings to be produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit. That is the determinative question here; and the S. E. C. decisions clearly show that, under circumstances much less stringent than those at bar, an agreement of this type may be "fair", as well as legal and proper.

We turn back to the test of a "fair" transaction as one which "would have commended itself to an independent corporation". In the light of our discussions under this point head, we submit that plaintiff, had it been an "independent corporation", under a management wholeheartedly devoted to its sole interest, would have found literally nothing to commend to plaintiff this transaction by which plaintiff conferred a $17,000,000 tax benefit on respondent, without itself receiving any benefit whatever. Corporations are not organized to distribute largesse to strangers. An independent management of plaintiff, faced with the proposition of filing consolidated returns, would have considered that plaintiff's tax credit was allowed by law in order to mitigate its ruinous stock loss, not to give a tax windfall to the prosperous respondent; that plaintiff might have opportunities to use the tax credit for its own benefit; that, by joining in consolidated returns, plaintiff would subject itself to liability for any tax deficiencies of respondent; that respondent, economically a total stranger to plaintiff, was anxious to obtain the benefit of plaintiff's tax credit; and that plaintiff was under no obligation to surrender it to respondent.

Under these circumstances, the proposition that plaintiff surrender its tax credit to respondent without assurance of an adequate share in the resulting savings was utterly unfair to plaintiff. As a condition of joining in consolidated returns, plaintiff was in fairness entitled to demand that respondent agree to allow plaintiff all or at least a substantial share of the tax benefits to be produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit.

Plaintiff's dual management failed to make that demand. But this very duality of personnel now enables this Court to scrutinize the transaction between the parties and to do equity by permitting plaintiff to recover a fair share of the tax benefits which resulted from the use of plaintiff's tax credit.

POINT III

The Court of Appeals erred in making findings of fact where the District Court had made none or had made contrary findings.

1. The Court of Appeals rested its decision upon numerous findings of fact made by it rather than by the District Court. It is our contention that it was beyond the province of the Court of Appeals to do so. We proceed to list some of the findings of the Court of Appeals which we believe to have been improperly made.

(a) The Court of Appeals found the record "barren of evidence" to support our contention that respondent dominated plaintiff in the tax transaction (R. 2235). We have shown (supra, pp. 38-40) that this finding is contrary to one made by the District Court and also contrary to the evidence.

(b) The Court of Appeals found that, in each year from 1916 to 1942, the corporations forming the Western Pacific group had filed consolidated returns; and that in none of those years did the companies contributing a loss receive any payment (or "tribute") for the taxes saved by the use of their loss (R. 2225, 2233). The District Court did not so find; * and the record clearly establishes that in several instances an affiliate contributing a loss was indeed paid therefor (supra, p. 70, footnote).

(c) The Court of Appeals found that, since plaintiff had no income, "there was no possible way for it to achieve any tax advantage to offset the loss" (R. 2232). The District Court did not so find; and we have shown that plaintiff did have possibilities of using its tax credit for itself (supra, pp. 61-62).

(d) The Court of Appeals found that plaintiff's officers, when they filed consolidated returns, "were conforming with the policy and directions of Corporation" (R. 2229). The District Court did not so find; and the record shows, without contradiction, that plaintiff's board of directors was not consulted about the filing of consolidated returns for the critical years (R. 1018). Who then formulated plaintiff's "policy" and "directions" which the Court of Appeals found?

(e) The Court of Appeals found that the interlock between the management of plaintiff and of respondent had been created by plaintiff (R. 2223). The District Court did not so find. The record establishes that respondent's personnel was, during respondent's reorganization, appointed by the bankruptcy court rather than by plaintiff; and after the reorganization, respondent's personnel was appointed by its new stockholders and directors, not by plaintiff. Plaintiff's personnel, in turn, was taken over by respondent's trustees as full-time employees of respondent; and tax counsel, representing both plaintiff and respondent, were retained by respondent's trustees, not by plaintiff.

* The District Court did find that the consolidated taxes were allocated among the various subsidiary companies having taxable income in proportion to the amount of such taxable income (R. 261). But the District Court did not find that there were no payments to other companies contributing a loss.

(f) The Court of Appeals found that "many persons having an interest in Corporation, including stockholders and counsel, were fully aware of the situation" (R. 2234). The District Court did not so find; and we have discovered no evidence in the record that plaintiff's stockholders (other than the James Interests who had cast their lot with respondent) were kept abreast of the "situation".

(g) The Court of Appeals described the firm of Whitman Ransom Coulson & Goetz as "independent tax experts" (R. 2226). The District Court, far from considering this firm as independent, referred to them as "the tax attorneys for defendant" (R. 261, 265); and the uncontradicted evidence shows that the firm was anything but "independent" (supra, pp. 17-19, 40).

It is unnecessary to accumulate further instances. Each of the findings of the Court of Appeals which we have listed was important to its decision; each was unsupported by any finding of the District Court; each was contrary to the clear evidence.

2. It was beyond the province of the Court of Appeals to make such findings. Rule 52 F. R. C. P. provides, in pertinent part:

> "Findings by the Court.
> "(a) Effect. In all actions tried upon the facts without a jury or with an advisory jury, the court shall find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon and direct the entry of the appropriate judgment; * * *. Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses. * * * If an opinion or memorandum of decision is filed, it will be sufficient if the findings of fact and conclusions of law appear therein. * * *

"(b) Amendment. Upon motion of a party made not later than ten days after entry of judgment the court may amend its findings or make additional findings and may amend the judgment accordingly: * * *"

This Rule requires that findings on disputed facts be made by the District Court, not by the Court of Appeals. It has been so construed in numerous cases:

Kupperman v. M. & J. Becker, Inc., 198 F. 2d 765, 770 (C. A. 2, 1952);
Jacuzzi Bros. v. Berkeley Pump Co., 191 F. 2d 632, 638 (C. A. 9, 1951);
McClure v. O. Henry T. & A. Co., 184 F. 2d 636, 639 (C. A. 7, 1950);
Kistler v. Gingles, 171 F. 2d 912, 915-6 (C. A. 8, 1949);
Campbell v. Campbell, 170 F. 2d 809, 810 (App. D. C., 1948).

Indeed, the holdings of this Court indicate the same rule:

Kelley v. Everglades Drainage District, 319 U. S. 415, 421-2 (1943);
Oil Shares, Inc. v. Commercial Trust Co., 304 U. S. 551 (1938).

The Court of Appeals nevertheless held that district court findings "are not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal which this Court may not waive", inasmuch as findings of fact are merely "intended to aid appellate courts by affording them a clear understanding of the basis of the decision below" (R. 2236). For this proposition, the Court below cited three cases:

Mayo v. Lakeland Highlands Canning Co., 309 U. S. 310 (1940);

Goodacre v. Panagopoulos, 110 F. 2d 716 (App. D. C., 1940);

Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, 136 F. 2d 796 (App. D. C., 1943).

But these authorities do not sustain the procedure adopted by the Court below. In the Mayo case, supra, this Court reversed the lower court because of the insufficiency of the findings of the District Court; it pointed out that "fair compliance with Rule 52(a)" was "of the highest importance to a proper review" (309 U. S., at 316); and it remanded with directions that "any action taken by the court shall be upon findings of fact and conclusions founded upon the evidence, in accordance with Rule 52(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure" (p. 319). These rulings are no authority for the procedure adopted by the Court below.

In the Goodacre case, supra (110 F. 2d 716), the District Court had failed to make "separate findings" of fact, but had embodied its findings in a memorandum opinion. The Court of Appeals held that it was not required to reverse "for a mere formal failure to comply with the rule" (p. 718). That was a far cry from holding that the Court of Appeals could make new findings where the District Court had made none.

In the Hurwitz case, supra (136 F. 2d 796), the issues had been submitted to a jury on special interrogatories which the jury answered in favor of the plaintiff. On appeal the defendant argued that the cause was of an equitable nature and that the trial court should have made independent findings. The Court of Appeals agreed, but held that such findings were "not a jurisdictional requirement of appeal which this court may not waive", and that "their purpose is to aid appellate courts in reviewing the decision below". This conclusion was stated with respect to a record which the Court of Appeals found to be clear;

hence, it held itself entitled to waive the defect; and it affirmed the decision of the District Court.

Whether or not the Hurwitz decision was correct when it was made in 1943 need not be debated; it certainly has lost its vitality since the 1946 amendment to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Committee Note of 1946 to Rule 52(a) states:

> "Findings of fact aid in the process of judgment and in defining for future cases the precise limitations of the issues and the determination thereon. Thus they not only aid the appellate court on review (Hurwitz v. Hurwitz (App. D. C., 1943), 136 F. 2d 796) but they are an important factor in the proper application of the doctrines of res judicata and estoppel by judgment."

The Hurwitz rule that findings are merely designed to aid the appellate court was thus rejected; and with the elimination of that premise, the conclusion that an appellate court may waive findings must equally fall. The weight to be accorded to the Committee Notes is, of course, well recognized by this Court; Mississippi Pub. Co. v. Murphree, 326 U. S. 438, 444 (1946).

There are good reasons for entrusting the findings of fact to the District Court alone. The District Court sees and observes the witnesses; the Court of Appeals does not. Errors or inadequacies of findings of the District Court may be corrected upon motion pursuant to Rule 52(b); no such procedural machinery is available in the Court of Appeals. The findings of the District Court are binding as between the parties under the rules of estoppel by judgment; expressions in an opinion of the Court of Appeals have no such effect; 2 Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed., 1925), § 718, pp. 1518-9.* We submit, therefore, that the

*And see Matter of King, 183 N. Y. 440, 450 (1906): "* * * * what is decided by the court is settled by its order and judgment and not by its opinion." Also Doyle v. Hamilton Fish Co., 234 Fed. 47, 50 (C. C. A. 2, 1916), cert. den. 243 U. S. 649: "* * * it is not proper to decide the scope of the judgment by the opinion rendered * * *."

Court of Appeals erred in making its own findings; and the Court compounded the error by making findings which were contrary to those of the District Court and contrary to the evidence.

POINT IV

The grounds upon which the District Court based its decision were erroneous.

The District Court predicated its decision dismissing the action upon two grounds:

1. It thought that respondent's tax savings improperly deprived the Government of taxes due it and that this injustice should not be compounded by distributing respondent's illegal gain to others (A, infra); and

2. It conceived plaintiff's claim as an attempt by plaintiff to secure part of respondent's income in contravention of respondent's reorganization plan (B, infra).

Neither of these grounds was adopted by the Court of Appeals; neither, we submit, has merit.

A

Plaintiff's alleged inability to recover because of the injustice of respondent's tax savings.

We submit that this ground of the District Court's decision cannot stand, for several reasons.

1. The Government was not unjustly deprived of taxes.

The District Court strongly felt that the use of plaintiff's tax credit in the consolidated returns and the 1947 tax settlement unjustly deprived the Government of taxes due to it. It described the result as a "tax escape" (R. 270, 271), which was "bizarre" (R. 265), "erroneous and unjust" (R. 271), "amazing and undeserved" (R. 276). The grounds which brought the District Court to this conclusion are not too clearly stated; but it may be gathered that the Court objected to the filing of consolidated returns in a situation where the companies filing the return are no longer "a single business or economic unit" (R. 269-270).

In so holding, the District Court fell in the same error as the Court of Appeals, although with a different conclusion: It confused the purpose of the consolidated return law with its requirements. It is quite true, as we have shown, that the purpose of consolidated returns is to treat an economically unified group of corporations as a single taxpayer. But the method by which the law seeks to achieve this purpose is the requirement of 95% stock ownership. Once that requirement is met, consolidated returns may be filed even though, because of anomalous circumstances, the economic unity does not actually exist. Thus where a subsidiary has been placed in bankruptcy, the economic unity is destroyed; nevertheless the parent's 95% stock ownership will enable it to file consolidated returns if the subsidiary's trustee consents. As was held in just such a case in George A. Fuller Co. v. Commissioner, 92 F. 2d 72, 73 (C. C. A. 2, 1937):

> "We are now dealing with the 1932 Act, § 141(d), 26 U. S. C. A. § 141 note, under which affiliation follows merely upon ownership by one or more of the other corporations of at least 95 per centum of the stock of each of the corporations (except the common parent) * * *."

Accord:

> Trinity Buildings Corp. v. Commissioner, 40 B. T. A. 1315, 1319 (1939).

We submit, therefore, that the lack of economic unity between plaintiff and respondent did not prevent the filing of the consolidated returns although, in the absence of an appropriate agreement between the parties, the returns failed to achieve the statutory purpose for which they were permitted.

2. The Government's tax claim, if any, has been validly and properly settled.

It is not even necessary for this Court, at this late stage, to determine whether the consolidated returns were properly filed; for the question of respondent's tax liability was settled between the Government and the parties. There is no room for a collateral attack upon this settlement in the present litigation.

Confronted with a substantial tax controversy, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was certainly within his rights in consenting to a settlement. The District Court's suggestion that he "would not hesitate to set aside the tax settlement" if he had the power (R. 270), appears therefore gratuitous.

It is even more so because of the complete absence of any ground to impugn the legality or propriety of the settlement. The District Court did not find that the settlement was reached through fraud or corruption; and there is not a shred of evidence which would support such finding. "The presumption of regularity supports the official acts of public officers and, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, courts presume that they have properly discharged their official duties"; United States v. Chemical Foundation, 272 U. S. 1, 14-15 (1926). This presumption, totally unrebutted here, is the answer to the District Court's unwarranted attack upon the settlement.

3. Even if the tax settlement had been a wrong against the Government, it would not defeat plaintiff's rights.

A hypothetical case will serve to make our point. Suppose that the executor of an estate, by improper means, collects an unjust claim of the estate or evades the payment of estate taxes justly due. Will it be suggested that he may retain the fruits of his illegal acts for himself? We believe that he would be accountable to his beneficiary for all profits derived in the course of his conduct as executor and that he cannot escape accountability by invoking his own wrongdoing. The present respondent, by virtue of its parent in its name will give waivers, give bonds, and execute closing agreements, offers in compromise, and all other documents, and any waiver or bond so given, or agreement, offer in compromise, or any other document so executed, shall be considered as having also been given or executed by each such corporation. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, however, any notice of deficiency, in respect of the tax for a consolidated return period, will name each corporation which was a member of the affiliated group during any part of such period, and any assessment (whether of the original tax or of a deficiency) will be made in the name of each such corporation (but a failure to include the name of any such corporation will not affect the validity of the notice of deficiency or the assessment as to the other corporations); any notice and demand for payment will name each corporation which was a member of the affiliated group during any part of such period (but a failure to include the name of any such corporation will not affect the validity of the notice and demand as to the other corporations); and any distraint (or warrant in respect thereof), any levy (or notice in respect thereof), any notice of a lien, or any other proceeding to collect the amount of any assessment, after the assessment has been made, will name the corporation from which such collection is to be made. The provisions of this paragraph shall apply whether or not a consolidated return is made for any subsequent year, and whether or not one or more subsidiaries have become or have ceased to be members of the group at any time. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, the Commissioner may, if he deems it advisable, deal directly with any member of the group in respect of its liability, in which event such member shall have full authority to act for itself.

Internal Revenue Code

§ 23. Deductions from gross income. In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions: * * *

(g) Capital losses.

(1) Limitation. Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent provided in section 117.

(2) Securities becoming worthless: If any securities (as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection) become worthless during the taxable year and are capital assets, the loss resulting therefrom shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as a loss from the sale or exchange, on the last day of such taxable year, of capital assets.

(3) Definition of securities. As used in paragraph (2) of this subsection the term "securities" means (A) shares of stock in a corporation, and (B) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares.

(4) Stock in affiliated corporation. For the purposes of paragraph (2) stock in a corporation affiliated with the taxpayer shall not be deemed a capital asset. For the purposes of this paragraph a corporation shall be deemed to be affiliated with the taxpayer only if:

(A) at least 95 per centum of each class of its stock is owned directly by the taxpayer; and

(B) more than 90 per centum of the aggregate of its gross incomes for all taxable years has been from sources other than royalties, rents (except rents derived from rental of properties to employees of the company in the ordinary course of its operating business), dividends, interest (except interest received on deferred purchase price of operating assets sold), annuities, or gains from sales or exchanges of stocks and securities; and

(C) the taxpayer is a domestic corporation.

§ 122. Net operating loss deduction.

(a) Definition of net operating loss. As used in this section, the term "net operating loss" means the excess of the deductions allowed by this chapter over the gross income, with the exceptions, additions, and limitations provided in subsection (d).

(b) Amount of carry-back and carry-over.

(1) Net operating loss carry-back. If for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1941, the taxpayer has a net operating loss, such net operating loss shall be a net operating loss carry-back for each of the two preceding taxable years, except that the carry-back in the case of the first preceding taxable year shall be the excess, if any, of the amount of such net operating loss over the net income for the second preceding taxable year computed (A) with the exceptions, additions, and limitations provided in subsection (d), (1), (2), (4), and (6), and (B) by determining the net operating loss deduction for such second preceding taxable year without regard to such net operating loss.

(2) Net operating loss carry-over. If for any taxable year the taxpayer has a net operating loss, such net operating loss shall be a net operating loss carry-over for each of the two succeeding taxable years, except that the carry-over in the case of the second succeeding taxable year shall be the excess, if any, of the amount of such net operating loss over the net income for the intervening taxable year computed (A) with the exceptions, additions, and limitations provided in subsection (d) (1), (2), (4), and (6), and (B) by determining the net operating loss deduction for such intervening taxable year without regard to such net operating loss and without regard to any net operating loss carry-back. For the purposes of the preceding sentence, the net operating loss for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1941 shall be reduced by the sum of the net income for each of the two preceding taxable years (computed for each such preceding taxable year with the exceptions, additions, and limitations provided in subsection (d) (1), (2), (4), and (6), and computed by determining the net operating loss deduction without regard to such net operating loss or to the net operating loss for the succeeding taxable year).

§ 141. Consolidated returns.

(a) Privilege to file consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns. An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making consolidated income and excess-profits-tax returns for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of consolidated returns shall be upon the condition that the affiliated group shall make both a consolidated income-tax return and a consolidated excess-profits-tax return for the taxable year, and that all corporations which at any time during the taxable year have been members of the affiliated group making a consolidated income-tax return consent to all the consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax regulations prescribed under subsection (b) prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such return. The making of a consolidated income-tax return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year, the consolidated returns shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group. In the case of a corporation which is not a member of the affiliated group after March 31, 1942, of the last taxable year of such group which begins before April 1, 1942, such corporation shall not be considered a member of the affiliated group for consolidated income-tax-return purposes for such year but shall be considered a member of such group for consolidated excess-profits-tax-return purposes for such year, and the consent required in the case of such corporation shall relate only to the consolidated excess-profits-tax regulations.

(b) Regulations. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making consolidated income- and excess-profits-tax returns and of each corporation in the group, both during and after the period of affiliation, may be returned, determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted, in such manner as clearly to reflect the income- and excess-profits-tax liability and the various factors necessary for the determination of such liability, and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability. Such regulations shall prescribe the amount of the net operating loss deduction of each member of the group which is attributable to a deduction allowed for a taxable year beginning in 1941 on account of property considered as destroyed or seized under section 127 (relating to war losses), and the allowance of the amount so prescribed as a deduction in computing the net income of the group shall not be limited by the amount of the net income of such member.

(c) Computation and payment of tax. In any case in which consolidated income-tax and excess-profits-tax returns are made or are required to be made, the taxes shall be determined, computed, assessed, collected, and adjusted in accordance with the regulations under subsection (b) prescribed prior to the last day prescribed by law for the filing of such returns; except that the tax imposed under section 15 or section 204 shall be increased by 2 per centum of the consolidated corporation surtax net income of the affiliated group of includible corporations. Only one specific exemption of $10,000 provided in section 710(b) (1) shall be allowed for the entire affiliated group of corporations for the purposes of the tax imposed by Subchapter E of Chapter 2.

(d) Definition of "affiliated group". As used in this section, an "affiliated group" means one or more chains of includible corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation which is an includible corporation if—

(1) Stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of each of the includible corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other includible corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly stock possessing at least 95 per centum of the voting power of all classes of stock and at least 95 per centum of each class of the nonvoting stock of at least one of the other includible corporations.

As used in this subsection, the term "stock" does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

(e) Definition of "includible corporation". As used in this section, the term "includible corporation" means any corporation except—

(1) Corporations exempt under section 101 from the tax imposed by this chapter.

(2) Insurance companies subject to taxation under section 201 or 207.

(3) Foreign corporations.

(4). Corporations entitled to the benefits of section 251, by reason of receiving a large percentage of their income from sources within possessions of the United States.

(5) Corporations organized under the China Trade Act, 1922.

(6) Regulated investment companies subject to tax under Supplement Q.

(7) Any corporation described in section 725(a), or in section 727 (e), (g), or (h) (without regard to the exception in the initial clause of section 727) but not including such a corporation which has made and filed a consent, for the taxable year or any prior taxable year beginning after December 31, 1943, to be treated as an includible corporation. Such consent shall be made and filed at such time and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(f) Includible insurance companies. Despite the provisions of paragraph (2) of subsection (e), two or more domestic insurance companies each of which is subject to taxation under the same section of this chapter shall be considered as includible corporations for the purpose of the application of subsection (d) to such insurance companies alone.

(g) Subsidiary formed to comply with foreign law. In the case of a domestic corporation owning or controlling, directly or indirectly, 100 per centum of the capital stock (exclusive of directors' qualifying shares) of a corporation organized under the laws of a contiguous foreign country and maintained solely for the purpose of complying with the laws of such country as to title and operation of property, such foreign corporation may, at the option of the domestic corporation, be treated for the purpose of this chapter and of Subchapter E of Chapter 2 as a domestic corporation.

(h) Suspension of running of statute of limitations. If a notice under section 272(a) in respect of a deficiency for any taxable year is mailed to a corporation, the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations, provided in section 277, shall apply in the case of corporations with which such corporation made a consolidated return for such taxable year.

(i) Allocation of income and deductions. For allocation of income and deductions of related trades or businesses, see section 45.

Treasury Regulation 104, 26 C. F. R. (1949), § 23

§ 23.12 Making consolidated return and filing other forms.

(a) Consolidated return made by common parent corporation. A consolidated return shall be made on Form 1120 by the common parent corporation for the affiliated group. Such return shall be filed at the time and in the office of the collector of the district prescribed for the filing of a separate return by such corporation.

(b) Authorizations and consents. (1) Each subsidiary must prepare duplicate originals of Form 1122, consenting to these regulations and authorizing the common parent corporation to make a consolidated return on its behalf for the taxable year and authorizing the common parent (or, in the event of its failure, the Commissioner or the collector) to make a consolidated return on its behalf (as long as it remains a member of the affiliated group), for each year thereafter for which, under § 23.11 (a), the making of a consolidated return is required. One of such forms as prepared by each subsidiary shall be attached to the consolidated return, as a part thereof; and the other shall be filed, at or before the time the consolidated return is filed, in the office of the collector for the district prescribed for the filing of a separate return by such subsidiary. No such consent can be withdrawn or revoked at any time after the consolidated return is filed.

(4) A corporation which consents to be treated as an includible corporation for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1943, shall be treated as an includible corporation for all subsequent years, regardless of whether the affiliated group of which such corporation is a member during such subsequent years is the same as the affiliated group of which such corporation was a member when such consent was filed. No consent to be treated as an includible corporation under section 141(e)(7) can be withdrawn or revoked at any time after the consolidated return is filed for the first taxable year for which the consent is filed.

(b) * * *

§ 23.15 Liability for tax.

(a) Several liability of members of affiliated group. Except as provided in paragraph (b), the common parent corporation and each subsidiary, a member of the affiliated group during any part of a consolidated return period, shall be severally liable for the tax (including any deficiency in respect thereof) computed upon the consolidated net income of the group.

(b) Liability of a corporation in bankruptcy or receivership. If, at the time of filing a consolidated return, one or more, but not all, of the members of the affiliated group are in bankruptcy under the laws of the United States or in receivership in any court of the United States or of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, then the liability under paragraph (a) of each such member of the group with respect to the period covered by such return shall not exceed such portion of the consolidated tax liability for such period as the several corporations included in the consolidated return may, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, agree upon, or, in the absence of such an agreement, an amount equal to its liability for such year computed as if a separate return had been filed.

(c) * * *

(d) Effect of intercompany agreements. Any agreement entered into by one or more members of the affiliated group with any other members of such group or with any other person shall in no case have the effect of reducing the liability prescribed under this section.

(e) * * *

§ 23.16 Common parent corporation agent for subsidiaries.

(a) Scope of agency of common parent corporation. Except as provided in paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section:

(1) The common parent corporation shall be for all purposes, in respect of the tax for the taxable year for which a consolidated return is made or is required, the sole agent, duly authorized to act in its own name in all matters relating to such tax, for each corporation which during any part of such year was a member of the affiliated group. The corporations, other than the common parent, shall not have authority to act for or to represent themselves in any such matter. For example, all correspondence will be carried on directly with the common parent; notices of deficiencies will be mailed only to the common parent, and the mailing to the common parent shall be considered as a mailing to each such corporation; notice and demand for payment of taxes will be given only to the common parent, and such notice and demand shall be considered as a notice and demand to each such corporation; the common parent will file petitions and conduct proceedings before the Board of Tax Appeals, and any such petition shall be considered as having also been filed by each such corporation; the common parent will file claims for refund or credit; refunds will be made directly to and in the name of the common parent and will discharge any liability of the Government in respect thereof to any such corporation; and the common

Securities and Exchange Commission Rule U-45, 17 C. F. R. (1949), § 250.45

§ 250.45 Loans, extensions of credit, donations and capital contributions to associate companies.

(a) General provision.—No registered holding company or subsidiary company shall, directly or indirectly, lend or in any manner extend its credit to nor indemnify, nor make any donation or capital contribution to, any company in the same holding company system, except pursuant to a declaration notifying the Commission of the proposed transaction, which has become effective in accordance with the procedure specified in Rule U-23, and pursuant to the order of the Commission with respect to such declaration under the applicable provisions of the Act.

(b) Exceptions.—The following transactions shall be exempt from the declaration requirements of this rule:

* * * * * *

(6) A loan or extension of credit or an agreement of indemnity arising out of a consolidated tax return filed by a holding company (or other parent company) and its subsidiaries: Provided, That the top company in the group assumes primary responsibility for the payment of any tax liability involved, subject to the right to contribution from the several members of the group in an amount not exceeding as to any company that percentage of the sum of the normal tax, surtax, and excess profits tax on a consolidated basis which the sum of the normal tax, surtax and excess profits tax of such company if paid on a separate return basis is of the aggregate amount of normal, surtax and excess profits taxes of the individual companies based upon separate returns. In each instance the amount of excess profits tax shall be computed less the amount of the post-war refund. In computing each company's tax on a separate return basis, allowance shall be made for loss carry-over and other adjustments as if the company had always filed its tax return on a separate return basis. The amount of post-war refund bonds which the consolidated group will acquire (under section 780 of the Internal Revenue Code) and the liability therefor shall be allocated to the several members of the group in the ratio that the post-war refund bonds each company would acquire on a separate return basis bears to the sum of the post-war refund bonds which all of the companies would acquire on the basis of separate tax returns.

POINT I—Respondent's retention of the tax benefits was unfair because plaintiff, not respondent, was, under the tax laws, the intended beneficiary of those benefits 5

POINT II—The precedents and the policy considerations which, according to respondent, militate against tax saving payments, apply only to unified groups of corporations and are therefore inapplicable where, as here, the economic unity has been severed 8

1. The alleged past practice of the Western Pacific group 11
2. The alleged general business practice 12
3. The Securities and Exchange Commission 13
4. The Federal Trade Commission 15
5. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce 16
6. The Treasury Department 17
7. The Interstate Commerce Commission 18

POINT III—Plaintiff was under no obligation to surrender its tax credit to respondent, without receiving a fair share of the tax savings therefrom 19

POINT IV—The amount of plaintiff's recovery should be determined in accordance with the requirements of fairness 21

POINT V—The alleged "bar of reorganization" affords respondent no defense 23

A. The authorization of the trustees by the bankruptcy court was not a prerequisite of plaintiff's claim; moreover such authorization was given 24

PAGE

B. Respondent expressly assumed the trustees' liability for plaintiff's claim 26

C. Plaintiff was, by express statute, relieved from any requirement to present its claim to the bankruptcy court 30

1. The statute would have authorized plaintiff to sue the reorganization trustees without resort to the bankruptcy court 31

2. Respondent, having assumed the obligation of the trustees, is equally amenable to suit 32

D. Respondent's authorities do not sustain its contention that the recognition of plaintiff's claim would be contrary to the purposes of reorganization proceedings 35

POINT VI—The defenses of limitations, laches and estoppel are without merit 36

1. The Statute of Limitations 36

2. The defense of laches 37

3. The defense of estoppel 37

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONERS

In reply to respondents' brief ("RB" hereinafter) we propose to show that:

1. Respondents' arguments on the merits are without substance (Points I-IV, infra);

2. The alleged defense of bankruptcy bar is contrary to respondent's assumption agreement, to an express statute and to an unbroken line of authorities (Point V, infra); and

3. The defenses of statute of limitations, laches and estoppel are unfounded (Point VI, infra).

Respondents' brief is replete with factual inaccuracies. We do not propose to pursue them beyond listing a few in the footnote * and answering a few others in the context of this brief. The correctness of the facts set forth in our main brief ("MB" hereinafter) has nowhere been specifically challenged by respondent.

On the merits we believe that the case cannot be disposed of by broad generalizations such as that plaintiff has "no standing in court" because its claim does not fit the conven-

* Respondent says that "all duality ceased" on December 31, 1944, when respondent came out of reorganization (RB 17, 37, 79, 101, 106). The fact is that, after that date as before, plaintiff's officers (Curry, Wienken, Valouch) remained in the pay of respondent; so did a majority of plaintiff's directors; and so did plaintiff's tax counsel (our main br., pp. 13-18).

Respondent says that plaintiff's president Curry had "handled" or "managed" "tax matters for the Western Pacific group for many years" (RB 16, 22). But respondent's citation to the record (R. 841-5) shows no more than that Curry, as plaintiff's signing officer, signed the tax returns and other correspondence. The fact is that these tax matters were handled by respondent's employee, Miss Valouch (R. 647, 659, 846; Pl. Ex. 29, R. 527, 1737), who was "the only person in the corporation office over here in New York who has any knowledge of taxes" (Pl. Ex. 38-A, R. 539).

Respondent says that Curry was consulted from time to time in connection with the preparation of the 1943 tax returns (RB 13). The record cited by respondent (R. 1415) does not so state.

Respondent says that plaintiff "did not suffer from lack of information" concerning its rights because in November, 1944 Mr. Nicodemus discussed the possibility of a tax saving claim with certain other lawyers (RB 17). The fact is that Nicodemus was neither an officer nor a director of plaintiff (he did not become a director until the commencement of this action); that he never communicated his ideas to plaintiff (R. 1064); and that, while he was counsel for plaintiff, he was also counsel for respondent and its trustees and drew his pay exclusively from them (MB 17).

Respondent asserts that its corporate existence commenced on January 1, 1945 and that it is therefore wholly different from the pre-reorganization operating company and its trustees (RB 24-25). The fact is that, before as after the reorganization, the operating company was the same legal entity, as is evidenced by the bankruptcy court's "revesting order" of November 27, 1944 (Pl. Ex. 14, R. 499, 1711, 37, 42, 62-63), and that respondent, upon emerging from reorganization, assumed the obligations of its reorganization trustees (Pl. Ex. 14, R. 45-46, 78).

tional categories of "tort", "contract" or "statutory right" (RB 72). The case, as we see it, turns on two questions:

1. Was the relation between the parties such as to subject respondent to the fiduciary duty of dealing fairly with plaintiff?

2. If so, did fairness permit respondent to take all, and give plaintiff none of the tax savings which respondent derived from the use of plaintiff's tax credit?

The affirmative answer to the first question—respondent's duty to deal fairly with plaintiff in the tax transaction—does not seem to be seriously disputed. Respondent cannot and does not deny the existence of duality; the record incontrovertibly establishes, and both Courts below found it. Nor does respondent deny the well established fiduciary consequences normally flowing from duality. Instead it seeks, by eroding exceptions, to whittle away this doctrine in its application to this case.

Thus respondent claims (RB 5, 21, 80, 106) that plaintiff cannot complain of the duality which it allegedly created; but the argument is factually and legally without merit (MB 41-42, 82-83), and the authorities cited by respondent (RB 80) do not sustain it.*

Respondent also says that the dual officers acted honestly and openly (RB 21); but good motives and lack of secrecy are no defense; the objective tests of fairness must still be met (MB 42-45).

* Neither Rosaly v. Gonzalez, 106 F. 2d 169, 172 (C. C. A. 1, 1939), nor Myers v. Louisiana & A. R. Co., 7 F. Supp. 97, 99 (D. C., W. D. La., 1934), deals with interlocking managements, let alone with duality created by one of the parties. The cases pronounce the hornbook rule that "When appealing to a court of equity * * * the plaintiff should not himself be responsible for the condition of which he complains". We do not "complain" of the duality; we merely invoke the rule that, whatever the origin of dual managements, dual corporations must act fairly when dealing with each other.

Respondent further makes the curious argument (RB 80-81) that Curry and the other officers of plaintiff were not "dual" because their rival employers were respondent's reorganization trustees, "officers of the reorganization court", who "had no personal interest in the reorganization". But the laws of psychology are not suspended by the titles conferred by a bankruptcy court. Whether or not the dual actor is cast in some official role, there is the same attempt simultaneously to serve two masters; there is the same divided allegiance; and consequently there is a lack of independence and arm's length bargaining. The authorities therefore, taking a realistic view, apply the duality rule to receivers, trustees and other court-appointed officers no less than to regular corporate officers and directors. Koral v. Savory, Inc., 276 N. Y. 215, 220, 11 N. E. 2d 883 (1937); Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 88 N. Y. 52, 60 (1882); In re James's Estate, 86 N. Y. S. 2d 78, 84 (Surr. Ct., 1948); In re Los Angeles Lumber Products Co., 46 F. Supp. 77, 88 (D. C., S. D. Cal., 1941).

Finally, in lieu of the duality rule with its requirement of fair dealing, respondent argues that plaintiff, as respondent's parent, owed fiduciary duties to respondent (RB 76-79). But this attempted reversal of roles must fail because respondent cannot and does not show, in addition to mere stock ownership, any control by plaintiff of respondent or its trustees—a well established prerequisite for the imposition of fiduciary obligations on a stockholder (see MB 65-67).

We turn therefore to respondent's arguments as they bear on the second question herein: Whether respondent breached its duty to deal fairly with plaintiff by taking all, and allowing plaintiff none of the benefits produced by the use of plaintiff's tax credit.

POINT I

Respondent's retention of the tax benefits was unfair because plaintiff, not respondent, was, under the tax laws, the intended beneficiary of those benefits.

The tax laws primarily involved herein are §§ 23(g)(4) and 141 of the Internal Revenue Code.

With respect to the purpose of § 23(g)(4) respondent does not dispute or answer the conclusion that its purpose, in recognizing plaintiff's stock loss as a tax credit against ordinary income, was to mitigate the economic impact of that loss and hence to benefit plaintiff which alone suffered the loss.

Respondent does, however, attempt to dispute our contention that the purpose of § 141 in permitting consolidated returns was to benefit the parent as the ultimate owner of the group. However, by its own concession respondent has sustained the validity of our contention. Thus respondent, in describing the purpose of consolidated returns, states that

> "they permit a business organized by subsidiaries to pay no more tax than a business organized by departments where the losses of one department freely offset the profits of another". (RB 28, 51-52)

Or, as stated in the Memorandum of the Senate Finance Committee on the 1918 Revenue Act, quoted by respondent (RB 51, fn. 20):

> "Where a corporation does business through subsidiary corporations, such subsidiaries represent in effect merely different departments of the business. It is just as illogical to tax these subsidiaries separately as it would be to levy a separate tax upon the profits earned by different departments of a single corporation."

As plainly as words can state it, the language of the above and respondent's concession must mean that the subsidiaries' losses and profits are to be consolidated with the parent's for the same reason a department's losses and profits are. The profits and losses of subsidiaries, like those of departments, are viewed as being in fact the profits and losses of the single economic entity under the common ownership of the parent and its stockholders. Necessarily any benefits resulting from this consolidation of earnings and losses must likewise be intended for the common owner, the parent, and not for its subsidiaries or its departments. Respondent's own concession demonstrates the complete illogic of any contention that the intended beneficiary of consolidated returns was itself, the subsidiary, rather than plaintiff, the parent.

As significant as respondent's concession are its omissions. Nowhere in its brief is there a single precedent stating that consolidated returns were intended not for the benefit of the parent but for the benefit of its subsidiary or departments. Nowhere in its brief is any attempt to justify or support the reasoning by which the Court below reached this unprecedented conclusion (see our main brief, pp. 54-58). Instead, respondent merely shrugs off the whole idea that the parent, as the common owner, was the intended beneficiary of consolidated returns.

This analysis, says respondent, is "a singularly unsophisticated view of holding company systems" (RB 52, 60-62). Since consolidated returns can be filed with 5% of the equity and voting stock of the subsidiary in the hands of the public, along with non-voting preferred stock, notes and bonds of the subsidiary, it follows, says respondent, that such systems, filing consolidated returns, are not "single ownerships" (RB 52), and that any intended "economic unity" between subsidiary and parent is, in matters related to consolidated returns, "a false factor demonstrably of no significance" (RB 60).*

But our position, however unsophisticated, happens to be that of this Court; Atlantic City E. Co. v. Commissioner, 288 U. S. 152, 154 (1933):

> "The requirement of consolidated returns was 'based upon the principle of levying the tax according to the true net income and invested capital of a single business enterprise, even though the business is operated through more than one corporation.' Treasury Regulations No. 45, Art. 631." (Italics added)

It happens also to be the view of Congress. Thus the Report of the Senate Finance Committee, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., S. R. 960, p. 14 (1928):

> "* * * it is only when the corporations are but really one corporation that the permission to file consolidated returns is given, * * *."

And similarly the Report of the House Ways and Means Committee, 73d Cong., 2d Sess., H. Rep. 704, p. 17 (1934):

> "For all practical purposes the various subsidiaries, though technically distinct entities, are actually branches or departments of one enterprise."

The "economic unity" of the affiliated group, stemming from the parent's common ownership, is thus the cornerstone of consolidated returns. It furnishes the justification for the privilege of the parent, as the common owner of the group, to offset group losses against group profits. It entitles the parent, in accordance with the purpose of the

---

* Respondent's citation (RB 62) of Commissioner v. Phipps, 336 U. S. 410, 421, fn. 15 (1949), is inapposite. The case did not involve consolidated returns at all; nor did it discuss the nature and extent of a parent's interest in the assets and income of its subsidiary. The portion of the opinion quoted by respondent merely holds that, upon the tax-free liquidation of a subsidiary, the existence of a surplus or deficit in the accounts of the subsidiary does not determine the amount of the profit or loss which the parent realizes as the effect of the tax-free transaction.

statute, to enjoy the benefits flowing from its exercise of this privilege since the tax savings of all group members are actually the tax savings of the parent and redound to the parent's benefit by enhancing its equity in its subsidiaries.*

Nothing respondent has shown militates against these conclusions. There is no justification in the tax laws for respondent, the subsidiary, and not plaintiff, the parent, to retain the tax savings flowing from plaintiff's loss in consolidated returns.

We turn now to respondent's other arguments to ascertain what can possibly render fair respondent's retention of tax benefits which the tax laws intended for plaintiff.

POINT II

The precedents and the policy considerations which, according to respondent, militate against tax saving payments, apply only to unified groups of corporations and are therefore inapplicable where, as here, the economic unity has been severed.

Respondent argues (RB 41 et seq.) that, since the inception of the consolidated return statute, huge numbers of such returns have been filed. In all these cases, according to respondent, the inter-company allocation of the consolidated tax has "always" (RB 42) been determined according to one formula: The tax was distributed among

* The Court below concedes that this is true in the usual case" (R. 2230). But respondent says (RB 62) that this automatic upstream flow of the subsidiary's tax savings to the parent will not take place if the subsidiary's bonds are in default, its debenture interest not paid, preferred stock in arrears or general creditors unsatisfied. But even in these unusual cases any tax savings of the subsidiary will reduce these senior charges and thus improve the value of the parent's equity stock in the subsidiary, unless and until an approved reorganization plan of the subsidiary cuts off the parent's interest in the assets and earnings of the subsidiary—which is the case at bar.

the group members in proportion to their respective taxable incomes; but no "tax saving payments" were made to the loss companies who contributed a tax credit. This formula, says respondent, is intrinsically fair; it has been followed by the Western Pacific group; it has been approved by many administrative agencies; its abandonment would create great uncertainties in the law, would engraft on an already elaborate tax system an equally elaborate system of tax saving payments, and would upset thousands of consolidated return transactions now considered closed.

All of these arguments, we submit, have one fundamental error in common: Respondent's refusal to recognize the fact that plaintiff's economic severance herein differentiates this case from the usual cases of consolidated returns.

We have never contended, as respondent suggests (RB 24), that every use of a loss in a consolidated return gives a right to compensation. On the contrary, we have said (MB 60) and say it again: In the normal case of an economically unified affiliated group, there is ordinarily no need and no justification for a tax saving payment. For if in such a unified group the parent sustains a loss and its subsidiary has profits, the subsidiary's tax saving through consolidated returns automatically benefits the parent; the purpose of the tax laws is thereby achieved; and with that purpose achieved, there are, as a rule, no equitable reasons for a tax saving payment. Conversely, if the parent has a profit and the subsidiary a loss, a tax saving payment by the parent to the subsidiary would be contrary to the purpose of the consolidated return statute; for that statute is designed for the parent's benefit, not the subsidiary's. Hence, in such situations it is ordinarily but fair to leave the tax savings in whichever pocket they fall.

But it is otherwise in the extraordinary and anomalous case where, as here, consolidated returns are filed by corporations whose economic unity has been wholly severed.* If in that case the subsidiary obtains for itself tax savings by using the parent's tax loss, the purpose of the tax laws is perverted: The parent, which suffered the loss and for whose benefit the consolidated returns are designed, receives no tax benefit whatever; while the profitable subsidiary obtains a tax windfall without rhyme, reason or justification. In this unusual case, the purpose of the tax laws is more nearly achieved if the parent obtains from the subsidiary all or at least a substantial part of its tax saving, in order to mitigate the parent's loss. And it is for this reason, we say, that fairness required the respondent here to make such a tax saving payment to plaintiff.

Respondent's brief thus poses a false issue. It devotes itself to a demonstration of the obvious, namely, that in the normal situation of an economically unified consolidated return group there is ordinarily no equitable justification for a tax saving payment. With that proposition we agree. But the question here is whether such payments are fair in the unusual and rare case where the economic unity is severed. To answer yes involves none of the dire consequences which respondent conjures up in terrorem. Our position would not, as respondent says, "upset thousands of consolidated return transactions now considered closed" (RB 38, 63); for virtually all of those transactions involved economically unified groups in which the purposes of the tax law were effectuated without tax saving payments. Our position would not "engraft upon an already elaborate tax system an equally elaborate system of tax saving payments" (RB 30, 55); for such payments could be called for only in the exceptional and rare case of economic severance. Our position would not "give to any party to the returns a right to demand a price for his consent" (RB 70, 29, 56); for the right to seek a tax saving payment exists only in the extraordinary case where, in the absence of such a payment, the purpose of the consolidated return law would be frustrated and the intended beneficiary denied its rightful tax benefits.

* Respondent quibbles about whether this Court's decision of March 15, 1943 or the District Court's order of confirmation in November 1943 brought about this severance (RB 59-60); in any event, the economic unity was certainly severed by the time the consolidated returns were filed in 1944 and 1945. Equally inappropriate is respondent's attempt to establish that the economic unity had ended long before this Court's decision. Prior to this Court's decision affirming the plan, the Circuit Court of Appeals had reversed the plan because of the Commission's and the District Court's failure to justify the elimination of plaintiff's stock interest in respondent (Pl. Ex. 64, R. 626, 1781); until this Court reversed on March 15, 1943, the severance of the economic unity had not become an established fact. And all of this is affirmatively stated and recognized in Polk's letter to the Internal Revenue Department dated May 31, 1946 (Pl. Ex. 64, R. 626, 1779).

And, finally, our position is not contrary to the precedents cited by respondent; for those precedents, as we now proceed to show, relate only to the normal situation of an economically unified consolidated return group; and, moreover, they do not establish a rigid and unyielding allocation formula such as that proposed by respondent.

1. The alleged past practice of the Western Pacific group.

Respondent's brief claims not less than 15 times * that, during the 25 years up to 1943, the Western Pacific group had followed the practice of filing consolidated returns with no tax saving payments whatever. But the repetitiousness of the statement does not render it true. The fact is, as we have demonstrated (MB 70), that Utah Fuel Company, one of the affiliates joining with plaintiff and respondent in consolidated returns, did make substantial tax saving payments to plaintiff. As stated by respondent's own experts, Messrs Price, Waterhouse & Co.:

> "According to a letter dated June 26, 1928, from The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation to Utah

* RB 2, 3, 22, 25, 31, 42, 57-8, 59, 63, 65, 76, 79, 81, 83, 108-9.

> Fuel Company, the net benefit which accrued to that company for the years 1922 to 1926, inclusive, resulting from the Treasury Department's agreeing that it was affiliated with The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation, was to accrue to The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation. * * * With respect to the tax for the year 1923, Utah Fuel Company paid over to The Western Pacific Railroad Corporation the amount of $60,475.84 representing the excess of the tax previously paid by the Utah Fuel Group, $131,744.72, over the amount computed as allocable to that group, $71,268.88."
> (Def. Ex. 40, at p. 6)

Respondent says (RB 57, fn. 27) that this was not a payment for tax savings; but respondent prudently refrains from telling what it thinks the payment was for. Respondent also says (ibid.) that plaintiff, in turn, made certain other payments to Utah Fuel; but that does not change the fact that the $60,475.84 was a tax saving payment by an affiliate to plaintiff. The alleged practice of the Western Pacific group thus did not exist (see MB 70).

But even if it did, what is its relevance? Despite our challenge (MB 71), respondent does not even attempt to show why a practice followed prior to the economic severance should furnish a precedent for the period when the economic unity had ended.

2. The alleged general business practice.

Respondent offered proof at the trial that its allocation formula, which excludes tax saving payments, reflects the customary practice of affiliated groups filing consolidated returns (RB 42). The offer of proof was properly rejected as irrelevant (R. 1383), since respondent's proposed evidence did not relate to situations of economic severance.*

---

*Respondent, though making no argument that the Court below committed any error in rejecting this evidence, nonetheless strews its substance all over its brief as if, despite the absence of cross-examination and rebuttal evidence, it had established the facts.

Any alleged practice of economically unified consolidated return groups is without significance to the issues at bar which turn upon the economic severance of plaintiff and respondent.

It may, however, be added that the alleged practice is by no means as general as respondent contends. Respondent's own authorities disclose that, before the enactment of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, a number of utility systems (such as Cities Service Company, North American Co., New England Power Association and others) made tax saving payments on a substantial scale (see RB, App. 5-8). The S. E. C. has since permitted tax saving payments in the very same field of public utilities. That this practice still persists in other businesses is evidenced by the recent case of Beneficial Corp. v. Commissioner, 18 T. C. ....., No. 47 (May 23, 1952) and by the Missouri-Pacific order (RB, App. 30-36). Moreover, had such proof been held relevant in the trial court, additional examples of tax saving payments by other substantial business groups could have been adduced.

3. The Securities and Exchange Commission.

Respondent contends that the S. E. C.'s Rule U-45(b)(6) (see MB, App. 103) "does not permit 'tax saving' payments for losses in consolidated returns" (RB 43). Nothing could be further from the truth. The Rule merely provides that tax saving payments shall not be made without the approval of the Commission. Such approval has been granted by the Commission in a number of instances of which we cite only the following:

Matter of Consolidated Electric and Gas Co., 15 S. E. C. 161 (1943);

Matter of Cities Service Company, 17 S. E. C. 839 (1944);

Matter of Consolidated Electric and Gas Co., The Islands Gas and Electric Co., 13 S. E. C. 649 (1943);

Matter of Ogden Corp., 19 S. E. C. 717 (1945);
Matter of United Public Utilities Corp., Holding Company Act Release No. 6375, 11 Fed. Reg. 9867 (1946).

Respondent attempts (RB 44-46) to distinguish these cases on the theory that the tax saving payments there were authorized in order to compensate the loss companies for the disadvantages to them arising from their joining in consolidated returns. But in the first two of the cases just cited there was no such disadvantage whatever; and in the third, the tax saving payment far exceeded the amount of the recipient's disadvantage. Whatever the grounds of the decisions, they make it plain that respondent's allocation formula, far from embodying an absolute and rigid rule, will yield to exceptions wherever equitable considerations justify a tax saving payment.

Respondent also quotes (RB 42, App. 15) a footnote appearing in an accounting release of the S. E. C.* which states:

> "If one of the included companies operated at a loss, the consolidated tax is of course reduced, but no part of the 'saving' is ordinarily paid over to the loss company by the other members of the group." (Italics added)

The Commission's use of the word "ordinarily" makes it plain that its formula is subject to exceptions on grounds of equity and fairness.

The Commission's Rule U-45(b)(6) was of course designed for the ordinary case of economically unified consolidated return groups. It was not designed for the anomalous situation of economic severance. In the presence of economic severance, the purpose of the tax laws makes it fair for a profitable subsidiary to allow to its parent all or a substantial part of the tax saving derived from the use of the parent's loss. The Commission has clearly stated that the purpose of its Rule U-45(b)(6) is "to effect a fair distribution of taxes based on consolidated returns"; Matter of Cities Service Co., supra, 17 S. E. C. 839, 843.

4. The Federal Trade Commission.

Respondent invokes (RB 47-8) a report of the Federal Trade Commission * as supporting its allocation formula and condemning tax saving payments. The F. T. C.'s investigation, which led to the enactment of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, dealt solely with electric and gas utility systems. In its report, the F. T. C. found that these systems made wide use of tax saving payments from the operating companies to their parents. The F. T. C. disapproved this practice because it increased the expenses of the operating companies and hence the rates charged to the public. But all the illustrative examples cited by the Commission were instances of economically unified holding company systems (RB, App. 5-9), in which the tax benefits of consolidated returns automatically redounded to the parent through dividends or increased equity values, without any need for tax saving payments. The F. T. C.'s disapproval of the practice does not, therefore, reach the present case in which the economic unity was severed so that, in the absence of a tax saving payment, the parent got no benefit and the subsidiary an undeserved tax windfall.

Pursuant to its conclusions, the F. T. C. recommended to Congress the adoption of an "amendment to the Federal income-tax law to prevent collection of anticipated income taxes from operating subsidiaries by holding companies and nonpayment to the Government" (Report, quoted RB, App. 9). This recommendation, if adopted by Congress, would have established a rigid rule forbidding tax saving payments. Congress, however, rejected the recommendation, presumably because it considered such a rigid prohibition unwise. Although the practice of tax saving payments was forcefully called to the attention of Congress, and although Congress must have realized its prevalence outside the utility field, it did not see fit to alter the tax laws which permitted the practice. Only in the field of public utilities, Congress delegated the subject for regulation to the Securities and Exchange Commission (Public Utility Holding Company Act, § 12; 15 U. S. C., § 79-1). The S. E. C., in turn, as we have seen, far from promulgating an absolute bar of tax saving payments, permitted them subject to the approval of the Commission where it finds them fair and reasonable.

* Federal Trade Commission, Summary Report to the Senate of the United States, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 83, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., on Economic, Financial and Corporate Phases of Holding and Operating Companies of Electric and Gas Utilities, Sen. Doc. No. 92, Parts 72-A and 73-A, 70th Cong., 1st Sess. Excerpts from the report are set forth in the appendix of respondent's brief, at pp. 5-9.

We submit, therefore, that the F. T. C.'s report is no authority for denying a tax saving payment where, as here, the peculiar circumstances of the case render the payment fair.

5. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Closely related to the F. T. C. report just mentioned is a colloquy, cited by respondent (RB 52-54), which occurred in the course of hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, when that Committee considered the bill which ultimately became the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935. The Chairman of the Committee, Senator Wheeler, referred to the tax saving payments listed in the F. T. C.'s report, and apparently disapproved of them. Since, however, those payments were made by members of economically unified groups, Senator Wheeler's attitude has no bearing on the present case.

Moreover, Senator Wheeler recognized that the practice of tax saving payments was in accordance with law:

> "Senator Hastings: How did the income-tax people ever let them get away with a thing like that?
>
> "The Chairman: Congress, as a matter of fact, permitted it to be done under the consolidated return."
> (Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., Hearings on S. 1725, p. 255.)

Respondent derives from the statements of Senator Wheeler that "Congress has indicated a preference as to who should receive the benefits of 'tax savings' from consolidated returns" (RB 53). But Senator Wheeler did not and could not speak for the Congress. On the contrary, as we have shown, Congress rejected any statutory condemnation of tax saving payments and authorized the S. E. C. to permit such payments, subject to the Committee's approval of their fairness.

f. The Treasury Department.

Respondent asserts that "The rulings of the Treasury Department * * * provide for a pro rata allocation of the consolidated tax without tax saving payments" (RB 46). The opposite is true, as we have shown (MB 72-73): The Treasury Department is concerned only with the collection of the taxes due the Government; it is wholly indifferent to the method of the inter-company allocation of consolidated taxes. One of the very rulings cited by respondent (RB, App. 20, 24) so holds:

> "The [Internal Revenue] Bureau is not concerned with arrangements made between affiliated companies as to the payment of the [consolidated] tax."
>
> I. T. 3637 (1944 Cum. Bull. 258).

But, says respondent (RB 46), the Internal Revenue Bureau uses a strict allocation formula in ascertaining the amount of earnings and profits available for dividends,* and in allocating consolidated excess profits tax to provide deductions from normal tax net income. These allocations, however, are necessary in order to determine the amount of tax due the Government. It is understandable that the Government does not want the amount of its tax receipts to depend on private agreements made among the taxpayer corporations. But once the amount of tax due is determined, the Government is wholly unconcerned with any internal arrangements by which the members of a consolidated return group allocate or shift the tax burden.

7. The Interstate Commerce Commission.

Respondent admits (RB 48) that the I. C. C. has not dealt with the problem of the allocation of consolidated taxes. The two I. C. C. decisions cited by respondent (RB 48, fn. 14) have nothing to do with the issues at bar.

Respondent also says (RB 49) that the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners "has disapproved the treatment of a 'tax saving' as an expense". What the Association actually ruled was this: Utility companies sometimes include among their expenses not only the taxes actually paid by them, but also additional amounts of taxes which would have been payable had certain statutory deductions not been available. The Association, quite properly, condemned the companies' practice of entering on their books an expense which they actually had not incurred (RB, App. 17-20). The Association's ruling on a bookkeeping practice thus had nothing whatever to do with the problem here presented, namely, whether and under what circumstances a tax saving payment by one affiliate to another may be fair and proper.

* I. T. 3637 (1944 Cum. Bull. 258); I. T. 3692 (1944 Cum. Bull. 261); I. T. 4085 (1951-2 Cum. Bull. 68).

 T. D. 5086 (1941-2 Cum. Bull. 46-47).

These then are respondent's "precedents". None of them holds that the subsidiary, to the exclusion of the parent, is entitled to tax savings flowing from the parent's loss and consolidated returns. None of them stands for the proposition that taxes must be allowed to rest where they fall, even if, measured by the purposes of the tax laws and fairness, they fall in the wrong pocket. Indeed, fairly read, all of the precedents permit tax savings to be treated like any other business incident. They should be apportioned, allocated and paid in accordance with the same flexible principles of fairness and equity which would govern any other kind of business transaction.

POINT III

Plaintiff was under no obligation to surrender its tax credit to respondent, without receiving a fair share of the tax savings therefrom.

Respondent predicates plaintiff's alleged duty to give its tax credit to respondent essentially upon two grounds: (1) Plaintiff, as respondent's parent, owed it a fiduciary duty of good management, and good management, it is said, required plaintiff to surrender its own tax credit to respondent; and (2) since respondent, as the debtor in reorganization was duty-bound to preserve its assets for its creditors, plaintiff, as its stockholder, owed it the statutory duty (§ 7(b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U. S. C. § 25(b)) of preserving the bankrupt estate, and such preservation again obligated plaintiff to surrender its tax credit to respondent (RB 32-33, 65).*

---

* § 7(b) of the Bankruptcy Act provides:

"Where the bankrupt is a corporation, * * * its stockholders * * * shall perform the duties imposed on the bankrupt by this Act."

This provision is part of § 7 which is entitled "Duties of Bankrupts" and lists such duties of the bankrupt as the attendance at creditors' meetings, compliance with the orders of the court, the giving of information to the trustee, the filing of financial statements and inventories, etc.

The first of these grounds—plaintiff's alleged fiduciary duty to respondent—has been answered in our main brief (65-69); and since respondent does not reply to what is there said, it need not be repeated here.

Respondent's second ground is as untenable as its first.

To begin with, plaintiff was no longer a stockholder of respondent at the time the consolidated returns were filed. Plaintiff had surrendered its stock in respondent to respondent's Reorganization Committee on May 1, 1944 (R. 260, 493), with the approval of the bankruptcy court (Def. Ex. 23, R. 1192, 1930). The consolidated returns were filed thereafter, on July 15, 1944 and June 15, 1945 (MB 7). Plaintiff, having thus been divested of its stock in respondent by order and authority of the bankruptcy court, was necessarily also relieved of any duties incumbent on it by reason of its stock ownership. Therefore, at the time plaintiff filed the consolidated returns, § 7(b) of the Bankruptcy Act was no longer applicable to it; hence respondent's bankruptcy imposed no duty on plaintiff to preserve respondent's assets. Moreover, since the 1944 returns and the 1942 refund claim were filed in 1945, after respondent's emergence from bankruptcy in December 1944, any argument based on previous bankruptcy relations is irrelevant.

But assuming that plaintiff was under an obligation to preserve respondent's assets for its creditors, can it possibly be held that this required plaintiff to confer on respondent tax savings which by the very purpose of the tax laws creating them were designed for plaintiff, not for respondent? Certainly plaintiff was under no duty to deny to itself what it was entitled to, and to confer upon respondent an undeserved and unmotivated tax advantage. Nor was it duty-bound to make a gift of its tax credit to respondent any more so than of any other of its property. If plaintiff had been the owner, say, of a patent complementary to one owned by respondent, no one would argue that respondent's bankruptcy imposed an obligation on plaintiff to give respondent the free use of plaintiff's patent. Any demand by plaintiff to share in the profits result-tions" of the trustees;* and that term includes expenses of administration, In re Pressed Steel Car Co. of New Jersey, 100 F. 2d 147, 150 (C. C. A. 3, 1938), cert. den. 306 U. S. 648.

We submit, therefore, that plaintiff's claim for the 1943 tax savings was clearly covered by respondent's assumption agreement of December 14, 1944, and hence was not barred by the revesting order.

C. Plaintiff was, by express statute, relieved from any requirement to present its claim to the bankruptcy court.

Respondent contends that plaintiff's claim is an "expense of administration"; as such, it could be approved only by the bankruptcy court; since that court is now closed and no other court has jurisdiction, the claim is barred (RB 90, 95-96).

Respondent's contention that the bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to pass on plaintiff's claim is contrary, however, to § 66 of the (old) Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. § 125 (old), which provides:

> "Every receiver or manager of any property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property, without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed; but such suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which such manager or receiver was appointed so far as the same may be necessary to the ends of justice."

This statute applies to the reorganization trustees of a railroad appointed under § 77 of the Bankruptcy Act;

 The statute was enacted by § 3 of the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 554), amended in 1888 (25 Stat. 436) and 1911 (36 Stat. 1104). Since September 1, 1948, the section has been replaced by § 959 of the (new) Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. § 959 (new).

We shall demonstrate that the statute would have authorized plaintiff to sue respondent's reorganization trustees without resort to the bankruptcy court, even though the claim was an "expense of administration"; and that respondent, having assumed the obligations of the trustees, is equally amenable to suit.

1. The statute would have authorized plaintiff to sue the reorganization trustees without resort to the bankruptcy court.

> "This act [i.e., Judicial Code, § 66] abrogated the rule that a receiver could not be sued without leave of the court appointing him, and gave the citizen the unconditional right to bring his action in the local courts * * *. He ceased to be compelled to litigate * * * in any other forum * * * than he would be entitled to if the property or business were not being administered by the Federal court."

> Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 151 U. S. 81, 101 (1894).

The qualifying clause of the statute—that the suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the appointing court—does not restrict the plaintiff's right to sue the trustees or receiver outside the bankruptcy court; for "the right to sue without resorting to the appointing court * * * cannot be assumed to have been rendered practically valueless by this further provision in the same section of the statute which granted it"; Johnson case, supra, 151 U. S., at 103. The qualifying clause of the statute relates only to "the mode of enforcing such claim when judicially determined and liquidated"; American Brake Shoe & F. Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 263 Fed. 237, 240 (D. C., E. D. Mich., 1920), citing authorities; Kennison v. Philadelphia & R. C. & I. Co., 38 F. Supp. 980, 983 (D. C., Minn., 1940); see Willcox v. Jones, 177 Fed. 870, 874-5 (C. C. A. 4, 1910).

Nearly all claims which fall under § 66 constitute "expenses of administration"; certainly "tort claims arising by virtue of the business operations of the debtor" come within that classification, 6 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th Ed., 1947), § 10.06, pp. 3462-3. Nevertheless their assertion outside the bankruptcy court is a matter of indisputable statutory right, established by the authorities cited and many others.

In the present case the trustees operated respondent's railroad properties pursuant to an order of the bankruptcy court (Def. Exs. 20, 22, R. 1908, 1923). Their liability arose from a transaction of theirs in carrying on this business, since their or their agents' acts * in causing plaintiff to file consolidated returns and in joining therein were incidents of that business. It follows that plaintiff could have sued the trustees "in any court of competent jurisdiction", without leave from, or resort to, the bankruptcy court.

2. Respondent, having assumed the obligation of the trustees, is equally amenable to suit. A plaintiff who is authorized, by statute, to sue a court-appointed trustee in a forum other than the bankruptcy court appointing him, must a fortiori have the same freedom when suing a private corporation which has assumed the obligations of the trustee. It is unthinkable that a bankruptcy court, which is unable to shield its own officers from suits in another forum under § 66, should have power to prevent like suits against the debtor which has emerged from reorganization and assumed the liabilities of the trustees. It is equally unthinkable that the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction, which was non-exclusive during the reorganization, should become exclusive when the reorganization ends.

The courts unanimously agree with our position:

In each of these cases the receiver or trustee of a railroad had, in the conduct of the railroad's business, incurred liability to the plaintiff; upon consummation of the receivership (mostly by foreclosure sale), the reorganized railroad assumed the liabilities of the receiver; the plaintiff sued the reorganized railroad without leave from the bankruptcy court and without having his claim approved by the bankruptcy court. In each case the action was sustained.*

> "* * * the terms of the statute just quoted [i.e., Judicial Code, § 66] are now as fairly applicable to said petitioner [i.e., the reorganized railroad] as they would have been to the receivers whom they have succeeded, if the latter had not been discharged and they, instead of petitioner, had been sued in respect of the alleged negligence of their servants in the suit which is the subject of this controversy. This suit was properly brought in the State court, and the latter has full jurisdiction to determine all of the issues involved therein without interference by this court [i.e., the bankruptcy court]. These cases are on all fours with that at bar. Plaintiff may therefore maintain this action against respondent without previous approval of its claim by the bankruptcy court.

* Respondent contends (RB 105-6) that any judgment herein would have to be presented to the bankruptcy court for proof and

D. Respondent's authorities do not sustain its contention that the recognition of plaintiff's claim would be contrary to the purposes of reorganization proceedings.

Respondent prefaces its arguments with certain generalizations of doubtful accuracy. It asserts that "the reorganization court must consider and act upon all possible claims which might be asserted against the reorganized company" (RB 90). This is true of provable claims; it is not true of trustees' liabilities under § 66 of the (old) Judicial Code. Neither of respondent's authorities—Gardner v. New Jersey, 329 U. S. 565 (1947), and Foust v. Munson Steamship Lines, 299 U. S. 77 (1936)—dealt with a claim such as that at bar arising from the transactions of the debtor's reorganization trustees.

Respondent also proclaims that "the reorganization must put an end to all claims" (RB 90). This is simply not so where, as here, outstanding claims are provided for by what respondent itself (RB 96) describes as the "conventional" device of an assumption agreement.

Respondent cites (RB 90, fn. 46) a long line of cases allegedly supporting its contention that the reorganization must put an end to all claims against the debtor. But respondent's authorities hold nothing of the kind. None of them involved an assumption agreement such as was here made by respondent. Indeed, in Duryee v. Erie R. Co., 175 F. 2d 58 (C. A. 6, 1949), and in several others,* the liabilities asserted were not those of a receiver or trustee, but had arisen prior to reorganization (175 F. 2d allowance, which cannot be done because the bankruptcy court is closed. But respondent's authority, Thompson v. Texas Mexican R. Co., supra, 328 U. S., at 141, involved a going reorganization in which the bankruptcy court had custody of the debtor's assets. The present respondent has emerged from the tutelage of the bankruptcy court so that submission to that court is not "necessary to the ends of justice" (§ 66, supra).

* Beckley v. Erie R. Co., 175 F. 2d 64 (C. A. 6, 1949); Black v. Richfield Oil Corp., 146 F. 2d 801 (C. C. A. 9, 1944); In re Colorado & S. R. Co., 84 F. Supp. 134 (D. C. Colo., 1949).

at 59) and were therefore provable claims, not within the purview of § 66. And in McColgan v. Maier Brewing Co., 134 F. 2d 385 (C. C. A. 9, 1943), a claim for the payment of state franchise taxes, accrued against a corporation's receiver but not presented to the bankruptcy court, was rejected because, upon the discharge of the receiver, "the property [was] unconditionally turned back to the corporation" (134 F. 2d, at 387; italics added). In the reorganization of the present respondent, its property was not returned to it "unconditionally"; it was returned subject to respondent's agreement to assume the obligations of its trustees. No analogy leads, therefore, from respondent's authorities to the case at bar.

It is therefore submitted that the defense of bankruptcy bar is without merit and should be rejected.

POINT VI

The defenses of limitations, laches and estoppel are without merit.

1. The Statute of Limitations is said to bar plaintiff's claim to the 1943 tax savings, because the 1943 returns were filed on July 15, 1944, more than two years before the commencement of this action on October 10, 1946 (Calif. Code Civ. Proc., § 339(1)). However, the cause of action, if it accrued on July 15, 1944, was directed against the trustees. Respondent's liability for that claim rests on its assumption agreement of December 14, 1944 (Pl. Ex. 15, R. 499, 1711). On that date—less than two years before the commencement of this action—a new statutory period began to run with respect to plaintiff's cause of action against respondent. Bogart v. George K. Porter Co., 193 Cal. 197, 202, 223 Pac. 959 (1924); Anderson v. Calaveras Central Mining Corp., 13 Cal. App. 2d 338, 345, 57 Pac. 2d 560 (1936); Daniels v. Johnson, 129 Cal. 415, 61 Pac. 1107 (1900). Since the assumption agreement was a written contract within the purview of Calif. Code Civ. Proc., § 337(1), the statutory period for plaintiff's claim, ing from the use of its patent would hardly be called the exaction of "tribute" or an attempt to capitalize on "nuisance values". No better ground exists for respondent's contention that plaintiff was obligated, because of respondent's bankruptcy, to give its tax credit to respondent without sharing in the resulting benefits.

We can see no merit in respondent's effort to demonstrate that only plaintiff, not respondent, was under a fiduciary duty to deal fairly. If it be assumed that plaintiff was under such a duty, respondent certainly owed plaintiff at least the same obligation. The result would still be the duty to deal fairly; and that is all we contend for.

POINT IV

The amount of plaintiff's recovery should be determined in accordance with the requirements of fairness.

We have urged that the standard by which to measure the transactions complained of herein is that of fairness. We believe that respondent's treatment of plaintiff—its denial to plaintiff of any and its retention of all benefit from the tax transaction—was clearly unfair. Nevertheless respondent urges, in effect, that even if this result be unfair, the courts are powerless to balance the scales. In the absence of traditional standards, such as market value, fairness, says respondent, is too vague a standard—so vague that respondent can keep its unfair gain (RB 26). But the power of the court to redress unfairness is not thus to be straitjacketed. It has been applied to so amorphous a problem as the fair division of income and expenses between two jointly operated railroads feeding traffic to each other, where both companies were managed by one of them; Ewen v. Peoria & E. R. Co., 78 F. Supp. 312 (S. D. N. Y., 1948), cert. den. 336 U. S. 919. In the case at bar, the determination of the requirements of fairness is, as we shall presently show, much less complex.

Respondent seeks to obscure the problem by suggesting that the Court is called upon to "make a retrospective bargain" between plaintiff and respondent (RB 82). But the courtroom is not the market place. Once a transaction between fiduciary and cestui is recognized as unfair, the consequences follow as a matter of law. The superior negotiating skill of one party, the economic weakness of the other, may fashion the terms of a deal between parties transacting at arm's length. But these factors are of no account in the judicial award of what is fair; objective standards control.

It is our primary contention that, in fairness, plaintiff is entitled to the full amount of the tax savings produced by the consolidated returns. That follows from the purpose of the tax laws to confer a tax benefit on plaintiff, not on respondent. The amount of those savings, $17,201,739 (R. 267), is amply supported by the evidence (Pl. Ex. 80, R. 924, 1825-6). Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals have found that these tax savings were produced by respondent's use of plaintiff's stock loss (R. 262, 2217-8), in spite of respondent's vigorous arguments to the contrary. Although respondent now renews its attacks upon the amount of the tax savings (RB 109), this Court will not upset the concurrent findings of fact of the two Courts below, Comstock v. Group of Institutional Investors, 335 U. S. 211, 213-4 (1948).

We submit that the inquiry as to fairness can and should stop at this point. But if instead some significance is attached to respondent's having contributed to the achievement of the savings, then, as we have shown in our main brief, at least equal significance must be given to plaintiff's contributions. Therefore, the resulting tax savings were at least the product of the joint contributions of both plaintiff and respondent engaged in a tax savings venture; and fairness would dictate that the usual joint venture yardstick of equality should apply.

POINT V

The alleged "bar of reorganization" affords respondent no defense.

Respondent asserts (RB 89 et seq.) that plaintiff's claim, however meritorious, is barred by certain orders and proceedings in respondent's reorganization. Under this heading, respondent actually advances four separate arguments:

1. The consolidated returns were filed while respondent was in the hands of its reorganization trustees; the liability could therefore be only that of the trustees; but the trustees did not have the necessary authority from the bankruptcy court to incur such liability (RB 91-93).

2. Even if the trustees incurred a valid liability to plaintiff, that liability was not assumed by respondent because respondent reacquired its assets free and clear of all rights of any person (RB 93-95, 96-99).

3. Even if plaintiff had a valid claim, it was an expense of the reorganization; the bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to pass on that claim; plaintiff did not present it to the bankruptcy court; and that court is now closed (RB 95-96, 105-6).

4. The purpose of reorganization is to put an end to all claims so that the reorganized company shall not be hampered by holdover obligations. The recognition now of a liability herein would be contrary to that purpose (RB 90).

We shall discuss these arguments in turn.

A. The authorization of the trustees by the bankruptcy court was not a prerequisite of plaintiff's claim; moreover such authorization was given.

Respondent argues (RB 91-93) that a reorganization trustee cannot validly incur any liability without approval of the bankruptcy court. Here the bankruptcy court authorized the trustees to incur "all necessary expenses of operating the railroads and conducting the business of the debtor", but directed that "any extraordinary expense" was to be subject to the prior approval of the court (Def. Ex. 20, R. 1182, 1910; Def. Ex. 22, R. 1187, 1929). The liability to plaintiff, it is said, was an "extraordinary expense" and did not have prior court approval; hence it is unenforceable.

The argument is untenable for several reasons:

1. The consolidated returns for 1944 and the refund claim for 1942 were both filed in 1945 (MB 7), long after respondent had emerged from reorganization on December 29, 1944 (R. 499). The trustees had, therefore, nothing to do with these transactions, so that the rule requiring court approval of their liabilities could not come into play.

2. The rule was also inapplicable to the returns for 1943. The doctrine that reorganization trustees cannot incur liabilities without court approval is limited to express contract obligations; see Chicago Deposit Vault Co. v. McNulta, 153 U. S. 554, 562 (1894).* A trustee who in the conduct of the debtor's business violates the anti-trust laws, or engages in unfair competition, or appropriates the property of another, cannot escape liability by saying that his incurring any of these liabilities was an "extraordinary ex-

* This Court, quoting from Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Central R. Co., 35 N. J. Eq. 426, held:

"'* * * * he [the receiver] has no authority to bind the trust by contract without the authority of the court. Until his contracts are approved and ratified by the court the court is at liberty to deal with them as to it shall appear just, and may either modify them or disregard them entirely * * *.'

"This states the correct rule upon the subject * * *."

(153 U. S., at 562; italics added.)

pense" not authorized by the court. Each of the authorities cited by respondent (RB 92, 93) involved express contract obligations arising, e.g., from a lease,* from a loan of money, from the purchase of goods, or from a retainer agreement.† The present claim is based on a breach of fiduciary duty and is therefore non-contractual.

3. The present claim is not an "extraordinary expense". The filing of tax returns is an ordinary and necessary incident of running a railroad. Respondent itself proclaims that "the tax transactions were conducted in the ordinary course of business" (RB 20). The mere fact that the expense is large does not render it "extraordinary."

4. If court approval were deemed necessary, it is found in the bankruptcy court's order of March 3, 1944 (Def. Ex. 12, R. 1087, 1895). By this order the court, having been notified of the trustees' intention to file consolidated returns for 1943 and to use plaintiff's stock loss (R. 1271-2; Def. Ex. 34, R. 1272, 2025), authorized the creation of a tax reserve in connection with these returns. While the bankruptcy court did not pass on the propriety of the proposed tax transactions, it certainly cannot be argued that what the trustees did was beyond the scope of their authority. It follows that they and the estate administered by them became liable for the consequences of their conduct; Vass v. Conron Bros. Co., 59 F. 2d 969, 970 (C. C. A. 2, 1932).

† Leiman v. Guttman, 336 U. S. 1 (1949).

5. But even if it were assumed, arguendo, that the trustees exceeded their authority, they would still have incurred personal liability; In re Kalb & Berger Mfg. Co., 165 Fed. 895, 896 (C. C. A. 2, 1908). Such liability was covered by respondent's assumption agreement, to be presently discussed, since, as respondent admits, that agreement was couched in broad language "in order to give the trustees full protection against personal liabilities" (RB 97). We submit that an obligation of the trustees for the 1943 tax savings is indisputable.

B. Respondent expressly assumed the trustees' liability for plaintiff's claim.

Respondent's argument runs (RB 93-95, 96-99): Plaintiff's claim arose while respondent was in the hands of its reorganization trustees. By its revesting order of November 27, 1944 (Pl. Ex. 14, R. 36, 499, 1711), the bankruptcy court directed the trustees to transfer the properties to respondent free and clear of the claims of any person (R. 51-52); this transfer was carried out on December 29, 1944 (R. 499). Although respondent assumed some of the obligations of the trustees, the claim here asserted was not among those assumed.

We note preliminarily that this argument, like the preceeding one, does not apply to the 1944 tax returns and the 1942 refund claim which were filed in 1945, long after the revestment. But the argument is equally unsound as it bears upon plaintiff's claim arising from the 1943 returns; for by a clear and unequivocal contract, approved by the bankruptcy court, respondent assumed the liability for that claim.

1. Respondent (RB 94-95) invokes the following provision of the revesting order:

> "* * * all of the business, assets and property constituting the debtor's estate, of every kind and character, real, personal and mixed, and all of the right, title and interest therein of T. M. Schumacher and Sidney M. Ehrman, as Trustees herein, shall vest in and be and become the absolute property of The Western Pacific Railroad Company on said date [December 29, 1944], free and clear of all rights, claims, liens and interests of said Trustees, the former stockholders and creditors of the debtor, and of all other persons, firms and corporations whatsoever, except as is otherwise provided in this order; and the said Railroad Company shall thereupon be forever released and discharged from all of its debts, obligations and liabilities, except as herein provided; * * ."

(R. 51-52; italics added.)

The transfer of the assets to respondent free and clear of the rights of other persons was thus subject to the proviso: "except as is otherwise provided in this order". And the order did "otherwise provide" by directing respondent to execute an assumption agreement which, as we now proceed to show, encompassed the claim here alleged.

2. Paragraph 8(a) of the revesting order (R. 45-46) prescribed and approved specifically the terms of the assumption agreement to be executed by respondent (R. 76-81). Pursuant to this direction, respondent did execute the assumption agreement on December 14, 1944 (Pl. Ex. 15, R. 76, 499, 1711).

So far as here pertinent, the assumption agreement provides that "the undersigned [i.e., respondent] does hereby:

* * * * * * *

"2. Assume any and all outstanding current liabilities and obligations incurred by said Trustees and, without limitation thereto, any and all liabilities or obligations of the debtor in possession or said Trustees with respect to claims for personal injury or death, for loss or damage to property and generally any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character whether heretofore or hereafter asserted arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business, including liabilities and obligations hereafter arising up to midnight December 31, 1944."

(R. 78, 1712-1713.)

The assumption agreement thus included "any and all liabilities and obligations with respect to claims of any character * * * arising out of the possession, use or operation of the debtor's properties by said Trustees, or their conduct of the debtor's business". The language could not have been broader. It requires no elaboration that plaintiff's claim arose from the trustees' "conduct of the debtor's business", since the filing of tax returns was a necessary incident of the conduct of the debtor's business.

(It should be added that respondent also assumed all federal tax liabilities of the trustees, R. 1716.)

3. Respondent contends, nevertheless, that the assumption agreement did not embrace the present claim (RB 96-99). But its arguments cannot prevail against the clear language of the agreement.

(a) In the first place, respondent says that the agreement applied only to "recognized debts" (RB 97). But the agreement contains no such qualification; on the contrary, it covers claims "heretofore or hereafter asserted". If, for instance, a negligence claim arose against the trustees on the day before the agreement was signed, it did not constitute a recognized debt; still it was clearly assumed by respondent.

(b) Respondent says next (RB 97) that the bankruptcy court had exclusive jurisdiction to approve the claim, and that the assumption agreement did not eliminate the necessity of the bankruptcy court's approval. But this argument has nothing to do with the breadth of the assumption agreement. It does not negate respondent's assumption of liability for the claim here involved. Instead, it contends that respondent's liability should have been asserted in the bankruptcy forum rather than in an ordinary court of equity. The problem thus raised is one of jurisdiction and will be dealt with later (C, infra).

(c) Respondent further says (RB 97-98) that the assumption agreement did not embrace all obligations of the trustees because the revesting order described the agreement as covering "certain obligations" of the trustees (R. 46), only those "valid and outstanding" (R. 50). But the obligation here asserted was a valid one; and the word "certain" was justified because respondent did not assume all obligations of the trustees, but only those arising from their conduct of the debtor's business and only those incurred up to December 31, 1944.

(d) Respondent next says that there existed no obligation on the part of the trustees because they could incur no liability without approval of the court (RB 98). That argument has been answered (A, supra).

(e) Respondent finally refers (RB 98) to the provision of the Bankruptcy Act, § 77(e)(3), 11 U. S. C., § 205(e)(3), that every plan of reorganization must provide for the payment of all costs of administration.* But the present claim is not a "cost of administration". It is at most an "expense of administration" in the same sense in which tort claims arising from the operation of the debtor's business are expenses of administration, and hence does not fall within § 77(e)(3). However, the point is academic, since respondent's reorganization plan did expressly provide for respondent's assumption of all "current liabilities and obliga-

---

* The Bankruptcy Act, § 77(e), provides, so far as here pertinent:

"* * * the judge shall approve the plan if satisfied that: * * * (3) the plan provides for the payment of all costs of administration and all other allowances made or to be made by the judge * * *"

 6 Collier on Bankruptcy (14th Ed., 1947), § 10.06, pp. 3462-3.

based on that agreement, was four years, and had clearly not expired when this action was commenced.

2. The defense of laches (RB 108) is far-fetched indeed. Plaintiff was in the hands of officers and counsel who received their pay from respondent; the charge that they unduly delayed the suit comes with poor grace from this respondent. But there was no undue delay; on the contrary, our stockholders' suit in New York and the present action were commenced in July and October 1946, one year after the filing of the 1944 returns and at a time when there was not even an assurance that there would be any tax savings whatever. (The tax settlement with the Government was on August 13, 1947.)

Nor was respondent prejudiced by the alleged delay. The reorganization closed on March 28, 1946 (Def. Ex. 32, R. 1219, 2013). Respondent admits that plaintiff had time until that date to present its claim (RB 95); and by that time, its new securities had been outstanding since January 1945. There is no evidence, and respondent does not even contend, that in the additional three months until the commencement of the stockholders' action, or in the further four months until the institution of this suit, it changed its position to its detriment. On the contrary, it maintained the $10,100,000 tax reserves on its books, thus notifying the world of the insecurity of its position.

3. The defense of estoppel (RB 108) is predicated upon the alleged prior consolidated return practice of the Western Pacific group. But this is just giving a new name to the same argument which has been amply rebutted in this and in our main brief.
